CHAP. I.

Obſeruations of Africa, taken out of IOHN LEO his nine Bookes, tranſlated by Maſter * PORY, and the moſt remarkable things hither tranſcribed.

* In diuers places the tranſlation is amended.

§. I.

Collections out of the firſt Booke of IOHN LEO, touching the People, Tribes, Languages, Seaſons, Vertues, Vices, and other more generall conſiderations of Africa.

AFRICA is called in the Arabian Tongue Iphrichia, of the word Faraca, which ſignifieth in the ſaid Language, to diuide: but why it ſhould be ſo called, there are two opinions; the firſt is this: namely, becauſe this part of the World is diuided from Europa by the Mediterran Sea, and from Aſia * by the Riuer of Nilus. Others are of opinion, that this name of Africa was deriued from one Ifricus the King of Arabia Fœlix, who is ſaid to haue beene the firſt that euer inhabited theſe parts. This Ifricus waging war againſt the King of Aſſyria, & being at length by him driuen out of his Kingdome, paſſed with his whole Armie ouer Nilus, and ſo conducting his troupes weſtward, made no delay till he was come vnto the Region lying about Carthage. Hence it is that the Arabians doe imagine the Countrey about Carthage onely, and the Regions lying Weſtward thereof, to comprehend all Africa.

Why this part of the World was ſo named Africa.
Iohn Leo, lib. 1.
* Others diuide it from Aſia by the Red Sea.
As there was Aſia proprie dicta, ſo likewiſe Africa was the name of the whole and of a ſpeciall part; and that both amongſt the Ancients, ſo (but in larger latent) with the African Authors and Iohn Leo.

Africa (if we may giue credit vnto the Writers of that Nation, being men of Learning, and moſt skilfull Coſmographers) beginneth Southward at certaine Riuers iſſuing forth of a Lake in the Deſart of Gaoga. Eaſt-ward it bordereth vpon the Riuer Nilus. It extendeth Northward to that part of Egypt, where Nilus at ſeuen mouthes diſchargeth his ſtreames into the Mediterran Sea: from whence it ſtretcheth Weſtward as farre as the Straights of Gibralter, and is bounded on that part with the vtmoſt Sea-towne of all Libya, called * Nun. Likewiſe the South part thereof abutteth vpon the Ocean Sea, which compaſſeth Africa almoſt as farre as the Deſarts of Gaoga.

The borders of Africa.
* Non.

The diuiſion of Africa. We vſually call all Africa which lyeth betweene the Red, Indian, Atlantike, and Mediterran Seas; ioyned with a necke of Land to Arabia.

Our Authours affirme, that Africa is diuided into foure parts, that is to ſay, Barbaria, Numidia, Libya, and the Land of Negros. Barbaria taketh beginning from the Hill called Meies, which is the extreme part of all the Mountaines of Atlas, beeing diſtant from Alexandria almoſt three hundred miles, It is bounded on the North-ſide with the Mediterran Sea, ſtretching thence to Mount-Meies aforeſaid, and from Mount-Meies extending it ſelfe to the Streights of Gibralter. Weſt-ward it is limited with the ſaid Streights, from whence winding it ſelfe out of the Mediterran Sea into the mayn Ocean, it is incloſed with the moſt Weſterly point of Atlas: namely, at that Weſterne Cape which is next vnto the Towne called Meſſa. And South-ward it is bounded with that ſide of Atlas which lyeth towards the Mediterran Sea. This is the moſt noble and worthy Region of all Africa, the Inhabitants whereof are of a browne or tawny colour, being a ciuill people, and preſcribe wholſome Lawes and Conſtitutions vnto themſelues.

The ſecond part of Africa is called of the Latines Numidia, but of the Arabians Biledulgerid: this Region bringeth forth Dates in great abundance. It beginneth Eaſt-ward at the Citie of Eloacat, which is an hundred miles diſtant from Egypt, and extendeth Weſt as far as the Towne of * Nun, ſtanding vpon the Ocean Sea. North-ward it is incloſed with the South-ſide of Atlas. And the South part thereof bordereth vpon the ſandy Deſarts of Libya. All the Arabians doe vſually call it the Land of Dates: becauſe this onely Region of Africa beareth Dates.

* Non.

The third part called of the Latines Libya, and of the Arabians Sarra, (which word ſignifieth a Deſart) beginneth Eaſtward at that part of Nilus which is next vnto the Citie of Eloacat, and from thence runneth Weſt-ward as farre as the Ocean Sea. North-ward it is bounded with Numidia, South-ward it abutteth vpon the Land of Negros, Eaſt-ward it taketh beginning at the Kingdome of Gaoga, and ſtretcheth Weſt-ward euen to the Land of Gualata, which bordereth vpon the Ocean Sea.

The Riuer of Niger.

The fourth part of Africa which is called the Land of Negros, beginneth Eaſt-ward at the Kingdome of Gaoga, from whence it extendeth Weſt as farre as Gualata. The North part thereof is incloſed with the Deſart of Libya, and the South part, which is vnknowne vnto vs, with the Ocean Sea: howbeit the Merchants which daily come from thence to the Kingdome of Tombuto, haue ſufficiently deſcribed the ſituation of that Countrey vnto vs. This Land of Negros hath a mightie Riuer, which taking his name of the Region, is called Niger: this Riuer taketh his originall from the Eaſt out of a certaine Deſart called by the fore-ſaid Negros, Seu. Others will haue this Riuer to ſpring out of a certaine Lake, and ſo to runne Weſtward till it exonerateth it ſelfe into the Ocean Sea. Our Coſmographers affirme, that the ſaid Riuer of Niger is deriued out of Nilus, which they imagine for ſome certaine ſpace to bee ſwallowed vp of the Earth, and yet at laſt to burſt forth into ſuch a Lake as is before mentioned. Some others are of opinion, that this Riuer beginneth Weſt-ward to ſpring out of a certaine Mountaine, and ſo running Eaſt, to make at length a huge Lake: which verily is not like to be true; for they vſually ſaile Weſt-ward from Tombuto to the Kingdome of Ginea, yea, and to the Land of Melli alſo; both which in reſpect of Tombuto are ſituate to the Weſt: neither hath the ſaid Land of Negros any Kingdomes comparable, for beautifull and pleaſant ſoyle, vnto thoſe which adioyne vnto the bankes of Niger. And here it is to be noted, that (according to the opinion of our Coſmographers) * that Land of Negros by which Nilus is ſaid to runne (namely, that part of the World which ſtretcheth Eaſt-ward euen to the Indian Sea, ſome Northerly parcell whereof abutteth vpon the Red Sea, to wit, the Countrey which lyeth without the Gulfe of Arabia) is not to bee called any member or portion of Africa; and that for many reaſons, which are to bee found in the proceſſe of this Hiſtorie ſet downe more at large: The ſaid Countrey is called by the Latines Æthiopia. From thence come certaine religious Friers ſeared or branded on the face with an hot Iron, who are to be ſeene almoſt ouer all Europe, and ſpecially at Rome. Theſe people haue an Emperour, which they call Prete Gianni, the greater part of that Land being inhabited with Chriſtians. Howbeit, there is alſo a certaine Mahumetane among them, which is ſaid to poſſeſſe a great Dominion.

* Æthiopia.

A diuiſion of the foure forenamed parts of Africa.

Barbarie is diſtinguiſhed into foure Kingdomes: the firſt whereof is the Kingdome of Maroco; which is likewiſe diuided into ſeuen Regions or Prouinces; namely, Hea, Sus, Guzula, the territorre of Maroco, Ducoala, Hazcora, and Tedles. The ſecond Kingdome of Barbarie called Fez, comprehendeth in like ſort ſeuen Regions within the bounds thereof; to wit, Temeſne, the Territory of Fez, Azgara, * Elabat, Errif, Garet, and * Elcauz. The third Kingdome is called * Telenſin, and hath three Regions vnder it, namely, the Mountaines, Tenez, and Algezer. The fourth Kingdom of Barbarie is named Tunis; vnder which are comprized foure Regions, that is to ſay, Bugia, Conſtantina, Tripolis in Barbarie, and Ezzaba, which is a good part of Numidia. Burgia hath alwayes beene turmoyled with continuall warres; becauſe ſometimes it was ſubiect vnto the King of Tunis, and ſometimes againe vnto the King of Tremizen. Certaine it is that euen vntill theſe our dayes, this Bugia was a Kingdome of it ſelfe, and ſo continued, till the principall Citie of that Region was at the commandement of Ferdinando the King of Caſtile, taken by one Peter of Nauarre.

* Habat.
* Ebauz.
* Tremizen.

The diuiſion of Numidia.

Teſſet.

This is the baſeſt part of all Africa; neither will our Coſmographers vouchſafe it the name of a Kingdome, by reaſon that the Inhabitants thereof are ſo farre diſtant a ſunder; which you may eaſily coniecture by that which followeth. Teſſet a City of Numidia, containeth about foure hundred families, and is in regard of the Libyan Deſart, ſeuered from all places of habitation almoſt three hundred miles; wherefore this ſecond part is thought by diuers not to bee worthy the name of a Kingdome. Howbeit we will make ſome relation of the habitable parts of Numidia; ſome whereof may not vnfitly bee compared with other Regions of Africa, as for example, that of Segelmeſs, which territorie of Numidia lyeth ouer againſt Barbarie; likewiſe Zeb, which is ſituate againſt Bugia, and the ſigniorie of Biledulgerid, which extendeth vnto the Kingdome of Tunis. Reſeruing therefore many particulars for the ſecond part of this Hiſtorie, we will make our entrie and beginning at thoſe places, which lie vpon the Weſt of Numidia: the names whereof be theſe; Teſſet, Guaden, Ifren, Hacca, Dare, Tabelbelt, Todga, Fercale, Segelmeſs, Benigumi, Fighig, Tegua, Tſabit, Tegorarin, Meſab, Tegort and Guarghela. The Region of Zeb containeth fiue townes, to wit, Peſcara, Elborh, Neſta, Taolac and Deuſin: ſo many Cities likewiſe hath the territories of Biledulgerid; namely, Teozar, Capheſa, Nefreoa, Elchamid and Chalbis: and from hence Eaſtward are found the Iſles of Gerbe, Garion, Meſellata, Meſtrata, Teoirraga, Gademis, Fizza, Augela, Birdeoa and Eloacat. Theſe are the names of the moſt famous places of all Numidia, being bounded (as is ſaid before) Weſtward vpon the Ocean Sea, and Eaſtward with the Riuer of Nilus.

A diſcription of the Libyan Deſarts, which lie betweene Numidia and the Land of Negros.

Theſe Deſarts haue not as yet any certaine name amongſt vs, albeit they be diuided into fiue parts, and receiue all their denomination from the inhabitants which dwell vpon them, that is to ſay, from the Numidians, who are in like ſort themſelues diuided into fiue parts alſo, to wit, the People or Tribes called Zanega, Ganziga, Terga, Leuta and Berdeoa. There bee likewiſe certaine places, which take ſome proper and particular name from the goodneſſe and badneſſe of the ſoile; as namely, the Deſart of Azaohad, ſo called for the drought and vnfruitfulneſſe of that place: likewiſe Hair, albeit a Deſart, yet ſo called for the goodneſſe and temperature of the ayre.

A diuiſion of the land of Negros into ſeuerall Kingdoms.

Moreouer, the land of Negros is diuided into many Kingdomes: whereof albeit a great part be vnknowne vnto vs, and remooued farre out of our trade; wee will notwithſtanding make relation of thoſe places, where wee our ſelues haue aboad, and which by long experience are growne very familiar vnto vs: as likewiſe of ſome other places, from whence Merchants vſed to trauell vnto the ſame Cities wherein my ſelfe was then reſident; from whom I learned right well the ſtate of their Countries. I * my ſelfe ſaw fifteene Kingdomes of the Negros: howbeit there are many more, which although I ſaw not with mine owne eies, yet are they by the Negros ſufficiently knowne and frequented. Their names therefore (beginning from the Weſt, and ſo proceeding Eaſtward and Southward) are theſe following: Gualata, Ghinea, Melli, Tombuto, Gago, Guber, Agadez, Cano, Caſena, Zegzeg, Zanfara, Guangara, Burno, Gaoga, Nube. Theſe fifteene Kingdomes are for the moſt part ſituate vpon the Riuer Niger, through the which Merchants vſually trauell from Gualata to the City of * Alcair in Ægypt. The iourney indeede is very long, but yet ſecure and voyd of danger. All the ſaid Kingdomes adioyne one vpon another; ten whereof are ſeparated either by the Riuer Niger, or by ſome ſandie deſart: and in times paſt each one of the fifteene had a ſeuerall King, but now * at this preſent, they are all in a manner ſubiect vnto three Kings onely: namely, to the King of Tombuto, who is Lord of the greateſt part; to the King of Borno, who gouerneth the leaſt part, and the reſidue is in ſubiection vnto the King of Gaoga: howbeit, he that poſſeſſeth the Kingdome of Ducala hath a very ſmall traine attending vpon him. Likewiſe theſe Kingdomes haue many other Kingdomes bordering vpon the South frontiers of them: to wit, Bito, Temiam, Dauma, Medra, and Gorhan; the Gouernors and Inhabitants whereof, are moſt rich and induſtrious people, great louers of Iuſtice and equitie, albeit ſome leade a brutiſh kind of life.

* Iohn Leo trauelled ouer fifteene Kingdomes of the land of Negros.

* About the yeere 1526.

Of the habitations of Africa, and of the ſignification of this word Barbar.

Our Coſmographers and Hiſtoriographers affirme, that in times paſt Africa was altogether diſinhabited, except that part which is now called the Land of Negros: and moſt certaine it is, that Barbarie and Numidia were for many ages deſtitute of Inhabitants. The tawnie people of the ſaid Region were called by the name of Barbar, being deriued of the Verbe Barbara, which in their tongue ſignifieth to murmure: becauſe the African tongue ſoundeth in the eares of the Arabians, no otherwiſe then the voyce of Beaſts, which vtter their ſounds without any accents. Others will haue Barbar to be one word twice repeated, forſomuch as Bar in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth a Deſart. For (ſay they) when King Iphricus being by the Aſſyrians or Æthiopians driuen out of his owne Kingdome, trauelled towards Ægypt, and ſeeing himſelfe ſo oppreſſed with his enemies, that he knew not what ſhould become of him and his followers, he asked his people how or which way it was poſſible to eſcape, who anſwered him Bar-Bar, that is, to the Deſart, to the Deſart: giuing him to vnderſtand by this ſpeech, that he could haue no ſafer refuge, then to croſſe ouer Nilus, and to flee vnto the Deſart of Africa. And this reaſon ſeemeth to agree with them, which affirme the Africans to bee deſcended from the people of Arabia fœlix.

A diuiſion of the tawnie Moores into ſundrie Tribes or Nations.

* Guadallabit.

Tremizen called by the ancient Coſmographers Cæſaria, or Mauritania Cæſarienſis.

The tawnie Moores are diuided into fiue ſeuerall People or Tribes: to wit, the Tribes called Zanhagi, Muſmudi, Zeneti, Hacari and Gumeri. The Tribe of Muſmudi inhabit the Weſterne part of Mount Atlas, from the Prouince of Hea, to the Riuer of * Seruan. Likewiſe they dwell vpon the South part of the ſaid Mountaine, and vpon all the inward plaines of that Region. Theſe Muſmude haue foure Prouinces vnder them: namely, Hea, Sus, Guzula, and the Territorie of Morocco. The Tribe of Gumeri poſſeſſe certaine Mountaines of Barbarie, dwelling on the ſides of thoſe Mountaines which lie ouer againſt the Mediterran Sea: as likewiſe they are Lords of all the Riuer called in their language Rif. This Riuer hath his Fountaine neere vnto the ſtreights of Gibraltar, and thence runneth Eaſtwards to the Kingdome of Tremizen, called by the Latines Cæſaria. Theſe two tribes or people haue ſeuerall habitations by themſelues: the other three are diſperſed confuſiuely ouer all Africa: howbeit, they are like ſtrangers, diſcerned one from another by certaine properties or tokens, maintaining continuall warre among themſelues, eſpecially they of Numidia. Out of all which it is euident, that in times paſt all the foreſaid people had their habitations and tents in the plaine fields: euery one of which fauoured their owne faction, and exerciſed all labours neceſſary for mans life, as common among them. The Gouernours of the Countrey attended their droues and flocks; and the Citizens applyed themſelues vnto ſome manuall Art, or to husbandry. The ſaid people are diuided into fiue hundred ſeuerall families, as appeareth by the Genealogies of the Africans, Author whereof is one Ibnu Rachu, whom I haue oftentimes read and peruſed. Some writers are of opinion, that the King of Tombuto, the King of Melli, and the King of Agadez fetch their originall from the people of Zanaga, to wit, from them which inhabite the Deſart.

The foreſaid fiue families or people, being diuided into hundreds of progenies, and hauing innumerable habitations, doe notwithſtanding vſe all one kind of language, called by them Aquel Amarig, that is, the noble tongue: the Arabians which inhabit Africa, call it a barbarous tongue; and this is the true and naturall language of the Africans. Howbeit it is altogether different from other languages, although it hath diuers words common with the Arabian tongue. Yea, all the Gumeri in a manner and moſt of the Haoari ſpeake Arabian, though corruptly; which (I ſuppoſe) came firſt hereupon to paſſe, for that the ſaid people haue had long acquaintance and conuerſation with the Arabians. The Negros haue diuers languages among themſelues, among which they call one Sungai, and the ſame is current in many Regions; as namely, in Gualata, Tombuto, Ghinea, Melli and Gago. Another language there is among the Negros, which they call Guber; and this is riſe among the people of Guber, of Cano, of Caſena, of Perzegreg, and of Guangra. Likewiſe the Kingdome of Borno hath a peculiar kind of ſpeech, altogether like vnto that, which is vſed in Gaoga. And the Kingdome of Nube hath a language of great affinitie with the Caldean, Arabian and Ægyptian tongues. But all the Sea-townes of Africa, from the Mediterran Sea to the Mountaines of Atlas, ſpeake broken Arabian. Except the Kingdome and Towne of Maroco, and the in-land Numidians bordering vpon Maroco, Fez and Tremizen; all which, vſe the Barbarian tongue. Howbeit, they which dwell ouer againſt Tunis and Tripoli, ſpeake indeede the Arabian language; albeit moſt corruptly.

* The Moores of Granada.

Of that Army which was ſent by Califa * Otmen the third, in the foure hundred yeere of the Hegeira, there came into Africa fourescore thouſand Gentlemen and others, who hauing ſubdued ſundry Prouinces, at length arriued in Africa: and there the Generall of the whole Army called * Hucha Hibnu Naſich remained. This man built that great City which is called of vs * Alcair. For he ſtood in feare of the people of Tunis, leſt they ſhould betray him, miſdoubting alſo that they would procure aide out of Sicily, and ſo giue him the incounter. Wherefore with all his treaſure which he had got, he trauelled to the Deſart and firme ground, diſtant from Carthage about one hundred and twenty miles, and there is he ſaid to haue built the City of * Alcair. The remnant of his Souldiers he commanded to keepe thoſe places, which were moſt ſecure and fit for their defence, and willed them to build where no rocke not fortification was. Which being done, the Arabians began to inhabit Africa, and to diſperſe themſelues among the Africans, who, becauſe they had beene for certaine yeeres ſubiect vnto the Romans or Italians, vſed to ſpeake their language: and hence it is, that the naturall and mother-tongue of the Arabians, which hath great affinitie with the African tongue, grew by little and little to be corrupted: and ſo they report that theſe two Nations at length conioyned themſelues in one. Howbeit the Arabians vſually doe blaze their Pedigree in daily and triuiall Songs, which cuſtome as yet is common both to * vs, and to the people of Barbarie alſo. For no man there is, be he neuer ſo baſe, which will not to his owne name, adde the name of his Nation; as for example, Arabian, Barbarian, or ſuch like.

Of the Arabians which dwel in Tents, and their cõming into Africa.

* A Mahumetan Patriarch. Of theſe Chaliſa's, ſee my Pilgrim, lib 3.

The Mahumetan Prieſts alwayes forbad the Arabians to paſſe ouer Nilus with their Armies and Tents. Howbeit in the foure hundred yeere of the Hegeira we reade, that they were permitted ſo to doe by a certaine factious and ſchiſmaticall * Califa: becauſe one of his Nobles had rebelled againſt him, vſurping the City of Cairaoan, and the greateſt part of Barbarie. After the death of which Rebell, that Kingdome remained for ſome yeeres vnto his poſteritie and family; whoſe iuriſdiction (as the African Chronicles report) grew ſo large and ſtrong in the time

time of Elcain (the Mahumetan Califa and Patriarch of Arabia) that hee ſent vnto them one Gehoar, whom of a ſlaue he had made his Counſellor, with an huge Armie. This Gehoar conducting me his Armie Weſtward, recouered all Numidia and Barbarie. Inſomuch that hee pierced vnto the Region of Sus, and there claymed moſt ample Tribute: all which being done, he returned backe vnto his Califa, and moſt faithfully ſurrendred vnto him whatſoeuer hee had gained from the Enemy. The Califa ſeeing his proſperous ſucceſſe, beganne to aſpire vnto greater Exploits. And Gehoar moſt firmely promiſed, that as hee had recouered the Weſterne Dominion vnto his Lord, ſo would he likewiſe by force of Warre moſt certainly reſtore vnto him the Countries of the Eaſt, to wit, Egypt, Syria, and all Arabia; and proteſted moreouer that with the greateſt hazard of his life, he would bee auenged of all the iniuries offered by the Family of Labhus vnto his Lords Predeceſſors, and would reueſt him in the Royall Seate of his moſt famous Grand-fathers, great-grand-fathers, and Progenitors. The Califa liking well his audacious promiſe, cauſed an Armie of foureſcore thouſand Souldiers, with an infinite ſumme of money and other things neceſſary for the Warres, to bee deliuered vnto him. And ſo this valiant and ſtout Chieftaine being prouided for warfare, conducted his Troupes through the Deſarts of Egypt and Barbarie; and hauing firſt put to flight the Vice-Califa of Egypt (who fled vnto Elnir the Califa of Bagdet) in ſhort time he ſubdued very eaſily all the Prouinces of Egypt and Syria. Howbeit he could not as yet hold himſelfe ſecure; fearing leaſt the Califa of Bagdet would aſſayle him with an Army out of Aſia, and leaſt the Garriſons which he had left to keepe Barbarie, ſhould be conſtrayned to forſake thoſe conquered Prouinces. Wherefore he built a Citie, and cauſed it to be walled round about. In which Citie he left one of his moſt truſtie Captaines, with a great part of the Army: and this Citie hee called by the name of Alchair, which afterward by others was named Cairo. This Alchair is ſaid daily ſo to haue increaſed, that no Citie of the World for buildings and Inhabitants was any way comparable thereunto.

Cayro built, called Alchair. Gehoar the firſt founder of Cairo: al is the Arabeck Article, o the Exoticke termination.

Moreouer, Califa Elcain arriuing at Alchair, and beeing moſt honourably entertayned by his Seruant Gehoar, (who had written for him to come) began to thinke vpon great affaires, and hauing gathered an huge Armie, reſolued to wage battell againſt the Califa of Bagdet. In the meane ſeaſon he that was appointed Vice-Roy of Barbarie, compacting with the Califa of Bagdet, yeelded himſelfe and all Barbarie into his hands. Which the Califa moſt kindly accepted, and ordayned him King ouer all Africa. But Califa Elcain hearing this newes at Alchair was wonderfully afflicted in minde. Howbeit there was one of his ſecret Counſellors a very learned and wittie man, who ſeeing his Lord ſo ſad and penſiue; I aſſure you, ſaid he, if you pleaſe to take mine aduiſe, that I will forth-with procure you ſuch an Armie, as ſhall giue you great ſtore of money, and yet notwithſtanding ſhall doe you good ſeruice alſo. The Califa beeing ſome-what emboldened at theſe ſpeeches, asked his Counſellour how this might poſſibly bee brought to effect: My Lord (ſayth his Counſellor) certaine it is, that the Arabians are now growne ſo populous, and to ſo great a number, that all Arabia cannot contayne them, ſcarcely will the yeerely increaſe of the ground ſuffice to feed their Droues, and you ſee with what great famine they are afflicted, and how they are deſtitute not onely of habitations, but euen of victuals and ſuſtenance. Wherefore if you had heretofore giuen them leaue, they would long ere this haue inuaded Africa. And if you will now licence them ſo to do, doubt you not, but that you ſhall receiue of them an huge Maſſe of Gold. This counſell could not altogether ſatisfie the Califa his minde: for he knew right well that the Arabians would ſo waſte all Africa, as it ſhould neither be profitable for himſelfe, nor for his Enemies. Notwithſtanding, ſeeing that his Kingdome was altogether endangered, he thought it better to accept thoſe ſummes of money which his Counſellour promiſed, and ſo to be reuenged of his Enemie, then to loſe both his Kingdome and Gold all at once. Wherefore he permitted all Arabians, which would pay him Duckats apiece, freely to enter Africa; conditionally that they would ſhew themſelues moſt deadly Enemies vnto the treacherous King of Barbarie. Which libertie being granted vnto them, it is reported that ten Tribes or Families of Arabians, being halfe the people of Arabia Deſerta, came immediately into Africa; vnto whom certaine Inhabitants of Arabia Fœlix ioyned themſelues, inſomuch that there were found amongſt them about fiftie thouſand perſons able to beare Armes: their women, children, and cattell were almoſt innumerable: the Storie whereof Ibnu Rachu, the moſt diligent Chronicler of African Affaires (whom wee haue before mentioned) ſetteth downe at large.

Theſe Arabians hauing trauerſed the Deſart betweene Ægypt and Barbarie, firſt laid ſiege vnto Tripolis a Citie of Barbarie, which being ouercome, they ſlue a great part of the Citizens, the reſidue eſcaping by flight. Next of all they encountred the Towne of Capes, which was by them taken and vanquiſhed. At length they beſieged Cairaoan alſo; howbeit the Citizens being ſufficiently prouided of victuals, are ſaid to haue indured the ſiege for eight monethes: which being expired, they were conſtrayned to yeeld: at what time there was nothing in Cairaoan but wofull ſlaughters, hideous out-cryes, and preſent death. This Land the Arabians diuided among themſelues, and began to people and inhabit the ſame; requiring in the meane ſpace large Tributes of the Townes and Prouinces ſubiect vnto them. The tawnie Moores are diuided into fiue ſeuerall People or Tribes: to wit, the Tribes called Zanhagi, Muſmudi, Zeneti, Hacari and Gumeri. The Tribe of Muſmudi inhabit the Weſterne part of Mount Atlas, from the Prouince of Hea, to the Riuer of * Seruan. Likewiſe they dwell vpon the South part of the ſaid Mountaine, and vpon all the inward plaines of that Region. Theſe Muſmude haue foure Prouinces vnder them: namely, Hea, Sus, Guzula, and the Territorie of Morocco. The Tribe of Gumeri poſſeſſe certaine Mountaines of Barbarie, dwelling on the ſides of thoſe Mountaines which lie ouer againſt the Mediterran Sea: as likewiſe they are Lords of all the Riuer called in their language Rif. This Riuer hath his Fountaine neere vnto the ſtreights of Gibraltar, and thence runneth Eaſtwards to the Kingdome of Tremizen, called by the Latines Cæſaria. Theſe two tribes or people haue ſeuerall habitations by themſelues: the other three are diſperſed confuſiuely ouer all Africa: howbeit, they are like ſtrangers, diſcerned one from another by certaine properties or tokens, maintaining continuall warre among themſelues, eſpecially they of Numidia. Out of all which it is euident, that in times paſt all the foreſaid people had their habitations and tents in the plaine fields: euery one of which fauoured their owne faction, and exerciſed all labours neceſſary for mans life, as common among them. The Gouernours of the Countrey attended their droues and flocks; and the Citizens applyed themſelues vnto ſome manuall Art, or to husbandry. The ſaid people are diuided into fiue hundred ſeuerall families, as appeareth by the Genealogies of the Africans, Author whereof is one Ibnu Rachu, whom I haue oftentimes read and peruſed. Some writers are of opinion; that the King of Tombuto, the King of Melli, and the King of Agadez fetch their originall from the people of Zanaga, to wit, from them which inhabite the Deſart.

The foreſaid fiue families or people, being diuided into hundreds of progenies, and hauing innumerable habitations, doe notwithſtanding vſe all one kind of language, called by them Aquel Amarig, that is, the noble tongue: the Arabians which inhabit Africa, call it a barbarous tongue; and this is the true and naturall language of the Africans. Howbeit it is altogether different from other languages, although it hath diuers words common with the Arabian tongue. Yea, all the Gumeri in a manner and moſt of the Haoari ſpeake Arabian, though corruptly; which (I ſuppoſe) came firſt hereupon to paſſe, for that the ſaid people haue had long acquaintance and conuerſation with the Arabians. The Negros haue diuers languages among themſelues, among which they call one Sungai, and the ſame is current in many Regions; as namely, in Gualata, Tombuto, Ghinea, Melli and Gago. Another language there is among the Negros, which they call Guber; and this is riſe among the people of Guber, of Cano, of Caſena, of Perzegreg, and of Guangra. Likewiſe the Kingdome of Borno hath a peculiar kind of ſpeech, altogether like vnto that, which is vſed in Gaoga. And the Kingdome of Nube hath a language of great affinitie with the Caldean, Arabian and Ægyptian tongues. But all the Sea-townes of Africa, from the Mediterran Sea to the Mountaines of Atlas, ſpeake broken Arabian. Except the Kingdome and Towne of Maroco, and the in-land Numidians bordering vpon Maroco, Fez and Tremizen; all which, vſe the Barbarian tongue. Howbeit, they which dwell ouer againſt Tunis and Tripoli, ſpeake indeede the Arabian language; albeit moſt corruptly.

Of that Army which was ſent by Califa * Otmen the third, in the foure hundred yeere of the Hegeira, there came into Africa foureſcore thouſand Gentlemen and others, who hauing ſubdued ſundry Prouinces, at length arriued in Africa: and there the Generall of the whole Army called * Hucha Hibnu Naſich remained. This man built that great City which is called of vs * Alcair. For he ſtood in feare of the people of Tunis, leſt they ſhould betray him, miſdoubting alſo that they would procure aide out of Sicily, and ſo giue him the incounter. Wherefore with all his treaſure which he had got, he trauelled to the Deſart and firme ground, diſtant from Carthage about one hundred and twenty miles, and there is he ſaid to haue built the City of * Alcair. The remnant of his Souldiers he commanded to keepe thoſe places, which were moſt ſecure and fit for their defence, and willed them to build where no rocke not fortification was. Which being done, the Arabians began to inhabit Africa, and to diſperſe themſelues among the Africans, who, becauſe they had beene for certaine yeeres ſubiect vnto the Romans or Italians, vſed to ſpeake their language: and hence it is, that the naturall and mother-tongue of the Arabians, which hath great affinitie with the African tongue, grew by little and little to be corrupted: and ſo they report that theſe two Nations at length conioyned themſelues in one. Howbeit the Arabians vſually doe blaze their Pedigree in daily and triuiall Songs, which cuſtome as yet is common both to * vs, and to the people of Barbarie alſo. For no man there is, be he neuer ſo baſe, which will not to his owne name, adde the name of his Nation; as for example, Arabian, Barbarian, or ſuch like.

* A Mahumetan Patriarch.

Of theſe Chaliſa's, ſee my Pilgrim. lib 3.

The Mahumetan Prieſts alwayes forbad the Arabians to paſſe ouer Nilus with their Armies and Tents. Howbeit in the foure hundred yeere of the Hegeira we reade, that they were permitted ſo to doe by a certaine factious and ſchiſmaticall * Califa: becauſe one of his Nobles had rebelled againſt him, vſurping the City of Cairaoan, and the greateſt part of Barbarie. After the death of which Rebell, that Kingdome remained for ſome yeeres vnto his poſteritie and family; whoſe iuriſdiction (as the African Chronicles report) grew ſo large and ſtrong in the time of Elcain (the Mahumetan Califa and Patriarch of Arabia) that hee ſent vnto them one Gehoar, whom of a ſlaue he had made his Counſellor, with an huge Armie. This Gehoar conducting me his Armie Weſtward, recouered all Numidia and Barbarie. Inſomuch that hee pierced vnto the Region of Sus, and there claymed moſt ample Tribute: all which being done, he returned backe vnto his Califa, and moſt faithfully ſurrendred vnto him whatſoeuer hee had gained from the Enemy. The Califa ſeeing his proſperous ſucceſſe, beganne to aſpire vnto greater Exploits. And Gehoar moſt firmely promiſed, that as hee had recouered the Weſterne Dominion vnto his Lord, ſo would he likewiſe by force of Warre moſt certainly reſtore vnto him the Countries of the Eaſt, to wit, Egypt, Syria, and all Arabia; and proteſted moreouer that with the greateſt hazard of his life, he would bee auenged of all the iniuries offered by the Family of Labhus vnto his Lords Predeceſſors, and would reueſt him in the Royall Seate of his moſt famous Grand-fathers, great-grand-fathers, and Progenitors. The Califa liking well his audacious promiſe, cauſed an Armie of foureſcore thouſand Souldiers, with an infinite ſumme of money and other things neceſſary for the Warres, to bee deliuered vnto him. And ſo this valiant and ſtout Chieftaine being prouided for warfare, conducted his Troupes through the Deſarts of Egypt and Barbarie; and hauing firſt put to flight the Vice-Califa of Egypt (who fled vnto Elnir the Califa of Bagdet) in ſhort time he ſubdued very eaſily all the Prouinces of Egypt and Syria. Howbeit he could not as yet hold himſelfe ſecure; fearing leaſt the Califa of Bagdet would aſſayle him with an Army out of Aſia, and leaſt the Garriſons which he had left to keepe Barbarie, ſhould be conſtrayned to forſake thoſe conquered Prouinces. Wherefore he built a Citie, and cauſed it to be walled round about. In which Citie he left one of his moſt truſtie Captaines, with a great part of the Army: and this Citie hee called by the name of Alchair, which afterward by others was named Cairo. This Alchair is ſaid daily ſo to haue increaſed, that no Citie of the World for buildings and Inhabitants was any way comparable thereunto.

Moreouer, Califa Elcain arriuing at Alchair, and beeing moſt honourably entertayned by his Seruant Gehoar, (who had written for him to come) began to thinke vpon great affaires, and hauing gathered an huge Armie, reſolued to wage battell againſt the Califa of Bagdet. In the meane ſeaſon he that was appointed Vice-Roy of Barbarie, compacting with the Califa of Bagdet, yeelded himſelfe and all Barbarie into his hands. Which the Califa moſt kindly accepted, and ordayned him King ouer all Africa. But Califa Elcain hearing this newes at Alchair was wonderfully afflicted in minde. King Ioſeph.

Manſor.

This Ioſeph was the firſt King of Marocco, who endeauoured by all meanes to aduance the friends and kindred of the late deceaſed King of Africa vnto the Kingdome; neither did hee ceaſe vntill he had expelled all the Arabians out of Cairaoan. Howbeit the Arabians poſſeſſed the Regions thereabout, giuing themſelues wholy to ſpoiles and robberies : and the friends of the ſaid deceaſed King could beare rule but in certaine places only. Afterward ſucceeded in the Kingdome of Marocco one Manſor, who was the fourth King and Prelate of that Mahumetan Sect which was called Muachedim. This man, albeit his Grand-fathers and great Grand-fathers had alwayes fauoured the Poſteritie and friends of the foreſaid deceaſed African King, and had reſtored them to their ancient dignitie; deuiſed altogether how to oppoſe himſelfe againſt them, and to vſurpe all their authoritie. Wherefore making a fayned league with them, wee reade, that he prouoked the Arabians againſt them, and ſo very eaſily ouercame them. Afterward Manſor brought the greateſt part of the Arabians into the Weſterne Dominions of Africa; vnto the better ſort of whom he gaue the Habitation of Duccala and Azgara, and vnto the baſer remnant he bequeathed the poſſeſſion of Numidia. But in proceſſe of time hee commanded the Numidian ſlaues to be ſet at libertie, and ſo in deſpight of the Arabians, hee cauſed them to inhabit that part of Numidia which he had allotted vnto them. But as for the Arabians of Azgara and of certaine other places in Barbarie, hee brought them all vnder his ſubiection. For the Arabians out of Deſarts are like fiſhes without water: they had indeed often attempted to get into the Deſarts; but the Mountaines of Atlas, which were then poſſeſſed by the Barbarians, hindred their paſſage. Neither had they libertie to paſſe ouer the Plaines, for the reſidue of the Barbarians were there planted. Wherefore their pride being abated, they applyed themſelues vnto Husbandry, hauing no where to repoſe themſelues, but onely in Villages, Cottages, and Tents. And their miſerie was ſo much the greater, in that they were conſtrayned yeerely to disburſe vnto the King of Marocco moſt ample Tribute. Thoſe which inhabited Duccala, becauſe they were an huge multitude, eaſily freed themſelues from all Tribute and Impoſition.

A Prouerbe.

A great part of the Arabians remayned ſtill at Tunis, for that Manſor had refuſed to carrie them along with him : who, after the death of the ſaid Manſor, grew to bee Lords of Tunis, and ſo continued, till they reſigned their Gouernment vnto the people called Abu-Haf; vpon condition that they ſhould pay them halfe the Reuenues thereof : and this condition hath remayned firme euen vntill our dayes. Howbeit, becauſe the Arabians are increaſed to ſuch innumerable ſwarmes, that the whole Reuenues are not ſufficient for them, the King of Tunis moſt iuſtly alloweth ſome of them their duties, to the end they may make ſecure paſſage for Merchants, which indeed they performe without moleſtation or hurt of any. But the reſidue which are depriued of their pay, betake themſelues wholy to robberies, thefts, ſlaughters, and ſuch other monſtrous outrages. For theſe, lurking alwayes in the Woods, no ſooner ſee any Merchant approching, but ſuddenly they breake forth, depriuing him of his goods and life alſo : inſomuch that now Merchants dare not paſſe that way but with a Garriſon of ſafe-conduct. And ſo they paſſe ſometimes to their great inconuenience. For they are notwithſtanding conſtrayned to giue vnto the foreſaid Arabians, which are in pay with the King of Tunis, great ſummes of money : and are likewiſe oftentimes ſo in danger of Robbers, that they loſe both their goods and liues.

The Arabians which inhabit Africa, are diuided into three parts : one part whereof are called Cachin, the ſecond Hilel, and the third Machil. The Cachin are diuided into three Nations or Tribes; to wit, the Tribes of Etheg, Sumait, and Sahid. Moreouer, Etheg is diuided into three Families; that is to ſay, the Family of Delleg' Elmunteſig, and Subair : and theſe are diſperſed into many Regions. Hilel are deriued into foure Generations; to wit, the people of Benihemir, of Rieh, of Suſien, and of Chuſain. The Family of Benihemir, is diuided into the Linages of Huroum, Hucben, Habrum and Muſſim. The Tribe of Rieh, are diſtributed into the Kindreds called Deucad, Suaid, Aſgeg, Elchyrith, Enedri, and Garſam; which Kindreds poſſeſſe many Dominions. Machil haue three Tribes vnder them : to wit, Maſtar, Hutmen, and Haſſan. Maſtar are diuided into Ruchen, and Selim; Hutmen into Elhaſi and Chinan; and Haſſan into Deuiheſſen, Deuimanſor, and Deuihubaidulla. Deuiheſſen is diſtinguiſhed into the Kindreds called Dulein, Berbun, Vodein, Racmen and Hamram; Deuimanſor into Hemrun, Menebbe, Huſein, and Albuhuſein; and laſtly, Deuihubaidulla, into Garag, Hedeg, Teleb, and Geoan. All theſe doe in a manner poſſeſſe innumerable Regions; inſomuch that to reckon them vp at large, were a matter not onely difficult, but almoſt impoſſible.

The moſt noble and famous Arabians were they of the Family of Etheg, vnto whom Almanſor gaue the Regions of Duccala and of Tedles to inhabit. Theſe Arabians euen till our times haue beene put to great diſtreſſe and hazard, partly by the Portugall King, and partly by the King of Fez. They haue at all oportunities, if need ſhould require, a hundred thouſand Souldiers fit to beare Armes, a great part whereof are Horſemen. The Arabians called Sumait, enioy that part of the Libyan Deſart which lyeth ouer againſt the Deſart of Tripoly. Theſe make often inuaſions into Barbarie, for they haue no places allotted them therein, but they and their Camels doe perpetually remaine in the Deſarts. They are able to leuie fourescore thouſand ſouldiers, the greateſt part being footmen. Likewiſe the Tribe of Sabid doe inhabite the Deſart of Libya: and theſe haue had alwaies great league and familiaritie with the King of Guargala. They haue ſuch abundance of cattell, that they doe plentifully ſupply all the Cities of that region with fleſh, and that eſpecially in Summer-time, for all the Winter they ſtir not out of the Deſarts. Their number is increaſed to about a hundred and fiftie thouſand, hauing not many Horſmen among them. The Tribe of Delleg poſſeſſe diuers habitations; howbeit, Caſaria containeth the greateſt part of them. Some alſo inhabit vpon the frontiers of the Kingdom of Bugia, who are ſaid to receiue a yearely ſtipend from their next neighbours. But the leaſt part of them dwell vpon the field-countrey of Acdes, vpon the borders of Mauritania, and vpon ſome part of mount Atlas, being ſubiect vnto the King of Fez. The people of Elmunteſig are ſeated in the Prouince of Azgar, and are called by the later writers Elcaluth. Theſe alſo pay certaine yearely tribute vnto the King of Fez, being able to furniſh about eight thouſand Horſemen to the warres. The Kindred of Sobair doe inhabit not farre from the Kingdome of Gezeir, being many of them vnder the pay of the King of Tremizen, and are ſaid to enioy a great part of Numidia. They haue more or leſſe, three thouſand moſt warlike Horſemen. They poſſeſſe likewiſe great abundance of Camels; for which cauſe they abide all Winter in the Deſarts. The remnant of them occupieth the Plaine which lieth betweene Sala and Mecnes. Theſe haue huge droues of Cattell, and exerciſe themſelues in Husbandrie, being conſtrained to pay ſome yearely tribute vnto the King of Fez: They haue Horſemen, who, as a man may ſay, are naturally framed to the warres, about foure thouſand in number.

Hillel, which are alſo called Benihamir, dwel vpon the frontiers of the Kingdome of Tremizen and Oran. Theſe range vp and downe the Deſart of Tegorarin, being in pay vnder the King of Tremizen, and of great riches and power; inſomuch that they haue at all times in a readineſſe for the warres ſixe thouſand Horſemen. The Tribe of Hurua poſſeſſe onely the borders of Muſtuganim. Theſe are ſauage people, giuing themſelues wholly to ſpoyles and robberies, and alienating their minds from the warres. They neuer come forth of the Deſarts; for the people of Barbarie will neither allow them any places of habitation, nor yet any ſtipend at all: Horſemen they haue to the number of two thouſand. The Kindred of Hucban are next neighbours vnto the region of Melian, who receiue certaine pay from the King of Tunis. They are rude and wild people, and in very deed eſtranged from all humanitie: they haue (as it is reported) about fifteene hundred Horſemen. The Tribe of Habru inhabit the region lying betweene Oran and Muſtuganim: theſe exerciſe Husbandrie, paying yearely tribute vnto the King of Tremizen, and being ſcarce able to make one hundred Horſemen.

Theſe likewiſe are giuen onely to theft and robberie; they take tribute both of their owne people, and of other regions adioyning vnto them. The Tribe of Rieeh inhabit thoſe deſarts of Libya, which border vpon Conſtantina. Theſe haue moſt ample Dominions in Numidia, being now diuided into ſixe parts. This right famous and warlike Nation receiueth ſtipend from the King of Tunis, hauing fiue thouſand Horſemen at command. The people of Suaid enioy that Deſart, which is extended vnto the Signiorie of Tenez. Theſe haue very large poſſeſſions, receiuing ſtipend from the King of Tremizen, being men of notable dexteritie, as well in the warres, as in all other conuerſation of life. The Kindred of Azgeg dwell not altogether in one place: for part of them inhabit the region of Garet, among the people called Hemram; and the reſidue poſſeſſe that part of Duccala, which lieth neere vnto Azaphi. The Tribe of Elcherit dwell vpon that portion of Helin which is ſituate in the Plaine of Sahidim, hauing the people of Heab tributarie vnto them, and being a very vnciuill and barbarous people. The people called Enedri are ſeated in the Plaine of Heab: but the whole region of Heab maintaineth almoſt foure thouſand Horſemen, which notwithſtanding are vnfit for the warres. The people of Garfa haue ſundry Manſions: neither haue they any King or Gouernour. They are diſperſed among other Generations, and eſpecially among the Kindreds of Manebbi and Hemram. The people called Ruche, who are thought to be deſcended from Maſtar, doe poſſeſſe that deſart, which lieth next vnto Dedes and Farcala. They haue very ſmall dominions, for which cauſe they are accounted no whit rich; howbeit, they are moſt valiant ſouldiers, and exceeding ſwift of foote; inſomuch that they eſteeme it a great diſgrace, if one of their footemen be vanquiſhed by two horſemen. And you ſhall find ſcarce any one man among them, which will not outgoe a very ſwift horſe, be the iourney neuer ſo long. They haue about fiue hundred Horſemen, but moſt warlike Footemen, to the number of eight thouſand. Selim inhabite vpon the Riuer of Dara, from whence they range vp and downe the Deſarts. They are endowed with great riches, carrying euery yeare merchandize vnto the Kingdome of Tombuto, and are thought to be in high fauour with the King himſelfe. The Tribe of Elbaſis dwelleth vpon the ſea-coaſt, neere vnto Meſſa. They doe arme about fiue hundred Horſemen, and are a Nation altogether rude, and vnacquainted in the warres. Some part of them inhabiteth Azgara. Thoſe which dwell about Meſſa, are free from the yoke of ſuperioritie; but the others which remaine in Azgar, are ſubiect to the King of Fez. The Kindred of Chinan are diſperſed among them, which before were called Elcaluth, and theſe alſo are ſubiect vnto the King of Fez. Very warlike people they are, and are able to ſet forth two thouſand Horſemen. The people of Deuibeſſen are diuided into the Kindreds of Duleim, Burbun, Vode, Deuimanſor, and Deuibnbaidulla. Duleim are conuerſant in the Deſarts of Libya with the African people, called Zanhaga. They haue neither dominion, nor yet any ſtipend; wherefore they are very poore, and giuen to robberie: they trauell vnto Dara, and exchange Cattell for Dates with the inhabitants there. All brauerie and comlineſſe of apparrell they vtterly neglect; and their number of fighting men is ten thouſand, foure thouſand being Horſemen, and the reſidue Footemen. The people called Burbun, poſſeſſe that part of the Libyan Deſart which adioyneth vnto Sus: They are a huge multitude, neither haue they any riches beſides Camels. Vnto them is ſubiect the Citie of Teſſet, which ſcarce ſufficeth them for the maintenance of their Horſes, being but a few. The people of Vode enioyeth that Deſart, which is ſituate betweene Guaden and Gualata. They beare rule ouer the Guadenites, and of the Duke of Gualata they receiue yearely tribute, and their number is growne almoſt infinite: for by report, they are of abilitie to bring into the field almoſt threeſcore thouſand moſt skilfull ſouldiers; notwithſtanding, they haue great want of Horſes. The Tribe of Racmen occupie that Deſart which is next vnto Hacha: they haue verie large poſſeſſions, and doe in the Spring-time vſually trauell vnto Teſſet; for then alwaies they haue ſomwhat to do with the inhabitants there. Their people fit for Armes are to the number of twelue thouſand, albeit they haue very few Horſemen. The Nation of Hamrum inhabit the Deſarts of Tagauoſt, exacting ſome tribute of the inhabitants there, and with daily incurſions likewiſe moleſting the people of Nun. Their number of ſouldiers is almoſt eight thouſand.

The Generation of Dehemrum, which are ſaid to deriue their pedigree from Deuimanſor, inhabit the Deſart ouer againſt Segelmeſs, who continually wander by the Libyan Deſarts as farre as Ighid. They haue tributarie vnto them the people of Segelmeſſe, of Todgatan, of Tebelbelt, and of Dara. Their ſoile yeeldeth ſuch abundance of Dates, that the yearely increaſe thereof is ſufficient to maintaine them, although they had nothing elſe to liue on. They are of great fame in other Nations, being able to furniſh for the warres about three thouſand Horſemen. There dwell likewiſe among theſe certaine other Arabians of more baſe condition, called in their language Garfa Eſgeb; which notwithſtanding haue great abundance of Horſes, and of all other Cattell. The people of Menebbe doe almoſt inhabite the very ſame Deſart, hauing two Prouinces of Numidia vnder them; to wit, Matgara, and Retebbe. Theſe alſo are a moſt valiant Nation, being in pay vnder the Prouince of Segelmeſs, and being able to make about two thouſand Horſmen. The Kindred of Huſein, which are thought to be deſcended of Deuimanſor, are ſeated vpon the Mountaines of Atlas. They haue in the ſaid Mountaines a large iuriſdiction, namely, diuers Caſtles euery where, and many moſt rich and flouriſhing Cities; all which, they thinke, were giuen them in old time by the Vice-royes of the Marini: for as ſoone as they had wonne that Kingdome, the Kindred of Huſein affoorded them great aide and ſeruice. Their dominion is now ſubiect vnto the Kings of Fez and of Segelmeſs. They haue a Captaine, which for the moſt part reſideth at the Citie, commonly called Garſeluin. Likewiſe they are alwaies in a manner, trauerſing of that Deſart, which in their language is called Eddara. They are taken to be a moſt rich and honeſt people, being of abilitie to furniſh for the warres about ſixe thouſand Horſemen. Among theſe, you ſhall oftentimes find many Arabians of another ſort, whom they vſe onely to be their ſeruants. The Tribe of Abulhuſein doe inhabit part of the foreſaid Deſart of Eddara, howbeit a very ſmall part; the greateſt number of whom are brought vnto ſuch extreme miſery, that they haue not in thoſe their wild tents ſufficient ſuſtenance to liue vpon.

* Alger. Algere, the neſt of Sea-Hornets, a cage of vncleane Birds, and place of Pirats.

One Generation of the people of Deuibnbaidulla are thoſe which are named Gharrag: theſe enioy the Deſarts of Benigomi and Fighig, hauing very large poſſeſſions in Numidia. They are ſtipendaries vnto the King of Tremizen, who diligently endeuoureth to bring them to peace and tranquillitie of life; for they are wholly giuen to theft and robberie. In Summer-time they vſually repaire vnto Tremizen, where they are thought for that ſeaſon of the yeare to ſettle their abode: their Horſemen are to the number of foure thouſand, all which are moſt noble warriours. The Kindred of Hedeg poſſeſſe a certaine Deſart neere vnto Tremizen, called in their owne language Hangad. Theſe haue no ſtipend from any Prince, nor yet any iuriſdiction at all, rapine and ſtealth is onely delightfull vnto them; they prouide onely for their family and themſelues, and are able to ſet forth about fiue hundred Horſemen. The Tribe of Theleb inhabite the Plaine of * Algezer; theſe haue often vagaries ouer the Deſarts vnto the Prouince of Tedgear. Vnto them were ſubiect in times paſt, the moſt famous Cities of Algezer and Tedelles: howbeit in theſe our dayes they were recouered againe from them by Barbaroſſa the Turke; which loſſe could not but greatly grieue and moleſt their King. It is reported moreouer, that at the ſame time, the principall of the ſaid people of Theleb were cut off. For ſtrength and cunning in chiualrie they were inferiour to no other Nation; their Horſemen were about three thouſand. The Tribe of Geboan inhabite not all in one place: for part of them you may find among the people of Guarag, and the reſidue amongſt the people of Hedeg; and they are vnto them no otherwiſe then their ſeruants, which condition they notwithſtanding moſt patiently and willingly ſubmit themſelues vnto. And here one thing is to bee noted by the way; to wit, that the two forenamed people called Schachin and Hilel, are originally Arabians of Arabia Deſarta, and think themſelues to be deſcended from Iſmael, the ſonne of Abraham. And thoſe which we called Machil, came firſt forth of Arabia Fœlix, and deriue their pedigree from Saba. Before whom the Mahumetans preferre the former, which of Iſmael are called Iſmaelites. And becauſe there hath alwaies been great controuerſie among them, which part ſhould bee of greater Nobilitie, they haue written on both ſides many Dialogues and Epigrams, whereby each man is wont to blaze the Renowne, the Vertues, Manners, and laudable Cuſtomes of his owne Nation. The ancient Arabians, which were before the times of the Iſmaelites, were called by the African Hiſtoriographers Arabi-Araba; as if a man ſhould ſay, Arabians of Arabia. But thoſe which came of Iſmael, they call Arabi Mus-Araba; as if they ſhould ſay, Arabians ingrafted into the land of Arabia, or Arabians accidentally, becauſe they were not originally bred and borne in Arabia. And them which afterward came into Africa, they name in their language Muſtehgeme, that is, Barbarous Arabians; and that becauſe they ioyned themſelues vnto ſtrangers, inſomuch that not onely their ſpeech, but their manners alſo are moſt corrupt and barbarous. Theſe are (friendly Reader) the particulars, which for theſe ten yeeres my memorie could reſerue, as touching the originals and diuerſities of the Africans and Arabians; in all which time I remember not, that euer I read, or ſaw any Hiſtorie of that Nation. He that will know more, let him haue recourſe vnto Hibnu Rachu the Hiſtoriographer before named.

Thoſe fiue kinds of people before rehearſed, to wit, the people of Zenega, of Ganſiga, of Terga, of Leuta, and of Bardeoa, are called of the Latins, Numidæ: and they liue all after one manner, that is to ſay, without all law and ciuilitie. Their garment is a narrow and baſe piece of cloth, wherewith ſcarce halfe their body is couered. Some of them wrap their heads in a kind of black cloth, as it were with a ſcarfe, ſuch as the Turkes vſe, which is commonly called a Turbant. Such as will be diſcerned from the common ſort, for Gentlemen weare a Iacket made of blew Cotton with wide ſleeues. And Cotton-cloth is brought vnto them by certaine Merchants from the land of Negros. They haue no beaſts fit to ride vpon, except their Camels; vnto whom Nature, betweene the bunch ſtanding vpon the hinder part of their backes and their necks, hath allotted a place, which may fitly ſerue to ride vpon, in ſtead of a ſaddle. Their manner of riding is moſt ridiculous. For ſometimes they lay their leggs acroſſe vpon the Camels necke; and ſometimes againe (hauing no knowledge nor regard of ſtirrops) they reſt their feete vpon a rope, which is caſt ouer his ſhoulders. In ſtead of ſpurres, they vſe a truncheon of a cubites length, hauing at the one end thereof a Goade, wherewith they pricke onely the ſhoulders of their Camels. Thoſe Camels which they vſe to ride vpon, haue a hole bored through the griſtles of their noſe, in the which a ring of leather is faſtened, whereby as with a bit, they are more eaſily curbed and maſtred; after which manner I haue ſeene buffles vſed in Italie. For beds, they lie vpon mats made of ſedge and bulruſhes. Their tents are couered for the moſt part with courſe chamlet, or with a harſh kind of Wooll, which commonly groweth vpon the boughes of their Datetrees.

As for their manner of liuing, it would ſeeme to any man incredible what hunger and ſcarcitie this Nation will indure. Bread they haue none at all, neither vſe they any ſeething or roſting; their foode is Camels milke onely, and they deſire no other dainties. For their break-faſt they drinke off a great cup of Camels milke: for ſupper they haue certaine dried fleſh ſteeped in butter and milke, whereof each man taking his ſhare, eateth it out of his fiſt. And that this their meate may not ſtay long vndigeſted in their ſtomacks, they ſup off the foreſaid broth wherein their fleſh was ſteeped: for which purpoſe they vſe the palmes of their hands as a moſt fit inſtrument framed by nature to the ſame end. After that, each one drinks his cup of milke, and ſo their ſupper hath an end. Theſe Numidians, while they haue any ſtore of milke, regard water nothing at all, which for the moſt part hapneth in the Spring of the yeare, all which time you ſhall find ſome among them that will neither waſh their hands nor their faces. Which ſeemeth not altogether to be vnlikely; for (as we ſaid before) while their milke laſteth, they frequent not thoſe places where water is common: yea, and their Camels, ſo long as they may feede vpon graſſe, will drinke no water at all. They ſpend their whole dayes in hunting and theeuing: for all their indeauour and exerciſe is to driue away the Camels of their enemies; neither will they remaine aboue three dayes in one place, by reaſon that they haue not paſture any longer for the ſuſtenance of their Camels. And albeit (as is aforeſaid) they haue no ciuilitie at all, nor any Lawes preſcribed vnto them; yet haue they a certaine Gouernour or Prince placed ouer them, vnto whom they render obedience and due honour, as vnto their King. They are not onely ignorant of all good learning and liberall Sciences; but are likewiſe altogether careleſſe and deſtitute of vertue: inſomuch that you ſhall find ſcarce one amongſt them all, which is a man of iudgement or counſell. And if any iniuried partie will goe to the Law with his aduerſarie, hee muſt ride continually fiue or ſixe daies before he can come to the ſpeech of any iudge. This Nation hath all learning and good diſciplines in ſuch contempt, that they will not once vouchſafe to goe out of their deſerts for the ſtudy and attaining thereof: neither, if any learned man ſhall chance to come among them, can they loue his company and conuerſation, in regard of their moſt rude and deteſtable behauiour. Howbeit, if they can find any iudge, which can frame himſelfe to liue and continue among them, to him they giue moſt large yearely allowance. Some allow their Iudge a thouſand ducates yearely, ſome more, and ſome leſſe, according as themſelues thinke good. They that will ſeeme to be accounted of the better ſort, couer their heads (as I ſaid before) with a piece of blacke cloth, part whereof, like a vizard or maske, reacheth downe ouer their faces, couering all their countenance except their eyes; and this is their daily kind of attire. And ſo often as they put meate into their mouthes, they remoue the ſaid maske; which being done, they forthwith couer their mouthes againe, alleaging this fond reaſon: for (ſay they) as it is vnſeemely for a man, after he hath receiued meate into his ſtomacke, to vomit it out of his mouth againe, and to caſt it vpon the earth; euen ſo it is an vndecent part to eate meate with a mans mouth vncouered.

Their women.
Iealouſie.
Merchants.

The women of this Nation be groſſe, corpulent, and of a ſwart complexion. They are fatteſt vpon their breſt and paps, but ſlender about the girdle-ſtead. Very ciuill they are, after their manner, both in ſpeech and geſtures: ſometimes they will accept of a kiſſe; but who ſo tempteth them farther, putteth his owne life in hazard. For by reaſon of iealouſie, you may ſee them daily one to be the death and deſtruction of another, and that in ſuch ſauage and brutiſh manner, that in this caſe they will ſhew no compaſſion at all. And they ſeeme to bee more wiſe in this behalfe then diuers of our people, for they will by no meanes match themſelues vnto an harlot. The liberalitie of this people hath at all times been exceeding great. And when any trauellers may paſſe through their drie and deſart Territories, they will neuer repaire vnto their tents, neither will they themſelues trauell vpon the common high way. And if any Carauan, or multitude of Merchants will paſſe thoſe Deſarts, they are bound to pay certaine Cuſtome vnto the Prince of the ſaid people, namely, for euery Camels load, a piece of cloth worth a Ducat.

Bountifull hoſpitalitie.

Vpon a time I remember, that trauelling in the companie of certaine Merchants ouer the Deſart, called by them Araoan, it was our chance there to meete with the Prince of Zanaga; who, after he had receiued his due cuſtome, inuited the ſaid companie of Merchants, for their recreation, to goe and abide with him in his tents foure or fiue dayes. Howbeit, becauſe his tents were too farre out of our way, and for that wee ſhould haue wandred farther then we thought good, eſteeming it more conuenient for vs to hold on our direct courſe, we refuſed his gentle offer, and for his courteſie gaue him great thankes. But not being ſatisfied therewith, he commanded that our Camels ſhould proceede on forward, but the Merchants he carried along with him, and gaue them very ſumptuous entertainement at his place of abode. Where we were no ſooner arriued, but this good Prince cauſed Camels of all kinds and Oſtriches, which he had hunted and taken by the way, to bee killed for his houſhold prouiſion. Howbeit, wee requeſted him not to make ſuch daily ſlaughters of his Camels; affirming moreouer, that we neuer vſed to eate the fleſh of a gelt Camell, but when all other victuals failed vs. Whereunto hee anſwered, that he ſhould deale vnciuilly, if he welcommed ſo worthy and ſo ſeldome-ſeene gheſts with the killing of ſmal Cattell onely. Wherefore hee wiſhed vs to fall to ſuch prouiſion as was ſet before vs. Heere might you haue ſeene great plenty of roſted and ſodden fleſh: their roſted Oſtriches were brought to the Table in wicker platters, being ſeaſoned with ſundry kinds of Herbes and Spices. Their bread made of Mill and Panicke was of a moſt ſauorie and pleaſant taſte: and alwaies at the end of dinner or ſupper we had plentie of Dates, and great ſtore of Milke ſerued in. Yea, this bountifull and noble Prince, that he might ſufficiently ſhew how welcome wee were vnto him, would together with his Nobilitie alwaies beare vs company: howbeit, we euer dined and ſupped apart by our ſelues. Moreouer, hee cauſed certaine religious and moſt learned men to come vnto our banquet; who, all the time wee remained with the ſaid Prince, vſed not to eate any bread at all, but fed onely vpon fleſh and milke. Whereat we being ſomewhat amazed, the good Prince gently told vs, that they all were borne in ſuch places, whereas no kind of graine would grow: howbeit, that himſelfe for the entertainement of ſtrangers, had great plentie of Corne laid vp in ſtore. Wherefore he bade vs to be of good cheere, ſaying, That he would eate onely of ſuch things as his owne natiue ſoyle affoorded: affirming moreouer, that bread was yet in vſe among them at their feaſt of Paſſeouer, and at other feaſts alſo, whereupon they vſed to offer ſacrifice. And thus we remained with him for the ſpace of two dayes; all which time, what wonderfull and magnificent cheare we had made vs, would ſeeme incredible to report. But the third day, being deſirous to take our leaue, the Prince accompanied vs to that place where wee ouertooke our Camels and companie ſent before. And this I dare moſt deepely take mine oath on, that we ſpent the ſaid Prince ten times more, then our Cuſtome which he receiued came to. We thought it not amiſſe here to ſet downe this Hiſtorie, to declare in ſome ſort the courteſie and liberalitie of the ſaid Nation. Neither could the Prince aforeſaid vnderſtand our language, nor we his; but all our ſpeech to and fro was made by an interpreter. And this which we haue here recorded as touching this nation, is likewiſe to bee vnderſtood of the other foure Nations aboue mentioned, which are diſperſed ouer the reſidue of the Numidian Deſarts.

The Arabians offer themſelues ſlaues to any that would relieue their extreme hunger.

The Arabians, as they haue ſundrie manſions and places of abode, ſo doe they liue after a diuers and ſundry manner. Theſe which inhabite betweene Numidia and Libya leade a moſt miſerable and diſtreſſed life, differing much in this regard from thoſe Africans, whom we affirmed to dwell in Libya. Howbeit, they are farre more valiant then the ſaid Africans, and vſe commonly to exchange Camels in the land of Negros: they haue likewiſe great ſtore of Horſes, which in Europe they call Horſes of Barbarie. They take wonderfull delight in hunting and purſuing of Deare, of wild Aſſes, of Oſtriches, and ſuch like. Neither is here to be omitted, that the greater part of Arabians which inhabite Numidia, are very witty and conceited in penning of verſes; wherein each man will decypher his loue, his hunting, his combates, and other his worthy acts: and this is done for the moſt part in rime, after the Italian manner. And albeit they are moſt liberally minded, yet dare they not by bountifull giuing make any ſhew of wealth; for they are daily oppreſſed with manifold inconueniences. They are apparelled after the Numidians faſhion, ſauing that their women differ ſomewhat from the women of Numidia. Thoſe Deſarts which they doe now enioy, were wont to be poſſeſſed by Africans: but the Arabians with their Armie inuading that part of Africa, draue out the naturall Numidians, and reſerued the Deſarts adioyning vpon the Land of Dates, vnto themſelues: but the Numidians began to inhabite thoſe Deſarts which border vpon the land of Negros. The Arabians which dwell betweene Mount Atlas and the Mediterran ſea, are farre wealthier then theſe which wee now ſpeake of, both for coſtlineſſe of apparrell, for good horſe-meate, and for the ſtatelineſſe and beautie of their tents. Their Horſes alſo are of better ſhape, and more corpulent, but not ſo ſwift as the Horſes of the Numidian Deſart. They exerciſe Husbandry, and haue great increaſe of corne. Their droues and flockes of Cattell be innumerable, inſomuch that they cannot inhabit one by another for want of paſture. They are ſomewhat more vile and barbarous then thoſe which inhabit the Deſarts, and yet they are not altogether deſtitute of liberalitie: part of them which dwel in the territory of Fez, are ſubiect vnto the King of Fez. Thoſe which remaine in Marocco and Duccala haue continued this long time free from all exaction and tribute: but ſo ſoone as the King of Portugall began to beare rule ouer Azafi and Azamor, there began alſo among them ſtrife and ciuill warre. Wherefore being aſſailed by the King of Portugall on the one ſide, and by the King of Fez on the other, and being oppreſſed alſo with extreme famine and ſcarcitie of that yeere, they were brought vnto ſuch miſery, that they freely offered themſelues as ſlaues vnto the Portugals, ſubmitting themſelues to any man, that was willing to relieue their intolerable hunger: and by this meanes ſcarce one of them was left in all Duccala.

Poetry.

Moreouer, thoſe which poſſeſſe the Deſarts bordering vpon the Kingdomes of Tremizen and Tunis, may all of them (in regard of the reſt) be called Noblemen, and Gentlemen: For their Gouernours receiuing euery yeare great reuenues from the King of Tunis, diuide the ſame afterward among their people, to the end they may auoide all diſcord: and by this meanes all diſſention is eſchewed, and peace is kept firme and inuiolable among them. They haue notable dexteritie and cunning, both in making of Tents, and in bringing vp and keeping of Horſes. In Summertime they vſually come neere vnto Tunis, to the end that each man may prouide himſelf of bread, armour, and other neceſſaries; all which they carrie with them into the Deſarts, remaining there the whole Winter. In the Spring of the yeare they apply themſelues vnto hunting, inſomuch that no beaſt can eſcape their purſuite. My ſelfe (I remember) was once at their tents, to my no little danger and inconuenience, where I ſaw greater quantitie of Cloth, Braſſe, Yron, and Copper, then a man ſhall oftentimes find in the moſt rich ware-houſes of ſome Cities. Howbeit no truſt is to be giuen vnto them; for if occaſion ſerue, they will play the thieues moſt ſlily and cunningly; notwithſtanding, they ſeeme to carrie ſome ſhew of ciuilitie. They take great delight in Poetrie, and will pen moſt excellent verſes, their language being very pure and elegant. If any worthy Poet be found among them, he is accepted by their Gouernours with great honor and liberalitie; neither would any man eaſily belieue what wit and decencie is in their verſes.

Women.

Their women (according to the guiſe of that countrie) goe very gorgeouſly attired: they weare linnen Gownes died blacke, with exceeding wide ſleeues, ouer which ſometimes they caſt a Mantle of the ſame colour, or of blew, the corners of which Mantle are very artificially faſtened about their ſhoulders with a fine ſiluer claſpe. Likewiſe they haue rings hanging at their eares, which for the moſt part are made of ſiluer: they weare many rings alſo vpon their fingers. Moreouer, they vſually weare about their thighes and ankles certaine ſcarfes and rings, after the faſhion of the Africans. They couer their faces with certaine maskes, hauing onely two holes for their eyes to peepe out at. If any man chance to meete with them, they preſently hide their faces, paſſing by him with ſilence, except it be ſome of their Allies or Kinsfolks; for vnto them they alwayes diſcouer their faces, neither is there any vſe of the ſaid maske ſo long as they be in preſence. Theſe Arabians when they trauell any iourney (as they oftentimes doe) they ſet their women vpon certaine ſaddles made handſomely of wicker for the ſame purpoſe, and faſtned to their Camels backes, neither be they any thing too wide, but fit onely for a woman to ſit in. When they goe to the wars, each man carries his wife with him, to the end that ſhe may cheare vp her good man, and giue him encouragement. Their Damſels which are vnmarried, do vſually paint their faces, breſts, armes, hands, and fingers with a kind of counterfeit colour: which is accounted a moſt decent cuſtome amongſt them. But this faſhion was firſt brought in by thoſe Arabians, which before we called Africans, what time they began firſt of all to inhabite that region; for before then, they neuer vſed any falſe or glozing colours. The women of Barbarie vſe not this fond kind of painting, but contenting themſelues onely with their naturall hiew, they regard not ſuch fained ornaments: howbeit ſometimes they will temper a certaine colour with henſ-dung and ſafron, wherewithall they paint a little round ſpot on the bals of their cheekes, about the bredth of a French Crowne. Likewiſe betweene their eye-browes they make a triangle, and paint vpon their chinnes a patch like vnto an oliue leafe. Some of them alſo doe paint their eye-browes: and this cuſtome is very highly eſteemed of by the Arabian Poets, and by the Gentlemen of that countrie. Howbeit, they will not vſe theſe fantaſticall ornaments aboue two or three dayes together: all which time they will not bee ſeene to any of their friends, except it be to their husbands and children: for theſe paintings ſeeme to be great allurements vnto luſt, whereby the ſaid women thinke themſelues more trim and beautifull.

The Arabians in the Deſarts neere Egypt. Their pouerty.

The Arabians of Barca lay their ſonnes to pawne vnto the Sicilians for corne.

Cruell famine.

The life of the Arabians in the Deſarts betweene Barbarie and Egypt is full of miſerie and calamitie: for the places where they inhabite, are barren and vnpleaſant. They haue ſome ſtore of Camels and other Cattell: howbeit, their fodder is ſo ſcarce, that they cannot well ſuſtaine them. Neither ſhall you find ouer all the whole region any place fit to beare corne. And if in that Deſart there be any villages at all, which vſe to husband and manure their ground; yet reape they ſmall commoditie thereby, except it bee for plentifull increaſe of Dates. Their Camels and other of their Cattell, they exchange for Dates and Corne; and ſo the poore Huſbandmen of the foreſaid villages haue ſome ſmall recompence for their labours: notwithſtanding, how can all this ſatisfie the hunger of ſuch a multitude? For you ſhall daily ſee in Sicilia great numbers of their ſonnes laid to pawne; becauſe when they haue not wherewithall to pay for the Corne which they there buy, they are conſtrained to leaue their ſonnes behind them, as pledges of future payment. But the Sicilians, if their money bee not paid them at the time appointed, will chalenge the Arabians ſonnes to be their ſlaues. Which day being once paſt, if any father will redeeme his child, hee muſt diſburſe thrice or foure times ſo much as the due debt amounteth vnto: for which cauſe they are the moſt notable thieues in the whole world. If any ſtranger fall into their hands, depriuing him of all that he hath, they preſently carry him to Sicily, and there either ſell or exchange him for Corne. And I think, that no Merchants durſt at any time within theſe hundred yeares arriue for trafficks ſake vpon any part of their coaſt. For when they are to paſſe by with merchandize, or about any other weightie affaires, they eſchew that region fiue hundred miles at the leaſt. Once I remember, that I my ſelfe, for my better ſecuritie, and to auoide the danger of thoſe miſchieuous people, went in companie with certaine Merchants, who in three ſhips ſailed along their coaſt. Wee were no ſooner eſpied of them, but forthwith they came running to the ſhore, making ſignes that they would traffique with vs to our great aduantage. Howbeit, becauſe we durſt not repoſe any truſt in them, none of our companie would depart the ſhip, before they had deliuered certaine pledges vnto vs. Which being done, we bought certaine Eunuchs, or gelded men and good ſtore of butter of them. And ſo immediately weighing our ankers, we betooke vs to flight, fearing leſt wee ſhould haue been met withall by the Sicilian and Rhodian Pirates, and been ſpoiled not onely of our goods, but of our liberties alſo. To be ſhort, the ſaid Arabians are very rude, forlorne, beggerly, leane, and hunger-ſtarued people, hauing God (no doubt) alwaies diſpleaſed againſt them, by whoſe vengeance they daily ſuſtaine ſuch grieuous calamities.

Miſerable people.

The ouerthrow and death of the King of Tunis his ſonne.

You ſhall find many among the Africans which liue altogether a ſhepheards or drouers life, inhabiting vpon the beginning of mount Atlas, and being diſperſed here and there ouer the ſame Mountaine. They are conſtrained alwaies to pay tribute either to the King of the ſame region where they dwell, or elſe to the Arabians, except thoſe onely which inhabite Temeſna, who are free from all forren ſuperioritie, and are of great power. They ſpeake the ſame kind of language that other Africans doe, except ſome few of them which conuerſe with the inhabitants of the Citie called Vrbs (which is neere vnto Tunis) who ſpeake the Arabian tongue. Moreouer, there is a certaine people inhabiting that region, which diuideth Numidia from Tunis. Theſe oftentimes wage warre againſt the King of Tunis himſelfe, which they put in practice not many yeares ſince, when as the ſaid King his ſonne marching towards them from Conſtantina with an Armie, for the demanding of ſuch tribute as was due vnto him, fought a verie vnfortunate battell. For no ſooner were they aduertiſed of the Kings ſonne his approach, but forthwith they went to meete him with two thouſand Horſemen, and at length vanquiſhed and ſlew him at vnawares, carrying home with them all the furniture, bag, and baggage, which he had brought forth. And this was done in the yeere of Mahumets Hegeira 915. From that time their Fame hath beene ſpred abroad in all places. Yea, many of the King of Tunis his Subiects reuolted from their King vnto them; inſomuch that the Prince of this People is growne ſo puiſſant, that ſcarcely is his equall to be found in all Africa.

The ancient Africans were much addicted to Idolatrie, euen as certaine of the Perſians are at this day; ſome of whom worſhip the Sunne, and others the Fire, for their gods. For the ſaid Africans had in times paſt magnificent and moſt ſtately Temples built, and dedicated as well to the honour of the Sunne as of the Fire. In theſe Temples day and night they kept Fire kindled, giuing diligent heed that it might not at any time be extinguiſhed, euen as we reade of the Roman Veſtall Virgins: all which you may reade more fully and at large in the Perſian and African Chronicles. Thoſe Africans which inhabited Libya and Numidia, would each of them worſhip ſome certaine Planet, vnto whom likewiſe they offered Sacrifices and Prayers. Some others of the Land of Negros worſhip Guighimo, that is to ſay, The Lord of Heauen. And this ſound point of Religion was not deliuered vnto them by any Prophet or Teacher, but was inſpired, as it were, from God himſelfe. After that, they embraced the Iewiſh Law, wherein they are ſaid to haue continued many yeeres. Afterward they profeſſed the Chriſtian Religion, and continued Chriſtians, vntill ſuch time as the Mahumetan Superſtition preuailed; which came to paſſe in the yeere of the Hegeira 208. About which time certaine of Mahumets diſciples ſo bewitched them with eloquent and deceiuable ſpeeches, that they allured their weake minds to conſent vnto their opinion; inſomuch that all the Kingdomes of the Negroes adioyning vnto Libya receiued the Mahumetan Law. Neither is there any Region in all the Negros Land, which hath in it at this day any Chriſtians at all. At the ſame time ſuch as were found to be Iewes, Chriſtians, or of the African Religion, were ſlaine euery man of them. Howbeit thoſe which dwell neere vnto the Ocean Sea, are all of them very groſſe Idolaters. Howbeit afterward, ciuill diſſenſions ariſing among them, neglecting the Law of Mahumet, they ſlew all the Prieſts and Gouernours of that Region. Which tumult when it came to the eares of the Mahumetan Califas, they ſent an huge Armie againſt the ſaid Rebels of Barbarie, to wit, thoſe which were reuolted from the Califa of Bagdet, and ſeuerely puniſhed their miſdemeanour.

The Faith and Religion of the ancient Africans or Moores. Sunne and Fire worſhipped.

No Chriſtians among the Negroes. Wee may hold it a puniſhment of God for their many giddie hereſies, of which Monſters Africa was fertile as well as of the naturall Donatiſts, Circumcellians and others (which had this good to yeeld vs the learned labors of S. Aug.) The Arrians after preuailed, the Vandals making way to Mahumet.

Thoſe Writers which record the Hiſtories of the Arabians doings are all ioyntly of opinion, that the Africans were wont to vſe onely the Latine letters. The Arabians haue no Hiſtorie * of African matters, which was not firſt written in Latine. They haue certaine ancient Authors, who writ partly in the times of the Arrians, and partly before their times, the names of all which are cleane forgotten. But when as thoſe which rebelled againſt the Califa of Bagdet (as is aforeſaid) got the vpper hand in Africa, they burnt all the Africans bookes. For they were of opinion, that the Africans, ſo long as they had any knowledge of Naturall Philoſophie, or of other good Arts and Sciences, would euery day more and more arrogantly contemne the Law of Mahumet. Contrariwiſe, ſome Hiſtoriographers there are which affirme, that the Africans had a kind of letters peculiar vnto themſelues; which notwithſtanding, from the time wherein the Italians began firſt to inhabite Barbarie, and wherein the Chriſtians fleeing out of Italie from the Gothes, began to ſubdue thoſe Prouinces of Africa, were vtterly aboliſhed and taken away. For it is likely that a People vanquiſhed ſhould follow the cuſtomes and the letters alſo of their Conquerours. And did not the ſame thing happen to the Perſians, while the Arabians Empire ſtood? For certaine it is, that the Perſians at the ſame time loſt thoſe letters which were peculiar vnto their Nation; and that all their bookes, by the commandement of the Mahumetan Prelates, were burnt; leaſt their knowledge in naturall Philoſophie, or their or their idolatrous Religion might mooue them to contemne the precepts of Mahumet. The like alſo (as we ſhewed before) befell the Barbarians, when as the Italians and the Gothes vſurped their Dominions in Barbarie; which may here (I hope) ſuffice the gentle Reader. Howbeit this is out of doubt, that all the Sea-Cities and Inland-Cities of Barbarie doe vſe Latine letters onely, whenſoeuer they will commit any Epitaphs, or any other Verſes or Proſe vnto poſteritie. The conſideration of all which former particulars hath made me to be of opinion, that the Africans in times paſt had their owne proper and peculiar letters, wherein they deſcribed their doings and exploits. For it is likely that the Romans, when they firſt ſubdued thoſe Prouinces (as Conquerours vſually doe) vtterly ſpoiled and tooke away all their letters and memorie, and eſtabliſhed their owne letters in the ſtead thereof; to the end that the fame and honour of the Roman People might there onely be continued. And who knoweth not that the very ſame attempt was practiſed by the Gothes vpon the ſtately buildings of the Romans, and by the Arabians againſt the Monuments of the Perſians. Concerning thoſe nine hundred yeers, wherein the Africans vſed the letters of the Arabians, Ibnu Rachich, a moſt diligent Writer of Africa, doth in his Chronicle moſt largely diſpute; whether the Africans euer had any peculiar kind of writing or no. And at laſt he concludeth the affirmatiue part; that they had: for (ſayth he) whoſoeuer denyeth this, may as well denye, that they had a Language peculiar vnto themſelues. For it cannot be that any People ſhould haue a proper kind of Speech, and

The letters and characters of the Africans. The Africans vſed in times paſt none other kind of letters but the Roman letters.

The vnpleaſant and ſnowy places in Africa

The Mountaines of Atlas exceeding cold.

Moſt wonderfull and terrible Snowes about October and Nouemb.

All the Region of Barbarie, and the Mountaines contained therein, are ſubiect more to cold then to heat. For ſeldome commeth any gale of wind which bringeth not ſome Snow therwith. In all the ſaid Mountaines there grow abundance of Fruits, but not ſo great plentie of Corne. The Inhabitants of theſe Mountaines liue for the greateſt part of the yeere vpon Barley Bread. The Springs and Riuers iſſuing forth of the ſaid Mountaines, repreſenting the qualitie and taſte of their natiue ſoyle, are ſomewhat muddie and impure, eſpecially vpon the confines of Mauritania. Theſe Mountaines likewiſe are repleniſhed with Woods and loftie Trees, and are greatly ſtored with Beaſts of all kinds. But the little Hills and Valleys lying betweene the foreſaid Mountaines and Mount Atlas are farre more commodious, and abounding with Corne. For they are moiſtened with Riuers ſpringing out of Atlas, and from thence holding on their courſe to the Mediterran Sea. And albeit Woods are ſomewhat more ſcarce vpon theſe Plaines, yet are they much more fruitfull, then be the plaine Countreys ſituate betweene Atlas and the Ocean Sea, as namely, the Regions of Maroco, of Duccala, of Tedles, of Temeſna, of Azgara, and the Countrey lying towards the Straights of Gibraltar. The Mountaines of Atlas are exceeding cold and barren, and bring forth but ſmall ſtore of Corne, being woody on all ſides, and engendring almoſt all the Riuers of Africa. The Fountaines of Atlas are euen in the midſt of Summer extremely cold; ſo that if a man dippeth his hand therein for any long ſpace, he is in great danger of loſing the ſame. Howbeit the ſaid Mountaines are not ſo cold in all places: for ſome parts thereof are of ſuch milde temperature, that they may be right commodiouſly inhabited: yea, and ſundry places thereof are well ſtored with inhabitants; as in the ſecond part of this preſent diſcourſe we will declare more at large. Thoſe places which are deſtitute of Inhabitants be either extremely cold, as namely, the ſame which lie ouer againſt Mauritania: or very rough and vnpleaſant, to wit, thoſe which are directly oppoſite to the Region of Temeſna. Where notwithſtanding in Summer time they may feed their great and ſmall Cattell, but not in Winter by any meanes. For then the North wind ſo furiouſly rageth, bringing with it ſuch abundance of Snow; that all the Cattell which till then remaine vpon the ſaid Mountaines and a great part of the People alſo are forced to loſe their liues in regard thereof: wherefore whoſoeuer hath any occaſion to trauaile that way in Winter time, chuſeth rather to take his Iourney betweene Mauritania and Numidia. Thoſe Merchants which bring Dates out of Numidia for the vſe and ſeruice of other Nations, ſet forth vſually vpon their Iourney about the end of October: and yet they are oftentimes ſo oppreſſed and ouertaken with a ſodaine fall of Snow, that ſcarcely one man among them all eſcapeth the danger of the tempeſt. For when it beginneth to ſnow ouer night, before the next morning not onely Carts and Men, but euen the very Trees are ſo drowned and ouerwhelmed therein, that it is not poſſible to finde any mention of them. Howbeit the dead Carkaſſes are then found, when the Sunne hath melted the Snow.

The extreme danger of Snow which Iohn Leo himſelfe eſcaped.

I my ſelfe alſo, by the goodneſſe of Almightie GOD, twice eſcaped the moſt dreadfull danger of the foreſaid Snow; whereof, if it may not be tedious to the Reader, I will here in few words make relation. Vpon a certaine day of the foreſaid moneth of October, trauelling with a great companie of Merchants towards Atlas, wee were there about the Sunne going downe weather-beaten with a moſt cold and ſnowy kind of Hayle. Here we found eleuen or twelue Horſe-men (Arabians to our thinking) who perſwading vs to leaue our Carts and to goe with them, promiſed vs a good and ſecure place to lodge in. For mine owne part, that I might not ſeeme altogether vnciuill, I thought it not meet to refuſe their good offer; albeit I ſtood in doubt leſt they went about to practiſe ſome miſchiefe. Wherefore I bethought my ſelfe to hide vp a certaine ſumme of gold which I had as then about me. But all being readie to ride, I had no leaſure to hide away my Coyne from them; whereupon I fained that I would goe eaſe my ſelfe. And ſo departing a while their companie, and getting me vnder a certaine Tree, whereof I tooke diligent notice, I buried my money betweene certaine ſtones and the roote of the ſaid Tree. And then we rode on quietly till about mid-night. What time one of them thinking that he had ſtayed long enough for his Prey, began to vtter that in words which ſecretly he had conceiued in his mind. For he asked whether I had any money about me or not? To whom I anſwered, that I had left my money behind with one of them which attended the Carts, and that I had then none at all about me. Howbeit they being no whit ſatisfied with this anſwer, commanded me, for all the cold weather, to ſtrip my ſelfe out of mine apparell. At length when they could find no money at all, they ſaid in ieſting and ſcoffing wiſe, that they did this for no other purpoſe, but onely to ſee how ſtrong and hardy I was, and how I could endure the cold and tempeſtuous ſeaſon. Well, on we rode, ſeeking our way as well as wee could that darke and diſmall night; and anone we heard the bleating of Sheepe, coniecturing thereby, that wee were not farre diſtant from ſome habitation of people. Wherefore out of hand we directed our courſe thitherwards: being conſtrained to leade our Horſes thorow thicke Woods, and ouer ſteepe and craggie Rockes, to the great hazard and perill of our liues. And at length after many labours, wee found Shepheards in a certaine Caue: who, hauing with much paines brought their Cattell in there, had kindled a luſtie fire for themſelues, which they were conſtrained, by reaſon of the extreme cold, daily to ſit by. Who vnderſtanding our companie to be Arabians, feared at the firſt that we would doe them ſome miſchiefe: but afterward being perſwaded that we were driuen thither by extremitie of cold, and being more ſecure of vs, they gaue vs moſt friendly entertainment. For they ſet bread, fleſh, and cheeſe before vs, wherewith hauing ended our Suppers, we laid vs along each man to ſleep before the fire. All of vs were as yet exceeding cold, but eſpecially my ſelfe, who before with great horrour and trembling was ſtripped ſtarke naked. And ſo we continued with the ſaid ſhepheards for the ſpace of two dayes: all which time we could not ſet forth, by reaſon of continuall Snow. But the third day, ſo ſoone as they ſaw it leaue ſnowing, with great labour they began to remooue that Snow which lay before the doore of their Caue. Which done, they brought vs to our Horſes, which wee found well prouided of Hay in another Caue. Being all mounted, the ſhepheards accompanied vs ſome part of our way, ſhewing vs where the Snow was of leaſt depth, and yet euen there it touched our Horſe bellies. This day was ſo cleere, that the Sunne tooke away all the cold of the two dayes going before.

Continuall Snow.

At length entring into a certaine Village neere vnto Fez, wee vnderſtood, that our Carts which paſſed by, were ouer-whelmed with the Snow. Then the Arabians ſeeing no hope of recompence for all the paines they had taken (for they had defended our Carts from Theeues) carryed a certaine Iew of our Companie with them as their Captiue, (who had loſt a great quantitie of Dates, by reaſon of the Snow aforeſaid) to the end that he might remayne as their Priſoner, till he had ſatisfied for all the reſidue. From my ſelfe they tooke my Horſe, and committed me vnto the wide World and to Fortune. From whence, riding vpon a Mule, within three daies I arriued at Fez, where I heard dolefull newes of our Merchants and Wares, that they were caſt away in the Snow. Yea, they thought that I had beene deſtroyed with the reſt; but it ſeemed that God would haue it otherwiſe.

Vnkind kindneſſe.

Now, hauing finiſhed the Hiſtorie of mine owne misfortunes, let vs returne vnto that Diſcourſe where we left. Beyond Atlas there are certaine hot and dry places moyſtened with very few Riuers, but thoſe which flow out of Atlas it ſelfe: ſome of which Riuers running into the Libyan Deſarts are dryed vp with the Sands, but others do ingender Lakes. Neither ſhall you find in theſe Countreyes any places apt to bring forth Corne, notwithſtanding they haue Dates in abundance.

Riuers dryed vp by ſands.

There are alſo certaine other Trees bearing fruit, but in ſo ſmall quantitie, that no increaſe nor gaine is to be reaped by them. You may ſee likewiſe in thoſe parts of Numidia which border vpon Libya, certaine barren hils deſtitute of Trees, vpon the lower parts whereof grow nothing but vnprofitable thornes and ſhrubs. Amongſt theſe Mountaines you ſhall find no Riuers nor Springs, nor yet any waters at all, except it be in certaine Pits and Wels almoſt vnknowne vnto the Inhabitants of that Region. Moreouer, in ſixe or ſeuen dayes iourney they haue not one drop of water, but ſuch as is brought vnto them by certaine Merchants vpon Camels backs. And that eſpecially in thoſe places which lye vpon the mayne Road from Fez to Tombuto or from Tremizen to * Agad. That iourney likewiſe is very dangerous which is of late found out by the Merchants of our dayes from Fez to Alcair ouer the Deſarts of Libya, were it not for an huge Lake in the way, vpon the bankes whereof the Sinites and the Goranites doe inhabit. But in the way which leadeth from Fez to Tombuto are certaine Pits enuironed either with the hides or bones of Camels. Neither doe the Merchants in Sommer time paſſe that way without great danger of their liues: for oftentimes it falleth out, when the South-wind bloweth, that all thoſe Pits are ſtopped vp with ſand. And ſo the Merchants when they can find neither thoſe Pits, nor any mention thereof, muſt needs periſh for extreame thirſt: whoſe carkaſſes are afterward found lying ſcattered here and there, and ſcorched with the heat of the Sunne. One remedie they haue in this caſe, which is very ſtrange: for when they are ſo grieuouſly oppreſſed with thirſt, they kill forth-with ſome one of their Camels, out of whoſe bowels they wring and expreſſe ſome quantitie of water, which water they drinke and carrie about with them, till they haue either found ſome Pit of water, or till they pine away for thirſt. In the Deſart which they call Azaoad, there are as yet extant two Monuments built of Marble, vpon which Marble is an Epitaph engrauen, ſignifying that one of the ſaid Monuments repreſented a moſt rich Merchant, and the other a Carrier or tranſporter of Wares. Which wealthfull Merchant bought of the Carrier a cup of water for ten thouſand Ducats, and yet this precious water could ſuffice neither of them; for both were conſumed with thirſt. This Deſart likewiſe containeth ſundry kinds of beaſts, which in the fourth part of this Diſcourſe concerning Libya, and in our Treatiſe of the beaſts of Africa, we will diſcourſe of more at large.

* Agadez.

Danger by thirſt.

A ſtrange remedie vſed by the African Merchants to quench their thirſt.

A Merchant conſtrayned by extreme thirſt gaue ten thouſand Ducates for a cup of water.

The Land of Negros is extreame hot, hauing ſome ſtore of moyſture alſo, by reaſon of the Riuer of Niger running through the midſt thereof. All places adioyning vpon Niger doe mightily abound both with Cattell and Corne. No Trees I ſaw there but only certaine great ones, bearing a kind of bitter fruit like vnto a Cheſtnut, which in their Language is called Goron.

The fruit called Goron.

Cocos, Cucumbers, Onions.

Likewiſe in the ſame Regions grow Cocos, Cucumbers, Onions, and ſuch kinde of herbs and fruits in great abundance.

There are no Mountaines at all either in Libya or in the Land of Negros: howbeit diuers Fennes and Lakes there are; which (as men report) the inundation of Niger hath left behind it. Neither are the woods of the ſaid Regions altogether deſtitute of Elephants and other ſtrange beaſts; whereof we will make relation in their due place.

What naturall impreſſions & motions the Aire of Africa is ſubiect vnto; and what effects enſue thereupon. The ſeaſons of the yeare. Cheries ripe in Aprill.

Throughout the greateſt part of Barbarie ſtormie and cold weather begin commonly about the midſt of October. But in December and Ianuary the cold groweth ſome-what more ſharpe in all places: howeit this happeneth in the morning onely, but ſo gently and remiſſely, that no man careth greatly to warme himſelfe by the fire. February ſome-what mitigateth the cold of Winter, but that ſo inconſtantly, that the weather changeth ſometime fiue and ſometime ſixe times in one day. In March the North and Weſt winds vſually blow, which cauſe the Trees to be adorned with bloſſomes. In April all fruits attaine to their proper forme and ſhape, inſomuch that Cherries are commonly ripe about the end of Aprill and the beginning of May. In the midſt of May they gather their figs: and in mid-Iune their Grapes are ripe in many places. Likewiſe their Peares, their ſweete Quinces, and their Damaſcens attayne vnto ſufficient ripeneſſe in the monethes of Iune and Iuly. Their Figs of Autumne may be gathered in Auguſt; howbeit they neuer haue ſo great plentie of Figs and Peaches, as in September. By the midſt of Auguſt they vſually begin to dry their Grapes in the Sunne, whereof they make Raſins. Which if they cannot finiſh in September, by reaſon of vnſeaſonable weather, ~~of their~~ Grapes as then vngathered they vſe to make Wine and Muſt, eſpecially in the Prouince of Riſa, as wee will in due place ſignifie more at large. In the midſt of October they take in their Honey, and gather their Pomgranates and Quinces. In Nouember they gather their Oliues, not climing vp with Ladders nor plucking them with their hands, according to the cuſtome of Europe; for the Trees of Mauritania and Cæſarea are ſo tall, that no Ladder is long enough to reach vnto the fruit. And therefore their Oliues being full ripe, they climbe the Trees, beating them off the boughes with certaine long Poles, albeit they know this kind of beating to be moſt hurtfull vnto the ſaid Trees. Sometimes they haue great plentie of Oliues in Africa, and ſometimes as great ſcarcitie. Certaine great Oliue-trees there are, the Oliues whereof are eaten ripe by the Inhabitants becauſe they are not ſo fit for Oyle. No yeare falls out to be ſo vnſeaſonable, but that they haue three monethes in the ſpring alwayes temperate.

The Oliues of Africa.

Pleaſant ſpring

Raine ſignifying plentie or ſcarcitie.

They begin their ſpring vpon the fifteenth day of February, accounting the eighteenth of May, for the end thereof: all which time they haue moſt pleaſant weather. But if from the fiue and twentieth of Aprill, to the fifth of May they haue no raine fall, they take it as a ſigne of ill lucke. And the raine-water which falleth all the time aforeſaid they call Naiſan, that is, water bleſſed of God. Some ſtore it vp in Veſſels, moſt religiouſly keeping it, as an holy thing. Their Summer laſteth till the ſixteenth of Auguſt; all which time they haue moſt hot and cleere weather. Except perhaps ſome ſhowres of raine fall in Iuly and Auguſt, which doe ſo infect the Aire, that great plague and moſt peſtilent Feuers enſue thereupon; with which plague whoſoeuer is infected, moſt hardly eſcapeth death. Their Autumne they reckon from the ſeuenteenth of Auguſt to the ſixteenth of Nouember; hauing commonly in the monethes of Auguſt and September not ſuch extreme heate as before. Howbeit all the time betweene the fifteenth of Auguſt and the fifteenth of September is called by them the furnace of the whole yeare, for that it bringeth Figs, Quinces, and ſuch kind of fruits to their full maturitie. From the fifteenth of Nouember they beginne their winter-ſeaſon, continuing the ſame till the fourteenth day of February. So ſoone as Winter commeth, they begin to till their ground which lyeth in the Plaines: but vpon the Mountaines they goe to plough in October. The Africans are moſt certainly perſwaded that euery yeare contayneth fortie extreme hot dayes, beginning vpon the twelfth of Iune; and againe ſo many dayes extreme cold, beginning from the twelfth of December. Their Æquinoctia are vpon the ſixteenth of March, and the ſixteenth of September. For their Solſtitia they account the ſixteenth of Iune and the ſixteenth of December. Theſe rules they doe moſt ſtrictly obſerue, as well Husbandrie and Nauigation, as in ſearching out the houſes and true places of the Planets: and theſe inſtructions, with other ſuch like they teach their young children firſt of all.

Forty dayes of extreme heate and forty of cold.

The Peaſants and vnlearned people of Africa cunning in Aſtrologie. Note.

Many Countrey-people and Husbandmen there be in Africa, who knowing (as they ſay) neuer a Letter of the Booke, will notwithſtanding moſt learnedly diſpute of Aſtrologie, and alleage moſt profound reaſons and arguments for themſelues. But whatſoeuer skill they haue in the Art of Aſtrologie, they firſt learned the ſame of the Latines: yea, they giue thoſe very names vnto their Moneths which the Latines doe.

Moreouer, they haue extant among them a certaine great Booke diuided into three Volumes, which they call, The Treaſurie or Store-houſe of Husbandry. This Booke was then tranſlated out of Latine into their Tongue, when Manſor was Lord of Granada. In the ſaid Treaſurie are all things contayned which may ſeeme in any wiſe to concerne Husbandry; as namely, the changes and varietie of times, the manner of ſowing, with a number of ſuch like particulars, which (I thinke) at this day the Latine Tongue it ſelfe, whereout theſe things were firſt tranſlated, doth not contayne. Whatſoeuer either the Africans or the Mahumetans haue, which ſeemeth to appertaine in any wiſe to their Law or Religion, they make their computation thereof altogether according to the courſe of the Moone.

The yeare of the Arabians & Africans.

Their yeare is diuided into three hundred fiftie foure dayes: for vnto ſixe Monethes they allot thirtie dayes, and vnto the other ſixe but nine and twentie, all which beeing added into one ſumme doe produce the number aforeſaid: wherefore their yeare differeth eleuen daies from the yeare of the Latines. They haue at diuers times Feſtiuall Dayes and Faſts.

Winds.

About the end of Autumne, for all Winter, and a great part of the Spring they are troubled with boyſterous winds, with Haile, with terrible Thunder and Lightening: yea then it ſnoweth much in ſome places of Barbarie. The Eaſterne, Southerne, and South-eaſterne winds blowing in May and Iune, doe very much hurt there: for they ſpoyle the Corne, and hinder the fruit from comming to ripeneſſe. Their Corne likewiſe is greatly appayred by Snow, eſpecially ſuch as falleth in the day time, when it beginneth to flowre. Vpon the Mountaynes of Atlas they diuide the yeare into two parts onely: for their Winter continueth from October to Aprill; and from Aprill to October they account it Summer: neither is there any day throughout the whole yeare, wherein the tops of thoſe Mountaines are not couered with Snow. In Numidia, the yeare runneth away very ſwiftly: for they reape their Corne in May, and in October they gather their Dates: but from the midſt of September, they haue Winter till the beginning of Ianuarie. But if September falleth out to be raynie, they are like to loſe moſt part of their Dates.

The yeares diuided into two ſeaſons onely, vpon the Mountaines of Atlas.

All the fields of Numidia require watering from the Riuers; but if the Mountaynes of Atlas haue no raine fall vpon them, the Numidian Riuers waxe dry, and ſo the fields are deſtitute of watering. October being deſtitute of raine, the Husbandman hath no hope to caſt his ſeed into the ground: and he deſpayreth likewiſe, if it raine not in Aprill. But their Dates proſper more without raine, whereof the Numidians haue greater plentie then of Corne. For albeit they haue ſome ſtore of Corne, yet can it ſcarcely ſuffice them for halfe the yeere. Howbeit, if they haue good increaſe of Dates, they cannot want abundance of Corne, which is ſold vnto them by the Arabians for Dates. If in the Libyan Deſarts there fall out change of weather about the midſt of October; and if it continue rayning there all December, Ianuary, and ſome part of February, it is wonderfull what abundance of graſſe and milke it bringeth forth. Then may you find diuers Lakes in all places, and many Fennes throughout Libya; wherefore this is the meeteſt time for the Barbarie Merchants to trauell to the Land of Negros. Heere all kind of fruits grow ſooner ripe, if they haue moderate ſhowers about the end of Iuly. Moreouer, the Land of Negros receiueth by raine neither any benefit, nor yet any dammage at all. For the Riuer Niger together with the water which falleth from certaine Mountaynes doth ſo moyſten their grounds, that no places can be deuiſed to be more fruitfull: for that which Nilus is to Egypt, the ſame is Niger to the Land of Negros: for it increaſeth like Nilus from the fifteenth of Iune the ſpace of fortie dayes after, and for ſo many againe it decreaſeth. And ſo at the increaſe of Niger when all places are ouer-flowne with water, a man may in a Barke paſſe ouer all the Land of Negros, albeit not without great perill of drowning; as in the fift part of this Treatiſe we will declare more at large.

The increaſe of the Riuer of Niger and Nilus.

All the people of Barbarie by vs before mentioned liue vnto ſixtie fiue or ſeuentie yeares of age, and few or none exceed that number. Howbeit in the foreſaid Mountaynes I ſaw ſome which had liued an hundred yeares, and others which affirmed themſelues to bee older, whoſe age was moſt healthfull and luſtie. Yea, ſome you ſhall find heere of foureſcore yeares of age, who are ſufficiently ſtrong and able to exerciſe Husbandy, to dreſſe Vines, and to ſerue in the Warres; inſomuch that yong men are oftentimes inferiour vnto them. In Numidia, that is to ſay, in the Land of Dates, they liue a long time: howbeit they loſe their Teeth very ſoone, and their Eyes waxe wonderfull dimme. Which infirmities are likely to be incident vnto them, firſt becauſe they continually feed vpon Dates, the ſweetneſſe and naturall qualitie whereof doth by little and little pull out their Teeth: and ſecondly, the duſt and ſand, which is toſſed vp and downe the Ayre with Eaſterne windes entring into their Eyes, doth at laſt miſerably weaken and ſpoile their eye-ſight. The Inhabitants of Libya are of a ſhorter life; but thoſe which are moſt ſtrong and healthfull among them liue oftentimes till they come to threeſcore yeares; albeit they are ſlender and leane of bodie.

The length and ſhortneſſe of the Africans liues.

Teeth ſoone loſt and Eyes decayed.

The Negros commonly liue the ſhorteſt time of all the reſt: howbeit they are alwayes ſtrong and luſtie, hauing their Teeth ſound euen till their dying day: yet is there no Nation vnder Heauen more prone to Venery: vnto which vice alſo the Libyans and Numidians are too too much addicted. To be ſhort, the Barbarians are the weakeſt people of them all.

What kinds of Diſeaſes the Africans are ſubiect vnto.

The children, and ſometimes the ancient women of this Region are ſubiect vnto baldneſſe or vnnaturall ſhedding of haire; which diſeaſe they can hardly be cured of. They are likewiſe oftentimes troubled with the head-ache, which vſually afflicteth them without any ague ioyned therewith. Many of them are tormented with the tooth-ache, which (as ſome thinke) they are the more ſubiect vnto, becauſe immediately after hot pottage they drinke cold water. They are oftentimes vexed with extreame paine of the ſtomacke, which ignorantly they call, the paine of the heart. They are likewiſe daily moleſted with inward gripings and infirmities ouer their whole bodie, which is thought to proceed of continuall drinking of water. Yea, they are much ſubiect vnto bone-aches and gowts, by reaſon that they ſit commonly vpon the bare ground, and neuer weare any ſhooes vpon their feet. Their chiefe Gentlemen and Noblemen proue gowtie oftentimes with immoderate drinking of Wine and eating of daintie meates. Some with eating of Oliues, Nuts, and ſuch courſe fare, are for the moſt part infected with the Scuruies.

Neeſing at Sermons.

Thoſe which are of a ſanguine complexion are greatly troubled with the cough, becauſe that in the Sprin-ſeaſon they ſit too much vpon the ground. And vpon Fridayes I had no ſmall ſport and recreation to goe and ſee them. For vpon this day the people flocke to Church in great numbers to heare their Mahumetan Sermons. Now if any one in the Sermon-time fals a neezing, all the whole multitude will neeze with him for company, and ſo they make ſuch a noiſe, that they neuer leaue, till the Sermon be quite done; ſo that a man ſhall reape but little knowledge by any of their Sermons.

The French Diſeaſe.

When and by what meanes the French Pox was brought into Africa.

Hernia, or the Diſeaſe called burſting or the rupture.

If any of Barbarie be infected with the Diſeaſe commonly called the French Poxe, they dye thereof for the moſt part, and are ſeldome cured. This Diſeaſe beginneth with a kinde of anguiſh and ſwelling, and at length breaketh out into Sores. Ouer the Mountaines of Atlas, and throughout all Numidia and Libya they ſcarcely know this Diſeaſe. Inſomuch that oftentimes the parties infected trauell forth-with into Numidia or the land of Negros, in which places the Aire is ſo temperate, that onely by remayning there they recouer their perfect health, and returne home ſound into their owne Countrey: which I ſaw many doe with mine owne eyes; who without the helpe of any Phyſician or Medicine, except the foreſaid holſome aire, were reſtored to their former health. Not ſo much as the name of this malady was euer known vnto the Africans, before Ferdinand the King of Caſtile expelled all Iewes out of Spaine; after the returne of which Iewes into Africa, certaine vnhappie and lewd people lay with their Wiues; and ſo at length the Diſeaſe ſpread from one to another, ouer the whole Region: inſomuch that ſcarce any one Family was free from the ſame. Howbeit, this they were moſt certainly perſwaded of, that the ſame Diſeaſe came firſt from Spaine; wherefore they (for want of a better name) doe call it, The Spaniſh Poxe. Notwithſtanding at Tunis and ouer all Italy, it is called the French Diſeaſe. It is ſo called likewiſe in Ægypt and Syria: for there it is vſed as a common Prouerbe of Curſing; The French Poxe take you. Amongſt the Barbarians the Diſeaſe called in Latine Hernia is not ſo common; but in Ægypt the people are much troubled therewith. For ſome of the Ægyptians haue their Cods oftentimes ſo ſwollen, as it is incredible to report. Which infirmitie is thought to be ſo common among them, becauſe they eate ſo much Gumme, and Salt Cheeſe. Some of their children are ſubiect vnto the falling ſickneſſe; but when they grow to any ſtature, they are free from that Diſeaſe. This falling ſickneſſe likewiſe poſſeſſeth the women of Barbarie, and of the Land of Negros; who, to excuſe it, ſay that they are taken with a Spirit. In Barbarie the Plague is rife euery tenth, fifteenth, or twentieth yeare, whereby great numbers of people are conſumed; for they haue no cure for the ſame, but onely to rub the Plague-ſore with certaine Ointments made of Armenian Earth.

Earth of Armenia.

Plague rare in Numidia.

In Numidia they are infected with the Plague ſcarce once in an hundred yeares. And in the Land of Negros they know not the name of this Diſeaſe: becauſe they neuer were ſubiect thereunto.

The commendable actions and vertues of the Africans.

Mathematikes ſtudied.

Prieſts honoured.

Superſtitions.

Thoſe Arabians which inhabit in Barbarie or vpon the Coaſt of the Mediterran Sea, are greatly addicted vnto the ſtudie of good Arts and Sciences: and thoſe things which concerne their Law and Religion are eſteemed by them in the firſt place. Moreouer, they haue beene heretofore moſt ſtudious of the Mathematikes, of Philoſophie, and of Aſtrologie: but theſe Arts (as it is aforeſaid) were foure hundred yeares agoe, vtterly deſtroyed and taken away by the chiefe Profeſſors of their Law. The Inhabitants of Cities doe moſt religiouſly obſerue and reuerence thoſe things which appertaine vnto their Religion: yea, they honour thoſe Doctors and Prieſts, of whom they learne their Law, as if they were pettie gods. Their Churches they frequent very diligently, to the end they may repeat certaine preſcript and formall Praiers; moſt ſuperſtitiouſly perſwading themſelues that the ſame day wherein they make their praiers, it is not lawfull for them to waſh certaine of their members, when as at other times they will waſh their whole bodies.

Moreouer thoſe which inhabit Barbarie, are of great cunning and dexteritie for building and for Mathematicall Inuentions, which a man may eaſily coniecture by their artificiall Workes. Moſt honeſt people they are, and deſtitute of all fraud and guile; not onely imbracing all ſimplicitie and truth, but alſo practiſing the ſame throughout the whole courſe of their liues: albeit certaine Latine Authors, which haue written of the ſame Regions, are farre otherwiſe of opinion. Likewiſe they are moſt ſtrong and valiant people, eſpecially thoſe which dwell vpon the Mountaines. They keepe their couenant moſt faithfully; inſomuch that they had rather dye then breake promiſe.

The Moores are a people of great fidelitie.

No Nation in the World is ſo ſubiect vnto Iealouſie; for they will rather loſe their liues, then put vp any diſgrace in the behalfe of their women. So deſirous they are of Riches and Honour, that therein no other people can go beyond them. They trauel in a manner ouer the whole World to exerciſe Traffike. For they are continually to be ſeene in Ægypt, in Æthiopia, in Arabia, Perſia, India, and Turkie: and whitherſoeuer they goe, they are moſt honourably eſteemed of: for none of them will profeſſe any Art, vnleſſe hee hath attained vnto great exactneſſe and perfection therein. They haue alwayes beene much delighted with all kind of ciuilitie and modeſt behauiour: and it is accounted hainous among them for any man to vtter in companie, any Bawdie or vnſeemely word. They haue alwayes in mind this ſentence of a graue Author; Giue place to thy Superiour. If any youth in preſence of his Father, his Vncle, or any other of his Kindred, doth ſing or talke ought of loue matters, he is deemed to be worthy of grieuous puniſhment. Whatſoeuer Lad or Youth there lighteth by chance into any companie which diſcourſeth of Loue, no ſooner heareth nor vnderſtandeth what their talke tendeth vnto, but immediately he withdraweth himſelfe from among them.

Iealouſie.

Merchandiſe.

Grauitie.

Modeſtie.

Thoſe Arabians which dwell in Tents, that is to ſay, which bring vp Cattell, are of a more liberall and ciuill diſpoſition: to wit, they are in their kind as deuout, valiant, patient, courteous, hoſpitall, and as honeſt in life and conuerſation as any other people. They be moſt faithfull obſeruers of their word and promiſe: inſomuch that the people, which before we ſaid to dwell in the Mountaines, are greatly ſtirred vp with emulation of their Vertues. Howbeit the ſaid Mountainers, both for Learning, for Vertue, and for Religion, are thought much inferiour to the Numidians; albeit they haue little or no knowledge at all in naturall Philoſophie. They are reported likewiſe to be moſt skilfull Warriours, to be valiant, and exceeding louers and practiſers of all humanitie. Alſo, the Moores and Arabians inhabiting Libya are ſomewhat ciuill of behauiour, being plaine dealers, void of diſſimulation, fauourable to Strangers, and louers of Simplicitie.

The Arabians and their vertues.

Thoſe which we before named white, or tawnie Moores, are moſt ſtedfaſt in friendſhip: as likewiſe they indifferently and fauourably eſteeme of other Nations: and wholy indeauour themſelues in this one thing, namely, that they may leade a moſt pleaſant and iocund life. Moreouer, they maintaine moſt learned Profeſſors of liberall Arts, and ſuch men as are moſt deuout in their Religion. Neither is there any people in all Africa that lead a more happie and honourable life.

Neuer was there any people or Nation ſo perfectly endued with vertue, but that they had their contrary faults and blemiſhes: now therefore let vs conſider, whether the vices of the Africans doe ſurpaſſe their vertues and good parts. Thoſe which we named the Inhabitants of the Cities of Barbarie, are ſomewhat needie and couetous being alſo very proud and high-minded, and wonderfully addicted vnto wrath; inſomuch that (according to the Prouerbe) they will deeply engraue in Marble any iniurie be it neuer ſo ſmall, and will in no wiſe blot it out of their membrance. So ruſticall they are and void of good manners, that ſcarcely can any ſtranger obtaine their familiaritie and friendſhip. Their wits are but meane, and they are ſo credulous, that they will beleeue matters impoſſible, which are told them. So ignorant are they of naturall Philoſophie, that they imagine all the effects and operations of nature to be extraordinarie and diuine.

What vices the foreſaid Africans are ſubiect vnto.

Vindicatiue.

Rude.

Credulous.

They obſerue no certaine order of liuing nor of Lawes. Abounding exceedingly with choler, they ſpeake alwayes with an angry and lowd voice. Neither ſhall you walke in the daytime in any of their ſtreets, but you ſhall ſee commonly two or three of them together by the eares. By nature they are a vile and baſe people, being no better accounted of by their Gouernours then if they were Dogges. They haue neither Iudges nor Lawyers, by whoſe wiſdome and counſell they ought to be directed. They are vtterly vnskilfull in Trades of Merchandize, being deſtitute of Bankers Money-changers: wherefore a Merchant can doe nothing among them in his abſence, but is himſelfe conſtrayned to goe in perſon, whitherſoeuer his Wares are carryed. No people vnder Heauen are more addicted vnto couetiſe then this Nation: neither is there (I thinke) to be found among them one of an hundred, who for courteſie, humanitie, or deuotions ſake, will vouchſafe any entertainment vpon a ſtranger. Mindfull they haue alwayes beene of iniuries, but moſt forgetfull of benefits. Their mindes are perpetually poſſeſſed with vexation and ſtrife, ſo that they will ſeldome or neuer ſhew themſelues tractable to any man; the cauſe whereof is ſuppoſed to be; for that they are ſo greedily addicted vnto their filthy lucre, that they neuer could attayne vnto any kind of ciuilitie or good behauiour.

Cholericke & quarrelſome.

Couetous.

Ingratefull.

The Shepheards of that Region liue a miſerable, toylſome, wretched and beggerly life: they are a rude people, and (as a man may ſay) borne and bred to theft, deceit, and brutiſh manners. Their young men may goe a wooing to diuers Maides, till ſuch time as they haue ſped of a wife. Yea, the father of the Maide moſt friendly welcommeth her Suiter; ſo that I thinke ſcarce any Noble or Gentleman among them can chuſe a Virgine for his Spouſe: albeit, ſo ſoone as any Shepheards.

Mariages.

Irreligion.

woman is married, ſhe is quite forſaken of all her Suiters; who then ſeeke out other new Paramours for their liking. Concerning their Religion, the greater part of theſe people are neither Mahumetans, Iewes, nor Chriſtians; and hardly ſhall you find ſo much as a ſparke of Pietie in any of them. They haue no Churches at all, nor any kind of Prayers, but being vtterly eſtranged from all godly deuotion, they leade a ſauage and beaſtly life: and if any man chanceth to bee of a better diſpoſition (becauſe they haue no Law-giuers nor Teachers among them) hee is conſtrained to follow the example of other mens liues and manners.

Robberie.

All the Numidians being moſt ignorant of Naturall, Domeſticall, and Common-wealth matters, are principally addicted vnto Treaſon, Trecherie, Murther, Theft and Robberie. This Nation, becauſe it is moſt ſlauiſh, will right gladly accept of any ſeruice among the Barbarians, be it neuer ſo vile or contemptible. For ſome will take vpon them to be Dung-farmers, others to be Scullions, ſome others to be Oſtlers, and ſuch like ſeruile Occupations. Likewiſe the Inhabitants of Libya liue a brutiſh kind of life; who neglecting all kinds of good Arts and Sciences, doe wholy apply their minds vnto theft and violence. Neuer as yet had they any Religion, any Lawes, or any good forme of liuing; but alwaies had, and euer will haue a moſt miſerable and diſtreſſed life. There cannot any trechery or villanie be inuented ſo damnable, which for lucres ſake they dare not attempt. They ſpend all their dayes either in moſt lewd practices, or in hunting, or elſe in warfare; neither weare they any ſhooes nor garments. The Negros likewiſe leade a beaſtly kind of life, being vtterly deſtitute of the vſe of reaſon, of dexteritie of wit, and of all Arts. Yea, they ſo behaue themſelues, as if they had continually liued in a Foreſt among wild beaſts. They haue great ſwarmes of Harlots among them; whereupon a man may eaſily coniecture their manner of liuing; except their conuerſation perhaps bee ſomewhat more tolerable, who dwell in the principall Townes and Cities: for it is like that they are ſomewhat more addicted to Ciuilitie.

BEginning at the Weſt part of Africa, we will in this our Geographicall Hiſtorie proceed Eaſtward, till we come to the borders of Ægypt.

Hea being one of the Prouinces of Maroco is bounded Weſtward and Northward, with the maine Ocean, Southward with the Mountaines of Atlas, and Eaſtward with the Riuer which they call Eſſiualo. This Riuer ſpringeth out of the foreſaid Mountaine, diſcharging it ſelfe at length into the Riuer of Tenſift, and diuiding Hea from the Prouince next adiacent.

The Region of Hea lying vpon the Weſt part of Africa.

The Region of Hea is an vneuen and rough ſoile, full of rockie Mountaines, ſhadie Woods, and Chriſtall Streames in all places; being wonderfully rich, and well ſtored with Inhabitants. They haue in the ſaid Region great abundance of Goats and Aſſes, but not ſuch plentie of Sheep, Oxen, and Horſes. All kind of Fruits are very ſcarce among them.

This People for the moſt part eateth Barly-bread vnleauened, which is like rather vnto a Cake, then to a Loafe: this Bread is baked in a kind of earthen Baking-pan.

Their Food.

The greateſt part of them are clad in a kind of cloth Garment made of Wooll after the manner of a Couerlet, called in their Language, Elchiſe, and not vnlike vnto thoſe Couerlets or Blankets which the Italians lay vpon their Beds. In theſe kind of Mantles they wrap themſelues; and then are they girt with a woollen girdle, not about their waſte, but about their hips. You may eaſily diſcerne which of them is married, and who is not: for an vnmarried man muſt alwayes keepe his Beard ſhauen, which, after hee bee once married, hee ſuffereth to grow at length. The ſaid Region bringeth forth no great plentie of Horſes, but thoſe that it doth bring forth, are ſo nimble and full of mettall, that they will climbe like Cats ouer the ſteep and craggie Mountaines. Theſe Horſes are alwayes vnſhod: and the People of this Region vſe to till their ground with no other Cattell, but onely with Horſes and Aſſes. You ſhall here find great ſtore of Deere, of wild Goats, and of Hares. No good learning nor liberall Arts are here to be found; except it be a little skill in the Lawes, which ſome few challenge vnto themſelues: otherwiſe you ſhall find not ſo much as any ſhadow of vertue among them. They haue neither Phyſician nor Surgeon of any learning or account. But if a diſeaſe or infirmitie befall any of them, they preſently ſeare or cauterize the ſicke partie with red hot Irons, euen as the Italians vſe their Horſes. Howbeit ſome Chyrurgians there are among them, whoſe dutie and occupation conſiſteth onely in circumciſing of their male Children. Whoſoeuer will trauell into a forraine Countrey muſt take either a Harlot, or a Wife, or a religious man of the contrary part, to beare him companie. They haue no regard at all of Iuſtice.

Their Attire.

Horſes and other Beaſts.

Cauterizing.

The ancient Citie of Tedneſt was built by the Africans vpon a moſt beautifull and large Plaine, which they inuironed with a loftie Wall built of Bricke and Lime. In this Citie there are no Innes, Stoues, nor Wine-tauernes: ſo that whatſoeuer Merchant goes thither, muſt ſeeke out ſome of his acquaintance to remaine withall: but if hee hath no friends nor acquaintance in the Towne, then the principall Inhabitants there caſt lots who ſhould entertaine the ſtrange Merchant: inſomuch that no Stranger, be he neuer ſo meane, ſhall want friendly entertainment, but is alwaies ſumptuouſly and honourably accepted of. But whoſoeuer is receiued as a Gueſt, muſt at his departure beſtow ſome gift vpon his Hoſt in token of thankfulneſſe, to the end hee may be more welcome at his next returne. Howbeit if the ſaid Stranger be no Merchant, hee may chuſe what great mans houſe he will to lodge in, being bound at his departure to no recompence nor gift. To be ſhort, if any Beggar or poore Pilgrim paſſe the ſame way, he hath ſome ſuſtenance prouided for him in a certaine Hoſpitall, which was founded onely for the reliefe of poore people, and is maintained at the common charge of the Citie. In the middeſt of the Citie ſtands an ancient Temple, being moſt ſumptuouſly built, and of an huge bigneſſe, which was thought to be founded at the very ſame time when as the King of Maroco bare rule in thoſe places. This Temple hath a great Ciſterne ſtanding in the midſt thereof, and it hath many Prieſts and ſuch kind of People which giue attendance thereunto, and ſtore it with things neceſſarie. In this Citie likewiſe are diuers other Temples, which, albeit they are but little, yet be they moſt cleanly and decently kept. There are in this Citie about an hundred Families of Iewes. My ſelfe ſaw this Citie vtterly ruined and defaced, the Walls thereof being laid euen with the ground, the Houſes being deſtitute of Inhabitants, and nothing at that time to be there ſeene, but onely the neſts of Rauens and of other Birds. All this I ſaw in the 920. yeere of the Hegeira.

Tedneſt forſaken for feare of the Portugals.

Vpon the foot of an hill eighteene miles Eaſtward from Tedneſt, ſtands a Towne called by the Africans Teculeth, and containing about one thouſand Houſholds. Here alſo is to be ſeene a moſt ſtately and beautifull Temple; as likewiſe foure Hoſpitals, and a Monaſterie of Religious perſons. The Inhabitants of this Towne are farre wealthier then they of Tedneſt: for they haue a moſt famous Port vpon the Ocean Sea, commonly called by Merchants, Goz. They haue likewiſe great abundance of Corne and Pulſe, which grow in the fruitfull fields adiacent. It was deſtroyed by the Portugals, 1514.

Teculeth a Towne of Hea.

The Citie of Hadecchis being ſituate vpon a Plaine, ſtandeth eight miles Southward of Teculeth: it containeth ſeuen hundred Families: and the Walls, Churches, and Houſes throughout this whole Citie are all built of Free-ſtone. They haue certaine yeerely Faires or Marts, wherunto unto the Nations adioyning doe vſually reſort. Here is to bee ſold great ſtore of Cattell, of Butter, Oyle, Iron, and Cloth; and their ſaid Mart laſteth fifteene dayes. Their Women are very beautifull, white of colour, fat, comely, and trim. But the Men beare a moſt ſauage mind, being ſo extremely poſſeſſed with iealouſie, that whomſoeuer they find but talking with their Wiues, they preſently goe about to murther them. They haue no Iudges nor learned men among them, nor any which can aſſigne vnto the Citizens any Functions and Magiſtracies according to their worthineſſe: ſo that he rules like a King that excelleth the reſidue in wealth. For matters of Religion, they haue certaine Mahumetan Prieſts. Who neither pay Tribute nor yeerely Cuſtome, euen as they whom we laſt before mentioned. Here I was entertained by a certaine courteous and liberall-minded Prieſt, who was exceedingly delighted with Arabian Poetrie. From hence I trauelled vnto Maroco. And afterward I heard that this Towne alſo, in the yeere of the Hegeira 922. was ſacked by the Portugals; and that the Inhabitants were all fled into the next Mountaines.

Hadecchis ſacked by the Portugals, 1513.

Ileuſagaghen a Towne of Hea.

This Towne is ſituate vpon the top of a certaine high Mountaine which is diſtant eight miles to the South of Hadecchis: it conſiſteth of about two hundred Families. They are at continuall war with their neighbours, which is performed with ſuch monſtrous bloud-ſhed and man-ſlaughter, that they deſerue rather the name of Beaſts then of Men. They haue neither Iudges, Prieſts, nor Lawyers, to preſcribe any forme of liuing among them, or to gouerne their Common-wealth: wherefore iuſtice and honeſtie is quite baniſhed out of their habitations. Thoſe Mountaines are altogether deſtitute of Fruits: howbeit they abound greatly with Honie, which ſerueth the Inhabitants both for Food, and for Merchandize to ſell in the neighbour-Countries. And becauſe they know not what ſeruice to put their Waxe vnto, they caſt it forth, together with the other excrements of Honie. No People vnder Heauen can be more wicked, treacherous, or lewdly addicted, then this People is.

The curteſie of the Citizens of Teſegdelt towards Strangers.

The Towne Teſegdelt being ſituate vpon the top of a certaine high Mountaine, and naturally enuironed with an high Rocke in ſtead of a Wall, containeth more then eight hundred Families. It is diſtant from Teiyent Southward about twelue miles, and it hath a Riuer running by it, the name whereof I haue forgotten. About this Towne of Teſegdelt are moſt pleaſant Gardens and Orchards, repleniſhed with all kind of Trees, and eſpecially with Walnut-trees. The Inhabitants are wealthie, hauing great abundance of Horſes, neither are they conſtrained to pay any Tribute vnto the Arabians. There are continuall Warres betweene the Arabians and them, and that with great bloud-ſhed and man-ſlaughter on both parts. The Villages lying neere vnto Teſegdelt doe vſually carrie all their Graine thither, leſt they ſhould be depriued thereof by the Enemie, who maketh daily inrodes and inuaſions vpon them. The Inhabitants of the foreſaid Towne are much addicted vnto curteſie and ciuilitie; and for liberalitie and bountie vnto Strangers, they will ſuffer themſelues to be inferiour to none other. At euery Gate of Teſegdelt ſtand certaine Watch-men or Warders, which doe moſt louingly receiue all In-commers, enquiring of them, whether they haue any friends and acquaintance in the Towne, or no? If they haue none, then are they conducted to one of the beſt Innes of the Towne, and hauing had entertainment there, according to their degree and place, they are friendly diſmiſſed: and whatſoeuer his expences come to, the Stranger payes nought at all, but his charges are defrayed out of the common Purſe. This People of Teſegdelt are ſubiect alſo vnto iealouſie: howbeit they are moſt faithfull keepers of their promiſe. In the very midſt of the Towne ſtands a moſt beautifull and ſtately Temple, whereunto belong a certaine number of Mahumetan Prieſts.

A Deſcription of the Citie of Tagteſs.

Water farre fetched.

Locuſts.

The moſt ancient Citie of Tagteſs is built round, and ſtandeth vpon the top of an Hill: on the ſides whereof are certaine winding ſteps hewen out of the hard Rocke. It is about fourteene miles diſtant from Teſegdelt. By the foot of the ſaid Hill runnes a Riuer, whereout the Women of Tagteſs draw their water, neither haue the Citizens any other drinke: and although this Riuer be almoſt ſixe miles from Tagteſs, yet a man would thinke, looking downe from the Citie vpon it, that it were but halfe a mile diſtant. The way leading vnto the ſaid Riuer being cut out of the Rocke, in forme of a paire of Staires, is very narrow. While I was in that Countrey, there came ſuch a ſwarme of Locuſts, that they deuoured the greateſt part of their Cornes which were as then ripe: inſomuch that all the vpper part of the ground was couered with Locuſts. Which was in the yeere of the Hegeira 919. that is, in the yeere of our Lord 1510.

The Towne of Eitdeuet.

Iewes.

Lawyers. Learned Men. Law-bookes.

Fifteene miles Southward from Tagteſs ſtands another Towne called Eitdeuet. In the ſaid Towne are Iewes of all Occupations: and ſome there are which affirme, that the firſt Inhabitants of this Towne came by naturall deſcent from King Dauid: but ſo ſoone as the Mahumetan Religion had infected that place, their owne Law and Religion ceaſed. Here are great ſtore of moſt cunning Lawyers, which are perfectly well ſeene in the Lawes and conſtitutions of that Nation: for, I my ſelfe ſaw a very aged man, who could moſt readily repeat a whole Volume written in their Language, called by them Elmudevuana, that is to ſay, the Bodie of the whole Law. The ſaid Volume is diuided into three Tomes, wherein all difficult queſtions are diſſolued: together with certaine Counſels or Commentaries of a famous Author, which they call Melic.

This

Culeihat Elmuridin, that is to ſay, The Rock of Diſciples, a Caſtle of Hea.

This Culeihat Elmuridin is a Caſtle built vpon the top of a certaine high Mountaine, hauing round about it diuers other Mountaines of a like heighth, which are enuironed with craggie Rocks and huge Woods. There is no paſſage vnto this Caſtle, but onely a certaine narrow path vpon one ſide of the Mountaine. By the one ſide thereof ſtands a Rocke, and vpon the other-ſide the Mountaine of Teſegdelt is within halfe a mile, and it is diſtant from Eitdeuet almoſt eighteene miles. This Caſtle was built euen in our time by a certaine Apoſtata, or renouncer of the Mahumetan religion, called by them Homar Seyef; who being firſt a Mahumetan Preacher vnto the people, propounded vnto a great number of Diſciples and Sectaries, whom hee had drawn to be of his opinion, certain new points of religion. This fellow ſeeing that he preuailed ſo with his Diſciples, that they eſteemed him for ſome petty-god, became of a falſe Preacher a moſt cruell tyrant, and his gouernment laſted for twelue yeares. Hee was the chiefe cauſe of the deſtruction and ruine of the whole Prouince. At length he was ſlaine by his owne wife, becauſe he had vnlawfully lien with her daughter which ſhe had by her former husband. And then was his peruerſe and lewd dealing laid open vnto all men: for hee is reported to haue been vtterly ignorant of the lawes, and of all good knowledge. Wherefore not long after his deceaſe, all the inhabitants of the region gathering their forces together, ſlew euery one of his Diſciples and falſe Sectaries. Howbeit, the Nephew of the ſaid Apoſtata was left aliue; who afterward in the ſame Caſtle endured a whole yeares ſiege of his aduerſaries, and repelled them, inſomuch that they were conſtrained to depart. Yea, euen vntill this day he moleſteth the people of Hea, and thoſe which inhabite neere vnto him, with continuall warre, liuing vpon robberie and ſpoile; for which purpoſe he hath certaine Horſemen, which are appointed to watch and to purſue trauellers, ſometimes taking Cattell, and ſometimes men captiues. He hath likewiſe certaine Gunners, who, although trauellers be a good diſtance off (for the common high-way ſtandeth almoſt a mile from the Caſtle) will put them in great feare. Howbeit, all people doe ſo deadly hate him, that they will not ſuffer him to till one foote of ground, or to beare any dominion without the ſaid Mountaine. This man hath cauſed his Grandfathers body to be honourably buried in his Caſtle, ſuffering him to be adored of his people, as if he were a God. Paſſing by that way vpon a certaine time, I eſcaped their very bullets narrowly.

A peſtiferous Mahumetan Preacher.

Iiglingil and Teſethne are here omitted for breuitie.

The Inhabitants of the Mountaines in Hea.

The greateſt part of the people of Hea dwelleth vpon mountaines, ſome whereof being called Ideuacal (for ſo are they named) inhabite vpon that part of Atlas, which ſtretcheth it ſelfe from the Ocean Sea Eaſtward, as farre as Igilingigil; and this ridge of mountaines diuideth Hea from Sus. The breadth of this mountaine is three dayes iourney. It is repleniſhed with inhabitants and country Villages. Their ordinarie food is Barly, Goates-fleſh, and Hony. Shirts they weare none at all, nor yet any other garments which are ſowne together; for there is no man among them which knoweth how to vſe the needle: but ſuch apparell as they haue, hangeth by a knot vpon their ſhoulders. Their women weare ſiluer rings vpon their eares, ſome three, and ſome more. They haue ſiluer buttons of ſo great a ſcantling, that each one weigheth an ounce, wherewith they faſten their apparell vpon their ſhoulders, to the end it may not fall off. The nobler and richer ſort of people among them weare ſiluer rings vpon their fingers and leggs: but ſuch as are poore, weare rings only of iron or of copper. There are likewiſe certaine Horſes in this Region, being ſo ſmal of ſtature and ſo ſwift, as it is wonderfull. Here may you find great plentie of wild Goats, Hares, & Deere, and yet none of the people are delighted in hunting. Many fountaines are here to be found, and great abundance of trees, but eſpecially of Walnut-trees. The greater part of this people liueth after the Arabians manner, often changing their places of habitation. A kind of Daggers they vſe, which are broad and crooked like a wood-knife; and their Swords are as thicke as Sithes, wherewith they mow Hay. When they goe to the warres, they carrie three or foure hunting Toyles with them. In all the ſaid mountaine are neither Iudges, Prieſts, or Temples to be found. So ignorant they are of learning, that not one among them either loueth, or embraceth the ſame. They are all moſt lewd and wicked people, and apply their minds vnto all kind of villanie. It was told the Seriffo in my preſence, that the foreſaid mountaine was able to affoord twentie thouſand ſouldiers for a neede.

The Mountaine called Demenſera.

This mountaine alſo is a part of Atlas, beginning from the mountaine laſt before mentioned, and extending it ſelfe Eaſtward for the ſpace of about fiftie miles, as farre as the mountaine of Niſiſ, in the Territorie of Maroco; and it diuideth a good part of Hea from the Region of Sus before named. It aboundeth with inhabitants, which are of a moſt barbarous and ſauage diſpoſition. Horſes they haue great plentie: they goe to warre oftentimes with the Arabians which border vpon them; neither will they permit any of the ſaid Arabians to come within their Dominions. There are no Townes nor Caſtles vpon all this mountaine: howbeit, they haue certaine Villages and Cottages, wherein the better ſort doe hide their heads. Great ſtore of Noblemen or Gouernours they haue in all places, vnto whom the reſidue are very obedient. Their ground yeeldeth Barly and Mill in abundance. They haue euerie where many fountaines, which being diſperſed ouer the whole Prouince, doe at length iſſue into that Riuer, which is called in their language Siffaia. Their apparell is ſomewhat decent: alſo they poſſeſſe great quantitie of Iron, which is from thence tranſported into other places; and theſe people are well giuen to thrift.

thrift and good huſbandrie. Great numbers of Iewes remaine in this Region, which liue as ſtipendarie ſouldiers vnder diuers Princes, and are continually in Armes; and they are reputed and called by other Iewes in Africa, Carraum; that is to ſay, Heretikes. They haue ſtore of Boxe, of Maſtick, and of high Walnut-trees. Vnto their Argans (for ſo they call a kind of Oliues which they haue) they put nuts; out of which two ſimples they expreſſe very bitter Oyle, vſing it for a ſauce to ſome of their meates, and powring it into their lampes. I heard diuers of their principall men auouch, that they were able to bring into the field fiue and twenty thouſand moſt expert ſouldiers.

Of the Mountaine of Iron, commonly called Gebelelbadith.

This mountaine is not to be accounted any part of Atlas: for it beginneth Northward from the Ocean, and Southward it extendeth to the Riuer of Tenſift, and diuideth Hea from Duccala and Maroco. The inhabitants are called Regraga. Vpon this hill are waſte Deſarts, cleare Fountaines, and abundance of hony, and of Oyle Arganick, but of Corne and Pulſe great ſcarcitie, vnleſſe they make prouiſion thereof out of Duccala. Few rich men are here to bee found, but they are all moſt deuout and religious after their manner. Vpon the top of this mountaine are many Hermites, which liue onely vpon the fruites of certaine trees, and drinke water. They are a moſt faithfull and peaceable Nation. Whoſoeuer among them is apprehended for theft or any other crime, is forthwith baniſhed the countrey for certaine yeares. So great is their ſimplicitie, that whatſoeuer they ſee the Hermites doe, they eſteeme it as a miracle. They are much oppreſſed with the often inuaſions of their neighbours the Arabians; wherefore this quiet Nation chooſe rather to pay yearely tribute, then to maintaine warre.

The Region of Sus.

Now comes the Region of Sus to be conſidered of, being ſituate beyond Atlas, ouer againſt the Territorie of Hea, that is to ſay, in the extreme part of Africa. Weſtward it beginneth from the Ocean Sea, and Southward from the Sandie Deſarts: on the North it is bounded with the vtmoſt Towne of Hea; and on the Eaſt with that mightie Riuer whereof the whole Region is named. Wherefore beginning from the Weſt, we will deſcribe all thoſe Cities and places which ſhall ſeeme to be worthy of memorie.

Of the Towne of Meſſa.

Three ſmall Townes were built by the ancient Africans vpon the Sea ſhoare (each being a mile diſtant from other) in that very place where Atlas takes his beginning: all which three are called by one onely name, to wit, Meſſa; and are inuironed with a wall built of white ſtones. Through theſe three runneth a certaine great Riuer, called Sus, in their language: this Riuer in Summer is ſo deſtitute of water, that a man may eaſily without perill paſſe ouer it on foote; but it is not ſo in the Winter-time. They haue then certaine ſmall barkes, which are not meete to ſaile vpon this Riuer. The place where the foreſaid three Townes are ſituate, aboundeth greatly with Palme trees, neither haue they in a manner any other wealth; and yet their Dates are but of ſmall worth, becauſe they will not laſt aboue one yeare. All the inhabitants exerciſe huſbandry, eſpecially in the moneths of September and Aprill, what time their Riuer encreaſeth. And in May their Corne groweth to ripeneſſe. But if in the two foreſaid moneths the Riuer encreaſeth not according to the wonted manner, their harueſt is then nothing worth. Cattell are very ſcarce among them. Not farre from the ſea-ſide they haue a Temple, which they greatly eſteeme and honour. Out of which, Hiſtoriographers ſay, that the ſame Prophet, of whom their great Mahumet foretold, ſhould proceed. Yea, ſome there are which ſticke not to affirme, that the Prophet Ionas was caſt forth by the Whale vpon the ſhoare of Meſſa, when he was ſent to preach vnto the Niniuites. The rafters and beames of the ſaid Temple are of Whales bone. And it is a vſuall thing amongſt them, to ſee Whales of an huge and monſtrous bigneſſe caſt vp dead vpon their ſhoare, which by reaſon of their hugeneſſe and ſtrange deformitie, may terrifie and aſtoniſh the beholders. The common people imagine, that, by reaſon of a certaine ſecret power and vertue infuſed from heauen by God vpon the ſaid temple, each Whale which would ſwim paſt it, can by no meanes eſcape death. Which opinion had almoſt perſwaded me, eſpecially when at my being there, I my ſelfe ſaw a mighty Whale caſt vp, vnleſſe a certaine Iew had told me, that it was no ſuch ſtrange matter: for (quoth he) there lie certaine rockes two miles into the Sea on either ſide, and as the Sea moues, ſo the Whales moue alſo; and if they chance to light vpon a rocke, they are eaſily wounded to death, and ſo are caſt vpon the next ſhoare. This reaſon more preuailed with me, then the opinion of the people. My ſelfe (I remember) being in this Region at the ſame time when my Lord the Seriffo bare rule ouer it, was inuited by a certaine Gentleman, and was by him conducted into a Garden, where he ſhewed me a Whales rib of ſo great a ſize, that lying vpon the ground with the conuexe or bowing ſide vpward, in manner of an arch, it reſembled a gate, the hollow or inward part whereof aloft we could not touch with our heads, as we rode vpon our Camels backs: this rib (he ſaid) had laine there aboue an hundred yeares, and was kept as a miracle. Here may you find vpon the ſea-ſhore great ſtore of Amber, which the Portugal and Feſſan Merchants fetch from thence for a verie meane price: for they ſcarcely pay a Duckat for a whole ounce of moſt choiſe and excellent Amber. Amber (as ſome thinke) is made of Whales dung, and (as others ſuppoſe) of their Sperma or Seede, which being conſolidate and hardned by the Sea, is caſt vpon the next ſhoare.

Teijeut containeth foure thouſand families, and ſtandeth not farre from the Riuer of Sus. The ſoyle adiacent is moſt fruitfull for graine, for Barly, and for all kind of Pulſe. They haue here likewiſe a good quantitie of Sugar growing; howbeit, becauſe they know not how to preſſe, boyle, and trim it; they cannot haue it but blacke and vnſauorie: wherefore ſo much as they can ſpare, they ſell vnto the Merchants of Maroco, of Fez, and of the land of Negros. Of Dates likewiſe they haue plentie; neither vſe they any mony beſides the Gold which is digged out of their own natiue ſoile. The women weare vpon their heads a piece of cloth worth a duckat. Siluer they haue none, but ſuch as their women adorne themſelues with. The leaſt Iron-coine vſed amongſt them, weigheth almoſt an ounce. No fruites take plentifully vpon their ſoile but onely Figgs, Grapes, Peaches, and Dates. Here is that excellent Leather dreſſed, which is called Leather of Maroco; twelue hides whereof are here ſold for ſixe Duckats, and at Fez for eight. That part of this Region which lieth toward Atlas hath many Villages, Townes, and Hamlets: but the South part thereof is vtterly deſtitute of inhabitants, and ſubiect to the Arabians, which border vpon it. In the midſt of this Citie ſtandeth a faire and ſtately Temple, which they call The greateſt, and The chiefeſt, through the verie midſt whereof they haue cauſed a part of the foreſaid Riuer to runne. The inhabitants are ſterne and vnciuill, being ſo continually exerciſed in warres, that they haue not one day of quiet. Each part of the Citie hath a ſeuerall Captaine and Gouernour, who all of them together doe rule the Common-wealth: but their authoritie continueth neuer aboue three moneths, which being expired, three other are choſen in their roome.

The Towne of Tarodant built by the ancient Africans, containeth about three thouſand houſholds. For when the Family of Marin gouerned at Fez, part of them alſo inhabited Sus, and in thoſe dayes Sus was the ſeate of the King of Fez his Vice-roy. All authoritie is committed vnto their Noble, or principall men, who gouerne foure by foure, ſixe moneths onely.

Tarodant, a Towne of Sus.

Tedſi being a very great Towne, and built many yeares agoe in a moſt pleaſant and fertile place by the Africans, containeth moe then foure thouſand families; it is diſtant from Tarodant Eaſtward thirtie miles, from the Ocean ſea ſixtie miles, and from Atlas twentie. Here groweth great abundance of Corne, of Sugar, and of wild Woad. You ſhall find in this Citie many Merchants, which come out of the land of Negros for trafficks ſake. The Citizens are great louers of peace, and of all ciuilitie: and they haue a flouriſhing Common-wealth. The whole Citie is gouerned by ſixe Magiſtrates which are choſen by lots: howbeit, their gouernment laſteth for ſixteene moneths onely. The Riuer of Sus is diſtant three miles from hence. Here dwell many Iewes, which are moſt cunning Gold-ſmiths, Carpenters, and ſuch like Artificers. They haue a very ſtately Temple, and many Prieſts and Doctors of the Law, which are maintained at the publike charge. Euery Mundy great numbers of Arabians both of the Plaines, and of the Mountaines come hither to Market.

Store of Sugar and of Woad.

In all Sus there is no Citie comparable vnto that which is commonly called Tagauoſt, for it containeth aboue eight thouſand houſholds; the wall thereof is built of rough ſtones. From the Ocean it is diſtant about threeſcore miles, and about fiftie miles Southward of Atlas: and the report is, that the Africans built this Citie. About ten miles from this place lieth the Riuer of Sus: here are great ſtore of Artificers and of ſhops, and the people of Tagauoſt are diuided into three parts. They haue continuall ciuill warres among themſelues, and one part haue the Arabians alwaies on their ſide; who for better pay will take part ſometime with one ſide, and ſometime with the contrarie. Of Corne and Catell here is great abundance; but their Wooll is exceeding courſe. In this Citie are made certaine kinds of apparell, which are vſually carried for merchandize once a yeere to Tombuto, to Gualata, and to other places in the land of Negros. Their Market is twice euery weeke: their attire is ſomewhat decent and comely: their women are beautifull: but their men are of a tawnie and ſwart colour, by reaſon they are deſcended of blacke fathers, and white mothers.

The Citie of Tagauoſt.

The Mountaine Hanchiſa beginneth Weſtward from Atlas, and from thence ſtretcheth almoſt fortie mile as Eaſtward. The inhabitants of this Mountaine are ſuch valiant foot-men, that one of them will encounter two Horſemen. The ſoile will yeeld no Corne at all but Barly; howbeit hony there is in great abundance. With ſnow they are almoſt at all times troubled: but how patiently and ſtrongly they can endure the cold, a man may eaſily gheſſe, for that the whole yeare throughout they weare one ſingle garment onely.

The Mountaine of Hanchiſa.

The Mountaine Ilalem beginneth Weſtward from the Mountaine aforeſaid; on the Eaſt it abutteth vpon the region of Guzula, and Southward vpon the Plaines of Sus. The inhabitants are valiant, hauing great ſtore of Horſes. They are at continuall warre among themſelues for certaine Siluer mines; ſo that thoſe which haue the better hand, digge as much Siluer as they can, and diſtribute to euery man his portion, vntill ſuch time as they bee reſtrained from digging by others.

The region of Maroco beginneth Weſtward from the Mountaine of Neſiſa, ſtretching Eaſtward to the Mountaine of Hadimei, and Northward euen to that place where the moſt famous Riuers of Tenſift and Aſſinual meete together, that is to ſay, vpon the Eaſt-border of Hea. This region is in a manner three ſquare, being a moſt pleaſant Country, and abounding with many droues and flocks of Cattell : it is greene euery where, and moſt fertile of all things, which ſerue for foode, or which delight the ſences of ſmelling or ſeeing. It is altogether a plaine country.

Teneſſa.

Vpon a certaine hill of Atlas named Ghedmui ſtandeth a towne, which was built (as ſome report) by the ancient Africans, and called by the name of Teneſſa, being a moſt ſtrong and defenſible place, and being diſtant about eight miles Eaſtward from the riuer of Aſiſinuall. At the foot of the ſaid hill lieth a moſt excellent plaine, which, were it not for the lewd theeuiſh Arabians, would yeeld an incomparable crop. And becauſe the inhabitants of Teneſſa are depriued of this notable commodity, they till onely that ground which is vpon the ſide of the mountaine, and which lieth betweene the towne and the riuer. Neither doe they enioy that gratis; for they yeerely pay vnto the Arabians for tribute the third part of their corne.

The new towne of Delgumuha.

Vpon the top of a certaine high mountaine was built in our time a moſt large and impregnable Fort, being inuironed on all ſides with diuers other mountaines, and called by the inhabitants New Delgumuha. Beneath the ſaid mountaine ſpringeth Aſiſinuall, which word ſignifieth the African tongue, the Riuer of Rumor, becauſe that breaking foorth by the ſide of the hill with a monſtrous noiſe, it maketh a moſt deepe gulfe, much like vnto that, which the Italians call Inferno di Tivoli. The ſaid Fort containeth almoſt a thouſand families. They haue alwayes beene great louers of ciuility, and haue worne neat and decent apparell; neither ſhall you find any corner in the whole towne which is not well peopled. In this towne are plentie of Artificers, for it is but fiftie miles from the City of Maroco.

The Citie of Imizmizi.

Vpon a certaine part of Atlas ſtandeth a Citie called Imizmizi. Weſtward it is diſtant from new Delgumuha about fourteene miles: and this citie the Arabians are reported to haue built. Neere vnto this Citie lieth the common high way to Guzula ouer the mountaines of Atlas, being commonly called Burris, that is, A way ſtrewed with feathers: becauſe ſnow falls often thereupon, which a man would thinke rather to be feathers then ſnow. Not farre from this towne likewiſe there is a very faire and large plaine, which extendeth for the ſpace of thirtie miles, euen to the territory of Maroco. This moſt fertile plaine yeeldeth ſuch excellent corne, as (to my remembrance) I neuer ſaw the like. Sauing that the Arabians and ſouldiers of Maroco doe ſo much moleſt the ſaid plaine countrey, that the greater part thereof is deſtitute of the inhabitants:

A moſt exact deſcription of the great and famous City of Maroco, as it was 100. yeeres agoe.

The firſt founder of Maroco.

Maroco in times paſt contained aboue 100000. families. In later times before the late ciuill broyles, it is likely to haue beene much greater: one plague is ſaid to haue conſumed 700000. perſons.

This noble City of Maroco in Africa is accounted to be one of the greateſt cities in the world. It is built vpon a moſt large field, being about fourteene miles diſtant from Atlas. One Ioſeph the ſonne of Teſfin, and king of the tribe or people called Luntuna, is reported to haue beene the founder of this Citie, at that very time when he conducted his troupes into the region of Maroco, and ſetled himſelfe not farre from the common high-way, which ſtretcheth from Agmeg ouer the mountaines of Atlas, to thoſe deſarts where the foreſaid tribe or people doe vſually inhabite. Heere may you behold moſt ſtately and wonderfull workmanſhip: for all their buildings are ſo cunningly and artificially contriued, that a man cannot eaſily deſcribe the ſame. This huge & mighty City, at ſuch time as it was gouerned by Hali the ſon of King Ioſeph, contained moe then one hundred thouſand families. It had foure and twenty gates belonging therto, and a wall of great ſtrength and thicknes, which was built of white ſtone and lime. From this City the riuer of Tenſift lieth about ſixe miles diſtant. Heere may you behold great abundance of Temples, of Colledges, of Bath-ſtoues, and of Innes, all framed after the faſhion and cuſtome of that region. Some were built by the King of the tribe of Luntuna, and others by Elmuachidin his ſucceſſor: but the moſt curious and magnificent Temple of all, is that in the midſt of the City which was built by Hali the firſt King of Maroco, and the ſonne of Ioſeph aforeſaid, being commonly called the Temple of Hali ben Ioſeph. Howbeit one Abdul-Mumen which ſucceeded him, to the end he might vtterly aboliſh the name of Hali, and might make himſelfe onely famous with poſterity, cauſed this ſtately Temple of Maroco to be razed, and to be reedified ſomwhat more ſumptuouſly then before. Howbeit he loſt not onely his expences, but failed of his purpoſe alſo: for the common people euen till this day doe call the ſaid Temple by the firſt and ancienteſt name.

Fooliſh emulation.

Manſor the king of Maroco.

A ſtately Temple.

Likewiſe in this City not farre from a certaine rocke was built a Temple by him that was the ſecond vſurper ouer the kingdome of Maroco: after whoſe death his nephew Manſor enlarged the ſaid Temple fiftie cubits on all ſides and adorned the ſame with many pillars, which he commanded to be brought out of Spaine for that purpoſe. Vnder this Temple he made a Ciſterne or vault as bigge as the Temple it ſelfe: the roofe of the ſaid Temple he couered with lead: and at euery corner he made leaden pipes to conuay raine water into the Ciſterne vnderneath the Temple. The turret or ſteeple is built of moſt hard and well framed ſtone, like vnto Veſpaſian his Amphitheatrum at Rome, containing in compaſſe moe then an hundreth elles, and in height exceeding the ſteeple of Bononia. The ſtaires of the ſaid turret or ſteeple are each of them nine handfuls in breadth, the vtmoſt ſide of the wall is ten, and * the thicknes of the turret is fiue

The ſaid turret hath ſeuen lofts, vnto which the ſtaires aſcending are very lightſome: for there are great ſtore of windowes, which to the end they may giue more light, are made broader within then without. Vpon the top of this turret is built a certaine ſpire or pinnacle riſing ſharpe in forme of a ſugar-loafe, and containing fiue and twenty elles in compaſſe, but in height being not much more then two ſpeares length: the ſaid ſpire hath three lofts one aboue another, vnto euery of which they aſcend with wooden ladders. Likewiſe on the top of this ſpire ſtandeth a golden halfe moone, vpon a barre of Iron, with three ſpheares of gold vnder it; which golden ſpheares are ſo faſtened vnto the ſaid iron bar that the greateſt is loweſt, and the leaſt higheſt. It would make a man giddie to looke downe from the top of the turret; for men walking on the ground, be they neuer ſo tall, ſeeme no bigger then a child of one yeere old. From hence likewiſe may you plainely eſcrie the promontory of Azaphi, which notwithſtanding is an hundreth and thirtie miles diſtant. But mountaines (you will ſay) by reaſon of their huge bigneſſe may eaſily be ſeene a farre off: howbeit from this turret a man may in cleere weather moſt eaſily ſee fiftie miles into the plaine countreys. The inner part of the ſaid Temple is not very beautifull. But the roofe is moſt cunningly and artificially vaulted, the timbers being framed and ſet together with ſingular workmanſhip, ſo that I haue not ſeene many fairer Temples in all Italy. And albeit you ſhall hardly find any Temple in the whole world greater then this, yet it is very meanly frequented; for the people doe neuer aſſemble there but onely vpon fridayes. Yea a great part of this City, eſpecially about the aforeſaid Temple lieth ſo deſolate & void of inhabitants, that a man cannot without great difficulty paſſe, by reaſon of the ruines of many houſes lying in the way. Vnder the porch of this Temple it is reported that in old time there were almoſt an hundreth ſhops of ſale-bookes, and as many on the other ſide ouer againſt them: but at this time I thinke there is not one Book-ſeller in all the whole City to be found. And ſcarcely is the third part of this City inhabited.

Great ſtore of bookes in old time to be ſold in Maroco.

Within the wals of Maroco are Vines, Palme-trees, great Gardens, and moſt fruitfull Cornefields: for without their wals they can till no ground, by reaſon of the Arabians often inrodes. Know ye this for a certainty, that the ſaid City is growen to vntimely decay and old age: for ſcarcely fiue hundreth and ſixe yeeres are paſt, ſince the firſt building thereof, foraſmuch as the foundations thereof were laid in the time of Ioſeph the ſonne of Teſfin, that is to ſay, in the foure hundreth twentie and fourth yeere of the Hegeira. Which decay I can impute to none other cauſe, but to the iniurie of continuall warres, and to the often alterations of Magiſtrates and of the common-wealth. After King Ioſeph ſucceeded his ſonne Hali, and the ſonne of Hali was ordained gouernour after his fathers deceaſe. In whoſe time ſprung vp a factious crue, by the meanes of a certaine Mahumetan Preacher named Elmaheli, being a man both borne and brought vp in the mountaines. The ſaid Elmaheli hauing leuied a great army, waged warre againſt Abraham his ſoueraigne Lord. Whereupon King Abraham conducting another armie againſt him, had marueilous ill ſucceſſe: and after the battell ended, his paſſage into the City of Maroco was ſo ſtopped and reſtrained, that he was forced with a few ſouldiers, which remained yet aliue, to flee Eaſtward to the mountaines of Atlas. But Elmaheli not being ſatisfied with expelling his true Soueraigne out of his owne Kingdome, commanded one of the Captaines called Abdul Mumen, with the one halfe of his armie to purſue the diſtreſſed King, while himſelf with the other halfe laide ſiege to Maroco. The king with his followers came at length vnto Oran, hoping there to haue renewed his forces. But Abdul Mumen and his great armie purſued the ſaid King ſo narrowly, that the Citizens of Oran told him in plaine termes, that they would not hazard themſelues for him. Wherefore this vnhappie King being vtterly driuen to diſpaire, ſet his Queene on horſe-backe behind him, and ſo in the night time road foorth of the Citie. But perceiuing that hee was diſcried and knowen by his enemies, he fled foorthwith vnto a certaine rocke ſtanding vpon the ſea-ſhore: where, ſetting ſpurs to his horſe-ſide, he caſt himſelfe, his moſt deere ſpouſe, and his horſe downe headlong, and was within a while after found ſlaine among the rockes and ſtones, by certaine which dwelt neere vnto the place. Wherefore Abdul Mumen hauing gotten the victorie, returned in triumphant manner toward Maroco, where the foreſaid Elmaheli was deceaſed before his commning, in whoſe place Abdal was choſen King and Mahumetan Prelate ouer the fortie diſciples, and tooke ten perſons to be of his priuy councell, which was a new inuention in the law of Mahumet. This Abdul Mumen hauing beſieged the Citie of Maroco for the ſpace of an whole yeere, at laſt ouercame it: and killing Iſaac the onely ſonne of King Abraham with his owne hand, he commanded all the ſouldiers, and a good part of the Citizens to be ſlaine. This mans poſteritie raigned from the fiue hundred ſixteenth, to the ſixe hundred ſixtie eight yeere of the Hegeira, and at length they were diſpoſſeſſed of the Kingdome by a certaine King of the Tribe called Marin. The family of Marin after the ſaid Kings deceaſe bare rule till the yeere of the Hegeira, ſeuen hundreth eightie and fiue. The principall court of this family was holden for the moſt part at Fez; but ouer Maroco were appointed Vice-royes and Deputies: inſomuch that Fez was continually the head and Metropolitan Citie of all Mauritania, and of all the Weſterne dominion.

In the ſaid City of Maroco is a moſt impregnable Caſtle, which, if you conſider the bignes, the walls, the towres, and the gates built all of perfect marble, you may well thinke it to be a City rather then a Caſtle. Within this Caſtle there is a ſtately Temple, hauing a moſt loftie and high ſteeple, on the top whereof ſtandeth an halfe moone, and vnder the halfe moone are three golden ſpheares one bigger then another, which all of them together weigh one hundreth and thirty thouſand ducates. Some Kings there were, who being allured with the value, went about to take downe the ſaid golden ſpheares: but they had alwayes ſome great miſfortune or other, which hindred their attempt: Likewiſe the ſaid Caſtle containeth a noble Colledge, which hath thirtie Hals belonging thereunto. In the midſt whereof is one Hall of a maruellous greatneſſe, wherein publike Lectures were moſt ſolemnely read, while the ſtudie of Learning flouriſhed among them. Such as were admitted into this Colledge had their victuals and apparell freely giuen them. Of their Profeſſours ſome were yearely allowed an hundred, and ſome two hundred Duckats, according to the qualitie of their profeſſion: neither would they admit any to heare them read, but ſuch as perfectly vnderſtood what belonged to thoſe Arts which they profeſſed. The wals of this beautifull Hall are moſt ſtately adorned with painting and caruing, eſpecially of that Hall where Lectures were woont publikely to be read. All their Porches and vaulted Roofes are made of painted and glittering ſtones, called in their Language Ezzulleia, ſuch as are yet vſed in Spaine. In the midſt of the ſaid building is a moſt pleaſant and cleare Fountaine, the wall whereof is of white and poliſhed Marble, albeit low built, as in Africa for the moſt part ſuch wals are. I haue heard that in old time here was great abundance of Students, but at my being there I found but fiue in all: and they haue now a moſt ſenſeleſſe Profeſſour, and one that is quite void of all humanitie.

Moreouer, the foreſaid Caſtle (as I remember) hath twelue Courts moſt curiouſly and artificially built by one Manſor. In the firſt lodged about fiue hundred Chriſtians, which carryed Croſſe-bowes before the King whitherſoeuer he went. Not farre from thence is the lodging of the Lord Chancellour and of the Kings Priuie Counſell, which Houſe is called by them, The Houſe of Affaires. The third is called, The Court of Victorie; wherein all the Armour and Munition of the Citie is layed vp. The fourth, belongeth to the great Maſter of the Kings Horſe. Vpon this Court three Stables adioyne, each one of which Stables will containe two hundred Horſes. Likewiſe there are two other Oſtleries, whereof one is for Mules, and the other for an hundred of the Kings Horſes onely. Next vnto the Stables were two Barnes or Garners adioyning in two ſeuerall places, in the lower of which Barnes was layed Straw, and Barley in the other. There is alſo another moſt large place to lay vp Corne in, euery Roome whereof will containe more then three hundred Buſhels. The couer of the ſaid Roome hath a certaine hole whereunto they aſcend by ſtaires made of ſtone. Whither the beaſts laden with Corne being come, they powre the ſaid Corne into the hole. And ſo when they would take any Corne from thence, they doe but open certaine holes below, ſuffering ſo much Corne to come forth as may ſerue their turnes, and that without any labour at all. There is likewiſe a certaine other Hall, where the Kings Sonne and the Sonnes of Noblemen are inſtructed in Learning. Then may you behold a certaine foure-ſquare building, containing diuers Galleries with faire Glaſſe Windowes, in which Galleries are many Hiſtories moſt curiouſly painted: heere likewiſe the glittering and gilt Armour is to be ſeene. Next vnto this building is another, wherein certaine of the Kings Guard are lodged: then followes that wherein State-matters are diſcuſſed: whereunto adioyneth alſo another, which is appointed for Ambaſſadors to conferre with the Kings Priuie Counſell in. Likewiſe the Kings Concubines and other Ladies of Honour haue a moſt conuenient place aſſigned them: next vnto which ſtandeth the Lodging of the Kings Sonnes. Not farre from the Caſtle wall, on that ſide which is next vnto the fields, may you behold a moſt pleaſant and large Garden, contayning almoſt all kind of Trees that can bee named.

Excellent ſpotted Marble.

Moreouer, there is a ſumptuous and ſtately Porch built of moſt excellent ſquare Marble: in the midſt whereof ſtandeth a Piller with a Lion very artificially made of Marble, out of the mouth of which Lion iſſueth moſt cleere and Chriſtall water, falling into a Ciſterne within the Porch: at each corner of the ſaid Porch ſtandeth the Image of a Leopard framed of white Marble, which is naturally adorned with certaine blacke ſpots: this kind of parti-coloured Marble is no where to be found but onely in a certaine place of Atlas, which is about an hundred and fiftie miles diſtant from Maroco. Not farre from the Garden ſtands a certaine Wood or Parke walled round about: And here I thinke no kind of wild beaſts are wanting: for heere you may behold Elephants, Lions, Stagges, Roes, and ſuch like: howbeit the Lions are ſeparated in a certaine place from other beaſts, which place euen to this day is called The Lions Den. Wherefore ſuch Monuments of Antiquitie as are yet extant in Maroco, albeit they are but few, doe notwithſtanding ſufficiently argue, what a Noble Citie it was in the time of Manſor.

This King called Manſor, was he vnto whom Raſis that famous Phyſician dedicated his Booke.

At this preſent all the Courts and Lodgings before deſcribed lye vtterly voyd and deſolate: except perhaps ſome of the Kings Oſtlery which tend his Mules and Horſes do lye in that Court, which we ſaid euen now was to lodge Archers and Croſſe-bow-men: all the reſidue are left for the Fowles of the Aire to neſtle in. That Garden which you might haue named a Paradiſe in old time, is now become a place where the filth and dung of the whole Citie is caſt forth. Where the faire and ſtately Librarie was of old, at this preſent there is nothing elſe to be found, but Hens, Doues, and other ſuch like Fowles, which build their Neſts there. Certaine it is, that the foreſaid Manſor, whom we haue ſo often mentioned, was a moſt puiſſant and mighty Prince: for it is well knowne that his Dominion ſtretched from the Towne of Meſſa to the Kingdome of Tripolis in Barbarie, which is the moſt excellent Region of Africa, and ſo large, that a man can hardly trauell the length thereof in foureſcore and ten dayes, or the breadth in fifteene. This Manſor likewiſe was in times paſt Lord of all the Kingdome of Granada in Spaine. Yea, his Dominion in Spaine extended from Tariffa to Aragon, and ouer a great part of Caſtilia and of Portugall. Neither did this Iacob, ſurnamed Manſor, only poſſeſſe the foreſaid Dominions, but alſo his Grand-father Abdul Mumen, his father Ioſeph, and his Sonne Mahumet Enaſir, who beeing vanquiſhed in the Kingdome of Valentia, loſt threeſcore thouſand Souldiers, Horſemen and Footmen: howbeit himſelfe eſcaped and returned to Maroco. The Chriſtians being encouraged with this victorie, refrayned not from Warre, till, within thirtie yeares ſpace, they had wonne all the Townes following, to wit, Valentia, Denia, Alcauro, Murcia, Cartagena, Cordoua, Siuillia, Iaen, and Vbeda. After which vnhappie warre ſucceeded the decay of Maroco. The ſaid Mahumet deceaſing, left behind him ten Sonnes of a full and perfect age, who contended much about the Kingdome. Hereupon it came to paſſe, while the Brethren were at diſcord, and aſſayled each other with mutuall warres, that the people of Fez called Marini, and the Inhabitants of other Regions adiacent, began to vſurpe the Gouernment. The people called Habduluad enioyed Tremizen, expelling the King of Tunis, and ordayning ſome other, whom they pleaſed, in his ſtead. Now haue you heard the end of Manſor his Progenie and Succeſſors. The Kingdome therefore was tranſlated vnto one Iacob the Sonne of Habdulach, who was the firſt King of the Family called Marin. And at length the famous Citie of Maroco it ſelfe, by reaſon of the Arabians continuall out-rages, fell into moſt extreme calamitie: ſo great is the inconſtancie of all earthly things. That which we haue here reported as touching Maroco, partly wee ſaw with our owne eyes, partly we reade in the Hiſtorie of one Ibnu Abdul Malich, a moſt exact Chronicler of the Affaires of Maroco.

The Towne of Agmet built of old by the Africans vpon the top of a certaine hill which beginneth almoſt from Atlas, is diſtant from Maroco about foure and twentie miles. In times paſt, when Muachidin was Prince thereof, it contayned more then ſixe thouſand Families: at what time the people were very ciuill, and had ſuch plentie and magnificence of all things, that many would not ſticke to compare this Towne with the Citie of Maroco. It had on all ſides moſt pleaſant Gardens, and great ſtore of Vines, whereof ſome grew vpon the Mountaine it ſelfe, and others on the Valley. By the foot of this Hill runneth a faire Riuer, which ſpringing forth of Atlas falleth at length into Tenſift. The field which lyeth neere vnto this Riuer is ſaid to be ſo fruitfull, that it yeeldeth euery yeere fiftie fold increaſe. The water of this Riuer looketh alwaies white.

The Towne of Agmet.

Howbeit the Citie of Agmet, which I haue now deſcribed vnto, hath at this day no other Inhabitants but Woolues, Foxes, Deere, and ſuch other wilde beaſts. Except onely at my being there I found a certaine Hermite, who was attended vpon by an hundred perſons of his owne Sect: all of them were well-horſed, and did their beſt endeuour to become Gouernours and Commanders, but their forces were inſufficient. With this Hermite I ſtaied (as I remember) for the ſpace of ten dayes, and found one amongſt his followers, with whom I had old acquaintance, and familiaritie: for we were certaine fellow-ſtudents together at Fez, where beeing of one ſtanding and ſenioritie, we heard that Booke of the Mahumetan Religion expounded which is commonly called the Epiſtle of Nenſeſi.

The deſolation of Agmet. Hermite.

Iohn Leo ſtudent at Fez.

Hauing before deſcribed all the Cities and Townes of Maroco, it now remayneth that wee briefly declare the ſituation and qualitie of the Mountaines there. Wherefore wee will beginne with the Mountaine of Niſiſa, from whence the Region of Maroco it ſelfe beginneth Weſtward, and is thereby diuided from the Prouince of Hea. The ſaid Mountaine hath great ſtore of Inhabitants: and albeit the tops thereof are continually couered with Snow; yet doth it yearely affoord maruellous increaſe and abundance of Barley. The rude people there are ſo deſtitute of all humanitie and ciuill behauiour, that they doe admire not onely all Strangers, but alſo doe euen gaze and wonder at their apparell. I my ſelfe remayned two dayes among them, in which ſpace all the people of the Towne came flocking about mee, greatly wondring at the white Garment which I wore (being ſuch as the learned men of our Countrey are vſually clad in) ſo that euery one being deſirous to handle and view this Garment of mine, in two dayes it was turned from white to blacke, and became all greaſie and filthy.

The Mountaine of Niſiſa.

Learned men clothed in white.

At the bounds of Niſiſa, a certaine other Mountaine called by the Inhabitants Semede, taketh his originall: and theſe two Mountaines are ſeparated by the Riuer of Seſſaua. Semede extendeth Eaſt-ward almoſt twentie miles, the Inhabitants whereof are moſt baſe and witleſſe people. Great ſtore of Springs and Fountaines are here to be found; the Snow is perpetuall; all good Lawes, Ciuilitie and honeſtie are quite baniſhed from hence, except perhaps the people be mooued thereunto by the aduice of ſome ſtranger, whom they find to be of a modeſt and ſober diſpoſition. Here being entertayned by a certaine religious man of the ſame place (who was had in great reputation by the people) I was conſtrayned to eate of ſuch groſſe meats as the ſaid people are accuſtomed vnto, to wit, of Barley meale mingled with water, and of Goats-fleſh, which was extremely tough and hard by reaſon of the ſtaleneſſe and long continuance. After Supper we had no other Bed but the bare ground to lye vpon.

Semede.

Strange tryals in Law.

Iohn Leo conſtrayned to play the Iudge.

The next morning being readie to take Horſe, and deſirous to depart, fiftie of the people came about me, laying open each man their Cauſes and Suites vnto me, as our people vſe to do before a Iudge. Vnto whom I anſwered, that I had neuer in all my life either knowne or heard of the manners and cuſtomes of that Region. Forth-with comes one of the chiefe men amongſt them, affirming that it was their cuſtome neuer to diſmiſſe any Stranger, till hee had both heard and throughly decided all the Quarrels and Controuerſies of the Inhabitants. Which words he had no ſooner vttered, but immediately my Horſe was taken from me. Wherefore I was conſtrayned for nine dayes, and ſo many nights, longer to abide the penurie and miſerie of that Region. Moreouer, my trouble was the greater, for that, in ſuch abundance of Suites and Affaires, there was not one man preſent, which could ſet downe ſo much as a word in writing: wherefore I my ſelfe was fayne to play both the Iudge and the Notarie.

Vpon the eight day they all of them promiſed to beſtow ſome great Reward vpon mee. Wherefore the night following ſeemed vnto me a yeare long: for I was in good hope, the next morrow to haue receiued a maſſe of Gold from my Clients. So ſoone as the next day began to dawne, they placed me in a certaine Church-porch: whither, after an vſuall and ſhort Prayer ended, each man full reuerently preſented his gift vnto me. Here ſome offered me a Cocke, others brought me Nuts and Onions, and ſome others beſtowed a handfull of Garlicke vpon me. The principall and head-men amongſt them preſented mee with a Goat; and ſo by reaſon that there was no money in all the ſaid Mountayne, they proffered mee not one farthing for my paines: wherefore all the ſaid gifts I bequeathed vnto mine Hoaſt for his worthy entertayning of me. And this was all the notable reward which I reaped in regard of ſo great and intollerable paines. All things being thus diſpatched, they ſent fiftie Horſemen to accompany and guard me from Theeues in that dangerous way.

The Mountain called Seuſaua.

This Mountaine of Seuſaua taketh his beginning where Semede endeth, out of which ſpringeth a certaine Riuer, hauing one name with the ſaid Mountaine from whence it proceedeth. Neuer were the tops of this Mountaine ſeene deſtitute of Snow. The Inhabitants leade a brutiſh and ſauage life, waging continuall warre with their next Neighbours: for which purpoſe they vſe neither Swords, Iauelins, nor any other Warlike Inſtruments, but onely certaine Slings, out of which they diſcharge ſtones after a ſtrange and wonderfull manner. Their victuals conſiſt of Barley, Honey, and Goates fleſh. In the ſame Mountaine great multitudes of Iewes exerciſing Handie-crafts, doe inhabit: likewiſe they make Sope, Iron-hookes, and Horſe-ſhooes. Diuers Maſons are here to be found alſo. They build their wals of no other matter but onely of rough ſtone and lime, and the roofes of their houſes they vſe to couer with thatch: neither haue they any other kind of lime or brickes. They haue among them alſo abundance of learned men and of skilfull Lawyers, whoſe counſell they vſe at all times. Among whom I found ſome, who had heretofore beene my fellow-ſtudents at Fez, and for our old acquaintance ſake, gaue me moſt courteous entertaynment: and, to the end I might eſcape the danger of Theeues, they conducted me a good part of my way.

The Mountains Seſiua, Tenmella, and Gadmena are omitted.

Hanteta.

Neuer did I ſee (to my remembrance) an higher Mountayne, then that which the Africans call Hanteta.

Carrain Iewes.

Many Iewes exerciſing diuers Handie-crafts doe here inhabit, and doe yearely pay vnto the Gouernour of this Mountayne great ſummes of money. As concerning Religion, they follow them eſpecially which are called Carrain. The top of this Mountayne is continually couered with Snow. When I firſt beheld this Motntayne, I thought it had beene Cloudes, ſo great is the height thereof. The ſides of this Mountayne being altogether deſtitute of Herbs and Trees, are in many places ſtored with excellent white Marble, which the people might digge, and make a good commoditie thereof, were they not ſo ſluggiſh and ſo ignorant in hewing and poliſhing of the ſame. In this place are many Pillars and Arches which were moſt artificially and ſumptuouſly built by thoſe mightie Princes whom wee haue often before made mention of: which Pillars they would haue vſed for the building of Water-conduits, had they not beene hindered by the violence of warres.

Guzzula.

Iron and Copper Mines.

Continuall wars in Guzzula.

Weekly Truces

This Region is exceeding populous: Weſtward it abutteth vpon Ilda a Mountayne of Sus; Northward it ioyneth vnto Atlas, and Eaſtward it ſtretcheth vnto the Region of Hea. It is inhabited with ſauage and fierce people, being moſt needie of money, and yet abounding greatly in Cattell. Great ſtore of Copper and Iron is here digged out of Mines. Great Villages they haue, which containe many of them, more then a thouſand Families a piece. They haue neyther King nor Gouernour to preſcribe any Lawes vnto them: but euery one is his owne Captaine and Commander; whereupon they are at continuall warres among themſelues, neither haue they any truce at all, but three dayes onely euery weeke; during which time euery man may ſafely and freely bargaine with his Enemie, and may trauell whither hee liſteth. But theſe dayes of Truce being paſt, the wretched people of this Region doe continually commit moſt heihorrible ſlaughters. The foreſaid dayes of truce a certaine Hermite appointed vnto them, whom they honoured and reuerenced like a god. This Hermite with one eye, I my ſelfe ſaw, and found him to be a truſty, ſincere, courteous, and moſt liberall perſon. Once euery yeere they haue a Faire of two months long: all which time (though the number of Merchants be neuer ſo great) they giue free entertainment vnto all ſuch as either bring wares with them, or come thither to fetch away their wares. When the time of their Faire approcheth, they foorthwith make truce, and each faction appointeth a Captaine ouer an hundred ſouldiers, to the end they may keepe themſelues in ſafety, and may defend their ſaid Faire from the inuaſion and iniury of all lewd perſons. If any offence be committed, the Captaines immediately giue ſentence vpon the guilty perſon: and whoſoeuer be conuicted of theft, is foorthwith ſlaine like a brute beaſt, and his theeues carkaſſe is throwne out to bee deuoured of dogges, wilde beaſts, and rauenous fowles.

Azapi was built by the Africans, and ſtandeth vpon the ſhore of the Ocean ſea, containing foure thouſand families: inhabitants there are great ſtore, being for the moſt part very vnciuill and barbarous. In times paſt there dwelt many Iewes in this Towne, which exerciſed diuers Handi-crafts. Their ſoyle is exceeding fertile; but ſo groſſe is their owne vnskilfulneſſe and negligence, that they know neither how to till their ground, to ſow their Corne, or to plant Vineyards.

Of the Region of Duccala, in which is Azafi and the reſt following: it was won by the Portugals, *A.H.*920. by reaſon of ciuill broiles, one Hali hauing ſlaine the King being at a Sermon in the Church. The Portugals about this time brought a new face on the Townes of theſe parts, as ye may ſee in Leo himſelfe.

The Towne Centumputei is built vpon a rocke of excellent marble: in the Suburbes whereof are certaine caues, wherein the inhabitants vſe to lay vp their Corne: which is there ſo wonderfully preſerued, that it will continue an hundreth yeares without any ill ſauour or corruption. Of the number of which cauer, reſembling pits or wels, the Towne it ſelf is called Centum putei. The inhabitants are of ſmall reckoning or account, hauing no artificers dwelling among them but certaine Iewes.

Azamur, a Towne of Duccala, was built by the Africans vpon that part of the Ocean ſea-ſhore, where the Riuer of Ommirabih diſemboqueth, being diſtant from Elmadina Southward, about thirtie miles. Very large it is, and well inhabited, and containeth to the number of fiue thouſand families. Here doe the Portugall Merchants continually reſide. The inhabitants are very ciuill, and decently apparelled. And albeit they are diuided into two parts, yet haue they continuall peace among themſelues. Pulſe and Corne they haue great plentie, though their Gardens and Orchards bring forth nought elſe but figs. They haue ſuch plentie of fiſhes, that they receiue yearely for them ſometime ſixe thouſand, and ſometime ſeuen thouſand duckats. And their time of fiſhing dureth from October to the end of Aprill. They vſe to frie fiſhes in a certaine pan with oyle, whereby they gather an incredible quantitie of trane: neither vſe they any other oyle to put into their lampes. The Iewes compounded with the King of Portugall, to yeeld the Citie to him, on condition, that they ſhould ſuſtaine no iniurie) with a generall conſent opened the Gates vnto them: and ſo the Chriſtians obtained the Citie, and the people went to dwell part of them to Sala, and part to Fez. Neither doe I thinke that God for any other cauſe brought this calamitie vpon them, but onely for the horrible vice of Sodomie, whereunto the greateſt part of the Citizens were ſo notoriouſly addicted, that they could ſcarce ſee any young ſtripling, who eſcaped their luſt.

The Greene Mountaine is of an exceeding height, beginning Eaſtward from the Riuer of Ommirabih, and extending Weſtward to the Hills, called in their language Haſara; and it diuideth Dnccala from ſome part of Tedles. Likewiſe this Mountaine is very rough and full of Woods, affoording great ſtore of Acornes and Pine-apples, and a certaine kind of red fruit which the Italians commonly call Africano. Many Hermites alſo doe inhabite vpon this Mountaine, liuing with no other kind of victuals, but ſuch as the Woods yeeld vnto them: for they are aboue fiue and twenty miles diſtant from all Townes and Cities. Here are great ſtore of fountaines and of Altars built after the Mahumetan faſhion, and many ancient houſes alſo erected by the Africans.

Tagodaſt is built vpon the top of a certaine high Mountaine, hauing foure other high Mountaines round about it. Betweene which foure Mountaines and the ſaid Towne, are diuers moſt large and beautiful Gardens repleniſhed with all kind of fruits: Quinces here are of an incredible bigneſſe. Their Vines diſperſing themſelues vpon the boughes of trees, doe make moſt pleaſant Bowers and Walkes; the Grapes whereof being red, are for their bigneſſe called in the language of that people, Hennes egs. They haue here great abundance of Oyle, and moſt excellent Hony; ſome of their Hony being white, and ſome yellow. This Towne hath many fountaines about it, which ioyning into one ſtreame, doe ſerue for many Water-mils thereabouts. Here are likewiſe great ſtore of Artizans, who exerciſe themſelues onely about things neceſſary. The inhabitants are ſomewhat ciuill, their women are moſt beautifull, being moſt gorgeouſly decked with ſiluer Iewels. Their Oyle they carry vnto the next Cities Southward of them on this ſide Atlas: but they ſend their Leather vnto Fez and Mecnaſa. Their Plaine is almoſt ſixe miles long, the ſoyle being moſt fruitful for Corne: in regard whereof, the Towneſmen pay certaine yearely tribute vnto the Arabians. This Towne hath Iudges, Prieſts, and a great number of Gentlemen.

Elgiumuba.

Neere vnto the foreſaid Towne, within fiue miles, ſtandeth Elgiumuba. It was in our time built vpon the top of an high Mountaine, and containeth to the number of fiue hundred families, beſides ſo many families compriſed in the Villages of that Mountaine. Here are innumerable Springs and Fountaines, and moſt pleaſant and fruitfull Gardens in all places. Here are likewiſe Walnut-trees huge and tall. The little Hills enuironing this Mountaine, doe yeeld Barly and Oliues in great abundance. In the ſaid Towne are great numbers of Artizans, as Smiths, Leather-dreſſers, and ſuch like. And becauſe they haue here notable Yron-mines, they make plentie of Horſe-ſhooes.

In the Mountaine of Tenuenes, being but ſixteene yeares old, I trauelled with mine Vncle, Ambaſſadour from the King of Fez to the King of Tombuto; and the Prince here gaue mee in recompence of Arabia Verſes wherewith I preſented him, fiftie duckats, and a good Horſe.

Marble wals.

Tefza, the chiefe Towne of all Tedles, was built by the Africans vpon the ſide of Mount Atlas, ſome fiue miles from the Plaine. The Towne-walls are built of moſt excellent Marble, which is called in their language Tefza, and hereupon the Towne was ſo called likewiſe. Heere doe reſide moſt rich Merchants of all ſorts: of Iewes here are two hundred families, who exerciſe Merchandiſe and diuers other trades. And heere you ſhall finde many Outlandiſh Merchants which buy from hence certaine blacke Mantles with hoods, commonly called Ilbernus: of theſe there are great numbers both in Italy and Spaine. They haue Golden Coine without any Image or ſuperſcription: their apparell is decent: and their women are beautifull and of good behauiour. In this towne are diuers Mahumetan Temples, and many Prieſts and Iudges. The King receiueth from that City, euen at this preſent twenty thouſand Ducats for yeerely tribute.

Somewhat beyond the foreſaid Mountaine of Seggheme ſtandeth Mount Magran. Southward it bordereth vpon the Region of Farcali, neere vnto the Lybian deſart: Weſtward it beginneth at Seggheme, and extendeth Eaſtward to the foot of Mount Dedes. It is continually couered with ſnow. The inhabitants haue ſuch abundance of ſmall & great cattell that they cannot long remaine in one place together. They build their houſes of the Barke of certaine trees, the rooffe whereof dependeth on ſlender ſparres, faſhioned like vnto the hoopes inuironing the lids of ſuch Cheſts or Trunks, as the women of Italy, when they trauell, carry vpon their Mules. So likewiſe theſe people tranſport their whole houſes vp and downe by the ſtrength of Mules, till they haue found a fit place of aboad; where, ſo ſoone as they arriue, they plant their ſayd houſes, remaining there with their whole families, ſo long as they haue graſſe ſufficient to feede their cattell. Howbeit all the ſpring time they ſettle themſelues in one place, making certaine low Stables or Cottages, and couering them with the boughs of trees, which ſerue for their cattell to lie in a nights: and to the end that the cold may not pinch them ouermuch, they kindle certaine huge fires neere vnto their ſaid Stables, whereupon ſometimes the wind ſo violently driueth the fire, that vnleſſe the cattell eſcape by flight, they are in great danger to be conſumed: and as their houſes are deſtitute of walls, ſo are their Stables. They are continually moleſted and haunted with Lions and Woolues. In their apparell and cuſtomes they wholly agree with the foreſaid people of Seggheme, ſauing that theſe haue houſes of Barke and Wood, and the other of Stone. I my ſelfe, in the nine hundreth and ſeuenteenth yeere of the Hegeira, was in this Mountaine, as I trauelled from Dara to Fez.

Theſe people liue like the Tartars.

A deſcription of Mount Dede

The high and cold Mountaine of Dedes greatly aboundeth with Fountaines and Woods. Weſtward it beginneth at Mount Magran, extending thence almoſt as far as the Mountaine of Adeſan; and Southward it bordereth vpon the plaines of Todga. The length thereof is almoſt foureſcore miles. Vpon the very top of this Mountaine there was a City built in ancient time, whereof a few ruinous Monuments are to be ſeene at this preſent; namely, certaine walles of white Stone, wherein are diuers letters and words grauen, which the inhabitants themſelues doe not vnderſtand. Many are of opinion, that this City was built long agoe by the Romanes: howbeit I my ſelfe could neuer finde ſo much affirmed by an African writer, nor yet the City it ſelfe mentioned. Sauing that Seriffo Eſſacalli in a certaine Story of his maketh mention of Tedſi, which he ſaith is neere vnto Segelmeſſe and Dara: but he declareth not whether it bee built vpon Mount Dedes or no. Howbeit for mine owne part I thinke it to be the very ſame: for there is no other City in the whole Region. The inhabitants of Dedes are in very deed moſt baſe people; of whom the greater part dwell in Caues vnder the ground: their food is Barly and Elhaſid, that is to ſay, Barly meale ſodden with water and ſalt, which we mentioned before in our deſcription of Hea: For heere is nothing but Barly to be had. Goates and Aſſes they haue in great baundance. The Caues wherein their cattell lodge are exceedingly full of * Nitre: ſo that I verily thinke if this Mountaine were neere vnto Italy, the ſaid Nitre would yeerely be worth fiue and twenty thouſand Ducats. But ſuch is their negligence and vnskilfulneſſe, that they are truely ignorant to what purpoſes Nitre ſerueth. Their garments are ſo rude, that they ſcarce couer halfe their nakedneſſe. Their houſes are ſo loathſome, being annoyed with the ſtinking ſmell of their Goats. In all this Mountaine you ſhall finde neither Caſtle nor walled Towne: when they build an houſe, they pile one ſtone vpon another without any morter at all, the roofe whereof they make of certaine rubbiſh, like as they doe in ſome places of Siſa and Fab- briano: the reſidue (as we haue ſaid) doe inhabite in Caues, neither ſaw I euer, to my remembrance, greater ſwarmes of fleas then among thoſe people. Moreouer, they are trecherous and ſtrong theeues, ſo giuen to ſtealing and quarrelling, that for one vnkind word they will not onely contend, but ſeeke alſo the deſtruction one of another. They haue neither Iudge, Prieſt, nor any honeſt Gouernour among them. No Merchants reſort vnto them: for being giuen to continuall idleneſſe, and not exerciſing any trades or handie-crafts, they haue nothing meete for Merchants to buy. If any Merchant bring any wares into their Region, vnleſſe he be ſafe conducted by their Captaine, he is in danger to be robbed of altogether. And if the wares ſerue not for their owne neceſſary vſes, they will exact one fourth part of them for cuſtome. Their women are moſt forlorne and ſluttiſh, going more beggerly appatelled then the men. So continuall and ſlauiſh are the toiles of theſe women, that for miſery, the life of Aſſes is not comparable to theirs. And, to be briefe, neuer was I ſo weary of any place in all Africa, as I was of this: howbeit in the yeere of the Hegeira, nine hundred and eighteene, being commanded by one, to whom I was in duety bound, to trauell vnto Segelmeſſe, I could not chooſe but come this way.

He kingdome of Fez beginneth Weſtward at the famous riuer Ommirabih, and extendeth eaſtward to the riuer Muluia; Northward it is encloſed partly with the Ocean, and partly with the Mediterran ſea. The ſaid Kingdome of Fez is diuided into ſeuen Prouinces; to wit, Temeſna, the Territory of Fez, Azgar, * Elhabet, Erna, Garet, and * Elchauz: euery of which Prouinces had in old time a ſeuerall Gouernour: neither indeed hath the City of Fez alwayes beene the Kings Royall Seate, but being built by a certaine Mahumetan Apoſtata, was gouerned by his poſteritie almoſt an hundred and fiftie yeeres. After which time the

Of Temeſne one of the Prouinces of Fez.

A dangerous ſeducer.

Differences in Religion and the effects.

The horrible deſolation of Temeſne.

Weſtward it beginneth at the Riuer Ommirabih, and ſtretcheth to the Riuer Buragrag Eaſtward; the South Frontire thereof bordereth vpon Atlas, and the North vpon the Ocean Sea. It is all ouer a plaine Countrey, contayning in length from the Weſt to Eaſt almoſt foureſcore miles, and in breadth from Atlas to the Ocean Sea about threeſcore. This Prouince hath euer almoſt beene the principall of the ſeuen before named: for it contained to the number of forty great Townes, beſides three hundred Caſtles, all which were inhabited by Barbarian Africans. In the three hundred three & twentieth yeer of the Hegeira, this Prouince was by a certaine heretike againſt the Mahumetan Religion, called Chemim the ſonne of Mennall, freed from paying of tribute. This bad fellow perſwaded the people of Fez to yeeld no tribute nor honour vnto their Prince, and himſelfe he profeſſed to be a Prophet: but a while after he dealt not onely in matters of Religion, but in common-wealth affaires alſo. At length waging warre againſt the King of Fez (who was himſelfe then warring with the people of Zenete) it ſo befell, that a league was concluded betweene them, conditionally that Chemin ſhould enioy Temeſne, and that the King ſhould containe himſelfe within his Signiorie of Fez, ſo that from thencefoorth neither ſhould moleſt other. The ſaid Chemim gouerned the Prouince of Temeſne about fiue and thirtie yeeres: and his ſucceſſours enioyed it almoſt an hundred yeeres after his deceaſe. But King Ioſeph hauing built Maroco, went about to bring this Prouince vnder his ſubiection. Wherupon he ~~ſent ſun~~dry Mahumetan Doctors, and Prieſts to reclaime the gouernour thereof from his hereſie, and to perſwade him, if it were poſſible, to yeeld vnto the King by faire meanes. Whereof the inhabitants being aduertiſed, they conſulted with a certaine kinſman of the foreſaid Gouernour, in the Citie called Anfa, to murther the King of Maroco his Ambaſſadours: and ſo they did. Soone after leuying an army of fifty thouſand men, he marched towards Maroco, intending to expell thence the family of Luntuna, and Ioſeph their King. King Ioſeph hearing of this newes, was driuen into wonderfull perplexity of mind. Wherefore preparing an huge and mighty army, he ſtayed not the comming of his enemies: but on the ſudden within three dayes, hauing conducted his forces ouer the Riuer of Ommirabih, he entred Temeſne, when as the foreſaid fifty thouſand men were ſo diſmayed at the Kings army, that they all paſſed the Riuer Buragrag, and ſo fled into Fez. But the King ſo diſpeopled and waſted Temeſne, that without all remorſe he put both man, woman, and child to the ſword. This army remayned in the Region eight dayes, in which ſpace they ſo razed and demoliſhed all the Townes and Cities thereof, that there ſcarce remaine any fragments of them at this time. But the King of Fez on the other ſide hearing that the people of Temeſne were come into his Dominions, made a truce with the Tribe of Zenete, and bent his great army againſt the ſaid Temeſnites. And at length hauing found them halfe famiſhed neere vnto the Riuer of Buragrag, he ſo ſtopped their paſſages on all ſides, that they were conſtrained to run vp the craggie mountaines and thickets. At laſt being enuironed with the Kings forces, ſome of them were drowned in the Riuer, others were throwne downe headlong from the rockes, and the reſidue were miſerably ſlaine by their enemies. And for the ſpace of ten moneths there was ſuch hauocke made among the Temeſnites, that a ſilly remnant of them was left aliue. But King Ioſeph Prince of the Luntunes returned foorthwith to Maroco for the repayring of his forces, to the end he might bid the King of Fez a battell. Howbeit Temeſne being bereft of her people, was left to be inhabited of wilde beaſts. Neither had that Prouince any new Colony, or ſupply of inhabitants, till that about one hundreth and fifty yeeres after, King Manſor returning from Tunis, brought thence certaine Arabians with him, vnto whom he gaue the poſſeſſion of Temeſne. And theſe Arabians enioyed the ſaid Prouince for fifty yeeres, till ſuch time as King Manſor himſelfe was expelled out of his Kingdom: & then were they alſo expelled by the Luntunes, & were brought into extreme miſerie. Afterward the Kings of the family of Marin beſtowed the ſaid Prouince vpon the people of Zenete and Haoara. Hence it came to paſſe that the ſaid people of Zentete & Haoara, were alwayes great friends vnto the Marin family, and were thought to haue defended them from the fury of the King of Maroco. From which time they haue peaceably enioyed Maroco, and now they are grown in leſſe then an hundred yeers ſo mighty, that they ſtand not in feare of the King of Fez. For they are able to bring threeſcore thouſand horſemen into the field, & haue two hundred Caſtles at their commaund. My ſelfe had great familiarity and acquaintance with them, and therefore I will not ſticke to record all memorable things which I ſaw among them.

Anſa* a Towne in Temeſne.

This famous Towne was built by the Romanes vpon the Ocean Sea ſhoare, Northward of Atlas ſixtie, Eaſtward of Azamur ſixty, and Weſtward Rebat forty miles. The Citizens thereof were moſt ciuill and wealthy people: the fields thereto adioyning are exceeding fruitfull for all kind of graine: neither doe I thinke, that any Towne in all Africa is for pleaſant ſituation comparable thereto. The plaine round about it (except it be to the Sea Northward) is almoſt foureſcore miles ouer. In old time it was fraught with ſtately Temples, rich ware-houſes and ſhops, and beautifull palaces: which the monuments as yet remayning doe ſufficiently teſtifie. They had alſo moſt large and faire gardens, out of which they gather great abundance of fruit, eſpecially of Melons, & Pome-citrons euen at this day: all which are perfectly ripe by mid-Aprill. So that the inhabitants vſually carry their fruits vnto Fez, by reaſon that the fruits of Fez are not ſo ſoone ripe. Their attire is trim and decent, and they haue alwayes had great traffique with the Portugals and the Engliſh. Likewiſe they haue many learned men among them. But is now deſolate and deſtroyed by Portugals.

Engliſh traffique.

Anſa deſtroyed by the Portugals.

This great and famous Towne was built not many yeers ago by Manſor the King & Mahumetan Patriak of Maroco, vpon the Ocean Sea ſhoare. By the Eaſt part therof runneth the Riuer Buragrag before-named, and there diſchargeth it ſelfe into the maine Sea. The rocke whereon this Towne is founded, ſtandeth neere the mouth of the ſaid Riuer, hauing the Riuer on the one ſide thereof, and the Sea on the other. In building it much reſembleth Maroco, which Manſor willed to be a patterne thereof: ſauing that it is a great deale leſſe then Maroco. Some ſay that the reaſon why it was built in this place was, for that King Manſor poſſeſſing the Kingdome of Granada, and a great part of Spaine beſides, and conſidering that Maroco was ſo farre diſtant, that if any warres ſhould happen, he could not in due time ſend new forces againſt the Chriſtians, determined to built ſome Towne vpon the Sea ſhoare, where he and his army might remaine all ſummer time. Some perſwaded him to lie with his army at Ceuta a Towne vpon the ſtreights of Giblaltar: but Manſor ſeeing that by reaſon of the barrennes of the ſoile he could not maintain an army Royall for three or foure moneths in the Town of Ceuta, he cauſed this Town of Rebat in ſhort ſpace to be erected, & to be exceedingly beautified with Temples, Colledges, Palaces, Shops, Stoues, Hoſpitals, and other ſuch buildings. Moreouer, on the South ſide without the wals he cauſed a certaine high Tower like the Tower of Maroco to be built, ſauing that the winding ſtaires were ſomewhat larger, inſomuch that three horſes a-breaſt might well aſcend vp: from the top whereof they might eſcry ſhips an huge way into the Sea. So exceeding is the height thereof, that I thinke there is no where the like building to be found. And to the end that greater ſtore of Artificers and Merchants might hither from all places make reſort, he appointed, that euery man according to his trade and occupation ſhould be allowed a yeerely ſtipend, whereupon it came to paſſe that within few moneths, this Towne was better ſtored with all kind of Artificers and Merchants, then in any Towne in all Africa beſides, and that becauſe they reaped a double gaine. Heere vſed Manſor with his Troupes to remaine from the beginning of Aprill, till the month of September. And whereas there was no water about the Town meet to be drunke (for the Sea runneth ten miles vp into the Riuer, and the wels likewiſe yeeld ſalt-water) Manſor cauſed freſh water to be conueied to the Towne by certaine Pipes and Channels, from a fountaine twelue miles diſtant. And the Conduits hee made arch-wiſe, like vnto the Conduits of Italy in many places, and ſpecially at Rome. So ſoone as the ſaid water-conduit was deriued vnto the Towne, he cauſed it to be diuided and ſent into ſundry places, as namely, ſome pipes thereof to the Temples, ſome to the Colledges, others to the Kings Palace, and the reſt into the common Ciſternes, throughout all the City. Howbeit after King Manſors death this Towne grew into ſuch decay, that ſcarce the tenth part thereof now remaineth. The ſaid notable water-conduit was vtterly fordone in the warre betweene the Marin familie and the ſucceſſors of Manſor.

A deſcription of Rebat.

Why King Manſor built the Towne of Rebat vpon the Sea ſhoare.

Conduits of freſh water 12. miles.

Alſo King Manſor cauſed Sella to be walled round about, and built therein a faire Hoſpitall, & a ſtately Palace, into which his ſouldiers might at their pleaſure retire themſelues. Here likewiſe he erected a moſt beautifull Temple, wherein he cauſed a goodly Hall or Chappell to be ſet vp, which was curiouſly carued, and had many faire windows about it: and in this Hall (when he perceiued death to ſeaze vpon him) he commanded his ſubiects to burie his corps. Which being done, they laid one Marble-ſtone ouer his head, and another ouer his feete, whereon ſundry Epitaphes were engrauen. After him likewiſe all the honourable perſonages of his family and blood, chooſe to be interred in the ſame Hall. And ſo did the Kings of the Marin family, ſo long as their Common-wealth proſpered. My ſelfe on a time entring the ſame Hall, beheld there thirty Monuments of noble and great perſonages, and diligently wrote out all their Epitaphes: this I did in the yeere of the Hegeira nine hundred and fifteene.

Sella.

Where King Manſor was buried.

In Thagia is viſited the Sepulchre of one accounted for a moſt holy man, who is reported in the time of Habdulmumen, to haue wrought many miracles againſt the furie of Lions: whereupon he was reputed by many as a great Prophet. I remember that I read in a certaine writer of that Nation commonly called Etdedle, a whole Catalogue of the ſaid holy mans miracles: which whether he wrought by Arte-magicke, or by ſome wonderfull ſecret of nature, it is altogether vncertaine. Howbeit his great fame and honourable reputation is the cauſe why this Towne is ſo well fraught with inhabitants. The people of Fez hauing ſolemnized their Eaſter, do yeerely frequent this Towne to viſite the ſaid Sepulchre, and that in ſuch huge numbers, that you would eſteeme them to be an whole armie; for euery principall man carries his Tent and other neceſſaries with him: and ſo you ſhall ſee ſometime an hundred Tents, and ſometimes more in that company. Fifteene dayes they are in performing of that Pilgrimage; for Thagia ſtandeth from Fez almoſt an hundred and twenty miles. My ſelfe being a child, went thither on Pilgrimage oftentimes with my Father; as likewiſe being growen vp to mans eſtate, I repaired thither as often, making ſupplication to bee deliuered from the danger of Lions.

The Territory of Fez.

* Or Cebu.

Weſtward it beginneth at the Riuer of Buragrag, and ſtretcheth Eaſtward to the riuer called Inauen: which two Riuers are almoſt a hundred miles diſtant aſunder. Northward it bordereth vpon the Riuer * Subu, and Southward vpon the foote of Atlas. The ſoile both for abundance of Corne, Fruits, and Cattell ſeemeth to be inferiour to none other.

Sella.

Engliſh traffique.

1526.

The buildings of Sella carry a ſhew of Antiquity on them, being Artificially carued and ſtately ſupported with Marble pillars. Their Temples are moſt beautifull, and their are ſhops built vnder large Porches. And at the end of euery row of ſhops is an Arch, which (as they ſay) is to diuide one occupation from another. And (to ſay all in a word) here is nothing wanting, which may be required either in a moſt honourable City, or a flouriſhing Common-wealth. Moreouer hither reſort all kind of Merchants, both Chriſtians and others. Heere the Genowayes, Venetians, Engliſh and low Dutch vſed to traffique. The grounds adioyning vpon this Towne are ſandy: neither are they fit for Corne, but for Cotten-wooll in diuers places very profitable. The inhabitants, diuers of them doe weaue moſt excellent Cotten. Heere likewiſe are made very fine Combes, which are ſold in all the Kingdome of Fez, for the Region thereabout yeeldeth great plenty of Boxe, & of other wood fit for the ſame purpoſe. Their gouernment is very orderly and diſcreet euen vntill this day: for they haue moſt learned Iudges, Vmpires, and deciders of doubtfull caſes in Law. This Towne is frequented by many rich Merchants of Genoa, whom the King hath alwayes had in great regard; becauſe he gaineth much yeerely by their traffique.

The occaſion of the bloody warres moued by Sahid.

The City of Fez beſieged for ſeuen yeers together.

* This number (as I take it) ſhould rather be 819.

In the time of Abuſaid the laſt King of the Marin family, his Couſin, called Sahid, was taken by Habdilla the King of Granada; whereupon by letters he requeſted his Couſin the King of Fez to ſend him a certaine ſumme of money, required by the King of Granada for his ranſome. Which when the Feſſan King refuſed to yeeld vnto, Habdilla reſtored his priſoner to libertie, and ſent him towards Fez to deſtroy both the City and the King. Afterward Sahid, with the helpe of certaine wilde Arabians beſieged Fez for ſeuen yeeres together; in which ſpace moſt of the Townes, Villages, and Hamlets throughout the whole Kingdome were deſtroyed. But at length ſuch a Peſtilence inuaded Sahids forces, that himſelfe, with a great part of his army, in the * nine hundred and eighteenth yeere of the Hegeira, died therof. Howbeit thoſe deſolate Towns neuer receiued from thenceforth any new inhabitants, eſpecially Fanzara, which was giuen to certaine Arabian Captaines, that came to aſſiſt Sahid. Whatſoeuer commodity ariſeth out of Banibaſil redoundeth to the Prieſts of the principall Mahumetan Temple in Fez, and it amounteth almoſt yeerely to twenty thouſand Dukats. Heere alſo in times paſt were moſt large, pleaſant, and fruitfull Gardens, as appeareth by the Monuments and reliques thereof, howbeit, they were like other places, laid waſte by the warre of Sahid. The Towne it ſelfe remaineth deſtitute of inhabitants an hundred and ten yeeres; but as the King of Fez returned home from Duccala, he commanded part of his people to inhabite the ſame: albeit their inciuilitie made them loth ſo to doe.

Fez the principall City of all Barbarie, and of the founders thereof.

Fez was built in the time of one Aron a Mahumetan Patriarke, in the yeere of the Hegeira one hundreth eighty and fiue, and in the yeere of our Lord ſeuen hundred eightie ſixe, by a certaine hereticke againſt the Religion of Mahumet. But why it ſhould ſo be called, ſome are of opinion, becauſe when the firſt foundations thereof were digged, there was found ſome quantity of Gold, with mettall in the Arabian language is called Fez.

Idris the firſt founder of Fez.

The Founder of this City was one Idris, being the foreſaid Aron his neere kinſman. This Idris ought rather to haue beene an Mahumetan Patriarke, becauſe he was nephew vnto Hali the Couſin-german of Mahumet, who married Falerna, Mahumets owne daughter, ſo that Idris both by Father and Mother was of Mahumets Linage: but Aron being nephew vnto one Habbus the Vncle of Mahumet, was of kinred onely by the Fathers ſide. Howbeit both of them were excluded from the ſaid Patriarkſhip for certaine cauſes mentioned in the African Chronicles, although Aron vſurped the ſame by deceit. For Arons Vncle being a moſt cunning and crafty man, and faining himſelfe to beare greateſt fauour vnto the family of Hali, and to be moſt deſirous, that the Patriarkſhip ſhould light thereon, ſent his Ambaſſadours almoſt throughout the whole world. Whereupon the dignity was tranſlated from Vmeue to Habdulla Seffec the firſt Patriarke. Which, Vmeue being informed of, waged warre againſt the family of Hali, and ſo preuailed, that ſome of them he chaſed into Aſia, and ſome into India. Howbeit, an ancient Religious man of the ſame family remained ſtill aliue at Elmadina, who being very old, no whit regarded the dignity. But this ancient ſire left behind him two ſonnes, who when they were come to mans eſtate, grew into ſo great fauour with the people of Elmadin, that they were chaſed thence by their enemies; the one being taken and hanged; and the other (whoſe name was Idris) eſcaping into Mauritania. This Idris dwelling vpon Mount Zaron, about thirtie miles from Fez, gouerned not onely the Common-wealth, but matters of Religion alſo: and all the Region adiacent paid him tribute. At length Idris deceaſing without lawfull iſſue, left one of his maydes big with child, which had beene turned from the Gothes Religion to the Moores. Being deliuered of her ſonne, they called him after his Fathers name, Idris. This child the inhabitants chuſing for their Prince, cauſed him to be moſt carefully brought vp: and as he grew in yeeres, to the end they might trayne him vp in feates of Chiualrie; they appointed one Raſid a moſt valiant and skilfull Captaine to inſtruct him. Inſomuch, that while hee was but fifteene yeeres of age, he grew famous for his valiant Acts and Stratagems, and beganne wonderfully to inlarge his Dominions. Wherefore his Troupes and Family increaſing euery day more and more, he ſet his minde vpon building of a Citie, and changing of his habitation. And ſo hee ſent for cunning builders into all Nations, who hauing diligently peruſed all places in the Region, at laſt made choiſe of that where the Citie of Fez now ſtandeth. For heere they found great ſtore of Fountaines, and a faire Riuer, which ſpringing forth of a plaine not farre off, runneth pleaſantly almoſt eight miles amidſt the little Hils, till at length it caſteth it ſelfe vpon another plaine. Southward of the place they found a wood, which they knew would be right commodious for the Towne. Here therefore vpon the Eaſt banke of the ſaid Riuer, they built a Towne contayning three thouſand Families: neither omitted they ought at all which might bee required in a flouriſhing Common-wealth. After the deceaſe of Idris, his Sonne erected another Towne directly ouer againſt the foreſaid, on the other ſide of the Riuer. But in proceſſe of time either Towne ſo increaſed, that there was but a ſmall diſtance betweene them: for the Gouernours of each laboured might and mayne to augment their owne Iuriſdictions. An hundred and foureſcore yeeres after, there fell out great diſſention and Ciuill warre betweene theſe two Cities, which by report continued an hundred yeeres together.

Idris his great valour at fifteene yeares of age.

At length Ioſeph King of Maroco of the Luntune Family, conducting an huge Armie againſt both theſe Princes, tooke them Priſoners, carryed them home vnto his Dominions, and put them to a moſt cruell death. And he ſo vanquiſhed the Citizens, that there were ſlaine of them thirtie thouſand. Then determined King Ioſeph to reduce thoſe two Townes into firme vnitie and concord: for which cauſe, making a bridge ouer the Riuer, and beating downe the wals of either Towne right againſt it, he vnited both into one, which afterward he diuided into twelue Regions or Wards. Now let vs make report of all ſuch memorable things as are there to bee ſeene * at this day.

* 1526.

A World it is to ſee, how large, how populous, how well fortified and walled this Citie is. The moſt part thereof ſtandeth vpon great and little Hils: neither is there any plaine ground but onely in the midſt of the Citie. The Riuer entreth the Towne in two places, for it is diuided into a double branch, one whereof runneth by new Fez, that is, by the South-ſide of the Towne, and another commeth in at the Weſt-ſide. And ſo almoſt infinitely diſperſing it ſelfe into the Citie, it is deriued by certaine conduits and chanels vnto euery Temple, Colledge, Inne, Hoſpitall, and almoſt to euery priuate houſe. Vnto the Temples are certaine ſquare conduits adioyned, hauing Cels and Receptacles round about them; each one of which hath a Cock, whereby water is conueyed through the wall into a Trough of Marble. From whence flowing into the Sinkes and Gutters, it carryeth away all the filth of the Citie into the Riuer. In the midſt of each ſquare conduit ſtandeth a low Ciſterne, beeing three Cubits in depth, foure in breadth, and twelue in length: and the water is conueyed by certaine Pipes into the foreſaid ſquare conduits, which are almoſt an hundred and fiftie in number. The moſt part of the houſes are built of fine brickes and ſtones curiouſly painted. Likewiſe their bay-windowes and portals are made of partie-coloured bricke, like vnto the ſtones of Maiorica. The Roofes of their Houſes they adorne with Gold, Azure, and other excellent Colours, which Roofes are made of wood, and plaine on the top, to the end that in Summer-time Carpets may be ſpred vpon them, for here they vſe to lodge by reaſon of the exceeding heate of that Countrey. Some houſes are of two and ſome of three Stories high, whereunto they make fine ſtaires, by which they paſſe from one roome to another vnder the ſame roofe: for the middle part of the houſe is alwayes open or vncouered, hauing ſome Chambers built on the one ſide, and ſome on the other. The Chamber doores are very high and wide: which in rich mens houſes are framed of excellent and carued wood. Each Chamber hath a Preſſe curiouſly painted and varniſhed belonging thereunto, being as long as the Chamber it ſelfe is broad: ſome will haue it very high, and others but ſixe handfuls in height, that they may ſet it on the Teſter of a Bed. All the portals of their houſes are ſupported with bricke Pillars finely playſtered ouer, except ſome which ſtand vpon Pillars of Marble. The Beames and Tranſomes vpholding their Chambers are moſt curiouſly painted and carued. To ſome houſes likewiſe belong certaine ſquare Ciſternes, contayning in breadth ſixe or ſeuen Cubits, in length ten or twelue, and in height but ſixe or ſeuen handfuls, being all vncouered, and built of brickes trimly playſtered ouer. Along the ſides of theſe Ciſternes are certaine Cockes, which conuay the water into Marble Troughs, as I haue ſeene in many places of Europe. When the foreſaid Conduits are full of water, that which floweth ouer, runneth by certaine ſecret pipes and conueyances into the Ciſternes: and that which ouerfloweth the Ciſternes, is carryed likewiſe by other paſſages into the common Sinkes and Gutters, and ſo into the Riuer. The ſaid Ciſternes are alwayes kept ſweete and cleane, neyther are they couered but onely in Summer-time, when Men, Women, and Children bathe themſelues therein.

A moſt exact deſcription of the Citie of Fez.

Moreouer, on the tops of their houſes they vſually build a Turret with many pleaſant roomes therein, whither the women for recreations ſake, when they are wearie of working, retyre themſelues; from whence they may ſee wel-nigh all the Citie ouer.

The number and ſtatelineſſe of the Mahumetan Temples in Fez.

Of Mahumetan Temples and Oratories there are almoſt ſeuen hundred in this Towne, fiftie whereof are moſt ſtately and ſumptuouſly built, hauing their Conducts made of Marble and other excellent ſtones vnknowne to the Italians; and the Chapiters of their Pillars be artificially adorned with painting and caruing. The tops of theſe Temples, after the faſhion of Chriſtian Churches in Europe, are made of Ioyſes and Plankes: but the pauement is couered with Mats which are ſo cunningly ſowed together that a man cannot ſee the breadth of a finger vncouered. The wals likewiſe on the inner ſide are lined a mans height with ſuch Mats. Moreouer, each Temple hath a Turret or Steeple, from whence certaine are appointed with a lowd voice to call the people at their ſet-time of Prayer. Euery Temple hath one onely Prieſt to ſay Seruice therein; who hath the beſtowing of all Reuenues belonging to his owne Temple, as occaſion requireth: for thereby are maintayned Lampes to burne in the night, and Porters to keepe the doores are paid their wages out of it, and ſo likewiſe are they that call the people to ordinarie Prayers in the night ſeaſon: for thoſe which cry from the ſaid Towres in the day time haue no wages, but are onely releaſed from all Tributes and Exactions.

The principall Temple of Fez called Caruuen.

The chiefe Mahumetan Temple in this Towne is called Caruuen, beeing of ſo incredible a bigneſſe, that the circuit thereof and of the buildings longing vnto it, is a good mile and a halfe about. This Temple hath one and thirtie gates or portals of a wonderfull greatneſſe and height. The Roofe of this Temple is in length one hundred and fiftie, and in breadth about fourescore Florentine Cubits. The Turret or Steeple, from whence they cry amayne to aſſemble the people together, is exceedingly high: the breadth whereof is ſupported with twentie, and the length with thirtie Pillars. On the Eaſt, Weſt, and North-ſides, it hath certaine Walkes or Galleries, fortie Cubits in length, and thirtie in breadth. Vnder which Galleries there is a Cell or Store-houſe, wherein Oyle, Candles, Mats, and other ſuch neceſſaries for the Temple are layd vp. Euery night in this Temple are burnt nine hundred Lights; for euery arch hath a ſeuerall Lampe, eſpecially thoſe which extend through the mid-quire. Some Arches there are that haue one hundred and twentie Candles a piece: there are likewiſe certaine Braſſe Candleſtickes ſo great and with ſo many Sockets, as they will hold each one fifteene hundred Candles: and theſe Candleſtickes are reported to haue beene made of Bels, which the King of Fez in times paſt tooke from Chriſtians.

Pulpits and preaching.

About the wals of the ſaid Temple are diuers Pulpits, out of which thoſe that are learned in the Mahumetan Law inſtruct the people. Their Winter Lectures beginne preſently after Sun-riſe, and continue the ſpace of an houre. But their Summer Lectures hold on from the Sunne going downe, till an houre and a halfe within night. And here they teach as well Morall Philoſophie as the Law of Mahumet. The Summer Lectures are performed by certaine priuate and obſcure perſons; but in Winter ſuch onely are admitted to read, as bee reputed their greateſt Clerkes. All which Readers and Profeſſours are yearely allowed moſt liberall Stipends. The Prieſt of this great Temple is enioyned onely to read Prayers, and faithfully to diſtribute almes among the poore. Euery Feſtiuall day he beſtoweth all ſuch Corne and Money as he hath in his cuſtodie, to all poore people according to their need.

The Treaſuror or Collector of the Reuenues of this Church hath euery day a Duckat for his pay. Likewiſe he hath eight Notaries or Clerkes vnder him; euery one of which gayneth ſixe Duckats a moneth: and other ſixe Clerkes who receiue the rent of houſes, ſhops, and other ſuch places as belong to the Temple, hauing for their wages the twentieth part of all ſuch Rents and Duties as they gather.

Moreouer, there belong to this Temple twentie Factors or Baylies of Husbandry, that without the Citie wals haue an eye to the Labourers, Ploughmen, Vine-planters, and Gardeners, and that prouide them things neceſſarie: there gaine is three Duckats a moneth. Not farre from the Citie are about twentie Lime-kils, and as many Bricke-kils, ſeruing for the reparation of their Temple, and of all houſes thereto belonging.

The Reuenues of the great Temple, and how they are beſtowed.

The Reuenues of the ſaid Temple daily receiued, are two hundred Duckats a day; the better halfe whereof is layd out vpon the particulars aforeſaid. Alſo if there bee any Temples in the Citie deſtitute of liuing, they muſt all be mayntayned at the charges of this great Temple: and then that which remayneth after all expenſes, is beſtowed for the behoofe of the Common-wealth: for the people receiue no Reuenues at all. In our time the King commanded the Prieſt of the ſaid Temple to lend him an huge ſumme of money, which he neuer repayed againe.

Colledges of Fez.

Moreouer, in the Citie of Fez are two moſt ſtately Colledges, of which diuers roomes are adorned with curious painting; all their beames are carued, their wals conſiſting both of Marble and Freeſtone. Some Colledges heere are which contayne an hundred ſtudies, ſome more, and ſome fewer, all which were built by diuers Kings of the Marin Family. One there is among the reſt moſt beautifull and admirable to behold, which was erected by a certaine King called Habu Henon. Here is to be ſeene an excellent Fountaine of Marble, the Ciſterne whereof contayneth two Pipes. Through this Colledge runneth a little ſtreame in a moſt cleere and pleaſant chanell, the brimmes and edges whereof are workmanly framed of Marble, and ſtones of Maiorica. Likewiſe heere are three Cloyſters to walke in, moſt curiouſly and artificially made, with certaine eight ſquare Pillars of diuers colours to ſupport them. And betweene Pillar and Pillar the arches are beautifully ouer-caſt with Gold, Azure, and diuers other Colours; and the Roofe is very artificially built of wood. The ſides of theſe Cloyſters are ſo cloſe, that they which are without cannot ſee ſuch as walke within. The wals round about as high as a man can reach, are adorned with Playſter-worke of Maiorica. In many places you may find certaine Verſes, which declare what yeare the Colledge was built in, together with many Epigrams in the Founders commendation. The Letters of which Verſes are very great and black, ſo that they may be read a farre off. This Colledge gates are of Braſſe moſt curiouſly carued, and ſo are the doores artificially made of wood. In the Chappell of this Colledge ſtandeth a certaine Pulpit mounted nine ſtayres high, which ſtaires are of Iuorie and Ebonie. Some affirme, that the King hauing built this Colledge, was deſirous to know how much money hee had ſpent in building it; but after he had peruſed a leafe or two of his Account-booke, finding the ſumme of fortie thouſand Duckats, he rent it aſunder, and threw it into the foreſaid little Riuer, adding this Sentence out of a certaine Arabian Writer: Each precious and amiable thing, though it coſteth deare, yet if it be beautifull, it cannot chooſe but bee good cheape: neither is any thing of too high a price, which pleaſeth a mans affection. Howbeit a certaine Treaſurer of the Kings, making a particular account of all the ſaid expenſes, found that this excellent building ſtood his Maſter in foure hundred and eightie thouſand Duckats. The other Colledges of Fez are ſomewhat like vnto this, hauing euery one Readers and Profeſſors, ſome of which read in the forenoone, and ſome in the afternoone.

A Colledge coſt 480000. Duckats the building.

In times paſt the Students of theſe Colledges had their apparell and victuals allowed them for ſeuen yeares, but now they haue nothing gratis but their Chamber.

For the warre of Sahid deſtroyed many poſſeſſions, whereby Learning was maintayned; ſo that now the greateſt Colledge of all hath yeerely but two hundred, and the ſecond but an hundred Duckats for the maintenance of their Profeſſors. And this perhaps may bee one reaſon, among many, why the gouernment not onely of Fez, but of all the Cities in Africa, is ſo baſe.

The ſuppreſſion of Learning and learned men, a principal cauſe of diſorderly and baſe gouernment.

Now theſe Colledges are furniſhed with no Schollers but ſuch as are ſtrangers, and liue of the Citie Almes: and if any Citizens dwell there, they are not aboue two or three at the moſt. The Profeſſor being readie for his Lecture, ſome of his Auditors readeth a Text, whereupon the ſaid Profeſſor dilateth, and explayneth obſcure and difficult places. Sometimes alſo the Schollers diſpute before their Profeſſor.

Many Hoſpitals there are in Fez, no whit inferiour, either for building or beautie, vnto the foreſaid Colledges. For in them whatſoeuer ſtrangers came to the Citie were entertayned at the common charge for three dayes together. There are likewiſe as faire and as ſtately Hoſpitals in the Suburbes. In times paſt their wealth was maruellous great; but in the time of Sahids warre, the King ſtanding in need of a great ſumme of money, was counſelled by ſome of his greedie Courtiers to ſell the Liuings of the ſaid Hoſpitals. Which when the people would in no caſe yeeld vnto, the Kings Oratour or Speaker, perſwaded them that all thoſe Liuings were giuen by his Maieſties Predeceſſours, and therefore (becauſe when the warres were ended, they ſhould ſoone recouer all againe) that it were farre better for them by that meanes to pleaſure their Soueraigne, then to let his Kingly Eſtate fall into ſo great danger. Whereupon all the ſaid Liuings being ſold, the King was preuented by vntimely and ſudden death before he could bring his purpoſe to effect: and ſo theſe famous Hoſpitals were depriued of all their maintenance.

A deſcription of the Hoſpitals and Bathes in the Citie of Fez.

Liuings belonging to Hoſpitals.

The poore indeed and impotent people of the Citie are at this day relieued; but no ſtrangers are entertayned, ſaue only learned men or Gentlemen. Howbeit there is another Hoſpitall for the reliefe of ſicke and diſeaſed ſtrangers, who haue their dyet onely allowed them, but no Phyſician or Medicine: certaine women there are which attend vpon them, till they recouer their former health, or dye. In this Hoſpitall likewiſe there is a place for frantike or diſtracted perſons, where they are bound in ſtrong Iron Chaines; whereof the part next vnto their walkes is ſtrengthened with mightie beames of Wood and Iron. The Gouernour of theſe diſtracted perſons, when he bringeth them any ſuſtenance, hath a Whip of purpoſe to chaſtiſe thoſe that offer to bite, ſtrike, or play any mad part.

Likewiſe this Hoſpitall hath many Roomes for the Purueyors, Notaries, Cookes, and other Officers belonging to the ſicke perſons; who each of them haue ſome ſmall yeerely ſtipend. Being a young man, I my ſelfe was Notarie heere for two yeeres, which Office is worth three Duckats a moneth.

Iohn Leo in his youth a Notary of an Hoſpitall for two yeeres together.

In this Citie are moe then an hundred Bath-ſtoues very artificially and ſtately built; which though they bee not of equall bigneſſe, yet are they all of one faſhion. Each Stoue hath foure Halls, without which are certaine Galleries in an higher place, with fiue or ſixe ſtaires to aſcend vnto them: here men put off their apparell, and hence they goe naked into the Bath. In the midſt midſt they alwaies keepe a Ciſterne full of water. Firſt therefore, they that meane to bathe themſelues, muſt paſſe through a cold Hall, where they vſe to temper hot water and cold together, then they goe into a roome ſomewhat hotter, where the ſeruants clenſe and waſh them; and laſt of all, they proceede into a third Hot-houſe, where they ſweate as much as they thinke good. The fire that heateth their water is made of nought elſe but beaſts dung: for which purpoſe many boyes are ſet on worke to run vp and downe to Stables, and thence to carrie all the dung, and to lay it on heapes without the Towne-walles; which being parched in the Sunne for two or three moneths together, they vſe for fuell. Likewiſe, the women haue their Stoues apart from the men. And yet ſome Hot-houſes ſerue both for men and women, but at ſundrie times, namely, for men from the third to the fourteenth houre of the day, and the reſidue for women. While women are bathing themſelues, they hang out a rope at the firſt entrance of the houſe, which is a ſigne for men, that they may then proceede no farther. Neither may husbands here be permitted to ſpeake with their owne wiues; ſo great a regard they haue of their honeſtie. Here men and women both, after they haue done bathing, vſe to banquet and make merrie with pleaſant Muſicke and ſinging. Young Striplings enter the Bath ſtarke naked without any ſhame, but men couer their priuities with a linnen cloth. The richer ſort will not enter the common Bath, but that which is adorned and finely ſet forth, and which ſerueth for Noble-men and Gentle-men. When any one is to be bathed, they lay him along vpon the ground, anointing him with a certaine oyntment, and with certaine inſtruments doing away his filth. The richer ſort haue a Carpet to lie on, their head lying on a woodden Cuſhion, couered with the ſame Carpet. Likewiſe, here are many Barbers and Chyrurgions which attend to doe their office. The moſt part of theſe Baths pertaine to the Temples and Colledges, yeelding vnto them a great ſumme of money for yearely rent: for ſome giue an hundred, ſome an hundred and fiftie Duckats a yeare. Neither muſt I here omit the Feſtiuall-day which the Seruants and Officers of the Bathes celebrate; who with Trumpets and Pipes calling their friends together, goe forth of the Towne, and there gather a wild Onion, putting it in a certaine brazen veſſell, and couering the ſame with a linnen cloth wet in Lee: afterward with a great noiſe of Trumpets and Pipes, they ſolemnely bring the ſaid Onion vnto the Hot-houſe doore, and there they hang it vp in the little brazen veſſell or Lauer, ſaying, That this is a moſt happy boading, or ſigne of good luck vnto their Stoue. Howbeit, I ſuppoſe it to be ſome ſuch Sacrifice, as the ancient Moores were wont in times paſt, when they were deſtitute of Lawes and ciuilitie, to offer, and that the ſame cuſtom hath remained till this very day. The like is to be ſeene euen among Chriſtians, who celebrate many Feaſts, wherof they can yeeld no reaſon. Likewiſe, euery African towne had their peculiar Feaſt, which, when the Chriſtians once enioyed Africa, were vtterly aboliſhed and done away.

Womens Bathes.

Reuenues to the Temple.

In this Citie are almoſt two hundred Innes, the greateſt whereof are in the principall part of the Citie neere vnto the chiefe Temple. Euery of theſe Innes are three ſtories high, and containe an hundred and twenty, or moe Chambers apiece. Likewiſe, each one hath a Fountaine, together with Sinks and Water-pipes, which make auoidance of all the filth. Neuer, to my remembrãce, did I ſee greater building, except it were the Spaniſh Colledge at Bologna, or the Pallace of the Cardinall di San Giorgio at Rome; of which Innes all the Chamber-doores haue Walkes or Galleries before them. And albeit the Innes of this Citie are very faire and large, yet they affoord moſt beggerly entertainement to ſtrangers; for there are neither Beds nor Couches for a man to lie vpon, vnleſſe it be a courſe Blanket and a Mat. And if you will haue any victuals, you muſt goe to the Shambles your ſelfe, and buy ſuch meate for your Hoſt to dreſſe, as your ſtomack ſtands-to. In theſe Innes certaine poore Widdowes of Fez, which haue neither wealth nor friends to ſuccour them, are relieued: ſometimes one, and ſometimes two of them together are allowed a Chamber; for which courteſie they play both the Chamberlaines and Cookes of the Inne. The Inne-keepers of Fez being all of one Family, called Elcheua, goe apparelled like Women, and ſhaue their Beards, and are ſo delighted to immitate Women, that they will not onely counterfeite their ſpeech, but will ſometimes alſo ſit downe and ſpin. Each one of theſe hath his Concubine, whom hee accompanieth as if ſhe were his owne lawfull Wife; albeit the ſaid Concubines are not onely ill-fauoured in countenance, but notorious for their bad life and behauior. They buy and ſell wine ſo freely, that no man controles them for it. None reſort hither but moſt lewd and wicked people, to the end they may more boldly commit vilany. The very company of theſe Inne-keepers is ſo odious, and deteſtable in the ſight of all honeſt men, learned men, and Merchants, that they will in no wiſe vouchſafe to ſpeake vnto them. And they are firmely enioyned not to enter into the Temple, into the Burſe, nor into any Bath. Neither yet are they permitted to reſort vnto thoſe Innes which are next vnto the great Temple, and wherein Merchants are vſually entertained.

The Innes of Fez.

In this Citie are Mills in foure hundred places at leaſt. And euery of theſe places containeth fiue or ſixe Mills; ſo that there are ſome thouſands of Mills in the whole City. Euery Mill ſtandeth in a large roome vpon ſome ſtrong piller or poſt, whereunto many Country-people vſe to reſort. All the ſaid Mills pertaine either to the Temples or Colledges.

The Mills of Fez. Like vnto our Horſe-mills.

A deſcription of the Occupations, the Shops, and the Market.

Each trade or occupation hath a peculiar place allotted thereto, the principall whereof are next vnto the great Temple: for there firſt you may behold to the number of foureſcore Notaries or Scriueners ſhops, whereof ſome ioyne vpon the Temple, and the reſidue ſtand ouer againſt them: euery of which Shops hath alwaies two Notaries. Then Weſtward there are about thirtie Stationers or Booke-ſellers. The Shoo-merchants which buy Shooes and Buskins of the Shoo-makers, and ſell them againe to the Citizens, inhabite on the Southſide of the Temple: and next vnto them, ſuch as make Shooes for children onely, their Shops being about fiftie. On the Eaſt-ſide dwell thoſe that ſell veſſels, and other commodities made of braſſe. Ouer againſt the great Gate of the ſaid Temple ſtands the Fruit-market, containing fiftie Shops, where no kind of fruit is wanting. Next vnto them ſtand the Waxe-merchants, very ingenious and cunning workmen, and much to be admired. Here are Merchants factors likewiſe, though they bee but few. Then followes the Herbe-market, wherein the Pome-citrons, and diuers kinds of greene Boughes and Herbes doe repreſent the ſweete and flouriſhing Spring, and in this Market are about twenty Tauernes: for they which drinke Wine, will ſhrowd themſelues vnder the ſhadie and pleaſant Boughes. Next vnto them ſtand the Milke-ſellers: I thinke there paſſeth ſcarce one day ouer their heads, wherein they vtter not fiue and twentie tunnes of Milke. Next vnto theſe are ſuch as ſell Cotton, and they haue about thirtie ſhops: then follow thoſe that ſell Hempe, Ropes, Halters, and ſuch other hempen commodities. Then come you to the Girdlers, and ſuch as make Pantofles, and Leather-bridles embrodered with ſilke: next their ſhops adioyne that make Sword-ſcabberds and Capariſons for Horſes. Immediately after dwell thoſe that ſell Salt and Lime; and vpon them border an hundred Shops of Potters, who frame al kind of earthen veſſels adorned with diuers colours. Then come you to the Sadlers Shops: and next of all to the ſtreete of Porters, who (as I ſuppoſe) are aboue three hundred: theſe Porters haue a Conſull or Gouernour, who euery weeke allotteth vnto part of them ſome ſet buſineſſe. The gaine which redoundeth thereof, they put into a Coffer, diuiding it at the weekes end among them, which haue wrought the ſame weeke. Strange it is to conſider how exceedingly theſe Porters loue one another: for when any of them deceaſeth, the whole company maintaineth his widow and fatherleſſe children at their common charge, till either ſhe die, or marrieth a new Husband. The children they carefully bring vp, till they haue attained to ſome good Art or occupation. Next vnto the Porters companie dwell the chiefe Cookes and Victuallers. Here alſo ſtands a certaine ſquare houſe couered with Reed, wherein Peaſe and Turnep-rootes are to bee ſold, which are ſo greatly eſteemed of in Fez, that none may buy them of the country people at the firſt hand, but ſuch as are appointed, who are bound to pay tole & tribute vnto the Cuſtomers: and ſcarcely one day paſſeth, wherein moe then fiue hundred ſacks of Peaſe and Turneps are not ſold. On the North-ſide of the Temple is a place whither all kind of Hearbs are brought to make Sallets withall: for which purpoſe there is fortie Shops appointed. Next whereunto is the place of Smoke, ſo called, by reaſon of continuall ſmoke: here are certaine Fritters or Cakes fried in Oyle, like vnto ſuch as are called at Rome, Pan Melato. They roſte their fleſh not vpon a ſpit, but in an Ouen: for making two Ouens one ouer another for the ſame purpoſe, in the lower they kindle a fire, putting the fleſh into the vpper Ouen when it is well het; you would not beleeue how finely their meat is thus roſted; for it cannot be ſpoiled either by ſmoke or too much heate: for they are all night roſting it by a gentle fire, and in the morning they ſet it to ſale. The foreſaid Steakes and Fritters they ſell vnto the Citizens in ſo great abundance, that they daily take for them moe then two hundred Ducats; for there are fifteene Shops which ſell nothing elſe. Likewiſe, here are ſold certaine Fiſhes and fleſh fried, and a kind of excellent ſauorie bread, taſting ſomewhat like a Fritter; which being baked with Butter, they neuer eate but with Butter and Honie. Here alſo are the feete of certaine beaſts ſodden, wherewith the Husbandmen betimes in the morning breake their faſt, and then hie them to their labour. Next vnto theſe are ſuch as ſell Oyle, Salt, Butter, Cheeſe, Oliues, Pome-citrons and Capers: their ſhops are full of fine earthen veſſels, which are of much greater value then the things contained in them. Then follow the Shambles, conſiſting of about forty Shops, wherein the Butchers cut their fleſh a pieces, and ſell it by weight. They kill no beaſts within the Shambles, for there is a place allotted for this purpoſe neere vnto the Riuer, where hauing once dreſſed their fleſh, they ſend it to the Shambles by certaine ſeruants appointed for that end. But before any Butcher dare ſell his fleſh vnto the Citizens, he muſt carrie it to the Gouernour of the Shambles, who ſo ſoone as he ſeeth the fleſh, he ſets downe in a piece of paper the price thereof, which they ſhew together with their meate vnto the people; neither may they in any caſe exceed the ſaid price. Next vnto the Shambles ſtandeth the Market where courſe cloathes are ſold, which containeth at leaſt an hundred Shops: the ſaid cloth is deliuered vnto certaine Criers (which are about threeſcore in number) who carrying the cloth from Shop to Shop, tell the price thereof. Then follow their Shops that ſcowre and ſell Armour, Swords, Iauelings, and ſuch like warlike inſtruments. Next vnto them ſtand the Fiſhmongers, who ſell moſt excellent and great Fiſh. Next vnto the Fiſhmongers dwel ſuch as make of a certaine hard Reed, Coopes and Cages for Fowles; their Shops being about fortie in number: for each of the Citizens vſeth to bring vp great ſtore of Hennes and Capons. And that their houſes may not be defiled with Hennes-dung, they keepe them them continually in Coopes and Cages. Then follow their Shops that ſell liquide Sope. Next of all are certaine of their Shops that ſell Meale, albeit they are diuerſly diſperſed throughout the whole Citie. Next vnto them are ſuch as ſell Seede-graine and Seede-pulſe. Then are there tenne Shops of them that ſell Straw. Next them is the Market where Thread and Hempe is to be ſold, and where Hempe vſeth to bee kempt: which place is built after the faſhion of great Houſes, with foure Galleries, or ſpare-roomes round about it: in the firſt whereof they ſell Linnen-cloth, and weigh Hempe: in two other ſit a great many women, hauing abundance of ſale-thread, which is there ſold by the Criers.

Vnto theſe adioyne ſuch as make Wicker-veſſels, and other, to lay vp Meale and Corne in: and theſe enioy about thirty Shops. Next them are one hundred and fifty Shops of Taylors. And next the Taylors are thoſe that make Leather-ſhields, ſuch as I haue often ſeene brought into Europe. Then follow twenty Shops of Landreſſes or Waſhers, being people of a baſe condition; to whom the Citizens that haue not Maids of their owne, carry their Shirts and other foule linnen, which after few dayes are reſtored vnto them ſo cleane and white, as it is wonderfull. Theſe Landreſſes haue diuers Shops adioyning together in the ſame place: but here and there throughout the Citie are aboue two hundred Families of ſuch perſons. Next vnto the Landreſſes are thoſe that make Trees for Saddles; who dwell likewiſe in great numbers Eaſtward right in the way to the Colledge founded by King Abuhinan. Vpon theſe adioyne about fortie ſhops of ſuch as worke Stirrops, Spurres, and Bridles, ſo artificially, as I thinke the like are not to be ſeene in Europe. Next ſtandeth their ſtreete, that firſt rudely make the ſaid Stirrops, Bridles and Spurres. From thence you may goe into the ſtreete of Sadlers, which couer the Saddles before mentioned threefold with moſt excellent Leather: the beſt Leather they lay vppermoſt, and the worſt beneath, and that with notable Workmanſhip, as may bee ſeene in moſt places of Italy: and of them there are moe then an hundred Shops. Then follow their long Shops that make Pikes and Launces. Next ſtandeth a Rocke or Mount, hauing two Walkes thereupon; the one whereof leadeth to the Eaſt-gate, and the other to one of the Kings Palaces, where the Kings Siſters, or ſome other of his Kindred are vſually kept. But this is by the way to be noted, that all the foreſaid Shops, or Market, begin at the great Temple.

Of the Station or Burſe of Merchants in Fez.
* Or Baioco.

The Burſe you may well call a Citie, which being walled round about, hath twelue Gates, and before euery Gate an Iron-chaine, to keepe Horſes and Carts from comming in. The ſaid Burſe is diuided into twelue ſeuerall Wards or parts: two whereof are allotted vnto ſuch Shoomakers as make Shooes onely for Noblemen and Gentlemen, and two alſo to Silke-merchants, or Haberdaſhers, that ſell Ribands, Garters, Scarfes, and ſuch other like ornaments; and of theſe there are about fiftie Shops. Others there are that ſell Silke onely for the embrodering of Shirts, Cuſhions, and other ſuch furniture made of Cloth, poſſeſſing almoſt as many Shops as the former. Then follow thoſe that make Womens Girdles of courſe Wooll (which ſome make of Silke) but very groſſely, for I thinke they are moe then two fingers thicke, ſo that they may ſerue almoſt for Cables to a Ship. Next vnto theſe Girdlers are ſuch as ſell Woollen and Linnen-cloth brought out of Europe: which haue alſo Silke-ſtuffes, Caps, and other like commodities to ſell. Hauing paſſed theſe, you come to them that ſell Mats, Mattraſſes, Cuſhions, and other things made of Leather. Next adioyneth the Cuſtomers Office; for their Cloth is ſent about by certaine Criers to be ſold, who before they can paſſe, muſt goe to the Cuſtomers to haue the ſaid Cloth ſealed, and to pay Toll vnto the Cuſtomers. Criers here are to the number of ſixtie, which for the crying of euery Cloth haue one * Liardo allowed them. Next of all dwell the Taylors, and that in three ſeuerall ſtreetes. Then come you to the Linnen-drapers, which ſell Smocks and other apparell for women: and theſe are accounted the richeſt Merchants in all Fez, for their wares are the moſt gainefull of all others. Next vnto theſe are certaine Woollen garments to be ſold, made of ſuch Cloth as is brought thither out of Europe. Euery after-noone Cloth is ſold in this place by the Criers, which is lawfull for any man to doe, when neceſſary occaſion vrgeth him. Laſt of all is that place where they vſe to ſell wrought Shirts, Towels, and other embrodered works; as alſo where Carpets, Beds, and Blankets are to be ſold.

Of the Grocers, Apothecaries, and other Tradeſmen and Artizans of Fez.
Iohn Leo was at Tauris in Perſia.

Next vnto the ſaid Burſe, on the Northſide, in a ſtreight lane, ſtand an hundred and fifty Grocers and Apothecaries Shops, which are fortified on both ſides with two ſtrong Gates. Theſe Shops are garded in the night-ſeaſon by certaine hired and armed Watchmen, which keep their ſtation with Lanthornes and Maſtiues. The ſaid Apothecaries can make neither Sirrups, Oyntments, nor Electuaries: but ſuch things are made at home by the Phyſicians, and are of them to be bought. The Phyſitians houſes adioyne for the moſt part vnto the Apothecaries: howbeit, very few of the people know either the Phyſician, or the vſe of his Phyſick. The Shops here are ſo artificially built and adorned, that the like (I thinke) are no where elſe to be found. Being in Tauris, a Citie of Perſia, I remember that I ſaw diuers ſtately Shops curiouſly built vnder certaine Galleries, but very darke, ſo that (in my iudgement) they be far inferiour vnto the Shops of Fez.

Next the Apothecaries are certaine Artificers that makes Combes of Boxe and other wood. Eaſtward of the Apothecaries dwell the Needle-makers, poſſeſſing to the number of fifty ſhops. Then follow thoſe that turne Iuory, and ſuch other matter, who (becauſe their craft is practiſed by ſome other Artizans) are but few in number. Vnto the Turners adioyne certaine that ſell Meale, Sope, and Broomes: who dwelling next vnto the Thread-market before mentioned, are ſcarce twenty ſhops in all: for the reſidue are diſperſed in other places of the City, as we will hereafter declare. Amongſt the Cotten-merchants are certaine that ſell ornaments for Tents and Beds. Next of all ſtand the Fowlers, who, though they be but few, yet are they ſtored with all kind of choice and dainty Fowles: whereupon the place is called the Fowlers market. Then come you to their ſhops that ſell Cords and Ropes of Hempe: and then to ſuch as make high Coorke-ſlippers for Noblemen and Gentlemen to walk the ſtreets in, when it is foule weather: theſe Corke-ſlippers are finely trimmed with much ſilke, and moſt excellent vpper leathers, ſo that the cheapeſt will coſt a Ducat, yea ſome there are of ten Ducats, & ſome of fiue and twenty Ducats price. Such ſlippers as are accounted moſt fine and coſtly are made of blacke and white Mulberie-tree, of blacke Walnut-tree, and of the Iujuba tree, albeit the Corke-ſlippers are the moſt durable and ſtrong. Vnto theſe adioyne ten ſhops of Spaniſh Moores, which make Croſſe-bowes: as alſo thoſe that make Broomes of a certaine wilde Palme-tree, ſuch as are dayly brought out of Sicilie to Rome. Theſe Broomes they carry about the City in a great basket, either ſelling them, or exchanging them for Bran, Aſhes, or old Shooes: the Bran they ſell againe to Shepheards, the Aſhes to ſuch as white Thread, and old Shooes to Coblers. Next vnto them are Smithes that make Nailes; & Coopers which make certain great veſſels in forme of a bucket, hauing Corne-meaſures to ſell alſo: which meaſures, when the Officer, appointed for the ſame purpoſe, hath made triall of, he is to receiue a farthing a-peece for his fee. Then follow the Wooll-chapmen, who hauing bought wooll of the Butchers, put it foorth vnto others to be ſcowred and waſhed: the Sheepe-skinnes they themſelues dreſſe: but as for Oxe-hides they belong to another occupation, and are tanned in another place. Vnto theſe adioyne ſuch as make certaine Langols or Withs, which the Africans put vpon their horſes feet. Next of all are the Braſiers: then ſuch as make Weights and Meaſures; and thoſe likewiſe that make inſtruments to carde Wooll or Flaxe. At length you deſcend into a long ſtreet, where men of diuers occupations dwell together, ſome of which doe poliſh and enamell Stirops, Spurres, and other ſuch commodities, as they receiue from the Smithes roughly and rudely hammered. Next whom dwell certaine Cart-wrights, Plow-wrights, Mill-wrights, and of other like occupations. Diers haue their aboad by the Riuers ſide, and haue each of them a moſt cleere Fountaine or Ciſterne to waſh their Silke-ſtuffes in. Ouer againſt the Diers dwell makers of Bulwarkes or Trenches, in a very large place, which being planted with ſhady Mulberrie-trees is exceeding pleaſant in the Summer time. Next them are a company of Farriers, that ſhooe Mules and Horſes: and then thoſe that make the Iron-worke of Croſſe-bowes. Then follow Smithes that make Horſe-ſhooes; and laſt of all, thoſe that white Linnen-cloth: and here the weſt part of the City endeth, which in times paſt (as is aforeſaid) was a City by it ſelfe, and was built after the City on the Eaſt ſide of the Riuer.

The ſecond part of Fez ſituate Eaſtward, is beautified with moſt ſtately Palaces, Temples, Houſes, and Colledges; albeit there are not ſo many trades and occupations as in the part before deſcribed. For here are neither Merchants, Taylors, Shoo makers, &c. but of the meaner ſort. Heere are notwithſtanding thirty ſhops of Grocers. Neere vnto the walles dwell certaine Bricke-burners and Potters: and not farre from thence is a great Market of white Earthen Veſſels, Platters, Cups, and Diſhes. Next of all ſtands the Corne-market, wherein are diuers Granaries to lay vp Corne. Ouer againſt the great Temple there is a broad ſtreet paued with Brick, round about which diuers handi-crafts and occupations are exerciſed. There are likewiſe many other trades diuerſly diſperſed ouer this Eaſt part of the City. The Drapers and Grocers haue certaine peculiar places allotted vnto them. In the Eaſt part of Fez likewiſe there are fiue hundred and twenty Weauers houſes, very ſtately and ſumptuouſly built: hauing in each of them many worke-houſes and Loomes, which yeeld great rent vnto the owners. Weauers there are (by report) in this City twenty thouſand, and as many Millers. Moreouer, in this part of Fez are an hundred ſhops for the whiting of thread; the principall whereof being ſituate vpon the Riuer, are exceedingly well furniſhed with Kettles, Cauldrons, and other ſuch veſſels: here are likewiſe many great houſes to ſawe wood in, which worke is performed by Chriſtian captiues, and whatſoeuer wages they earne, redoundeth vnto their Lords and Maſters. Theſe Chriſtian captiues are not ſuffered to reſt from their labours, but onely vpon Fridayes, and vpon eight ſeuerall dayes of the yeere beſides, wheron the Moores feaſts are ſolemnized. Heere alſo are the common ſtewes for Harlots, which are fauoured by great men, and ſometime by the chiefe Gouernours of the City. Likewiſe there are certaine Vintners, who are freely permitted to keepe Harlots, and to take filthie hire for them. Heere are alſo moe then ſixe hundred cleere Fountaines walled round about and moſt charily kept, euery one of which is ſeuerally conueyed by certaine pipes vnto each Houſe, Temple, Colledge, and Hoſpitall: and this Fountaine water is accounaccounted the beſt: for that which commeth out of the Riuer is in Summer oftentimes dried vp: as likewiſe when the Conduits are to be clenſed, the courſe of the Riuer muſt of neceſſitie bee turned out of the City. Wherefore euery family vſeth to fetch water out of the ſaid Fountaines, and albeit in Summer-time the chiefe Gentlemen vſe Riuer-water, yet they will often call for Fountaine-water, becauſe it is more coole and pleaſant in taſte. But in the Spring-time it is nothing ſo. Theſe Fountaines haue their Originall for the moſt part from the Weſt and South, for the North part is all full of Mountaines and Marble Rockes, containing certaine Caues or Cels, wherein Corne may be kept for many yeeres; of which Caues ſome are ſo large, that they will hold two hundred buſhels of Corne. The Citizens dwelling neere thoſe Caues, and ſuch as poſſeſſe them, do ſufficiently maintaine themſelues in taking yeerely euery hundred buſhell for rent. The South part of Eaſt Fez is almoſt halfe deſtitute of Inhabitants; howbeit the gardens abound with Fruits and Flowres of all ſorts. Euery Garden hath an houſe belonging thereunto, and a Chriſtall-fountaine enuironed with Roſes, and other odoriferous Flowres and Herbes; ſo that in the Spring-time a man may both ſatisfie his eyes, and ſolace his mind in viſiting this part of the City: and well it may be called a Paradiſe, ſithence the Noblemen doe here reſide from the moneth of Aprill till the end of September. Weſtward, that is, toward the Kings Palace, ſtandeth a Caſtle built by a King of the Luntune Familie, reſembling in bigneſſe an whole towne: wherein the Kings of Fez, before the ſaid Palace was built, kept their Royall reſidence. But after new Fez began to be built by the Marin Kings, the ſaid Caſtle was left onely to the Gouernor of the City. Within this Caſtle ſtands a ſtately Temple built (as aforeſaid) what time it was inhabited by Princes and Nobles, many places being afterward defaced and turned into Gardens: howbeit certaine houſes were left vnto the Gouernour, partly to dwell in, and partly for the deciding of controuerſies. Heere is likewiſe a certaine Priſon for captiues ſupported with many pillars, and being ſo large, that it will hold (as diuers are of opinion) three thouſand men. Neither are there any ſeuerall roomes in this priſon: for at Fez one priſon ſerueth for all. By this Caſtle runneth a certaine Riuer very commodious for the Gouernour.

Of the Magiſtrates, the adminiſtration of Iuſtice, and of the apparell vſed in Fez.

The puniſhment of malefactors in Fez.

In the City of Fez are certaine particular Iudges and Magiſtrates: and there is a Gouernour that defineth ciuill controuerſies, and giueth ſentence againſt Malefactors. Likewiſe there is a Iudge of the Canon Law, who hath to doe with all matters concerning the Mahumetan Religion. A third Iudge there is alſo, that dealeth about marriages and diuorcements, whoſe authoritie is to heare all witneſſes, and to giue ſentence accordingly. Next vnto them is the high Aduocate, vnto whom they appeale from the ſentence of the ſaid Iudges, when as they doe either miſtake themſelues, or doe ground their ſentence vpon the authoritie of ſome inferiour Doctor. The Gouernour gaineth a great ſumme of money by condemning of parties at ſeuerall times. Their manner of proceeding againſt a Malefactor is this: hauing giuen him an hundred or two hundred ſtripes before the Gouernour, the Executioner putteth an Iron-chaine about his necke, and ſo leadeth him ſtarke-naked (his priuities onely excepted) through all parts of the City: after the Executioner followes a Serieant, declaring vnto all the people what fact the guilty perſon hath committed, till at length hauing put on his apparell againe, they carry him backe to priſon. Sometimes it falleth out that many offenders chained together are led about the Citie: and the Gouernour for each Malefactor thus puniſhed, receiueth one Ducat and one fourth part; and likewiſe at their firſt entrance into the Gaole, he demands of each one a certaine duety, which is paid particularly vnto him by diuers Merchants and Artificers appointed of purpoſe. And amongſt his other liuings, he gathered out of a certaine Mountaine ſeuen thouſand Ducats of yeerely Reuenue: ſo that when occaſion ſerueth, he is at his proper coſtes to finde the King of Fez three hundred horſes, and to giue them their pay.

No Officer by Mahumets Law to haue Fees.

Vnlearned Lawyers.

But foure Serieants in Fez: and thoſe baudy Knaues.

No Notaries.

Tribute, Searchers & exciſe.

Two per cento Cuſtome.

Thoſe which follow the Canon law haue neither ſtipend nor reward allowed them: for it is forbidden by the Law of Mahumet, that the Iudges of his Religion ſhould reape any commoditie or Fees by their Office; but that they ſhould liue onely by reading of Lectures, and by their Prieſthood. In this faculty are many Aduocates and Proctors, which are extreme idiots, and vtterly voyd of all good learning. There is a place alſo in Fez whereinto the Iudges vſe to caſt the Citizens for debt, or for ſome light offence. In all this City are foure Officers or Serieants onely; who from midnight till two a clocke in the morning doe walke about all parts of the Citie; neither haue they any ſtipend, but a certaine Fee of ſuch Malefactors as they lead about in chaines, according to the qualitie of euery mans crime; moreouer, they are freely permitted to ſell Wine, and to keepe Harlots. The ſaid Gouernour hath neither Scribes nor Notaries, but pronounceth all ſentences by word of mouth. One onely there is that gathereth Cuſtomes and Tributes ouer all the City, who daily payeth to the Kings vſe thirty Ducats. This man appointeth certaine ſubſtitutes to watch at euery Gate, where nothing, be it of neuer ſo ſmall value, can paſſe before ſome Tribute be paid. Yea, ſometime they goe foorth of the City to meet with the Carriers & Muliters vpon the high wayes, to the end they may not conceale nor cloſely conuey any merchandize into the City. And if they be taken in any deceit, they pay double. The ſet order or proportion of their Cuſtome is this, namely, to pay two Ducats for the worth of an hundred: for Onix-ſtones, which are brought hither in great plentie, they pay one fourth part: but for Wood, Corne, Oxen, & Hens, they giue nothing at all. The ſaid Gouernor of the Shambles hath alwaies twelue men wayting vpon him, and oftentimes hee rideth about the Citie to examine the weight of bread, and finding any bread to faile of the duewaight, he cauſeth the Baker to be beaten with cudgels, and to bee led in contempt vp and downe the Citie.

Their apparel.

The Citizens of Fez goe very ciuilly and decently attyred, in the Spring time wearing Garments made of out-landiſh cloth: ouer their Shirts they weare a Iacket or Caſſock beeing narrow and halfe-ſleeued, whereupon they weare a certayne wide Garment, cloſe before on the breſt. Their Caps are thinne and ſingle, like vnto the Night-caps vſed in Italie, ſauing that they couer not their eares: theſe Caps are couered with a certaine Skarfe, which beeing twice wreathed about their head and beard, hangeth by a knot. They weare neither Hoſe nor Breeches, but in the Spring time when they ride a Iourney, they put on Boots: mary, the poorer ſort haue onely their Caſſocke, and a Mantle ouer that called, * Barnuſſi, and a moſt courſe Cap. The Doctors and ancient Gentlemen weare a certayne Garment with wide ſleeues, ſomewhat like to the Gentlemen of Venice. The common ſort of people are for the moſt part clad in a kind of courſe white cloth. The women are not altogether vnſeemely apparelled, but in Summer time they weare nothing ſaue their Smockes onely. In Winter they weare ſuch a wide ſleeued Garment, being cloſe at the breſt, as that of the men before mentioned. When they goe abroad, they put on certaine long Breeches, wherewith their legges are all couered, hauing alſo, after the faſhion of Syria, a Veile hanging downe from their heads, which couereth their whole bodies. On their faces likewiſe they weare a Maske with two little holes, onely for their eyes to peepe out at. Their eares they adorne with golden Eare-rings, and with moſt precious Iewels: the meaner ſort weare Eare-rings of Siluer and gilt only. Vpon their armes the Ladies and Gentlewomen were golden Bracelets, and the reſidue Siluer, as likewiſe Gold or Siluer-rings vpon their legs, according to each ones eſtate and abilitie.

* Or Ilbernus.

Their manner of eating and drinking.

Let vs now ſpeake ſomewhat of their victuals and manner of eating. The common ſort ſet on the pot with freſh meate twice euery weeke: but the Gentlemen and richer ſort euery day, and as often as they liſt. They take three meales a day: their Break-faſt conſiſteth of certaine Fruits and Bread, or elſe of a kind of liquid Pap made like vnto Frumentie: in Winter they ſup off the Broth of ſalt fleſh thickned with courſe meale. To dinner they haue Fleſh, Sallets, Cheeſe, and Oliues: but in Summer they haue greater cheere. Their Supper is eaſie of digeſtion, conſiſting of Bread, Melons, Grapes, or Milke: but in Winter they haue ſodden fleſh, together with a kind of meate called Cuſcuſu, which being made of a lumpe of Dow is ſet firſt vpon the fire in certaine Veſſels full of holes, and afterward is tempered with Butter and Pottage. Some alſo vſe often to haue Roſte-meat. And thus you ſee after what ſort both the Gentlemen and common people lead their liues: albeit the Noblemen fare ſomewhat more daintily: but if you compare them with the Noblemen and Gentlemen of Europe, they may ſeeme to be miſerable and baſe fellowes; not for any want or ſcarcitie of victuals, but for want of good manners and cleanlineſſe. The Table whereat they ſit is low, vncouered, and filthy: ſeates they haue none but the bare ground, neyther Kniues or Spoones but only their ten Talons. The ſaid Cuſcuſu is ſet before them all in one only Platter, whereout as well Gentlemen as others take it not with Spoones, but with their Clawes fiue. The meate and pottage is put all in one Diſh; out of which euery one raketh with his greaſie fiſts what hee thinkes good: you ſhall neuer ſee Knife vpon the Table, but they teare and greedily deuoure their meate like hungry Dogges. Neyther doth any of them deſire to drinke before he hath well ſtuffed his panch; and then will he ſup off a cup of cold water as bigge as a Milke-bowle. The Doctors indeed are ſomewhat more orderly at meales: but, to tell you the very truth, in all Italie there is no Gentleman ſo meane, which for fine Dyet and ſtately Furniture excelleth not the greateſt Potentates and Lords of all Africa.

A kind of meat called Cuſcuſu.

The manner of ſolemnizing Marriages.

As touching their Marriages, they obſerue theſe courſes following. So ſoone as the Maydes Father hath eſpouſed her vnto her Louer, they goe forth-with like Bride and Bridegroome to Church, accompanyed with their Parents and Kinsfolkes, and call likewiſe two Notaries with them, to make record before all that are preſent of the Couenants and Dowrie. The meaner ſort of people vſually giue for their Daughters Dowrie thirtie Duckats and a woman-ſlaue of fifteen Duckats price; as likewiſe a parti-coloured Garment embroydered with Silke and certaine other Silke Skarfes, or Iags, to were vpon her head in ſtead of a Hood or Veile; then a paire of fine Shooes, and two excellent paire of Startups; and laſtly, many prettie Knackes curiouſly made of Siluer and other Metals, as namely, Combes, Perfuming-pans, Bellowes, and ſuch other Trinkets as Women haue in eſtimation. Which beeing done, all the Gheſts preſent are inuited to a Banquet, whereunto for great Dainties is brought a kind of Bread fryed and tempered with Honey, which we haue before deſcribed; then they bring Roſt-meat to the boord, all this being at the Bridegroomes coſt: afterward the Brides Father maketh a Banquet in like ſort. Who if he beſtow on his Daughter ſome apparell beſides her Dowrie, it is accounted a point of liberalitie. And albeit the Father promiſeth but thirtie Duckats onely for a Dowrie, yet will he ſometimes beſtow, in apparell and other Ornaments belonging to Women, two hundred, yea ſometimes three hundred Duckats beſides. But they ſeldome giue an Houſe, a Vineyard, or a field for a Dowrie. Moreouer vpon the Bride they beſtow three Gownes made of coſtly cloth; and three others of Silke Chamlet, or of ſome other excellent Stuffe. They giue her Smockes likewiſe curiouſly wrought, with fine Veiles, and other embroydered Veſtures; as alſo Pillowes and Cuſhions of the beſt ſort. And beſides all the former gifts, they beſtow eight Carpets or Couerlets on the Bride, foure whereof are onely for ſeemelineſſe to ſpread vpon their Preſſes and Cupboords: two of the courſer they vſe for their Beds; and the other two of Leather to lay vpon the floore of their Bed-chambers. Alſo they haue certaine Rugs of about twentie els compaſſe or length; as likewiſe three Quilts beeing made of Linnen and Woollen on the one ſide, and ſtuffed with flocks on the other ſide, which they vſe in the night in manner following. With the one halfe they couer themſelues, and the other halfe they lay vnder them: which they may eaſily doe, when as they are both waies about ten ells long. Vnto the former they adde as many Couerlets of Silke very curiouſly embroydered on the vpper-ſide, and beneath lined double with Linnen and Cotton. They beſtow likewiſe white Couerlets to vſe in Summer-time onely: and laſtly, they beſtow a Woollen hanging diuided into many parts, and finely wrought, as namely, with certaine pieces of gilt Leather; whereupon they ſowe Iags of partie-coloured Silke, and vpon euery Iagge a little Ball or Button of Silke, whereby the ſaid hanging may for Ornaments ſake bee faſtened vnto a wall.

Italians miſtaken.

Here you ſee what be the Appurtenances of their Dowries; wherein ſome doe ſtriue ſo much to excell others, that oftentimes many Gentlemen haue brought themſelues vnto Pouerty thereby. Some Italians thinke that the Husband beſtowes a Dowrie vpon his Wife; but they altogether miſtake the matter.

Fetching home the Bride.

The Bridegroome being readie to carry home his Bride, cauſeth her to be placed in a woodden Cage or Cabinet eight ſquare couered with Silke, in which ſhee is carryed by Porters, her Parents and Kinsfolkes following, with a great noyſe of Trumpets, Pipes, and Drummes, and with a number of Torches; the Bridegroomes Kinſmen goe before with Torches, and the Brides Kinsfolkes follow after: and ſo they goe vnto the great Market place, and hauing paſſed by the Temple, the Bridegroome takes his leaue of his Father-in-law and the reſt, hying him home with all ſpeed, and in his Chamber expecting the preſence of his Spouſe. The Father, Brother, and Vncle of the Bride leade her vnto the Chamber-doore, and there deliuer her with one conſent vnto the Mother of the Bridegroome: who, as ſoone as ſhe is entred, toucheth her foot with his, and forth-with they depart into a ſeuerall roome by themſelues. In the meane ſeaſon the Banquet is comming forth: and a certaine woman ſtandeth before the Bride-chamber doore, expecting till the Bridegroome hauing defloured his Bride, reacheth her a Napkin ſtayned with bloud, which Napkin ſhe carryeth incontinent and ſheweth to the Gheſts, proclayming with a lowd voyce, that the Bride was euer til that time an vnſpotted & pure Virgine. This woman, together with other women her Companions, firſt the Parents of the Bridegroom, and then of the Bride, doe honourably entertayne. But if the Bride be found not to be a Virgine, the Marriage is made fruſtrate, and ſhee with great diſgrace is turned home to her Parents.

But ſo ſoone as the new marryed man goeth forth of the houſe (which is for the moſt part on the ſeuenth day after the Marriage) hee buyeth great plenty of fiſhes, which hee cauſeth his Mother or ſome other woman to caſt vpon his Wiues feet; and this they, from an ancient Superſtitious cuſtome take for a good boding.

Cuſtome of fiſhes.

Minſtrelſie and dancing.

The morrow after a company of women goe to dreſſe the Bride, to combe her Lockes, and to paint her Cheekes with Vermillion; her hands and her feet they dye blacke, but all this Painting preſently loſeth the freſh hue; and this day they haue another Banquet. The Bride they place in the higheſt Roome that ſhe may be ſeene of all. The ſame night, which was ſpent in dancing, there are preſent at the Bridal-houſe certayne Minſtrels and Singers, which by turnes ſometimes vſe their Inſtruments and ſometimes Voyce-muſick: they dance alwayes one by one, and at the end of each Galliard they beſtow a Largeſſe vpon the Muſicians. If any one will honour the Dancer, he bids him kneele downe before him, and hauing faſtened pieces of money all ouer his face, the Muſicians preſently take it off for their fee. The women dance alone without any men, at the noyſe of their owne Muſicians. All theſe things vſe to bee performed when the Bride is a Mayde. But the Marriages of Widowes are concluded with leſſe adoe. Their cheere is boyled Beefe and Mutton, and ſtewed Hens, with diuers iuncating Diſhes among. In ſtead of Trenchers, the Gheſts being ten or twelue in number, haue ſo many great round Platters of wood ſet before them. And this is the common cuſtom of Gentlemen and Merchants. The meaner ſort preſent their Gheſts with certaine ſops or brueſſe of Bread like vnto a Pancake, which being dipped in fleſh-pottage, they eat out of a great Platter not with Spoones but with their fingers onely: and round about each great Platter ſtand to the number of ten ort welue perſons.

The Marriage of Widdowes.

The Circumciſion of their Children.

Likewiſe they make a ſolemne Feaſt at the Circumciſion of their male children, which is vpon the ſeuenth day after their birth; and at this Feaſt the Circumciſor, together with all their Friends and Kinsfolkes is preſent: which being done, each one, according to his abilitie, beſtoweth a Gift vpon the Circumciſor in manner following. Euery man layes his money vpon a Lads face which the Circumciſor brought with him. Whereupon the Lad calling euery one by his name, giueth them thankes in particular: and then the Infant beeing circumciſed, they ſpend that day with as great iollity as a day of Marriage. But at the birth of a Daughter they ſhew not ſo much alacritie.

Among the people of Fez there haue remayned certaine Relikes of Feſtiuall Dayes inſtituted of old by the Chriſtians, whereupon they vſe certaine ceremonies which themſelues vnderſtand not. Vpon Chriſtmas euen they eate a Sallet made of diuers Hearbs: they ſeeth likewiſe that night all kind of Pulſe, which they feede vpon for great dainties. Vpon New-yeeres day the children goe with Maskes and Vizards on their faces to the houſes of Gentlemen and Merchants, and haue Fruites giuen them for ſinging certaine Carols or Songs. When as the Feaſt of Saint Iohn Baptiſt is hallowed among Chriſtians, you ſhall here ſee all about great ſtore of fires made with Straw. And when their childrens teeth begin to grow, they make another feaſt called, according to the Latines, Dentilla. They haue alſo many other Rites and Cuſtomes of Diuining, or Southſaying, the like whereof I haue ſeene at Rome, and in other Cities of Italy: As touching their Feaſts preſcribed by the Mahumetan Law, they are at large ſet downe in that briefe Treatiſe which we haue written concerning the ſame Law.

A booke loſt.

The women hauing by death loſt their husbands, fathers, or any other of their deare friends, aſſemble forth-with a great multitude of their owne Sexe together, who ſtripping themſelues out of their owne attire, put on moſt vile ſack-cloth, and defile their faces with much durt: then call they certaine men clad in womens attire, bringing great foure-ſquare Drums with them, at the noyſe of which Drums the women-mourners ſing a Funerall-ſong, tending as much as may be, to the commendation of the partie deceaſed; and at the end of euery Verſe, the ſaid women vtter moſt hideous ſhrikes and out-cries, tearing their haire, and with much lamentation beating their cheekes and breſts, till they be all-imbrued with bloud: and ſo theſe Heatheniſh ſuperſtitions continue for ſeuen whole dayes together. At which ſeuen daies end they ſurceaſe their mourning for the ſpace of forty daies, and then they begin anew to torment themſelues for three daies together in manner aforeſaid: howbeit, theſe kinds of Obſequies are obſerued only by the baſer people, but the Gentlemen and better ſort behaue themſelues more modeſtly. At this time all the widowes friends come about her to comfort her, and ſend diuers kinds of meats vnto her: for in the mourning-houſe they may dreſſe no meate at all, till the dead corps bee carried forth. The woman her ſelfe that looſeth her husband, father, or brother, neuer goeth forth with the funerall. But how they waſh and burie the dead corps, and what ſuperſtitions they vſe thereabout, you ſhall find recorded in my little Treatiſe aboue mentioned.

In Fez there are diuers moſt excellent Poets, which make Verſes in their owne Mother-tongue: moſt of their Poems and Songs intreate of Loue. Euery yeare they pen certaine Verſes in the commendation of Mahumet, eſpecially vpon his Birth-day: for then betimes in the morning they reſort vnto the Palace of the chiefe Iudge or Gouernour, aſcending his Tribunall ſeate, and from thence reading their Verſes to a great audience of people: and he whoſe Verſes are moſt elegant and pithy, is that yeare proclaimed Prince of the Poets. But when as the Kings of the Marin Family proſpered, they vſed to inuite all the learned men of the Citie vnto their Palace; and honourably entertaining them, they commanded each man in their hearing to recite their Verſes to the commendation of Mahumet: and hee that was in all mens opinions eſteemed the beſt Poet, was rewarded by the King with an hundred Duckats, with an excellent Horſe, with a Woman-ſlaue, and with the Kings owne Robes wherewith hee was then apparelled: all the reſt had fifty Duckats apiece giuen them, ſo that none departed without the Kings liberalitie: but an hundred and thirtie yeares are expired ſince this cuſtome, together with the Maieſtie of the Fezzan Kingdome decayed.

Honor alit artes omneſque incenduntur ad ſtudio gloriâ.

Of Schooles in Fez for the inſtructing of Children, there are almoſt two hundred, euery one of which is in faſhion like a great Hall. The Schoole-maſters teach their Children to write, and reade not out of a Booke, but out of a certaine great Table. Euery day they expound one ſentence of the Alcoran: and hauing read quite through, they begin it againe, repeating it ſo often, till they haue moſt firmely committed the ſame to memorie: which they doe right well in the ſpace of ſeuen yeeres. Then reade they vnto their Scholers ſome part of Orthography: howbeit, both this and the other parts of Grammar are farre more exactly taught in the Colledges, then in theſe triuiall Schooles. The ſaid Schoole-maſters are allowed a very ſmall ſtipend; but when their Boyes haue learned ſome part of the Alcoran, they preſent certaine gifts vnto their Maſter, according to each ones abilitie. Afterward ſo ſoone as any Boy hath perfectly learned the whole Alcoran, his Father inuiteth all his ſonnes Schoole-fellowes vnto a great Banquet: and his ſonne in coſtly apparell rides through the ſtreete vpon a gallant Horſe, which Horſe and apparell the Gouernour of the Royall Citadell is bound to lend him. The reſt of his Schoole-fellowes beeing mounted likewiſe on Horſe-backe accompany him to the Banqueting-houſe, ſinging diuers Songs to the praiſe of God, and of Mahumet. Then are they brought to a moſt ſumptuous Banquet, whereat all the Kinsfolks of the foreſaid Boyes Father are vſually preſent: euery one of whom beſtoweth on the Schoole-maſter ſome ſmall gift, and the Boyes Father giues him a new ſuite of apparell. The ſaid Scholers likewiſe vſe to celebrate a Feaſt vpon the birth-day of Mahumet, and then their Fathers are bound to ſend each man a Torch vnto the Schoole: whereupon euery Boy carrieth a Torch in his hand, ſome of which weigh thirtie pound. Theſe Torches are moſt curiouſly made, being adorned round about with diuers fruits of Waxe, which being lighted betimes in the morning, doe burne till Sun-riſe; in the meane while certaine Singers reſound the prayſes of Mahumet; and ſo ſoone as the Sunne is vp, all their ſolemnitie ceaſeth: this day vſeth to be very gainefull vnto the Schoole-maſters, for they ſell the remnant of the Waxe vpon the Torches for an hundred Duckats, and ſometimes for more. None of them payes any rent for his Schoole: for all their Schooles were built many yeeres agoe, and were freely beſtowed for the training vp of youth. Both in theſe common Schooles, and alſo in the Colledges they haue two dayes of recreation euery weeke, wherein they neither teach nor ſtudie.

The Fortune tellers: Three ſorts of Diuiners in Fez.

Witches.

Fricatrices.

Now let vs ſpeake of the Fortune-tellers and Diuiners, of whom there is a great number, and three kinds. For one ſort vſeth certaine Geomanticall figures. Others powring a drop of Oyle into a viall or glaſſe of water, make the ſaid water to be tranſparent and bright, wherein, as it were in a mirror, they affirme that they ſee huge ſwarmes of Deuils that reſemble an whole Armie, ſome whereof are trauelling, ſome are paſſing ouer a Riuer, and others fighting a Land-battell, whom when the Diuiner ſeeth in quiet, he demandeth ſuch queſtions of them as he is deſirous to be reſolued of; and the Deuils giue them anſwere with beckning, or with ſome geſture of their hands or eyes; ſo inconſiderate and damnable is their credulitie in this behalfe. The foreſaid Glaſſe-viall they will deliuer into childrens hands ſcarce of eight yeeres old, of whom they will aske whether they ſee this or that Deuill. Many of the Citie are ſo beſotted with theſe vanities, that they ſpend great ſums vpon them. The third kind of Diuiners are Women-witches, which are affirmed to haue familiaritie with Deuils: ſome Deuils they call red, ſome white, and ſome blacke Deuils: and when they will tell any mans fortune, they perfume themſelues with certaine Odours, ſaying, That then they poſſeſſe themſelues with that Deuill which they called for: afterward changing their voyce, they faine the Deuill to ſpeake within them: then they which come to enquire, ought with great feare and trembling aske theſe vild and abominable Witches ſuch queſtions as they meane to propound; and laſtly, offering ſome fee vnto the Deuill, they depart. But the wiſer and honeſter ſort of people call theſe women Sahacat, which in Latin ſignifieth Fricatrices, becauſe they haue a damnable cuſtome to commit vnlawfull Venerie among themſelues, which I cannot expreſſe in any modeſter termes. If faire women come vnto them at any time, theſe abominable Witches will burne in luſt towards them, no otherwiſe then luſtie Younkers doe towards young Maides, and will in the Deuils behalfe demand for a reward, that they may lie with them: and ſo by this meanes it often falleth out, that thinking thereby to fulfill the Deuils command they lie with the Witches. Yea, ſome there are, which being allured with the delight of this abominable vice, will deſire the company of theſe Wiches, and faining themſelues to be ſicke, will either call one of the Witches home to them, or wil ſend their husbands for the ſame purpoſe: and ſo the Witches perceiuing how the matter ſtands, will ſay, That the Woman is poſſeſſed with a Deuil, and that ſhe can no way be cured, vnles ſhe be admitted into their ſociety. With theſe words her ſilly husband being perſwaded, doth not only permit her ſo to do, but makes alſo a ſumptuous banquet vnto the damned crew of Witches: which being done, they vſe to dance very ſtrangely at the noyſe of Drums: and ſo the poore man commits his falſe wife to their filthy diſpoſition. Howbeit, ſome there are that will ſoone coniure the Deuill with a good cudgell out of their wiues: others faining themſelues to be poſſeſſed with a Deuill, will deceiue the ſaid Witches, as their wiues haue been deceiued by them.

Among many bad, ſome good Coniurers.

Of the Coniurers, Inchanters, and Iuglers in Fez.

Cabaliſts.

In Fez likewiſe there are a kind of Iuglers, or Coniurers called Muhazzimin, who of all others are reported to be moſt ſpeedie caſters out of Diuels. And becauſe their Negromancie ſometimes taketh effect, it is a wonder to ſee into what reputation they grow thereby: but when they cannot caſt forth a Deuill, they ſay, It is an Airie Spirit. Their manner of adiuring Deuils, is this: Firſt, they draw certaine Characters and Circles vpon an aſh-heape, or ſome other place; then deſcribe they certaine ſignes vpon the hands and fore-head of the partie poſſeſſed, and perfume him after a ſtrange kind of manner. Afterward they make their Inchantment or Coniuration, enquiring of the Deuill, which way, or by what meanes he entred the party, as likewiſe what he is, and by what name he is called; and laſtly, charging him to come forth. Others there are that worke by a certaine Cabaliſticall rule, called Zairagia: this rule is contained in many Writings, for it is thought to be Naturall Magique: neither are there any other Negromancers in all Fez, that will more certainely and truly reſolue a doubtfull queſtion: howbeit, their Art is exceeding difficult, for the Students thereof muſt haue as great skill in Aſtrologie, as in Cabala. My ſelfe in times paſt hauing attained to ſome knowledge in this facultie, continued (I remember) an whole day in deſcribing one figure onely: which kind of figures are deſcribed in manner following. Firſt, they draw many circles within the compaſſe of a great circle: in the firſt circle they make a croſſe, at the foure extremities whereof, they ſet downe the foure quarters of the World, to wit, Eaſt, Weſt, North and South: at each end of one of the ſaid croſſe lines they note either Pole: likewiſe about the circumference of the firſt circle, they paint the foure Elements: then diuide they the ſame circle and the circle following into foure parts, and euery fourth part they diuide into other ſeuen, each one being diſtinguiſhed with certaine great Arabian Characters, ſo that euery Element containeth eight and twenty Characters. In the third circle they ſet downe the ſeuen Planets: in the fourth, the twelue Signes of the Zodiack: in the fifth, the twelue Latine names of the moneths: in the ſixth, the eight and twentie Houſes of the Moone: in the ſeuenth, the three hundred ſixty fiue dayes of the yeare; and about the conuexitie thereof, the foure Cardinall or principall Windes. Then take they one onely letter of the queſtion propounded, multiplying the ſame by all the particulars aforenamed, and the product or ſumme totall they diuide after a certaine manner, placing it in ſome roome, according to the quality of the character, and as the Element requireth wherein the ſaid Character is found without a figure. All which being done, they marke that figure which ſeemeth to agree with the foreſaid number, or ſumme produced, wherewith they proceed as they did with the former, til they haue found eight and twenty Characters, whereof they make one word, and of this word the ſpeech is made that reſolueth the queſtion demanded: this ſpeech is alwaies turned into a verſe of the firſt kind, which the Arabians call Ethauil, conſiſting of eight Stipites, and twelue Chordi, according to the Meeter of the Arabian Tongue, whereof we haue intreated in the laſt part of our Arabian Grammer. And the Verſe conſiſting of thoſe Characters, comprehendeth alwaies a true and infallible anſwer vnto the queſtion propounded, reſoluing firſt that which is demanded, and then expounding the ſenſe of the queſtion it ſelfe. Theſe Practitioners are neuer found to erre, which cauſeth their Art of Cabala to bee had in great admiration: which although it bee accounted Naturall, yet neuer ſaw I any thing that hath more affinitie with ſupernaturall and Diuine knowledge. I remember that I ſaw in a certaine open place of King Abulunan his Colledge in Fez, vpon a floore paued with excellent ſmoothe Marble, the deſcription of a figure. Each ſide of this floore or court was fifty ells long, and yet two third parts thereof were occupied about the figure, and about the things pertaining thereto: three there were that made the deſcription, euery one attending his appointed place, and they were an whole day in ſetting it downe. Another ſuch figure I ſaw at Tunis, drawne by one that was maruelous cunning in the Art, whoſe father had written two volumes of Commentaries or expoſitions vpon the precepts of the ſame Art, wherin whoſoeuer hath exact skill, is moſt highly eſteemed of by all men. I my ſelfe neuer ſaw but three of this Profeſſion, namely, one at Tunis, and two other at Fez: likewiſe I haue ſeene two Expoſitions vpon the precepts of the ſaid Arte, together with a Commentarie of one Margian, father vnto the foreſaid Cabaliſt which I ſaw at Tunis: and another written by Ibnu Caldim the Hiſtorigrapher. And if any were deſirous to ſee the Precepts and Commentaries of that Art, he might doe it with the expence of fiftie Duckats: for ſayling to Tunis, a Towne neere vnto Italy, hee might haue a ſight of all the particulars aforeſaid. I my ſelfe had fit oportunitie of time, and a Teacher that offered to inſtruct me gratis in the ſame Art: howbeit, I thought good not to accept his offer, becauſe the ſaid Art is forbidden and accounted hereticall by the Law of Mahumet: for Mahumets Law affirmeth all kind of Diuinations to be vaine, and that God onely knoweth ſecrets, and things to come: wherefore ſometimes the ſaid Cabaliſts are impriſoned by the Mahumetan Inquiſitors, who ceaſe not to perſecute the Profeſſors of that Art.

Bookes of that Art.

Diuination and Southſaying forbidden by the Law of Mahomet.

Here alſo you may find certaine learned men, which will haue themſelues called Wizards, and Morall Philoſophers. They obſerue certaine Rules which Mahumet neuer preſcribed. By ſome they are accounted Catholique, or true Mahumetans, and by others they are holden for heretiks: howbeit, the greateſt part of the common people reuerence them as if they were Gods, notwithſtanding they commit many things vnlawfull and forbidden by the Mahumetan Law; as namely, whereas the ſaid Law forbiddeth any loue-matters to be expreſſed in any muſicall Ditties, or Songs, theſe Moraliſts affirme the contrary. In the foreſaid Mahumetan Religion are a great number of Rules or Sects, euery of which hath moſt learned Patrons and Protectors. The foreſaid Sect ſprang vp foureſcore yeares after Mahumet, the firſt Author thereof being called Elheſen Ibnu Abilhaſen, and being borne in the Towne of Baſora: this man taught his Diſciples and followers certaine Precepts, but Writings hee left none behind him. About an hundred yeares after there came another notable Doctor of that Sect from Bagaded, called Elharit Ibnu Eſed, who left volumes of Writings vnto his Diſciples. Afterward thoſe that were found to be his followers, were all condemned by the Mahumetan Patriarkes and Lawyers. Howbeit, foureſcore yeares after, that Sect began to reuiue againe vnder a certaine famous Profeſſor, who drew after him many Diſciples, vnto whom he publiſhed his Doctrine. This man at length, and all his followers, were by the Patriarke and Lawyers condemned to die. Which he vnderſtanding, wrote forthwith vnto the Patriarke, requeſting that he might be licenced to diſpute with the Lawyers, as touching his Doctrine, of whom if he were conuinced, he would moſt willingly ſuffer death; otherwiſe that it would be againſt al equity, that ſo many innocents ſhould periſh vpon an vniuſt accuſation. The Patriarke thinking his demand to be reaſonable, condeſcended wholly thereunto. But when the matter came to diſputation, the partie condemned, ſoone put all the Lawyers to ſilence. Which when the Patriarke perceiued, he reuoked the ſentence as vniuſt, and cauſed many Colledges and Monaſteries to be erected for the ſaid partie and his followers. After which time this Sect continued about an hundred yeeres, till the Emperour Malicſach of the Turkiſh race came thither out of Aſia the greater, and deſtroyed all the maintainers thereof. Whereupon ſome of them fled vnto Cairo, and the reſt into Arabia, being diſperſed here and there for the ſpace of twenty yeares, till the reigne of Caſelſah, Nephew vnto Malicſach, Nidam Elmule, one of his Counſellers, and a man of an high ſpirit, being addicted vnto the ſaid Sect, ſo reſtored, erected, and confirmed the ſame, that by the helpe of one Elgazzuli, a moſt learned man (who had written of the ſame argument a notable Worke, diuided into ſeuen parts) he reconciled the Lawyers with the Diſciples of this Sect, conditionally, that the Lawyers ſhould be called Conſeruers of the Prophet Mahumet his Lawes, and the Sectaries Reformers of the ſame. This concord laſted betweene them, till Bagaded was ſacked by the Tartars; which befell in the yeare of the Hegeira 756. at what time thoſe Sectaries ſo increaſed, that they ſwarmed almoſt ouer all Africa and Aſia. Neither would they admit any into their ſocietie, but ſuch as were very learned, and trained vp in all kind of liberall Sciences; to the end they might the better defend their owne opinions, and confute their aduerſaries: but now adayes they admit all kind of rude and ignorant perſons, affirming all ſorts of learning to be needleſſe; for the holy ſpirit (ſay they) reuealeth the knowledge of the truth vnto ſuch as are of a cleane heart; and they alleage many reaſons for the confirmation of this their opinion, though not very forcible. Wherefore deſpiſing their anceſtors Rites, and the ſtrict obſeruations of the Law, they addict themſelues to nought elſe but delights and pleaſures, feaſting often, and ſinging laſciuious Songs. Sometimes they will rend their garments, either alluding thereby to the Verſes that they ſing, or being mooued thereunto by their corrupt and vile diſpoſition, ſaying falſely, That they are then rauiſhed with a fit of diuine loue: but rather impute it to their abundance of meat, and gluttony. For each one of them will deuoure as much meate, as may well ſuffice three. Or (which is more likely) they vtter thoſe paſſionate clamours and out-cries, becauſe they are inflamed with vnlawfull and filthy luſt. For ſometimes it happeneth that ſome one of the principal of them, with all his Scholers and Diſciples, is inuited to the marriage of ſome Gentleman, and at the beginning of the banket they will rehearſe their deuout Orizons and Songs, but ſo ſoone as they are riſen from the Table, the elder of the companie being about to dance, teare their garments: and if any one in the middeſt of their dancing, that hath drunke immoderately, chanceth to fall downe, he is taken vp forthwith by one of the Scholers, and too too laſciuiouſly kiſſed. Whereupon this Prouerbe grew among the people of Fez, The Hermits banquet. Which they vſe in reproch of thoſe Maſters, that make their Scholers their Minions.

Bagdet ſacked by the Tartars.

Of diuers other Rules and Sects, and of the ſuperſtitious credulity of many.

Amongſt theſe Sects there are ſome, that haue not onely a diuers Law, but alſo a different beliefe from the reſidue; whereupon by ſome others they are called Heretikes. Some there are alſo which hold, that a man by good Works, by Faſting, and Abſtinence, may attaine vnto the nature of an Angell, which good Works, Faſtings, &c. doe (ſay they) ſo purge and free the mind from all contagion of euill, that by no meanes it can ſinne any more, though it would neuer ſo faine. Howbeit, they thinke themſelues not capable of this felicitie, before they aſcended thereunto by the degrees of fiftie Diſciplines or Sciences: and although they fall into ſinne before they be come to the fiftieth degree, yet they ſay that God wil not impute that ſinne vnto them. Theſe fellowes indeed in the beginning led a moſt ſtrict life, and do euen macerate and conſume themſelues with faſting: but afterward they giue themſelues to all licentiouſneſſe and pleaſure. They haue alſo a moſt ſeuere forme of liuing ſet downe in foure Bookes, by a certaine learned man of their faction, called Eſſehrauar de Sehrauard, and borne in the Citie of Coraſan. Likewiſe there was another Authour called Ibnul Farid, that deſcribed all their Religion in witty Verſes, which being fraught with Allegories, ſeemed to intreate of nought but Loue: wherefore one Elfargani expounded the ſaid Verſes with a Commentarie, and thereout gathered the Canons and Orders of the Sect, and ſhewed the degrees to the attainement of felicitie. Moreouer, the ſaid Verſes are ſo ſweet and elegant, that the maintainers of this Sect will ſing and repeate none other in their Banquets: for theſe three hundred yeeres no Author hath ſo adorned their language as the ſaid Ibnul. Theſe Sectaries take the Heauens, the Elements, the Planets, and the fixed Starres to be one God, and that no Law nor Religion is erronious: for euery man (ſay they) may lawfully worſhip that which his mind is moſt addicted to worſhip. They thinke that all the knowledge of God was infuſed into one man, whom they call in the language Elcorb; this man, they ſay, was elect by God, and was made equall in knowledge to him. Forty there are among them called all by the name of Elauted, which ſignifieth in our language, a block, or ſtock of a tree: out of this number, when their Elcoth deceaſeth, they create another in his roome, namely, ſeuenty perſons that haue the authority of election committed vnto them. There are likewiſe ſeuen hundred ſixty fiue others (whoſe names I doe not well remember) who are choſen into the ſaid electors roomes, when any of them deceaſe. Theſe ſeuen hundred ſixtie fiue being bound thereunto by a certaine Canon or Rule of their Order, are conſtrained alwaies to goe vnknowne,and they range almoſt all the world ouer in a moſt vile and beggerly habite,ſo that a man would take them for mad men,and eſtranged from all ſenſe of humanitie : for theſe lewde miſcreants vnder pretence of their religion,run like rogues naked and ſauage throughout all Africa,hauing ſo little regard of honeſtie or ſhame,that they will like brute beaſts rauiſh women in publike places ; and yet forſooth the groſſe common people reuerence them as men of wonderfull holineſſe. Great ſwarmes of theſe filthie Vagabonds you may ſee in Tunis,but many more in Egypt,and eſpecially at Alcair, where as in the Market called Bain Elcaſrain, I ſaw one of theſe Villaines with mine owne eyes,in the preſence of much people, defloure a moſt beautifull woman as ſhe was comming forth of the Bath : which being done, the fond people came flocking about the ſaid woman,ſtriuing to touch her garment as a moſt holy thing,ſaying,That the Adulterer was a man of great ſanctitie,and that he did not commit the ſin,but onely ſeemed to commit it : which when the ſilly cuckold her husband vnderſtood,he ſhewed himſelfe thankefull to his falſe God with a ſolemne Banquet,and with liberall giuing of Almes. The Magiſtrates of the Citie would haue puniſhed the Adulterer,but they were in hazard to be ſlaine of the people for their labours,who(as is before ſaid) adore theſe Varlets for Saints, and men of ſingular holineſſe. Other more vilanous acts I ſaw committed by them,which I am aſhamed to report.

Horrible villany,and more horrible blindneſſe.

Likewiſe there is another ſort of men, which wee may fitly call Cabaliſts. Theſe faſt moſt ſtrictly,neither doe they eate the fleſh of any liuing creature, but haue certaine meates and garments allotted vnto them:they rehearſe likewiſe certaine ſet-prayers appointed for euery houre of the day and for the night,according to the varietie of dayes and moneths,and they vſe to carrie about certaine ſquare Tables with characters and numbers engrauen therein. They faine themſelues to haue daily conference with the Angels,of whom they learne(they ſay) the knowledge of all things. They had once a famous Doctor of their Sect, called Boni, who was Author of their Canons,Prayers,and ſquare Tables. Which when I ſaw, mee thought their Profeſſion had more affinitie with Magique then with Cabala. Their Art was diuided into eight parts, whereof the firſt was called Elumba Enormita,that is,the demonſtration of light,the which contained Prayers and Faſtings. The ſecond called Semſul Meharif, that is, the Sunne of Sciences, contained the foreſaid ſquare Tables, together with their vſe and profit. The third part they call Sirru Laſmei Elchuſne ; this part contained a catalogue of thoſe ninetie nine Vertues, which (they ſay)are contained in the names of God, which I remember I ſaw at Rome in the cuſtodie of a certaine Venetian Iew. They haue alſo a certaine other Rule, called Suvach,that is,the Rule of Hermites : the Profeſſors and followers whereof inhabit Woods,and ſolitarie places ; neither haue they any other food,but ſuch as thoſe wild Deſarts will affoord : the conuerſation of theſe Heremites no man is able exactly to deſcribe,becauſe they are eſtranged from all humane ſocietie. But if I ſhould take vpon me to deſcribe the varietie of Mahumetan Sects,I ſhould digreſſe too farre from my preſent purpoſe. He that deſireth to know more of this matter,let him reade ouer the booke of Elefacni, who diſcourſeth at large of the Sects belonging to the Mahumetan Religion,the principall whereof are ſeuentie two, euery one of which defend their opinions to be true and good,and ſuch as a man may attaine ſaluation by. At this day you ſhall find but two principall Sects onely,the one of Leſhari being diſperſed ouer all Africa,Egypt,Syria,Arabia, and Turkie : the other of Imamia,which is authorized throughout the whole Kingdome of Perſia,and in certaine Townes of Coraſan ; and this Sect the great Sophi of Perſia maintaineth, inſomuch that all Aſia had like to been deſtroyed thereabout. For whereas before they followed the ſect of Leſhari,the great Sophi by force of Armes eſtabliſhed his owne of Imamia : and yet one onely Sect ſtretcheth ouer all the Mahumetans Dominions.

Moreouer,in the Citie of Fez there are certaine men called Elcaneſin, who ſuppoſin gto finde treaſure vnder the foundations of old houſes,doe perpetually ſearch and delue. Theſe groſſe fellowes vſe to reſort vnto certaine dennes and caues without the Citie-walles, certainely perſwading themſelues,that when the Romans were chaſed out of Africa, and driuen into Batica or Granada in Spaine,they hid great abundance of treaſure in the bowels of the earth, which they could not carry with them,and ſo enchanted the ſame by Art-Magique,that it can by no meanes be attained vnto but by the ſame Art ; wherefore they ſeeke vnto Inchanters to teach them the Art of digging vp the ſaid treaſures. Some of them there are that will ſtedfaſtly affirme, that they ſaw Gold in this or that Caue : others,that they ſaw Siluer, but could not digge it out, by reaſon that they were deſtitute of Perfumes and Enchantments fit for the purpoſe ; ſo that being ſeduced with this vaine opinion,and deeply deluing into the earth,they turne vpſide-downe the foundations of Houſes and Sepulchers,and ſometimes they proceede in this manner tenne or twelue dayes iourney from Fez : yea,ſo fond they are,and ſo beſotted, that they eſteeme thoſe Bookes that profeſſe the Art of digging of Gold,as diuine Oracles. Before my departure from Fez,theſe fantaſticall people had choſen them a Conſull and getting licence of certaine owners to digge their grounds,when they had digged as much as they thought good, they paid the ſaid owners for all dammages committed.

Of ſuch as ſearch for treaſures in Fez.

In this Citie likewiſe there are great ſtore of Alchymiſts,which are mightily addicted to that vaine practice : they are moſt baſe fellowes, and contaminate themſelues with the ſteame of Sulphur,

Of the Alchymiſts of Fez.

Geber an Alchymie writer.

A Booke written by Iohn Leo of the liues of the Arabian Philoſophers.

Sulphur, & other ſtinking ſmels. In the euening they vſe to aſſemble themſelues at the great Temple, where they diſpute of their falſe opinions. They haue of their Arte of Alchymie many Bookes written by learned men, amongſt which one Geber is of principall account, who liued an hundred yeeres after Mahumet, and being a Greeke borne, is ſaid to haue renounced his owne Religion. This Geber his workes and all his precepts are full of Allegories or darke borrowed ſpeeches. Likewiſe they haue another Author, that wrote an huge Volume of the ſame Arte, intituled by the name of Attogrehi: this man was ſecretary vnto the Soldan of Bagaded, of whom we haue written in the liues of the Arabian Philoſophers. Alſo the Songs or Articles of the ſaid Science were written by one Mugairibi of Granada, whereupon a moſt learned Mamuluch of Damaſco wrote a Commentary: yet ſo, that a man may much more eaſily vnderſtand the Text then the expoſition thereof. Of Alchymiſts here are two ſorts; whereof the one ſeeke for the Eliſir, that is, the matter which coloureth braſſe and other Metals; and the other are conuerſant about multiplication of the quantities of Metals, whereby they may conueniently temper the ſame. But their chiefeſt drift is to coine counterfeit money; for which cauſe you ſhall ſee moſt of them in Fez with their hands cut off.

Charmers and Inchanters of Snakes.

In this City likewiſe there is a great ſwarme of baſe people, ſuch as there Italians commonly call Ciurmatori: theſe ſing fooliſh Songs & Rimes in all the ſtreets of the City, & broching meere trifles with the Muſicke of Drums, Harpes, and Citterns, they ſell vnto the rude people certaine ſcrowles or briefe Charmes in ſtead of preſeruatiues. Vnto theſe you may adde another kinde of reffuſe people of one Family and diſpoſition with the former, who carry dauncing Apes vp and downe, and haue their Neckes and Armes all entwined with crawling Snakes. Theſe alſo profeſſe Geomancy, and perſwade women that they can foretell them their fortune. Likewiſe they carry ſtone-horſes about with them, which for a certaine Fee, they will let others haue to couer their Mares. Their Gentlemen are very ſtately and high minded, and will haue little or no familiarity at all with the Citizens: ſo likewiſe the Doctors and Iudges of principall account will admit but few vnto their acquaintance. This City it ſelfe is moſt beautiful and right commodiouſly ſituate; where albeit in winter time the ſtreets are ſo mirie, that you cannot walke in them without ſtartups, yet they let paſſe ſuch abundance of water out of their Conduits, that all the filth is waſhed cleane away. Where Conduits are wanting, they carry all the durt in Carts vnto the next part of the Riuer.

A Deſcription of the Suburbs without the foreſaid City of Fez.

Without the wals of this City Weſtward ſtandeth a Suburbe containing almoſt fiue hundreth Families, the houſes whereof are but meane, and the Inhabitants baſe, as namely, diuers of Camels, Water-bearers, and Cleauers of Wood for the Kings Palace. Yet heere you may finde diuers ſhops, and all kinds of Artificers. Heere likewiſe dwell all the Charmers and Roguiſh Minſtrels before named; as alſo great ſwarmes of ſluttiſh and filthie harlots. In the principall ſtreet of this Suburbe, you ſhall find certaine Caues moſt Artificially hewen out of excellent Marble, wherein the Noble men of Fez were wont to lay vp their Corne: for the leaſt of them will containe more then a thouſand Meaſures of Corne, there being aboue an hundreth and fifty of them in all, but now they lie waſte and open, inſomuch that diuers fall into them at vnawares, for which cauſe their brims are inuironed with wals. Heere euery one may play the Vintner and the Bawd; ſo that this Suburbe may iuſtly be called the ſinke of Fez. From the twentieth houre you ſhall ſee none at all in their ſhops: for then euery man runs to the Tauerne to diſport, to ſpend riotouſly, and to be drunken. Another Suburbe there is allotted vnto the Lepers, of whom there are two hundreth Families: theſe leprous perſons haue a Gouernour, which gathereth certaine yeerely Reuenues from the Noble men, and taketh ſuch care of the ſaid Lepers, that they want no neceſſary thing. He is bound by his Office to diſcharge the City of all leprous perſons, and to compell all ſuch as hee vnderſtands to be infected with that diſeaſe, to depart into the foreſaid Suburbs. If any Leper chanceth to die without iſſue, part of his goods are imployed to the common benefite of the Lepers, and part fall to the Gouernours ſhare: but if he hath children, they inioy his goods.

The habitation of Lepers in Fez and their Gouernour.

A Deſcription of the common place of buriall without the City.

Many fields there are without the City, which haue beene giuen by certaine Noblemen for the buriall of the dead. Vpon their Sepulchers for the moſt part they lay a long three-ſquare ſtone. When any Noble man or any principall Citizen deceaſeth, they lay one ſtone ouer his head, and another ouer his feet, whereon vſed to be engrauen ſome Epitaph, with the day and yeere when the party deceaſed. I my ſelfe beſtowed much labour in gathering of Epitaphs, which I ſaw both about Fez and in other places of Barbary; all which being ſet downe in a Booke, I gaue vnto the Kings Brother. The manner of their Epitaphs is diuers, ſome tending to conſolation, and others to ſorrow.

The Sepulchers of the Kings of Fez.

Northward of the City vpon a certaine high Hill ſtands a Palace, wherein are the Monuments of diuers Marin Kings, being moſt Artificially hewen out of Marble with Epitaphs vpon them, ſo that I cannot condignely expreſſe the Maieſtie and Beauty thereof.

New Fez.

King Iacob the Founder diuided New Fez into three parts, whereof the firſt contained his Royall Palace, and diuers Noblemens houſes, vnto euery one of which he allotted a moſt pleaſant Garden. Not farre from his Palace he built a moſt ſtately and ſumptuous Temple. In another ther part of this Citie hee built a large and faire Stable for the Kings Horſes to ſtand in. Then alſo he cauſed other Palaces to be erected for his Captaines and principall Courtiers. From the Weſt gate to the Eaſt he appointed the Market place, the diſtance betweene which Gates is a mile and an halfe, and on both ſides he placed Artificers and Merchants ſhops.

Gold-ſmiths.

In Fez, neither Ring nor any other Iewell or Commoditie can bee made of Siluer or Gold, before the Metall be ſealed, for the Offenders are moſt ſeuerely puniſhed. And the Mettall being ſealed, whatſoeuer is made thereof is weighed as if it were money. The greateſt part of Gold-ſmiths dwelling in new Fez are Iewes, who carry their Veſſels of Gold and Siluer vnto a certaine place of old Fez, neere vnto the Grocers ſhops, and there ſell them. For in olde Fez neither Gold nor Siluer is coyned, nor any Mahumetans are ſuffered to bee Gold-ſmiths, becauſe they haue Vſurers among them, which will ſell any piece of wrought Siluer or Gold dearer then the waight requireth; albeit the ſame priuiledge is by the Gouernours of the Citie granted vnto the Iewes. Some there are alſo that onely make Plate for the Citizens, who are payed hire onely for their worke. That part of the Citie which the Kings Attendants or Guard once poſſeſſed, is now inhabited by Iewes: for now a dayes the Kings vſe no ſuch Guard.

Iewes.

The Iewes indeed firſt dwelt in old Fez, but vpon the death of a certaine King they were all robbed by the Moores: whereupon King Abuſabid cauſed them to remooue into new Fez, and by that meanes doubled their yearely Tribute. They therefore euen till this day doe occupie a long ſtreet in the ſaid new Citie, wherein they haue their Shoppes and Synagogues, and their number is maruellouſly increaſed euer ſince they were driuen out of Spaine. Theſe Iewes are had in great contempt by all men, neyther are any of them permitted to weare ſhooes, but they make them certaine Sookes of Sea-ruſhes. On their heads they weare a blacke * Dulipan, and if any will goe in a Cap, he muſt faſten a Red cloth thereunto. They pay vnto the King of Fez monethly foure hundred Duckats.

Their contempt.

* Or Turbant.

At length, within the ſpace of an hundred and forty yeares this new Citie was enuironed with moſt impregnable wals, and adorned with Temples, Colledges, Palaces, and other ſuch building as ſerue to beautifie a Citie, ſo that I thinke there was more beſtowed in garniſhing of the Citie, then in building of the wals. Without the Citie-wals are built many huge Wheeles or Engins, for the conuaying of Riuer-water ouer the ſaid wals into Ciſternes, from whence it is conuayed in certayne Channels and Pipes vnto the Temples, Gardens, and Palaces. The ſaid Wheeles were built not fully an hundred yeares paſt, before which time water was brought vnto the Citie by a certayne Conduit, from a Fountayne ten miles diſtant. Of which artificiall Conduit a certaine Genoueſe, being then in great fauour with the King, is reported to haue beene the Author: but the Wheeles (they ſay) were inuented by a Spaniard: and in them there is maruellous cunning Workmanſhip: for to the conuayance of ſo huge a quantitie of water, each Wheele is turned about but foure and twentie times onely in a day and a night. To conclude, here are but few Gentlemen in this Citie, except ſuch as attend vpon the Court, for the reſidue are baſe and Mechanicall people: but ſuch as carry any ſhew of honeſtie, doe ſo hate and diſdayne the Kings Courtiers and Gentlemen, that they will by no meanes vouchſafe to marrie their Daughters vnto them.

Engins for the conuayance of water.

Amongſt all the Princes of Africa, I neuer read of any that was created by the common ſuffrages and conſent of the people vnto his Kingdome or Princedome, or that was called from any ſtrange Prouince or Citie to beare rule. Alſo by the Law of Mahumet no man may beare any Secular Authoritie, which may be called lawfull, ſaue onely the Mahumetan Patriarkes and Prelates: howbeit the ſaid Patriarkes Authoritie decreaſing daily more and more, the Ring-leaders of ſuch people as ranged vp and downe the Deſarts, began to inuade places inhabited and ciuilized, and by force of Armes, againſt Mahumets Law, and maugre his Prelates, to ordayne ſundry Princes: As for example in the Eaſt, whereas the Turkes, Cordians, and Tartars, haue vſurped dominion ouer ſuch as were not able to repell them. So likewiſe in Weſt parts firſt the Families of Zeneta and Luntuna, then the ſeditious Mahumetan Preachers, and afterward the Family of Marin got the vpper hand. Howbeit, the Family of Luntuna is reported to haue ayded the Weſterne Regions, and to haue releaſed them from the furie of the ſeditious Heretikes, wherein they ſhewed themſelues Friends and not Enemies: but afterward their tyranny began to ſhew it ſelfe. And this is the reaſon why they doe not now a dayes attayne vnto Gouernment by Hereditarie Succeſſion or by Election of the people, or of the Nobilitie.

The faſhions and cuſtomes vſed in the Kings Court.

No Electiue Princes in Africa, choſen by the people.

No Rulers Mahumetan but Prelates.

But the Prince himſelfe when he feeles death ſeazing vpon him, calleth about him all his Peeres and Nobles, and bindeth them by Oath, to eſtabliſh his Sonne, Brother, or any other whom he moſt fauoureth, in his Kingdome. But they after the Princes deceaſe neglecting their Oath, will chooſe any other whom they liſt. And this is ordinarily the Election of the King of Fez who, ſo ſoone as he is proclaymed King, chooſeth forth-with ſome one of his Nobles to be his Chiefe Counſellour, and on him he beſtoweth the third part of all his Kingly Reuenues. Then chooſeth another to be his Secretarie, Treaſuror, and High Steward of his Houſhold. Then is created the Captaine of the Horſemen appointed for the Kings Guard, and theſe Horſemen with their Horſes liue moſt commonly in the fields.

This was before the Xeriffe Family preuayled.

The manner of chooſing Officers in the Court of Fez.

Laſtly, he appointeth a new Gouernour ouer euery Citie, vnto whom all the Tributes and Reuenues of the ſame place redound, with condition that as often as any warres betyde, hee ſhall maintayne a certayne company of Horſes to the Kings ſeruice. After a while alſo hee placeth certayne Deputies and Commiſſioners ouer his people inhabiting the Mountaynes, and ouer the Arabians ſubiect vnto him. The Gouernours of Cities diuerſly adminiſter Iuſtice, according to the cuſtome of the place. Some there are alſo appointed by the King to collect all the Tributes and Reuenues of his Kingdome, and duly to pay the ſame vnto him. Likewiſe there are others choſen, whom they call in their Language, Keepers or Guardians, and vnto euery one of theſe the King giueth ſome Caſtle or Village, whereby hee may procure his owne mayntenance, and bee able to ſerue the King in time of warre.

Moreouer, the King of Fez mayntayneth a Troupe of Light Horſemen, who ſo long as they ſerue the King in his Campe, haue their Dyet allowed them out of the Kings Prouiſion: but in time of peace, he findeth them Corne, Butter, and pouldered fleſh for the whole yeare, but money they haue very ſeldome. Once a yeare they are apparelled at the Kings coſt; neither doe they prouide for their Horſes either within the Citie or without, for the King furniſheth them with all neceſſaries. Thoſe that giue attendance to their Horſes are Chriſtian Captiues, which go ſhackled in great Chaines and Fetters. But when the Armie remooueth any whither, the ſaid Chriſtians are carryed vpon Camels backes. Another Officer there is that giueth attendance onely to the Camels, aſſigning certaine Paſtures vnto the Heardſmen, and diuiding fields among them, and making ſuch prouiſion for the Kings Camels, as himſelfe ſhall thinke expedient. Each Camel-driuer hath two Camels, which are laden with the Kings Furniture, according to the appointment of the Gouernour. Likewiſe the King hath a certaine Purueyor or Steward, whoſe office is to prouide, keepe, and diſtribute Corne both to the Kings Houſhold and to his Army. This man in time of warre hath ten or twelue Tents to lay vp Corne in, and euery day with change of Camels he ſendeth for new Corne, leaſt the Army ſhould be vnprouided of victuals: he hath alſo Cookes at his command.

Moreouer, there is a Gouernour, or Maſter Groome of the Stables, who prouideth for the Kings Horſes, Mules, and Camels, and is furniſhed with all neceſſaries by the Steward. There is another alſo appointed, Ouer-ſeer of the Corne, whoſe dutie it is to prouide Barley and other Prouender for the beaſts: and this man hath his Scribes and Notaries about him, who diligently ſet downe all particular expenſes, for they muſt giue vp a perfect account vnto the chiefe Steward. They haue alſo a certaine Captaine ouer fiftie Horſemen, which Horſemen may well bee called Purſuiuants, for they are ſent by the Secretarie in the Kings name to doe his buſineſſe. Likewiſe the Fezzan King hath another Captaine of great name, being as it were, Gouernour of his Guard, who in the Kings name, may compell the Iudges to doe Iuſtice, and to put their ſentences in execution. This mans authoritie is ſo great, that ſometimes he may commit principall Noblemen to Ward, and may ſeuerely puniſh them, according to the Kings commandement.

Moreouer, the ſaid King hath a moſt truſty Chancelor, who keepeth the great Seale, and writeth and ſigneth the Kings Letters. He hath alſo a great number of Footmen, the Gouernour of whom accepteth and diſmiſſeth whom hee thinkes good, and giueth to euery one wages according to his agilitie and deſert. And whenſoeuer the King commeth in place of Iudgement, the ſaid Gouernour alwayes attendeth vpon him, and is in a manner his High Chamberlaine. Alſo there is another that taketh charge of the Carriages and Baggage of the Armie, and cauſeth the Tents of the Light Horſemen to be carryed vp and downe on Mules, and the Tents of the other Souldiers on Camels. There are likewiſe a Company of Enſigne-bearers, who in marching on a Iourney carry their Colours wrapped vp: but he that goeth before the Armie hath his Banner diſplayed, and of a great height. And euery one of the ſaid Standard-bearers knoweth moſt exactly alwayes, fords of Riuers, and paſſages thorow Woods, wherefore they are for the moſt part appointed to guide the Army.

The Drummers (of whom there are great ſtore in the Kings Hoſt) play vpon certayne Drums of Braſſe as bigge as a great Kettle, the lower part whereof is narrow, and the vpper broad, being couered with a skinne. Theſe Drummers ride on Horſeback, hauing alwayes on the one ſide of their Horſes a great waight hanging downe, to counterpoize the heauineſſe of their Drums on the other ſide. They are allowed moſt ſwift Horſes, becauſe the Moores account it a great diſgrace to looſe a Drumme. The ſaid Drummes make ſuch a loude and horrible noyſe, that they are not onely heard a farre off, but alſo ſtrike exceeding terrour both vpon men and Horſes, and they are beaten onely with a Bulſ-pizzle. The Muſicians are not maintayned at the Kings charge, for the Cities are bound at their coſts to ſend a certaine number of them to the warres, who, according to their demeanour in the warres, are admitted or not admitted vnto the Kings Table. This King hath alſo a certaine Maſter of Ceremonies, who ſitteth at his feet in the Senate Houſe, and commandeth each man to ſit downe, and to ſpeake according to his dignitie.

All the Mayde ſeruants in the Kings Family are Negro-ſlaues, which are partly Chamberlaines, and partly Wayting Maydes. And yet his Queene is alwayes of a white skinne. Likewiſe wiſe in the King of Fez his Court are certaine Chriſtian Captiues, being partly Spaniſh, and partly Portugall women, who are moſt circumſpectly kept by certaine Eunuches, that are Negro ſlaues.

The King of Fez his Reuenues then ſmal

The King of Fez hath very large Dominions, but his Reuenues are ſmall, to wit, ſcarce three hundreth thouſand Duckats, the fift part whereof redoundeth not to the King: for the remainder is diuided into ſundry portions, as wee haue before ſignified. Yea, the greater part of the ſaid Reuenues is payd in Corne, Cattle, Oyle and Butter, all which yeeld but ſmall ſtore of money. In ſome place they pay a Duckat and one fourth part, Tribute for euery Acre, but in other places a whole Family payeth but ſo much. In ſome other Regions each man aboue fifteene yeares of age payeth as much Tribute alſo. Neither are the people of this great Citie more vexed with any thing then with paying of their Tributes and Impoſitions. Heere alſo is to be noted, that the Mahumetan Gouernours (the Prieſts onely excepted) may not exact greater Reuenues then thoſe that Mahumet hath allotted vnto them, namely, of euery of their ſubiects which poſſeſſeth an hundred Duckats in ready money, they are to haue two Duckats and an halfe for yeerely Tribute.

Tribute how much.

Tithes paid to Mahumetan Princes, becauſe they were Prieſts, and by his law none other.

Euery husbandman likewiſe is bound to pay for Tribute the tenth part of all his Corne. And all the ſaid Tributes he appointed to be paid vnto the Patriarke, who ſhould beſtow that which was ſuperfluous for the Prince to haue, vpon common vſes; namely, for the releeuing of poore impotent people and widowes, and for maintaining of warres againſt the enemie. But ſince the Patriarkes began to decay, the Princes (as we haue before-ſaid) exerciſed tyranny. For it was not ſufficient for them to exact all the forenamed Tributes, and riotouſly to conſume the ſame, but alſo to vrge people vnto greater contributions; ſo that all the Inhabitants of Africa are ſo oppreſſed with daily exactions, that they haue ſcarcely wherewithall to feed and apparell themſelues: for which cauſe there is almoſt no man of learning or honeſty, that will ſeeke any acquaintance with Courtiers, or will inuite them to his Table, or accept any gifts (bee they neuer ſo pretious) at their hands: thinking that whatſoeuer goods they haue, are gotten by theft and bribery.

Note.

The King of Fez his Guard.

How the King of Fez rideth on Progreſſe.

* Or kinſ-folke.

The King of Fez continually maintaineth ſixe thouſand Horſemen, fiue hundreth Croſſebowes, and as many Harquebuſiers, being at all aſſayes prepared for the warres, who in time of peace, when the King goeth on Progreſſe, lie within a mile of his perſon: for being at home in Fez, he needeth not ſo ſtrong a Guard. When he wageth warre againſt the Arabians that bee his enemies, becauſe the fore-named Gariſon is not ſufficient, he requireth ayde of the Arabians his Subiects, who at their owne coſts find him a great army of men better trained to the wars, then his owne Souldiers before-mentioned. The pompe and Ceremonies of this King are but meane, neither doth he willingly vſe them, but onely vpon Feſtiuall dayes, and when meere neceſſitie requireth. When the King is to ride foorth, the maſter of Ceremonies ſignifieth ſo much vnto certaine Herbengers or Poſtes, whereupon the Herbengers giue notice thereof vnto the Kings * Parents, vnto his Nobilitie, his Senators, Captaines, Guardians, and Gentlemen, who preſently arrange themſelues before the Palace gate. At the Kings comming foorth of the Palace, the Herbengers appoint vnto each man his place and order of riding. Firſt and fore-moſt go the Standard-bearers, next the Drummers, then followeth the chiefe Groome of the Stable with his ſeruants and family; after him comes the Kings penſioners, his Guard, his maſter of Ceremonies, his Secretaries, his Treaſurer, and laſt of all his chiefe Iudge and his Captaine Generall, at length comes the King accompanied with his principall Counſeller, or with ſome other great Peere. Before the King alſo ride certaine Officers belonging to his perſon, whereof one carries his Sword-royall, another his Shield, and the third his Croſſe-bow. On each ſide of him march his Foot-men, one carrying a payre of Stirups, another the Kings Partizan, the third a couering for his Saddle, and the fourth a halter for his horſe. And ſo ſoone as the King is diſmounted, they foorthwith couer the Saddle, and put the foreſaid halter vpon his Horſe-head. Likewiſe there is another footman that carrieth the Kings Pantofles moſt Artificially wrought. After the King followeth the Captaine of the footmen, then the Eunuches, the Kings Family, the light Horſemen, and laſt of all the Croſſe-bowes and Harquebuſiers. The apparell of the King is then very moderate and plaine: inſomuch that a man knew him not, he would thinke him to be abſent: for the attendants be farre more ſumptuouſly attired. Moreouer no Mahumetan King or Prince may weare a Crowne, Diademne, or any ſuch like ornament vpon his head, for that is forbidden by the law of Mahumet. When the King lyeth with his army in the fields, firſt his owne great tent is pitched in a foure-ſquare forme like vnto a Caſtle, each ſide of the ſaid ſquare being fifty elles in length. At euery of the foure corners ſtandeth a little ſharpe Turret made of Cloth, and a gallant Spheare on the top which gliſtereth like gold. This Royall Pauilion hath foure gates, euery one of which is kept by Eunuches. Within the ſaid Pauilion are contained diuers other tents, among which is the Kings lodging, being framed in ſuch wiſe, that it may eaſily bee remooued from place to place. Next vnto it ſtand the Tents of the Noblemen, and of ſuch as are moſt in the Kings fauour; then the lodgings of the principall Guard being made of Goats-skinnes, after the Arabian faſhion; and in the midſt of all ſtands the Kings Kitchin and his Pantry. Not farre from hence the light Horſemen haue their abode, who all of them are victualled out of the Kings Store-houſe, notwithſtanding their attire be very baſe. Next of all are the Stables, wherein their Horſes are maruelous well tended. Without this circuit keepe ſuch as carry the Tents and the Kings Furniture from place to place. Here are alſo Butchers, Victualers, and ſuch like, All Merchants and Artificers that reſort hither, take vp their abode next vnto the Tent-carriers: ſo that the Kings Pauillion is pitched like a ſtrong City, for it is ſo enuironed with the lodgings of the Guard, and with other Tents adioyning, that there is very difficult paſſage to the King. Round about the ſaid Royall Pauillion, there are certaine appointed to watch and ward all night long, howbeit, they are baſe and vnarmed people. In like ſort there is a watch kept about the Stables, but ſometime ſo negligently, that not onely ſome Horſes haue beene ſtolne, but there haue beene found enemies in the Kings owne Pauillion, that came to murther him. The King liueth the greateſt part of the yeere in the fields, both for the ſafegard of his Kingdome, and alſo that he may keepe his Arabian ſubiects in obedience, and ſometimes he recreateth himſelfe with hunting, and ſometime with playing at Cheſſe. I know right well how tedious I haue beene in the deſcription of this Citie: but becauſe it is the Metropolitan not onely of Barbarie, but of Africa, I thought good moſt particularly to decypher euery parcell and member thereof.

Then began Xeriffe to peep forth, which after obtained Fez and Maroco, &c. and Maroco the principall Citie.

Mount Zarhon.

This Mountaine beginneth from the Plaine of Eſais lying ten miles diſtant from the Citie of Fez; Weſtward it extendeth thirty miles, and is almoſt ten miles broad. This Mountaine is all couered with waſte and Deſart woods, being otherwiſe ſtill ſtored with Oliues. In this Mountaine there are of Sheepe-folds and Caſtles, to the number of fiftie, and the Inhabitants are very wealthy, for it ſtandeth betweene two flouriſhing Cities, that is to ſay, Fez on the Eaſt, and Mecnaſe on the Weſt. The women weaue Woollen cloth, according to the cuſtome of that place, and are adorned with many ſiluer Rings and Bracelets. The men of this Mountaine are moſt valiant, and are much giuen to purſue and take Lyons, whereof they ſend great ſtore vnto the King of Fez. And the King hunteth the ſaid Lyons in manner following: In a large field, there are certaine little Cels made, being ſo high, that a man may ſtand vpright in them: each one of theſe Cells is ſhut faſt with a little doore; and containe within euery of them an armed man, who opening the doore preſents himſelfe to the view of the Lyon: then the Lyon ſeeing the doores open, comes running toward them with great furie, but the doores being ſhut againe, he waxeth more furious then before: then bring they foorth a Bull to combate with the Lyon, who enter a fierce and bloody conflict, wherein if the Bull kill the Lyon, that dayes ſport is at an end; but if the Lyon get the victory, then all the armed men, being ordinarily twelue, leape foorth of their Cels, and inuade the Lyon: each one of them hauing a Iauelin with a pike of a cubite and a halfe long. And if theſe armed men ſeeme to be too hard for the Lyon, the King cauſeth their number to be diminiſhed: but perceiuing them too weake, the King with his company from a certaine high place, where he ſtandeth to behold the ſport, kill the Lyon with their Croſſe-bowes. And oftentimes it falleth out, that before the Lyon be ſlaine, ſome one of the men dies for it, the reſidue being ſore wounded. The reward of thoſe that encounter the Lyon is ten Ducats apeece, and a new garment: neither are any admitted vnto this combat but men of redoubted valour, and ſuch as come from Mount Zelagi: but thoſe that take the Lyons firſt are inhabitants of Mount Zarhon.

Hunting of Lyons vſed by the King of Fez.

Fight betwixt a Lyon and a Bull.

Gualili a Towne of Mount Zarhon.

This Towne when the Sciſmatike Idris came into this Region, he began to repaire Gualili, and to replant it ſo with Inhabitants, that within ſhort time it grew very populous: howbeit after his deceaſe it was neglected by his ſonne, being wholy addicted (as is before ſaid) vnto the building of Fez. And yet Idris lieth buried in this Towne, whoſe Sepulchre is viſited with great reuerence almoſt by all the people of Barbary, for he is as highly eſteemed as if he had been ſome Patriarke, becauſe he was of the linage of Mahumet.

The Towne called Pietra Roſſa, or the Red Sea.

Tame Lyons.

Pietra Roſſa, is a ſmall Towne built by the Romanes vpon the ſide of the foreſaid Mountaine, beeing ſo neere the Forreſt, that the Lyons will come daily into the Towne and gather vp bones in the ſtreets, yea, they are ſo tame and familiar, that neither women nor children are afraid of them.

The Caſtle of Shame.

Shame is an ancient Caſtle built at the foot of the ſaid Mountaine neere vnto the high way from Fez to Mecnaſe: and it was called by this name, becauſe the Inhabitants are moſt ſhamefully addicted to couetiſe, like vnto all the people thereabouts. In old time it is reported that a certaine King paſſed by, whom the Inhabitants of the Caſtle inuited to dinner, requeſting him to change the ignominious name of the place: which when the King had condeſcended vnto, they cauſed, according to their cuſtome, a company of Rams to be ſlaine, and certaine bladders and veſſels to be filled with milke, to ſerue for the Kings breakfaſt the morrow after. But becauſe the ſaid veſſels were very large, they conſulted together to put in halfe milke and halfe water, hoping that the King ſhould neuer perceiue it. The day following, albeit the King was not very haſty of his breakfaſt, yet, his ſeruants vrging him thereunto, he perceiued the milke to be halfe water; whereat ſmiling, he ſaid: Friends, that which nature hath giuen, no man can take away.

Naturam expellas furca licet, &c.

The occaſion of a prouerbe.

About Agla keepe great ſtore of Lyons, but they are by nature ſo fearefull, that they will flee at the voyce of a child: hence commeth the Prouerbe ſo rife in Fez, A Lyon of Agla, which they apply vnto ſuch a one as maketh great bragges, and is but a meere Daſtard.

A deſcription of the Citie of Arzilla.

The great Citie of Arzilla called by the Africans Azella, was built by the Romanes vpon the Ocean Sea ſhoare, about ſeuentie miles from the Streights of Gibraltar, and an hundred and fortie miles from Fez. It was in times paſt ſubiect vnto the Prince of Septa or Ceuta, who was tributary to the Romanes, and was afterward taken by the Gothes, who eſtabliſhed the ſaid Prince in his former Gouernment: but the Mahumetans wanne it in the yeere of the Hegeira 94. and held the ſame for two hundred and twenty yeeres, till ſuch time as the Engliſh at the perſwaſion of the Gothes beſieged it with an huge Armie; and albeit the Gothes were Enemies to the Engliſh, becauſe themſelues were Chriſtians, and the Engliſh worſhippers of Idols, yet the Gothes perſwaded them to this attempt, hoping by that meanes to draw the Mahumetans out of Europe. The Engliſh hauing good ſucceſſe tooke the Citie, and ſo waſted it with fire and ſword, that ſcarce one Citizen eſcaped, ſo that it remayned almoſt thirtie yeeres void of Inhabitants.

The taking of Arzilla by the Engliſh.

Theſe ſeeme Danes which infeſted England, Germanie, France and Italie in thoſe times: and comming from England about that time beaten by Alfred, &c. were called Engliſh.

But afterward when the Mahumetan Patriarkes of Cordoua were Lords of Mauritania, it was againe re-edified, and by all meanes augmented, enriched and fortified. The Inhabitants were rich, learned, and valiant. The fields adiacent yeeld Graine and Pulſe of all ſorts in great abundance, but becauſe the Towne ſtandeth almoſt ten miles from the Mountaynes, it ſuſtayneth great want of wood; howbeit, they haue coles brought them from Harais, as is aforeſaid. In the yeere of the Hegeira 882. this Citie was ſuddenly ſurprized and taken by the Portugals, and all the Inhabitants carried priſoners into Portugall, amongſt whom was Mahumet the King of Fez that now is, who together with his Siſter being both children of ſeuen yeeres old, were taken and led captiue. For the Father of this Mahumet ſeeing the Prouince of Habat reuolt from him, went and dwelt at Arzilla, the very ſame time, when Eſſerif a great Citizen of Fez, hauing ſlaine Habdulac the laſt King of the Marin Family, was by the fauour of the people aduanced vnto the Fezzan Kingdom. Afterward, one Saic Abra being pricked forward with ambition, went about to conquer the Citie of Fez, and to make himſelfe King; howbeit, Eſſerif by the aduiſe of a certaine Counſellor of his, being Couſin vnto Saic, vanquiſhed and put to flight the ſaid Saic to his great diſgrace.

Habdulac the laſt King of the Marin Family.

Moreouer, while Eſſerif had ſent his ſaid Counſellor to Temeſna, to pacifie the people of that Prouince being about to rebell, Saic returned, and hauing for one whole yeere beſieged new Fez with eight thouſand men, at length by Treaſon of the Towneſmen hee eaſily wanne it, and compelled Eſſerif with all his Family, to flye vnto the Kingdome of Tunis. The ſame time therefore that Saic beſieged Fez, the King of Portugall (as is aforeſaid) ſending a Fleet into Africa, took Arzilla, and then was the King of Fez that now is with his yong Siſter, carryed captiue into Portugall, where he remayned ſeuen yeeres, in which ſpace hee learned the Portugall Language moſt exactly. At length, with a great ſumme of money his Father ranſomed him out of Portugall, who afterward being aduanced to the Kingdome, was by reaſon of his long continuance in Portugall, called King Mahumet the Portugall. This King afterward attempted very often to be auenged of the Portugals, and to recouer Arzilla. Wherefore ſuddenly encountring the ſaid Citie, he beate downe a great part of the wall, and entring the breach, ſet all the captiue Moores at libertie. The Chriſtians retyred into the Caſtle, promiſing within two dayes to yeeld vnto the King. But Pedro de Nauarro comming in the mean ſeaſon with a great Fleet, they compelled the King wth continuall diſcharging of their Ordnance, not onely to relinquiſh the Citie, but alſo to depart quite away with his whole Armie: afterward it was ſo fortified on all ſides by the Portugals, that the ſaid King attempting often the recouerie thereof, had alwayes the repulſe. I my ſelfe ſeruing the King in the foreſaid expedition, could find but fiue hundred of our company ſlaine. But the warre againſt Arzilla continued from the yeere of the Hegeira 914. to the yeere 921.

The Citie of Tangia.

The great and ancient Citie of Tangia, called by the Portugals, Tangiara, according to the fond opinion of ſome Hiſtoriographers, was founded by one Sedded the ſonne of Had, who (as they ſay) was Emperour ouer the whole World. This man (ſay they) determined to build a Citie, which for beautie might match the Earthly Paradiſe. Wherefore, hee compaſſed the ſame with wals of Braſſe, and the Roofe of the Houſes hee couered with Gold and Siluer, for the bulding whereof he exacted great Tributes of all the Cities in the World. But the Claſſical and approued Authours affirme, that it was built by the Romanes vpon the Ocean Sea ſhoare, at the ſame time when they ſubdued the Kingdome of * Granada.

* Or Bætica.

The great Citie of Septa.

Septa, called by the Latines, Ciuitas, and by the Portugals, Seupta, was (according to our moſt approoued Authors) built by the Romanes vpon the Streights of Gibraltar, beeing in olde time the head Citie of all Mauritania; wherefore the Romanes made great account thereof, inſomuch that it became very ciuill, and was throughly inhabited. Afterward it was wonne by the Gothes, who appointed a Gouernour there, and it continued in their poſſeſſion, till the Mahumetans inuading Mauritania ſurprized it alſo. The occaſion whereof was one Iulian Earle of Septa; who being greatly iniuried by Roderigo King of the Gothes and of Spaine, ioyned with the Infidels, conducted them into Granada, and cauſed Roderigo to loſe both his life and his Kingdome.

The entrance of the Moores into Granada.

The Mahumetans therefore hauing taken Septa, kept poſſeſſion thereof on the behalfe of one Elgualid, Sonne of Habdulmalic their Patriarke, who then was reſident at Damaſco, in the yeere of the Hegerra 92. From thence-forth till within theſe few yeeres, this Citie grew ſo ciuill and ſo well ſtored with Inhabitants, that it proued the moſt worthy and famous Citie of all Mauritania. It contayned many Temples & Colledges of Students, with great numbers of Artizans, and men of Learning and of high ſpirit. Their Artizens excelled eſpecially in Workes of Braſſe, as namely, in making of Candleſtickes, Baſons, Standiſhes, and ſuch like Commodities, which were as pleaſant to the eye, as if they had beene made of Siluer or Gold. The Italians haue great cunning in making of the like, but their Workemanſhip is nothing comparable to theirs of * Septa.

* Or Ceuta.

The Streights of Gibraltar from Septa, but twelue miles broad.

Without the Citie are diuers faire Villages and Granges, eſpecially in that place which for the abundance of Vines is called, The Vineyards: howbeit, the fields are very barren and fruitles, for which cauſe their Corne is exceeding deere. Both without and within the Citie there is a pleaſant and beautifull proſpect to the ſhoare of Granada vpon the Streights of Gibraltar, from whence you may diſcerne liuing creatures, the diſtance being but twelue miles. Howbeit, this famous Citie not many yeeres ſince was greatly afflicted by Habdulmumen the King and Patriarke: who hauing ſurprized it, razed the buildings, and baniſhed the principall Inhabitants thereof. And not long after it ſuſtayned as great damage by the King of Granada, who (beſides the foreſaid harmes) carryed the Nobles & chiefe Citizens Captiues into Granada. And laſtly, in the yeere of Mahumet his Hegeira 818. being taken by a Portugall Armada, all the Citizens did abandon it. Abu Sahid being then King of Fez, and a man of no valour, neglected the recouerie thereof: but in the midſt of his dancing and diſport being aduertiſed that it was loſt, he would not ſo much as interrupt his vaine paſtime: wherefore by Gods iuſt iudgement, both himſelfe and his ſixe Sonne were all ſlaine in one night by his Secretarie, in whom hee repoſed ſingular truſt, becauſe he would haue defloured the ſaid Secretaries Wife. Theſe things came to paſſe in the yeere of the Hegeira 824.

Septa taken by the Portugals. Abu Sahid King of Fez and his ſixe Sonnes ſlaine all in one night.

Afterward, the Kingdome of Fez being eight yeeres deſtitute of a King, a Sonne of the murthered King whom he begot of a Chriſtian woman, and who the ſame night that his Father was ſlaine fled vnto Tunis, ſucceeded in the Gouernment: this was Habdulac, the laſt King of the Marin Family, who likewiſe (as is aforeſaid) was ſlaine by the people.

Quadres.

Vpon the Monntaine Quadres, was borne one called by them Hellul: this Hellul atchieued many worthy exploits againſt the Spaniards; the Hiſtory whereof is ſet downe partly in verſe and partly in proſe, and is as rife in Africa and Granada, as is the Storie of Orlando in Italie. But at length in the Spaniſh warre (wherein Ioſeph Eneſir King and Patriarke of Maroco was vanquiſhed) this Hellul was ſlaine in a Caſtle of Catalonia, called by the Moores, The Caſtle of the Eagle. In the ſame battell were ſlaine threeſcore thouſand Moores, ſo that none of them eſcaped ſaue the King and a few of his Nobles. This was done in the yeere of the Hegerra 609. which was in the yeere of our Lord 1160. From thenceforth the Spaniards had alwayes good ſucceſſe in their warres, ſo that they recouered all thoſe Cities which the Moores had before taken from them.

Threeſcore thouſand Moores ſlaine.

Bedis, otherwiſe called Velles de Gumera.

This ancient Towne built vpon the Mediterran Sea ſhoare, and called by the Spaniards, Velles de Gumera, contayneth about ſixe hundred Families. Heere is alſo a very ſtately Temple to bee ſeene. Water for drinke is exceeding ſcarce among them, for they are all conſtrayned to reſort vnto one Pit or Well, being in the Suburbes, neere vnto the Sepulchre of a certayne man, that was in times paſt very famous among them. Howbeit in the night it is dangerous to fetch water from thence, becauſe it is ſo full of Bloud-ſuckers or Horſe-leeches. They haue ſuch abundance of fiſh, that one man alone is not able to draw vp a Net; wherefore whoſoeuer will aſſiſt the Fiſhermen in that buſineſſe, are rewarded with good ſtore of fiſhes for their labour: yea, ſometimes they will freely beſtow fiſhes vpon ſuch as paſſe by. They ſalt the foreſaid Sardelli, and ſend them to the Mountaines to be ſold. In this Towne there is a long ſtreet inhabited with Iewes, wherein dwell ſundry Vintners that ſell excellent Wines. So that in calme euenings the Citizens vſe to carry Wine aboord their Barkes in the Sea, and to ſpend their time in drinking and ſinging.

Ferdinando King of Spaine taking a certaine Iland within a mile of the Towne, built a Fort thereon, and ſo planted it with Ordnance and Souldiers, that neyther their Temples nor themſelues walking in the ſtreets were free there from, but were daily ſlaine. Wherefore the Gouernour of the Towne was conſtrayned to craue aide from the King of Fez, who ſent out a great Armie againſt the Chriſtians; but they were partly taken, and partly ſlaine, ſo that very few eſcaped backe vnto Fez. The Chriſtians kept this Ile almoſt two yeeres and then it was betrayed by a falſe trecherous Spaniard (who ſlue the Gouernour of the Ile, becauſe hee had taken his Wife from him) into the Moores poſſeſſion, and all the Chriſtians were ſlaine: not a man of them eſcaped, ſaue onely the Spaniſh Traytor, who in regard of his Treaſon was greatly rewarded, both by the Gouernour of Bedis, and alſo by the King of Fez. Being at Naples I heard the whole relation of this matter from a certaine man that was preſent at all the former Exploits, who ſaid, that they were done about the yeere of our Lord 1520.

In Mount Benguazeual, there is a certaine Towne indifferently well peopled, and furniſhed with all kind of Artificers; whereunto the fields belonging maruellouſly abound with Grapes, Quinces, and Pome-citrons, all which are ſold at Fez: heere are likewiſe great ſtore of Linnen Weauers, and many Iudges and Lawyers. They haue alſo a good Market, whereunto the Inhabitants of the Neighbour Mountaynes reſort. Vpon the top of this Mountayne there is a certaine Caue or hole that perpetually caſteth vp fire. Some wondring greatly at the matter, haue caſt in wood, which was ſuddenly conſumed to aſhes: I my ſelfe neuer ſaw the like Miracle in any other place, ſo that a great many thinke it to be hel-mouth.

A caue or hole that perpetually caſteth vp fire.

In Mount Beni Meſgalda are many Doctors of the Mahumetan Law, and diuers inferiour Students: who put the Inhabitants to great damage. Themſelues forſooth, will drinke wine, and yet they perſwade the people that it is vnlawfull for them to drinke it, albeit ſome doe giue them little credit. The Inhabitants of this Mountayne pay in reſpect of others no great Tribute, and that perhaps, becauſe they maintayne the foreſaid Doctors and Students.

In my time the King of Spaine ſent a great Armie againſt Melela in Garet: before the arriuall whereof, the Towneſmen ſent vnto the King of Fez for ayde, who making warre as then againſt the people of Temeſna, could ſend but ſmall forces to ſuccour them. Which the Towneſmen being aduertiſed of, and fearing leaſt their ſmall forces would proue too weake for the Spaniards great Armada, they tooke all the bagge and baggage that they could carrie, and fled vnto the Mountaynes of Buthoia. Howbeit, the Captaine of the Feſſan Souldiers, both to bee reuenged vpon the Towneſmens cowardize, and alſo to leaue nothing for the Spaniards to enioy, burnt downe all the Houſes, Temples, and Buildings. This was done in the yeere of the Hegeira 896. which was in the yeere of our Lord 1487. But the Spaniards, for all they found the Citie ſo waſted, would not depart thereupon, but firſt built a ſtrong Caſtle, and afterward by little and little repayred the Towne wals, and by that meanes haue kept poſſeſſion thereof euen till this day. They tooke alſo Chaſaſa.

Mellela enioied and re-edified by the Spaniards.

The Prouince of Garet is diuided into three parts: the firſt whereof contayneth the Cities and Townes, the ſecond the foreſaid Mountaynes, (the Inhabitants whereof are called Bottoia) and the third comprehendeth the Deſarts, which beginning Northward at the Mediterran Sea, and extending South to the Deſart of Chauz, are bounded Weſtward with the foreſaid Mountaynes, and Eaſtward with the Riuer of Muluia. The length of theſe Deſarts is ſixtie miles, and the breadth thirtie. They are vnpleaſant and dry, hauing no water but that of the Riuer Muluia. There are many kinds of beaſts in this Deſart, ſuch as are in the Lybian Deſart next vnto Numidia. In Summer time many Arabians take vp their abode neere vnto the Riuer Muluia; and ſo doe another kind of fierce people called Bataliſa, who poſſeſſe great abundance of Horſes, Camels, and other Cattell, and maintayne continuall warre againſt the Arabians that border vpon them.

The extreme part of the Deſart of Garet.

The Towne of Dubdu was in poſſeſſion of one Mahumet who beautified it exceedingly with ſtore of faire houſes and buildings: likewiſe, he greatly altered and reformed the gouernment of this Towne; and ſhewed ſuch extraordinary courteſie vnto all Strangers, that hee grew very famous.

The great courteſie of Mahumet toward ſtrangers.

Moreouer, the ſaid Mahumet conſulted how to get Tezza from the King of Fez, and offered great matters to the performance of his intent: and that he might the eaſilier attayne his purpoſe, he determined to goe to the Market of Tezza in a ſimple habite, and ſo to make an aſſault vpon the Captaine of the Towne: for he hoped that a great part of the Towneſmen, whom hee knew to bee his friends, would aſſiſt him in that enterprize. Howbeit this practice was at length diſcouered vnto the King of Fez (which King was called Saich, and was the firſt of the Family of Quattas, and Father vnto the King that * now reigneth) who preſently aſſembled an huge Armie, and marched of purpoſe againſt Dubdu, vtterly to deſtroy it: and ſo comming vnto the foot of the Mountayne hee there encamped. The people of the Mountayne hauing gathered an Armie of ſixe thouſand men, hid themſelues craftily behind the Rockes, ſuffering their Enemies to aſcend by certayne difficult and ſtrait paſſages, from whence they were ſure they could hardly eſcape, and ſo at length they brake forth on the ſodaine and encountred their ſaid Enemies being weary of aſcending; and becauſe the way was very troubleſome and narrow, the King of Fez his Souldiers could not endure their aſſaults, but beeing conſtrayned to giue backe, were moe then a thouſand of them throwne downe head-long and ſlaine. In this skirmiſh were ſlaine in all to the number of three thouſand Feſſan Souldiers: and yet the King not being diſmayed with ſo great an ouerthrow, prepared forth-with a band of fiue hundred Croſſebowes, and three hundred Harquebuziers, and determined to make a new aſſault vpon the Towne. But Mahumet ſeeing that he could no longer withſtand the King, reſolued to go himſelfe vnto him, that he might, if it were poſſible, obtaine peace, & to releaſe his Country from the fury of the Enemy. Wherefore putting on the habit of an Ambaſſador, he went & deliuered a Letter with his own hand vnto the King. Which the King hauing peruſed, asked him what he thought concerning the Gouerner of Dubdu? Mary I think (quoth Mahumet) he is not well in his wits, in that he goeth about to reſiſt your Maieſtie. Then ſaid the King, if I had conquered him, (as I hope to do within theſe few daies) I would cauſe him to be diſmembred and torne in peeces. But what if he ſhould come hither (ſaith Mahumet) to ſubmit himſelfe, and to acknowledge his offence; might it then pleaſe the King to admit him into fauour? Then the King anſwered: I ſweare vnto thee by this my head, that if he will come and acknowledge his fault in manner as thou haſt ſaid, I will not onely receiue him into fauour, but will eſpouſe my daughters vnto his ſonnes, and will beſtow moſt ample and Princely dowries vpon them. But I am ſure, being diſtracted of his wits (as thou haſt ſaid) that he will by no meanes come and ſubmit himſelfe. Then ſaid Mahumet: he would ſoone come (I aſſure you) if it pleaſed the King to proteſt this for a certaintie vnto the Nobles. I thinke (ſaid the King) it hath beene ſufficiently proteſted and affirmed, ſithence I haue bound it with a ſolemne oath in the preſence of theſe foure; for here ſtand my chiefe Secretary, the Generall of my Forces, my Father in-law, and the chiefe Iudge and Patriarke of Fez; the teſtimony of which foure may well ſatisfie you. Whereupon Mahumet humbly falling at the Kings feete: loe, heere the man (quoth he) that ſubmiſſely acknowledgeth his fault, and craueth the King gracious pardon. With that the King himſelfe lifted him from the ground, embraced him, and ſaluted him with friendly ſpeeches. Then cauſed he both his daughters to be called, which he beſtowed vpon Mahumets ſonnes: all which being done, he remooued his armie from that Mountaine, and returned conquerour vnto Fez. This was done in the yeere of the Hegeira 904. which was in the yeere of our Lord 1495. And in the yeere of the Hegeira 921. I my ſelfe was at the City of Dubdu, where I was moſt curteouſly entertained by the foreſaid Mahumet.

The Citie of Teza or Tezza.

Huge Temple.

Veneration of an old man.

Tezza was built by the Africans, fiue miles from Mount Atlas, being diſtant from Fez fiftie, from the Ocean an hundred and thirty, and from the Mediterran Sea ſeuen miles, and ſtanding in the way from Garet to Chaſaſan. It contained in times paſt about fiue thouſand families: the buildings of this Towne are not very ſtately, except Noblemens Palaces, Colledges, and Temples, which are ſomewhat beautifull. Out of Atlas ſpringeth a little Riuer which runneth through the chiefe Temple of this Citie: and ſometimes it falleth out, that certaine people bordering vpon the Citie: vpon ſome quarrel with the Citizens will cut off this Riuer from the Citie, and turne the courſe thereof ſome other way, which breedeth great inconueniences vnto the Citizens: for then they can neither build houſes, nor get any water to drinke, but onely corrupt water which they take out of certaine Ciſternes, for which cauſe they are often conſtrained to make a league with thoſe borderers. This Citie both for wealth, ciuilitie, and abundance of people, is the third Citie of all the Kingdome, and hath a greater Temple then that of Fez: heere are likewiſe three Colledges, with diuers Bath-ſtoues, and a great number of Hoſpitals. Each trade and occupation hath a ſeuerall place in this Citie, like as they haue in Fez: the Inhabitants are of a more valiant and liberall diſpoſition, then they of Fez: here are alſo great ſtore of learned and rich men: and the fields adiacent are exceeding fruitfull. Without the Citie walls are very large Plaines, and many pleaſant ſtreames, that ſerue to water their Gardens which are repleniſhed with all kind of fruits: here are abundance of Vines alſo yeelding very ſweet Grapes, whereof the Iewes (being fiue hundreth Families) make excellent wine, ſuch as I thinke all Africa ſcarce affoordeth better. I my ſelfe was acquainted in this Citie with a certaine aged ſire, whom the Townſmen adored as if he had beene a god: he was merueilous rich both in Fruits, Grounds, and other Commodities, which the people beſtowed vpon him in great abundance. The Citizens of Fez vſed to come fiftie miles (for ſo farre is Fez diſtant) onely to viſite the ſaid old man. My ſelfe conceiued ſome great opinion of this aged ſire: but after I had ſeene him, I could find no ſuch ſuperexcellency in him, ſaue onely that he deluded the fond people with ſtrange deuiſes.

Mount Beni Ieſſeten.

Iron-mines.

The Mountaine of Beni Ieſſenten is ſubiect vnto the Gouernour of Dubdu, being inhabited with moſt baſe and beggerly people. Their houſes are made of Sea-ruſhes, and ſo likewiſe are their ſhooes made of ſuch ruſhes when they trauell any Iourney, where by a man may coniecture the miſerable eſtate of this people. The Mountaine yeedeth nought but panicke, whereof they make bread and other victuals: but at the foot thereof are certaine Gardens repleniſhed with Grapes, Dates, and Peaches. Their Peaches they cut into foure quarters, and caſting away the Nuts or Stones, they dry them in the Sunne, and keepe them an whole yeere, which they eſteeme for great dainties. Vpon this Mountaine are Iron-mines: and they frame their Iron in manner of horſe-ſhooes, which ſerueth them ſometimes in ſtead of money, whereof they haue great want in this Mountaine, vnleſſe the Smithes by their Arte keepe this money in ſtore: who, beſides horſe-ſhooes, make certaine daggers with blunt points. Their women weare Iron-rings vpon their fingers and eares for a great brauery, but they are more baſely apparelled then the men, and remaine continually in the woods, both to keepe Goats, and to gather fewell. They haue neither ciuilitie nor learning, but liue after a brutiſh manner without all diſcretion and humanitie.

Mount Selelgo.

This woodie Mountaine is full of Pine-trees and Fountaines. Their houſes are not made of ſtone, but of Sea-ruſhes, ſo that they may eaſily be remooued from place to place, which is very commodious to the Inhabitants, for euery ſpring they leaue the Mountaine and deſcend into the Vallies, from whence about the end of May they are expelled by the Arabians, which inhabite the Deſarts: who by reaſon of their abundance of Goats and other Cattell, forſaking the ſaid Deſarts, ſeeke vnto the Fountaines and moiſt places: but in winter, becauſe their Camels are ſo impatient of cold, they reſort vnto the woods, and warme Regions. In this Mountaine are great ſtore of Lyons, Leopards, and Apes. And from the ſaid Mountaine runneth a certaine ſtreame of water with ſuch violence, that I haue ſeene a ſtone of an hundred pound weight carried with the force thereof: and here Subu taketh his beginning, which is the greateſt Riuer of all Mauritania.

Lyons Leopards, and Apes.

The Inhabitants of Mount Beni Iaſga are rich, and ciuill people: it ſtandeth ſo neere the Mountaine Selelgo, that they are onely ſeparated with the foreſaid Riuer: and to the end they may eaſilier paſſe from one Mountaine to another, they haue made a certaine ſtrange bridge in the midſt, and that in manner following: on either ſide ſtand certaine Poſts, through the which runneth a rope vpon a truckle or pulley, vnto which rope is faſtened a great basket, that will containe ten perſons, and that in ſuch ſort, that ſo often as they will paſſe ouer to the oppoſite Mountaine, they enter into the basket, and drawing the rope whereon it hangeth, they are eaſily carried aloft in the aire ouer the Riuer by the helpe of the foreſaid pulleyes, but ſometimes with great hazard of their liues, eſpecially if the basket or the rope be worne in any place: yea, and the diſtance of place is often an occaſion of great terrour. In this Mountaine there is great ſtore of cattell, but little wood. It aboundeth likewiſe with moſt excellent fine wooll, whereof their women make cloth comparable vnto ſilke, which is ſold at Fez for a great price. Here alſo is great plenty of oyle.

A wonderfull bridge.

There is no memorable thing in all Sofroi Towne, ſaue onely a certaine Temple, through the midſt whereof runneth a large Riuer; and at the doores ſtandeth a Fountaine of moſt pure water.

In the Forreſts about this Towne, as alſo about Mezdaga, are marueilous ſtore of Lyons, being not very hurtfull, for any man may driue them away with a little ſticke.

Tame Lyons.

At the ſame time while the Africans were as yet Idolaters, they had a Temple ſtanding neere vnto Ham Liſnan, whither at certaine times of the yeere, reſorted in the night great multitudes of people both men and women: where hauing ended their ſacrifices, they vſed to put out their lights, and euery man to commit adultery with that woman which he firſt touched. But the women which were preſent at this abominable ſport, were forbidden to lie with any man for a yeere after: and the children begottn in the ſaid adultery, were kept and brought vp by the Prieſt of the Temple, as being dedicated to ſacred vſes.

The Towne called Ham Liſnan.

Vpon Mount Centopozzi are great ſtore of moſt ancient buildings, neere vnto the which there is a hole or drie pit of ſo great a depth, that the bottome thereof can in no wiſe be ſeene. Into this pit ſome mad fellowes will haue themſelues let downe by ropes, carrying a Candle or Torch in their hands: and beneath, they ſay, it is diuided into many roomes, and as it were, chambers; and laſt of all, they come to a moſt large place hewen out of the Rocke with Inſtruments, and compaſſed about as it were with a wall, in which wall are foure doores, which lead to other more narrow places, where, they ſay, that Fountaines of Springing water are. And ſometimes it falleth out that ſome miſerably end their liues here: for if their lights chance to be blowen out with any ſudden blaſt of wind, they can by no meanes find the place where the rope hangeth, but are there conſtrained to die for extreame famine. It was told me by a certaine Nobleman of Fez, that there were ten perſons, who being deſirous to ſee the wonders of this pit, and being prepared for the ſame purpoſe, went firſt three of them downe, who when they were come to the foreſaid foure doors, two of them went one way, & the third went alone another way. And being thus diuided, after they had proceeded almoſt a quarter of a mile, there came great ſwarmes, of Bats flying about their lights, inſomuch that one light was put out; at length; being come to the ſpringing fountaines, they found there certaine white bones of men, and fiue or ſixe Candles, whereof ſome were new, and others were old and worne with long lying there: but hauing found nothing but water in the ſaid Fountaines, they returned backe againe the ſame way that they came: and they had ſcarce gone halfe way, but their owne light alſo was blowen out with a ſudden blaſt. Afterward ſeeking earneſtly vp and downe, and being weary of many falles that they caught among the Rockes, they found that there was no hope of returne: wherefore in this deſperate caſe committing themſelues with teares into the hands of God, they vowed, if they once eſcaped this danger, neuer to aduenture any more. They that ſtood at the Caues mouth being ignorant of their companions miſhap, expected their returne, and hauing ſtaid ouer long, at length they let downe themſelues by the rope, and began with lights to ſeeke their fellowes, making a great noiſe, and at length found them heauy and ſad. But the third, who was wandring vp and downe thoſe darke places, they could by no meanes finde, wherefore leauing him, they returned foorth of the Caue. And he that was left behind heard at length a noyſe like the barking of little dogges, and ſhaping his courſe toward them, he found immediatly foure ſtrange, and (as it ſhould ſeeme) new-borne beaſts, after which followed the

* The beaſt called Dabah.

* Damme, being not much vnlike to a ſhee-wolfe, ſauing that ſhe was bigger: wherefore hee began exceedingly to feare; howbeit, there was no danger, for being about to flee, the beaſt came towards him, fawning gently vpon him with her taile. And ſo at length, after long ſeeking, he found the holes mouth with great ioy, and eſcaped the danger: for within a while he ſaid, that he began to ſee ſome glimmering of light, as they doe which haue long been in the darke. But after a certaine time this Caue was filled with water vp to the top.

The Mountaine of Rauens called Gunaigell Gherben.

Cunaigel Gherben, ſtandeth very neere the former, and is full of Woods and Lions. Here is no Citie, nor any other place of habitation, perhaps by reaſon of the extreme coldneſſe of the place. From this Mountaine runneth a certaine little Riuer: and here is a Rocke of an exceeding height, whereupon keepe infinite ſwarmes of Crowes and Rauens, which ſome thinke to haue been the occaſion of the name of this Mountaine. Sometime the terrible Northerly winds bring ſuch abundance of Snow vpon this Mountaine, that ſuch as trauell from Numidia towards Fez looſe their liues thereby, as hath been ſignified in the firſt Booke. Euery Summer, the Arabians next inhabiting, being called Beni Eſſen, vſually reſort vnto this Mountaine, in regard of the coole water and pleaſant ſhadowes, notwithſtanding they know it to bee haunted with great ſtore of Lions and Leopards.

Dancing way.

There lyeth a way neere the towne of Vmen Giunaibe, which a man may not paſſe without dancing and leaping, vnleſſe he will fall into an Ague: the certainty whereof I haue heard many auouch.

Of Mount Ziz.

Domeſticall and tame Serpents. The like is reported of Lapland.

The Inhabitants are a moſt lewde and villanous generation, being wholly addicted to theft and robberie. They are at continuall diſſenſion with the Arabians, and practiſe daily miſchiefes and inconueniences againſt them, and to the end they may prouoke them to greater furie, they will ſometimes throw their Camels downe headlong from the top of ſome high Mountaine. In theſe Mountaines there happeneth a certain ſtrange and incredible matter, for there are Serpents ſo familiar with men, that at dinner-time they wil come like Dogs and Cats, and gather vp the crums vnder the Table, neither will they hurt any body, vnleſſe they bee offered ſome iniurie.

§. IIII.

The moſt remarkable things of IOHN LEO, in his fourth Booke of the Hiſtorie of Africa.

A deſcription of the Kingdome of Telenſin, or Tremizen. Cæſaria.

THis Kingdome beginneth Weſtward from the Riuers of Zha and Muluia: Eaſtward it bordereth vpon the great Riuer, Southward vpon the Deſart of Numidia, and Northward vpon the Mediterran Sea. This Region was called by the Romans, Cæſaria, and was by them inhabited: howbeit, after the Romans were expelled, it was fully poſſeſſed by the ancient Gouernours thereof, called Bien Habdulguad, and being a generation of the Family of M graua. And it remained vnto them and their ſucceſſors three hundred yeeres, vntill ſuch time as a certaine mighty man, called Ghamrazen, the ſonne of Zeijen, tooke poſſeſſion thereof. His poſteritie changing at length their ancient name, were called Beni Zeijen, that is, the Sons of Zeijen: and they enioyed this Kingdome for the ſpace almoſt of three hundred and eighty yeares. At length the Kings of Fez of the Marin Family greatly moleſted them, ſo that thoſe ten Kings which ſucceeded Zeijen were ſome of them vnfortunate in battell, ſome ſlaine, ſome taken Captiue, and others expelled their Kingdome, and chaſed to the next Mountaines. Neither were they free from vexation of the Kings of Tunis: howbeit, the Kingdome of Telenſin remained ſtill to this Familie, and they continued in peace for almoſt an hundred and twenty yeares, being endamaged by no forren power; ſauing that one Abu Feris King of Tunis, and his ſonne Hutmen, made them to pay tribute for certaine yeares vnto Tunis, till the deceaſe of the ſaid Hutmen. This Kingdome ſtretcheth in length from Eaſt to Weſt three hundred and eighty miles; but in breadth from North to South, that is, from the Mediterran ſea, to the Deſarts of Numidia not aboue fiue and twenty miles: which is the occaſion that it is ſo often oppreſſed by the Arabians inhabiting the Numidian Deſarts. The Kings of Telenſin haue alwaies endeuoured by great gifts to gaine the good will and friendſhip of the Numidians, but they could neuer ſatisfie their inſatiable couetice. A man ſhall ſeldome trauell ſafely through this Kingdome: howbeit, here are great ſtore of Merchants, perhaps either becauſe it adioyneth to Numidia, or elſe for that the way to the land of Negros lieth through it. It hath two moſt famous and frequented Hauen-townes, the one called * Horam, and the other * Marſa Elcabir, whither vſe to reſort great ſtore of Genoueſes, and Venetians. But afterward both theſe Townes were taken by Don Ferdinando the Catholike King, to the great inconuenience of all this Kingdome: for which cauſe the King then reigning, called Abuchemmeu, was expelled his Kingdome, and put to flight by his owne ſubiects: afterward Abuzeijen was reſtored to the Kingdome, who had for certaine yeares been impriſoned by his Nephew Abuchemmeu: howbeit, he enioyed the Kingdome but a very ſhort ſpace: for he was at length miſerably ſlaine by

* Or Oran.
* Or Merſalcabir.

Barbaroſſa the Turke, who conquered the Kingdome of Tremizen by force of warre. Whereof Abuchemmeu, that was expelled by his owne ſubiects, hauing intelligence, ſent to craue aide of the Emperour Charles the fifth, whereby he hoped to recouer his Kingdome. Which requeſt being granted, he leuied a puiſſant Armie, and made warre againſt Barbaroſſa, and hauing driuen him out, he recouered his Kingdome, and ſeuerely puniſhed them that had conſpired his baniſhment. And then he gaue the Spaniſh ſouldiers their pay, ſent the Captaines home with great rewards, and allowed Charles the Emperour a large yearely reuenue ſo long as he liued. After his deceaſe ſucceeded his brother Habdulla, who neglecting the league made before betweene the Emperor and his brother, and relying vpon Solyman the great Turke, refuſed to pay any more tribute vnto the Emperour Charles, and hath kept poſſeſſion of the Kingdome, till * this preſent. The greater part of this Region is vntilled, drie, and barren, eſpecially towards the South. Howbeit, the ſea coaſt is ſomewhat more fertill. The territorie adiacent to the Citie of Telenſin is full of woods, ſauing that the Weſterne part towards the Sea is mountainous. Likewiſe, the Regions of Tenez and Alger containe Mountaines abounding with all kind of commodities. In this part are but few Cities and Caſtles; howbeit, it is a moſt fruitfull and bleſſed place, as we will hereafter declare in particular.

Abuchemmeu King of Tremizen, reſtored to his Kingdome by the Emperor Charles the fifth.

* 1526.

This barren, dry, and vntilled Deſart, being vtterly deſtitute of Water and Wood, is ſituate vpon the Weſterne frontier of the Kingdome of Telenſin, and extendeth in length fourescore, and in breadth almoſt fiftie miles. Here are great ſtore of Roes, Deere, and Oſtriches.

The Deſart of Angad.

Great ſtore of Oſtriches.

This ancient Towne built by the Romans, while they were Lords of Africa, ſtandeth vpon a large Plaine, almoſt two miles from a certaine Mountaine, and about twelue miles from the Mediterran Sea, and neere vnto it runneth a little Riuer. The Hiſtoriographers of thoſe times report, that this Towne was in all reſpects built after the faſhion of Rome, whereupon they ſay, it borrowed the name: for Ned in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth, like. The Wall of this Towne is as yet to be ſeene: but all the ancient buildings of the Romans are ſo deſtroyed, that now there ſcarcely remaine any ruines thereof. It began in ſome places to be repaired and reedified anew, but nothing comparable to the former buildings. The fields adiacent are exceeding fruitfull, and containe many Gardens repleniſhed with ſuch trees as beare Carobs (being a fruite like vnto Caſſia Fiſtula) which in the Suburbs they vſe for food. This Towne is indifferently well inhabited, eſpecially with Weauers, who make great ſtore of Cotton-cloth, and are free from all tribute.

The Citie called Ned Roma.

Tlenſin, is a great Citie, and the Royall ſeate of the King; and then it was an honourable and well-gouerned Citie: howbeit, Ioſeph King of Fez continually moleſted it, and with an huge Armie beſieged it for ſeuen yeares together. This Ioſeph hauing built a Fort vpon the Eaſt ſide of the Towne, put the beſieged Citizens to ſuch diſtreſſe, that they could no longer endure the extreme famine: wherefore with one accord they all went vnto their King, beſeeching him to haue compaſſion vpon their want. The King, to make them acquainted with his daintie fare, which he had to ſupper, ſhewed them a diſh of ſodden Horſe-fleſh and Barly. And then they well perceiued, how little the Kings eſtate was better then the eſtate of the meaneſt Citizen of them all. Soone after the King hauing procured an aſſembly, perſwaded his people that it was much more honourable to die in battell for the defence of their Countrie, then to liue ſo miſerable a life. Which words of the King ſo inflamed all their minds to the battell, that the day following they reſolued to encounter the enemie, and valiantly to fight it out. But it fell out farre better for them then they expected; for the ſame night King Ioſeph was ſlaine by one of his owne people: which newes being brought vnto the Citizens, with greater courage they marched all out of the Towne, eaſily vanquiſhing and killing the confuſed multitude of their enemies; after which vnexpected victorie, they found victuals ſufficient in the enemies Campe to relieue their long and tedious famine. About fortie yeares after, the fourth King of Fez of the Marin Familie, called Abulheſen, built a Towne within two miles Weſtward of the Citie of Telenſin. Then hee beſieged Telenſin for thirty moneths together, making daily and fierce aſſaults againſt it, and euery night erecting ſome new Fort, ſo that at length the Fezzan forces next vnto Telenſin eaſily entred the Citie, and hauing conquered it, carried home the King thereof Captiue vnto Fez, where he was by the King of Fez beheaded, and his carkaſe was caſt forth among the filth of the Citie: and this was the ſecond and the greater damage that Telenſin ſuſtained. After the decay of the Marin Familie Telenſin began in many places to bee repaired, and repleniſhed with new inhabitants, inſomuch that it increaſed to twelue thouſand Families. Here each Trade and Occupation hath a peculiar place, after the manner of Fez, ſauing that the buildings of Fez are ſomewhat more ſtately. Here are alſo many, and beautifull Temples, hauing their Mahumetan Prieſts and Preachers. Likewiſe here are fiue Colledges moſt ſumptuouſly built, ſome by the King of Telenſin, and ſome by the King of Fez. Here alſo are ſtore of goodly Bathes and Hot-houſes, albeit they haue not ſuch plentie of water as is at Fez. Alſo here are very many Innes built after the manner of Africa: vnto two of which Innes the Merchants of Genoa and Venice doe vſually reſort.

ding rich: vpon their heads they weare a * Dulipan, to diſtinguiſh them from other Citizens: but in the yeare of the Hegeira 923. vpon the death of King Abuhabdilla, they were all ſo robbed and ſpoyled, that they are now brought almoſt vnto beggerie. Moreouer, in this Citie there are many Conduits, the Fountaines whereof are not farre from the Citie walles, ſo that they may eaſily be ſtopped by any forren Enemie. The Citie wall is very high and impregnable, hauing fiue great Gates vpon it, at euerie one of which there is placed a guard of Souldiers, and certaine Receiuers of the Kings Cuſtome. On the South-ſide of the Citie ſtandeth the Kings Palace, enuironed with moſt high Walls, and containing many other Palaces within it, which are none of them deſtitute of their Fountaines and pleaſant Gardens: This Royall Palace hath two Gates, one leading into the Fields, and the other into the Citie, and at this Gate ſtandeth the Captaine of the Guard. The Territorie of Telenſin containeth moſt pleaſant habitations, whither the Citizens in Summer-time vſe to retire themſelues: for beſides the beautifull Paſtures and cleare Fountaines, there is ſuch abundance of all kind of fruits to delight both the eyes and taſte, that to my remembrance I neuer ſaw a more pleaſant place: their Figges they vſe to drie in the Sunne, and to keepe vntill Winter: and as for Almonds, Peaches, Melons, and Pome-citrons, they grow here in great plentie. Three miles Eaſtward of this Citie are diuers Mills vpon the Riuer of Seſſif; and ſome other there are alſo not far from the Citie vpon the Mountaine of Elcalha. The South part of the Citie is inhabited by Iewes, Lawyers, and Notaries: here are alſo very many Students, and Profeſſors of diuers Arts, which haue maintenance allowed them out of the fiue forenamed Colledges. The Citizens are of foure ſorts, to wit, ſome Artificers, ſome Merchants, other Schollers and Doctors, and all the reſidue Souldiers. The Merchants are men moſt iuſt, truſtie, liberall, and moſt zealous of the common good, who for the moſt part exerciſe traffique with the Negros. The Artificers liue a ſecure, quiet, and merrie life. The Kings Souldiers being all of a comely perſonage, and of great valour, receiue verie large and liberall pay, for they are monthly allowed three pieces of the Gold-coyne of Telenſin, which are worth three Italian Duckats, and one ſecond part. All Students before they attaine to the degree of a Doctor, liue a bare and miſerable life: but hauing attained thereunto, they are made either Profeſſors, or Notaries, or Prieſts. The Citizens and Merchants of this Citie are ſo neate & curious in their apparel, that ſomtimes they excel the Citizens of Fez in brauerie.

Pleaſant place.

Schollers.

The cuſtomes and rites obſerued in the King of Telenſin his Court.

A Wonder it is to ſee how ſtately and magnificently the King of Telenſin behaueth himſelfe: for no man may ſee him, nor be admitted to parle with him, but onely the principall Nobles of his Court, each one of whom are aſſigned to beare Offices according to their place and dignitie. In this Court are ſundry Offices and dignities, and the Kings Lieutenant being principall Officer, allotteth vnto each one ſuch places of dignitie, as may bee correſpondent to their honour: and this Lieutenant leuieth the Kings Armies, and ſometime conducteth them againſt the Enemie. The ſecond, Officer is the Kings chiefe Secretarie, who writeth and recordeth all things pertaining to the King. The third, is the High Treaſurer, who is bound by his Office to receiue Tributes and Cuſtomes, The fourth, is the Kings Diſpenſator or Almoner, who beſtoweth ſuch liberalitie as the King vouchſafeth. The fifth, is the Captaine of the Kings Guard, who ſo often as any Nobles are admitted to the Kings preſence, conducteth the guarde vnto the Palace Gate. Then are there other meaner Officers, as namely, the Maſter of the Kings Stable, the Ouer-ſeer of his Saddles and Stirrops, and his Chiefe Chamberlaine, who giueth attendance onely at ſuch times as any Courtiers are admitted vnto the Kings audience. For at other times the Kings Wiues, with certaine Chriſtian Captiues, and Eunuches doe performe that dutie. The King ſometimes in ſumptuous and coſtly apparell rideth vpon a ſtately Steed richly trapped and furniſhed. In riding hee obſerueth not much pompe nor many ceremonies; neither indeed doth hee carrie ſo great a traine; for you ſhall ſcarcely ſee a thouſand Horſemen in his company, except perhaps in time of Warre, when as the Arabians and other people giue attendance. His dominions are but ſlenderly inhabited: howbeit, becauſe the way from Europe to Æthiopia lieth through his Kingdome, he reapeth much benefit by the wares that paſſe by, eſpecially ſince the time that Oran was ſurpriſed by the Chriſtians.

A paſſage from Europe to Æthiopia through the Kingdome of Tremizen.

Hubbed.

Hubbed containeth ſtore of Inhabitants, who are for the moſt part Dyers of Cloath. In this Towne was buried one Sidi Bu Median, being reputed a man of ſingular holineſſe, whom they adore like a God aſcending vp to his Monument by certaine ſteps. Here is likewiſe a ſtately Colledge, and a faire Hoſpitall to entertaine ſtrangers in; both which were built by a King of Fez of the Marin Family, as I find recorded vpon a certaine Marble ſtone.

Batha.
A famous Hermite.

The Plaine of Batha was vtterly deſtitute of Inhabitants, till a certaine Hermite with his followers, whom they reuerenced as a man of ſingular holineſſe, repaired thither. This Hermite in ſhort time grew ſo rich in Oxen, Horſes, and other Cattell, that no man almoſt throughout the whole Region was comparable vnto him. Neither he nor his followers pay any tribute at all, when as notwithſtanding (as I heard of his Diſciples) he reapeth yearely eight thouſand buſhels of Corne, and at this time poſſeſſeth fiue hundred Horſes, tenne thouſand ſmall Cattell, and two thouſand Oxen; and beſides all the former hath yearely ſent vnto him from diuers parts of the world foure or fiue thouſand Duckats: ſo greatly hath the fame of his falſe holines ſpread ouer all Africa and Aſia. Diſciples he hath to the number of fiue hundred, whom hee maintaineth at his owne coſt: neither imployeth he them to ought elſe, but daily to read a few prayers: for which cauſe many reſort vnto him, deſiring to be of the number of his Diſciples, whom after he hath inſtructed in certaine Ceremonies, he ſendeth them thither from whence they firſt came. He hath about an hundreth Tents pitched, whereof ſome are for ſtrangers, others for Shepheards, and the reſidue for his owne Family. This holy Heremite hath foure wiues, and a great many women-ſlaues, wearing moſt ſumptuous apparell. His ſonnes likewiſe haue their wiues and Families: inſomuch that the whole Familie of this Heremite and of his ſonnes containeth fiue hundred perſons. He is greatly honoured by all the Arabians, and by the King of Telenſin himſelfe. My ſelfe was once deſirous to trie what manner of man this Heremite was: and for three dayes I was entertained by him in the moſt ſecret places of his habitation, where amongſt other things, he ſhewed me certaine Bookes intreating of Art-Magique, and of Alchymie: and hee endeuoured by all meanes to perſwade me, that Magique was a moſt true and vndoubted Arte, whereby I perceiued that himſelfe was a Magician, albeit he neuer vſed nor regarded the Arte, except it were in inuocating of God by certaine names.

Oran containing about ſixe thouſand Families, and built many yeeres agoe by the Africans vpon the Mediterran Sea ſhoare, is diſtant from Telenſin an hundreth and fortie miles. Heere may you ſee great ſtore of ſtately buildings, as namely of Temples, Colledges, Hoſpitals, Bath-ſtoues, and Innes. The Towne is compaſſed with moſt high and impregnable walles, hauing on the one ſide a faire plaine, and on the other ſide diuers Mountaines. The greateſt part of the Inhabitants were Weauers, and the reſidue liued of their yeerely Reuenues. The Territorie of this Towne yeeldeth but ſmall ſtore of Corne, ſo that the Towneſmen make all their bread of Barley: howbeit, they are moſt courteous and friendly to all ſtrangers. This Towne was greatly frequented with Merchants of Catalonia, and of Genoa: and one ſtreet thereof is at this preſent called, the ſtreete of the Genoueſes. They were at perpetuall enmitie with the King of Telenſin, neither would they euer accept of any Gouernour, but one which receiued the Kings Tribute. But the Townſmen choſe one of their chiefe Burgo-maſters to iudge of Caſes Ciuil and Criminall. The Merchants of the Towne, maintained at their owne coſts, certaine Foiſts and Brigandines of warre, which committed many Piracies vpon the coaſt of Catalonia, Geuiſa, Maiorica, and Minorica, inſomuch, that Oran was full of Chriſtian Captiues. Afterward, Don Ferdinando King of Spaine encountring Oran with a great Armada, determined to releaſe the ſaid Chriſtians out of Captiuitie: but he had very hard ſucceſſe. Howbeit, within a few moneths after being ayded by the Biſcaines and the Cardinall of Spaine, he tooke Oran. For the Moores iſſuing foorth with great furie vpon the Chriſtians armie, left the Towne vtterly deſtitute of Souldiers, which the Spaniards perceiuing, began to aſſayle the Towne on the other ſide; where being reſiſted by none but by women, they had eaſie entrance. Whereupon the Moores ſeeing the Chriſtians Banners aduanced vpon their wals, they returned backe into the Towne, and were there put to ſo great a ſlaughter, that few of them eſcaped. Thus was Oran taken by the Spaniards in the yeere of Mahumet his Hegeira 916.

Merſalcabir in the Moores language ſignifieth, a great or large Hauen; for I thinke there is not the like Hauen to be found in the whole world beſides: ſo that here infinite numbers of Ships and Gallies may finde moſt ſafe harbour in any tempeſtuous weather. Hither the Venetians ſhips made often reſort, when they perceiued any tempeſt to approach: and from hence they would cauſe all their wares to be tranſported to Oran in other veſſels. This Towne alſo was at length taken by the Spaniards as well as Oran.

The Towne of Merſalcabir.

Merſalcabir ſurpriſed by the Spaniards.

Breſch ſtandeth many miles diſtant from Muſtuganin. It containeth great ſtore of Inhabitants, which are many of them Weauers. The people of this Towne vſe to paint a blacke croſſe vpon their cheeke, and two other blacke croſſes vpon the Palmes of their hands: and the like cuſtome is obſerued by all the Inhabitants of the Mountaines of Alger, and Bugia: the occaſion whereof is thought to be this, namely, that the Gothes when they firſt began to inuade theſe Regions, releaſed all thoſe from paying of Tribute (as our African Hiſtoriographers affirme) that would imbrace the Chriſtian Religion. But ſo often as any Tribute was demaunded, euery man to eſchew the payment thereof, would not ſticke to profeſſe himſelfe a Chriſtian: wherefore it was then determined, that ſuch as were Chriſtians indeed, ſhould be diſtinguiſhed from others by the foreſaid croſſes. At length the Gothes being expelled, they all reuolted vnto the Mahumetan Religion; howbeit, this cuſtome of painting croſſes remained ſtill among them neither doe they know the reaſon thereof. Likewiſe the meaner ſort of people in Mauritania vſe to make ſuch croſſes vpon their faces, as we ſee vſed by ſome people of Europe.

Blacke croſſes.

Serſell, built by the Romanes vpon the Mediterran Sea, was afterward taken by the Gothes; and laſtly by the Mahumetans. The wall of this Towne is exceeding high, ſtrong, and ſtately built, and containeth about eight miles in circuit. In that part of the Towne next vnto the Mediterran Sea, ſtandeth a moſt beautifull and magnificent Temple built by the Romanes, the inward part whereof conſiſteth of Marble.

uen vnto this Citie, becauſe it lyeth neere vnto the Iles of Maiorica, Minorica, and Ieuiza: howbeit, the Spaniards call it Alger. It was founded by the Africans of the Family of Meſgana, wherefore in old time it was called by the name of Meſgana. It is a large Towne, containing Families to the number of foure thouſand, and is enuironed with moſt ſtately and impregnable walles. The buildings thereof are very Artificiall and ſumptuous: and euery trade and occupation hath heere a ſeuerall place. Innes, Bath-ſtoues, and Temples heere are very beautifull; but the ſtatelieſt Temple of all ſtandeth vpon the Sea-ſhoare. Next vnto the Sea there is a moſt pleaſant walke vpon that part of the Towne wall, which the waues of the Sea beat vpon. In the Suburbs are many Gardens repleniſhed with all kind of Fruits. On the Eaſt ſide of the Towne runneth a certaine Riuer hauing many mills thereupon: and out of this Riuer they draw water fit for drinke, and for the ſeruices of the Kitchin. It hath moſt beautifull Plaines adioyning vpon it, and eſpecially one called Metteggia, which extendeth forty fiue miles in length, and almoſt thirty miles in breadth, and aboundeth mightily with all kinds of Graine. This Towne for many yeeres was ſubiect vnto the Kingdome of Telenſin; but hearing that Bugia was alſo gouerned by a King, and being neerer thereunto, they ſubmitted themſelues vnto the King of Bugia. For they ſaw that the King of Telenſin could not ſufficiently defend them againſt their enemies, and alſo that the King of Bugia might doe them great damage, wherefore they offered vnto him a yeerly Tribute of their own accord, and yet remained almoſt free from all exaction. But certaine yeeres after, the inhabitants of this Citie building for themſelues Gallies, began to play the Pirats, and greatly to moleſt the foreſaid Ilands. Whereupon King Ferdinando prouided a mighty Armada, hoping thereby to become Lord of the Citie. Likewiſe vpon a certaine high Rocke ſtanding oppoſite againſt the Towne, he cauſed a ſtrong Fort to be built, and that within Gun-ſhot of the Citie, albeit the Citie walles could not bee endamaged thereby. Wherefore the Citizens immediately ſent Ambaſſadours into Spaine, to craue a league for ten yeeres, vpon condition that they ſhould pay certaine yeerely Tribute; which requeſt was granted by King Ferdinando. And ſo they remained for certaine Moneths free from the danger of warre: but at length Barbaroſſa haſtning to the ſiege of Bugia, and hauing wonne one Fort built by the Spaniards, determined to encounter another, hoping if he could obtaine that alſo, that he ſhould ſoone conquer the whole Kingdome of Bugia. Howbeit, all matters fell not out according to his expectation: for a great part of his Souldiers being husbandmen, when they perceiued the time of ſowing corne to approach, without any leaue or licence they forſooke their Generall, and returned home to the Plough-taile. And many Turkes alſo did the like, ſo that Barbaroſſa failing of his purpoſe, was conſtrained to breake vp the ſiege. Howbeit, before his departure, he ſet on fire with his owne hands twelue Gallies, which lay in a Riuer but three miles from Bugia. And then with forty of his Souldiers, he retired himſelfe to the Caſtle of Gegel, being from Bugia aboue ſixtie miles diſtant, where hee remained for certaine dayes. In the meane while, King Ferdinando deceaſing, the people of Alger releaſed themſelues from paying any more Tribute: for ſeeing Barbaroſſa to be a moſt valiant warriour, and a deadly enemy vnto Chriſtians, they ſent for him, and choſe him Captaine ouer all their Forces; who preſently encountred the Fort, but to little effect. Afterward, this Barbaroſſa ſecretly murthered the Gouernour of the Citie in a certaine Bath. The ſaid Gouernour was Prince of the Arabians dwelling on the Plaines of Mettegia, his name was Selim Etteumi, deſcended of the Familie of Telaliba, and created Gouernour of Alger, at the ſame time when Bugia was taken by the Spaniards: this man was ſlaine by Barbaroſſa, after he had gouerned many yeeres. And then Barbaroſſa vſurped the whole gouernment of the Citie vnto himſelfe, and coined money, and this was the firſt entrance into his great and princely eſtate. At all the foreſaid accidents I my ſelfe was preſent, as I trauelled from Fez to Tunis, and was entertained by one that was ſent Ambaſſadour from the people of Alger into Spaine, from whence he brought three thouſand bookes written in the Arabian tongue. Then I paſſed on to Bugia, where I found Barbaroſſa beſieging the foreſaid Fort: afterward I proceeded to Conſtantina, and next to Tunis. In the meane while I heard that Barbaroſſa was ſlaine at Tremizen, and that his brother called Cairadin ſucceeded in the gouernment of Alger. Then we heard alſo that the Emperour Charles the fift had ſent two armies to ſurprize Alger; the firſt whereof was deſtroyed vpon the plaine of Alger, and the ſecond hauing aſſailed the Towne three dayes together, was partly ſlaine, and partly taken by Barbaroſſa, inſomuch, that very few eſcaped backe into Spaine. This was done in the yeere of the Hegeira 922.

Alger become Tributary to to the King of Spaine.

3000. Arabian bookes.

A Voyage performed by Iohn Leo.

This Alger is now the cage of vncleane birds, the next of Turkiſh vnchriſtian Pyrats.

Medua.

The Inhabitants of Medua being themſelues vnlearned, ſo often as any learned man comes amongſt them, they entertaine him with great honour, and cauſe him to decide all their controuerſies. For the ſpace of two moneths, while I remained with them, I gained aboue two hundred Ducats, and was ſo allured with the pleaſantneſſe of the place, that had not my dutie enforced me to depart, I had remained there all the reſidue of my life.

The Towne of Temendfuſt.

His diſcourſe of the Mountaines is omitted.

Vnto Temendfuſt belongeth a faire Hauen, where the Ships of Alger are ſafely harboured, for they haue no other Hauen ſo commodious. This Towne was at length deſtroyed by the Goths, and the greateſt part of the wall of Alger was built with the ſtones which came from the wall of this Towne.

§. V.

The moſt remarkable things in IOHN LEO his fifth Booke of the Hiſtorie of Africa, and a deſcription of the Kingdomes of Bugia and Tunis.

BVgia was ſubiect to the King of Tunis, and albeit, for certaine yeares the King of Telenſin was Lord thereof, yet was it at length recouered againe by the King of Tunis, who committed the Gouernment of the Citie vnto one of his Sonnes, both for the tranquillitie of Bugia, and alſo that no diſcord might happen among his Sonnes after his deceaſe. Hee left behind him three Sonnes, the eldeſt whereof was called Habdulhaziz, and vnto him he bequeathed the Kingdome of Bugia, as is aforeſaid: vnto the ſecond, whoſe name was Hutmen, hee left the Kingdome of Tunis: and the third, called Hammare, he made Gouernour of the Region of Dates. This Hammare began forth-with to wage warre againſt his Brother Hutmen, by whom beeing at length taken in the Towne of Aſfacos, and depriued of both his eyes, hee was carryed Captiue vnto Tunis, where he liued many yeares blind: but his Brother Hutmen gouerned the Kingdome of Tunis full forty yeares. The Prince of Bugia beeing moſt louing and dutifull to his Brother, raigned for many yeares with great tranquillitie, till at length hee was by King Ferdinand of Spaine, and by the meanes of one Pedro de Nauarra, caſt out of his Kingdome.

A deſcription of the great Citie of Bugia.

This ancient Citie of Bugia was built (as ſome think) by the Romans, vpon the ſide of an high Mountayne, neere vnto the Mediterran Sea, is enuironed with wals of great height, and moſt ſtately in regard of their Antiquitie. The part thereof now peopled contayneth aboue eight thouſand Families: but if it were all repleniſhed with buildings, it were capeable of more then foure and twentie thouſand Houſholds, for it is of a great length. The Houſes, Temples, and Colledges of this Citie are moſt ſumptuouſly built. Profeſſors of liberall Sciences heere are great ſtore, whereof ſome teach matters pertayning to the Law, and others profeſſe naturall Philoſophie. Neyther Monaſteries, Innes, nor Hoſpitals erected after their manner are heere wanting: and their Market place is very large and fayre: their ſtreetes either deſcend or aſcend, which is very troubleſome to them that haue any buſineſſe in the Towne. In that part of the Citie next vnto the top of the Mountayne ſtandeth a ſtrong Caſtle, moſt ſumptuouſly and beautifully walled: and there are ſuch notable Letters and Pictures moſt artificially carued vpon the Playſter-worke and Timber, that they are thought to haue coſt much more then the building of the wall it ſelfe.

The Citie of Bugia taken by Pedro de Nauarra.

The Citizens were exceeding rich, and vſed with their Warlike Gallies continually to moleſt the Coaſts of Spaine; which was the occaſion of the vtter ouerthrow of their Citie. For Pedro de Nauarra was ſent againſt them with a Fleet of fourteene Sayles onely. The Citizens being addicted wholy to pleaſure and eaſe, and being terrified with the rumour of Warre, becauſe they were neuer exerciſed therein, were no ſooner aduertiſed of Pedro de Nauarra his approch, but all of them together with their King betooke themſelues to flight, and left their Citie abounding with all kind of riches and wealth, to be ſpoyled by the Spaniards, ſo that it was eaſily taken, in the yeere of Mahumet his Hegeira 917. Soone after Pedro de Nauarra hauing ſacked the Citie, built a ſtrong Fort vpon the Sea ſhoare, and repayred another which had lien a long time waſte, furniſhing them both with Souldiers and Munition.

The Inhabitants of Gegel, haue in deſpight of the Kings of Bugia and Tunis continued alwayes free from Tribute: for that impregnable Mountayne can be ſurprized by no ſiege nor encounter of the Enemy. At length they yeelded themſelues vnto Barbaroſſa, who demanded none other Tribute of them, but onely the tenths of certaine Fruits and Corne.

Necaus.

The Inhabitants of Necaus are very rich, liberall, and curious in their apparell. Heere is an Hoſpitall maintayned at the common charges of the Towne, to entertayne Strangers that paſſe by. Here is a Colledge alſo, the Students whereof are allowed their Dyet and apparell. Neither is this Towne deſtitute of a moſt ſtately and wel-furniſhed Temple. Their women are white, hauing blacke haires and a moſt delicate skinne, becauſe they frequent the Bath-ſtoues ſo often. Moſt of their houſes are but of one ſtory high, yet are they very decent, and haue each one a Garden thereto belonging, repleniſhed with Damaske Roſes, Myrtles, Cammomill, and other herbs and flowers, and beeing watred with moſt pleaſant Fountaines. In theſe Gardens likewiſe there are moſt ſtately Arbours and Bowres, the coole ſhaddow whereof in Summer time is moſt acceptable.

The Citie of Conſtantina.

No man can deny the Romanes to haue beene Founders of this Citie, that ſhall conſider the great ſtrength, height and antiquitie of the wals, and how curiouſly they are beſet and adorned with blacke ſtones. This Citie ſtandeth vpon the South ſide of an exceeding high Mountayne, and is enuironed with ſteepe Rockes, vnder which Rockes and within the compaſſe whereof runneth the Riuer called Suſegmare, ſo that the ſaid deepe Riuer with the Rockes on either ſide, ſerueth in ſtead of a Towne-ditch to Conſtantina. The North part is compaſſed with a wall of great thickneſſe: and there are two extreme narrow paſſages onely to enter into the Citie, one on the Eaſt part, and another on the Weſt. The Citie gates are very large and ſtately. The Citie it ſelfe contayneth aboue eight thouſand Families. Buildings it hath very ſumptuous, as namely, the Chiefe Temple, two Colledges, three or foure Monaſteries, and other ſuch like. Here euery Trade and Occupation hath a ſeuerall place aſſigned: and the Inhabitants are right honeſt and valiant people. Here is likewiſe a great Company of Merchants, whereof ſome ſell Cloth and Wooll, others ſend Oyle and Silke into Numidia, and the reſidue exchange Linnen-cloth and other Wares for Slaues and Dates. Neyther are Dates ſo cheape in any Region of all Barbarie beſides. The Kings of Tunis vſually commit the Gouernment of Conſtantina vnto their eldeſt Sonnes.

Triumphall Arch.

Hot Baths.
Snaile Deuils.

A fond and ſenſeleſſe Superſtition.

Alſo without the Citie ſtand many fayre and ancient buildings. About a mile and a halfe from the Citie ſtandeth a ceraine triumphall Arch, like vnto the triumphall Arches at Rome, which the groſſe common people thinke to haue beene a Caſtle, where innumerable Deuils remayned, which (they ſay) were expelled by the Mahumetans, when they came firſt to inhabit Conſtantina. From the Citie to the Riuer they deſcend by certaine ſtaires hewen out of the Rocke: and neere vnto the Riuer ſtandeth a little houſe ſo artificially cut out of the mayne Rock, that the Roofe, Pillars and Wals are all of one continued ſubſtance, and here the women of Conſtantina waſh their Linnen. Neere vnto the Citie likewiſe there is a certaine Bath of hot water diſperſing it ſelfe among the Rockes: in this Bath are great ſtore of Snailes, which the fond women of the Citie call Deuils: and when any one falleth into a Feuer or any other Diſeaſe, they ſuppoſe the Snailes to be the Authours thereof. And the onely remedie that they can apply vpon ſuch an occaſion, is this: firſt, they kill a white Hen, putting her into a Platter with her feathers on, and then very ſolemnely with Wax-candles they carry her to the Bath, and there leaue her: and many good fellowes there are, which ſo ſoone as the ſilly women haue ſet downe their Hens at the Bath, will come ſecretly thither, and conuay away the Hens to their owne Kitchins. Somewhat farther from the Citie Eaſtward, there is a Fountayne of extreme cold water, and neere vnto it ſtandeth a certaine building of Marble adorned with ſundry Hieroglyphicall Pictures or Emblemes, ſuch as I haue ſeene at Rome, and at many other places of Europe. But the common people imagine that it was in times paſt a Grammar Schoole, and becauſe both the Maſters and Schollers thereof were moſt vicious, they were transformed (ſay they) into Marble.

The ancient Towne of Bona. Saint Auguſtine in times paſt Biſhop of Hippo.

Bona, was in ancient times called Hippo, where the Reuerend Father Saint Auguſtine was once Biſhop. It was in proceſſe of time ſubdued by the Gothes, and was afterward ſurprized and burnt to aſhes by Hutmen the third Patriarke after Mahumet. And many yeeres after they built a new Towne within two miles, of the ſtones that were brought from the ruines of Bona: which new Towne they called Beld Elhuneb, that is, the Citie of the fruit called Ziziphus or Iuiuba, by reaſon of the great abundance of that fruit: the which they vſe to dry in the Sunne, and to keepe till Winter. It contayneth almoſt three hundred Families, and all the houſes and buildings thereof are very baſe, ſaue one onely Temple which ſtandeth next the Sea. The Inhabitants are all of an ingenuous diſpoſition, ſome of them being Merchants, and the reſidue Artizans. Here is great ſtore of Linnen-cloth wouen, the greateſt part whereof is carryed to Numidia.

Great ſtore of Corall.

Euery Friday they haue neere vnto the Towne wals a Market, which is well frequented euen till night. Not farre from hence there is a certaine place in the Sea, abounding with great ſtore of Corall: and becauſe the Towneſmen know not how to fiſh for the ſame, the King of Tnnis licenſed certaine Merchants of Genoa to fiſh for it: who in regard of the continuall aſſaults of Pirates, becauſe they could not ſpeed of their purpoſe, they obtayned leaue alſo of the King to build a Caſtle neere vnto the place: but that the Towneſmen would in no caſe permit, ſaying, that the Genoueſes in times paſt tooke their Towne by ſuch a wile, and that it was afterward recouered againe by the King of Tunis.

The Citie of Tebeſſa.

Eldabag.

Tebeſſa, compaſſed with an high wall made of ſuch ſtones, as are to be ſeene vpon the Coloſſo at Rome: neither ſaw I, to my remembrance, any ſuch wals in all Africa or Europe; and yet the houſes and other buildings are very baſe. Through part of this Citie runneth a great Riuer: and in the Market, and diuers other places ſtand certaine Marble Pillars, hauing Epigrams and Sentences with Latine Letters engrauen vpon them: there are alſo other ſquare Pillars of Marble couered with Roofes. The Plaines adiacent, albeit, very dry, yet are they moſt fruitfull for Corne. Fiue miles from hence, grow ſuch abundance of Wall-nut-trees, as you would take them to be ſome thicke Forreſt. Neere vnto this Towne ſtandeth a certaine hill full of mighty Caues, wherein the common people ſay, that Giants inhabited of old: but it is moſt euident, that thoſe Caues were digged by the Romanes at the ſame time, when they built the Citie: for certaine it is that the ſtones whereof the Citie wals conſiſt, were taken out of thoſe Rockes. The Inhabitants are people of a couetous, inhumane, and beaſtly diſpoſition; neither will they vouchſafe to looke vpon a ſtranger: inſomuch, that Eldabag a famous Poet of the Citie of Malaga in Granada, hauing in his trauell this way receiued ſome diſcourteſie, wrote in diſgrace of Tebeſſa certaine Satyricall Verſes, which my ſelfe likewiſe haue thought good here to ſet downe in the diſpraiſe thereof.

Within this place here's nought of any worth,
Saue worthleſſe Nuts, which Tebeſſa affoords.
Soft, I miſtake, the Marble walles are worth
Your earneſt view, ſo are the Chriſtall Foords:
But hence are baniſht vertues all diuine,
The place is Hell, the People worſe then Swine.

This Eldabag was a moſt learned and elegant Poet in the Arabian Tongue, and out of meaſure Satyricall, and bitter in his inuectiues. But to returne to our former purpoſe, theſe Tebeſſians haue alwaies rebelled againſt the King of Tunis, and haue ſlaine all the Gouernours that he hath ſent. Wherefore the King that now is, trauelling vpon a time towards Numidia, ſent certaine Ambaſſadours into the Citie, to know how the Citizens ſtood affected towards him: vnto whom they (in ſtead of God ſaue the King) made anſwere; God ſaue our Citie walles. Whereat the King waxing wroth, ſacked the Citie forthwith, beheaded and hanged diuers of the inhabitants, and made ſuch hauock, that euer ſince it hath remained deſolate. This was done in the yeare of the Hegeira 915.

In the Towne of Vrbs, are to be ſeene ſundry Monuments of the Romans, as namely, Images of Marble, and euery where vpon the Walles are ſentences in Latin letters engrauen: the Towne Walles are moſt artificially and ſumptuouſly built. This Towne the Gothes, being aſſiſted by the Moores, ſurpriſed, when as it contained the chiefe treaſure and wealth that the Romans enioyed in all Africa. Afterward, it remained for certaine yeares deſolate, being at length notwithſtanding inhabited anew; yet ſo, that it deſerueth rather the name of a Village, then of a Towne.

The Towne called Vrbs. Vrbs full of Roman antiquities.

We haue here giuen the Reader, with a ſmall generall Map of Barbary and Egypt, a deſcription of the Ruines of Carthage, with the Goletta and Bay of Tunis.

The great Citie of Carthage.

* Both may be true of Queen Dido, which came from Phœnicia in Syria.

Ruines of Carthage.

* 1526.

The famous and ancient City Carthage was built at the firſt by a certaine people that came out of Syria. But others ſay that it was founded by a * Queene. The African Chronicler Ibnu Rachich is of opinion, that it was built by a certaine people that came from Barca. Tripolis of Barbaria and Capis being taken by the Mahumetans, the Inhabitants of them both went vnto Carthage, whither the principall Romans and Gothes had retired themſelues, who endeauored by all meanes to withſtand the Mahumetans: and after many skirmiſhes the Romans fled to Bona, and the Goths left Carthage for a pray vnto the Mahumetans; ſo that it remained deſolate many yeares after, till a certaine Mahumetan Patriarke, called Elmahdi brought in new Colonies: howbeit, he could ſcarce furniſh the twentith part with Inhabitants. There are to be ſeene at this day certaine ruines of the Citie walls, till you come to a deepe and large Ciſterne. And there remaineth as yet alſo a certaine Conduit, which conueyeth water to the Citie from a Mountaine thirtie miles diſtant, being like vnto the Conduit of the great Palace at Rome. Neere vnto Carthage likewiſe are certaine great and ancient buildings, the deſcription whereof is out of my remembrance. On the Weſt and South part of this Citie, are diuers Gardens repleniſhed with all kind of fruits, which are carried from thence to Tunis in great abundance. The plaines adioyning to this Citie are exceeding fruitfull, though not very large: for vpon the North part thereof lieth a Mountaine, the Sea, and the Gulfe of Tunis (on the Eaſt and South parts it ioyneth to the Plaines of Benſart. But * now this Citie is fallen into extreme decay and miſery: Merchants Shops there are not aboue twenty or fiue and twenty at the moſt: and all the houſes of the Towne being ſcarce fiue hundred, are moſt baſe and beggerly. In my time here was a ſtately Temple, and a faire Colledge alſo, but no Students were therein. The Towneſman, though verie miſerable, yet are they exceeding proud withall, and ſeeme to pretend a great ſhew of Religion. And the greater part of them are either Gardiners or Husbandmen, and are grieuouſly oppreſſed with the Kings daily exactions.

A deſcription of the mighty Citie of Tunis.

The building of Cairaoan.

Tunis ſubiect vnto Abdul-Mumen and other Kings of Maroco.

* Or perhaps Andaluzia.

This Citie is called by the Latines, Tunetum, and by the Arabians Tunus, which name they thinke to be corrupt, becauſe it ſignifieth nought in their language: but in old time it was called Tarſis, after the name of a Citie in Aſia. At the firſt it was a ſmall Towne built by the Africans vpon a certaine Lake, about twelue miles diſtant from the Mediterran Sea. And vpon the decay of Carthage, Tunis began to increaſe both in buildings and inhabitants: for the inhabitants of Carthage were loth to remaine any longer in their owne Towne, fearing leaſt ſome Armie would haue been ſent out of Europe: wherefore they repaired vnto Tunis, and greatly enlarged the buildings thereof. Afterward came thither one Hucba Vtmen, the fourth Mahumetan Patriarke, who perſwaded the Citizens, that no Armie or Garriſon ought to remaine in any Sea Townes; wherefore he built another Citie, called Cairdoan, being diſtant from the Mediterran Sea thirtie, and from Tunis almoſt an hundred miles: vnto which Citie the Armie marched from Tunis, and in the roome thereof other people were ſent to inhabite. About an hundred and fiftie yeares after, Cairaoan being ſacked by the Arabians, the Prince thereof was expelled, and became Gouernour of the Kingdome of Bugia: howbeit, he left certaine Kinſmen of his at Tunis, who gouerned that Citie. And ten yeares after, Bugia was taken by Ioſeph, the ſonne of Teſfin, who ſeeing the humanitie of the foreſaid Prince, would not expell him out of his Kingdome: but ſo long as it remained to the ſaid Prince and his poſteritie, Ioſeph cauſed it to be free from all moleſtation. Afterward, Abdul Mumen, King of Maroco, hauing recouered Mahdia from the Chriſtians, marched toward Tunis, and got poſſeſſion thereof alſo. And ſo Tunis remained peaceably vnder the Dominion of the Kings of Maroco, ſo long as the Kingdome was gouerned by the ſaid Abdul, and his ſonne Ioſeph, and their ſucceſſors Iacob and Manſor. But after the deceaſe of Manſor, his ſonne Mahumet Ennaſir made warre againſt the King of Spaine, by whom being vanquiſhed, he fled to Maroco, and there within few yeares ended his life. After him ſucceeded his brother Ioſeph, who was ſlaine by certaine ſouldiers of the King of Telenſin. An ſo vpon the death of Mahumet, and of his brother Ioſeph, the Arabians began to inhabite the Territorie of Tunis, and to make often ſiedges and aſſaults againſt the Citie it ſelfe: whereupon the Gouernour of Tunis aduertiſed the King of Maroco, that vnleſſe preſent aide were ſent, he muſt be conſtrained to yeeld Tunis vnto the Arabians. The King therefore ſent a certaine valiant Captaine, called Habduluahidi, and borne in Siuill, a Citie of Granada, with a Fleete of twentie Sayles vnto Tunis, which he found halfe deſtroyed by the Arabians: but ſo great was his eloquence and wiſdome, that he reſtored all things to their former eſtate, and receiued the yearely tribute. After Habduluahidi ſucceeded his ſonne Abu Zachberia, who in learning and dexteritie of wit, excelled his father. This Abu built a Caſtle vpon a certaine high place of the Weſt part of Tunis, which he adorned with faire buildings, and with a moſt beautifull Temple. Afterward, taking his iourney vnto the Kingdome of Tripolis, and returning home by the Southerne regions, he gathered tribute in all thoſe places: ſo that after his deceaſe, he left great treaſure vnto his ſonne. And after Abu ſucceeded his ſonne, who grew ſo inſolent, that hee would not be ſubiect to the King of Maroco, becauſe hee perceiued his Kingdome to decay: at the ſame time alſo had the Marin Family gotten poſſeſſion of the Kingdome of Fez, and ſo was the Familie of Beni Zeijen poſſeſſed of the Kingdomes of Telenſin and Granada. And ſo while all thoſe Regions were at mutuall diſſention, the Dominions of Tunis began mightily to encreaſe; inſomuch, that the King of Tunis marched vnto Telenſin, and demanded tribute of the inhabitants. Wherefore the King of Fez, who as then laid ſiege againſt Maroco, craued by his Ambaſſadors the King of Tunis his friendſhip, and with great gifts obtained the ſame. Then the King of Tunis returning home Conquerour from Telenſin, was receiued with great triumph, and was ſaluted King of all Africa; becauſe indeed there was no Prince of Africa at the ſame time comparable vnto him. Wherefore he began to ordaine a Royall Court, and to chooſe Secretaries, Counſellors, Captaines, and other Officers appertaining to a King; after the very ſame manner that was vſed in the Court of Maroco. And from the time of this King euen till our times, the Kingdome of Tunis hath ſo proſpered, that now it is accounted the richeſt Kingdome in all Africa. The ſaid Kings ſonne reigning after his fathers death, enlarged the Suburbs of Tunis with moſt ſtately buildings. Without the Gate called Bed Suvaica he built a ſtreete, containing to the number of three hundred Families: and he built another ſtreet at the Gate, called Bed el Manera, conſiſting of more then a thouſand Families. In both of theſe ſtreetes dwell great ſtore of Artificers, and in the ſtreet laſt mentioned, all the Chriſtians of Tunis, which are of the Kings Guard, haue their abode. Likewiſe, there is a third ſtreete built at the Gate next vnto the Sea, called Beb el Bahar, and being but halfe a mile diſtant from the Gulfe of Tunis. Hither doe the Genoueſes, Venetians, and all other Chriſtian Merchants reſort, and here they repoſe themſelues out of the tumult and concourſe of the Moores: and this ſtreet is of ſo great bigneſſe, that it containeth three hundred Families of Chriſtians and Moores; but the houſes are very low, and of ſmall receit. The Families of the Citie, together with them of the Suburbs, amount almoſt to the number of ten thouſand. This ſtately and populous Citie hath a peculiar place aſſigned for each Trade and Occupation. Here dwell great ſtore of Linnen-weauers, and the Linnen that they weaue is exceeding fine, and ſold at a great price ouer all Africa. The women of this Towne vſe a ſtrange kind of ſpinning: for ſtanding vpon an high place, or on the vpper part of the houſe, they let downe their Spindles at a window, or through a hole of the plancher into a lower roome, ſo that the weight of the Spindle makes the thread very equall and euen. The apparell of their Merchants, Prieſts, and Doctors is very decent. Vpon their heads they were a Dulipan, which is couered with a great Linnen-cloath: the Courtiers likewiſe and the Souldiers weare all of them Dulipans, but not couered with Linnen. Rich men here are but few, by reaſon of the exceeding ſcarcitie of all kind of graine: for a man cannot till a piece of ground, be it neuer ſo neere the Citie, in regard of the manifold inuaſions of the Arabians. Corne is brought vnto them from other Regions and Cities, as namely, from Vrbs, from Beggi, and from Bona. Some of the Citizens of Tunis haue certaine Fields in the Suburbs walled round about, where they ſow ſome quantitie of Barley, and of other Corne: howbeit, the ſoyle is marueilous dry, and ſtandeth in need of much watring: for which purpoſe euery man hath a pit, whereout with a certaine wheele turned about by a Mule or a Camell, and through certaine conueyances and paſſages made for the nonce, they water all the vpper part of their ground. Now conſider (I pray you) what great crop of Corne can be reaped out of ſo little a Field, walled round about, and watred by ſuch cunning and induſtrie. Bread they make very excellent, albeit they leaue the Bran ſtill among the Flower, and they bake their Loaues in certaine Mortars, ſuch as the Egyptians vſe to beate Flaxe in. In this Citie they haue no Fountaines, Riuers, nor Wells of freſh water: but they all vſe raine water taken out of Ciſterns, ſauing that there is a Fountaine in the Suburbs, from whence certaine Porters bring ſalt water into the Citie to ſell, which they thinke to bee more wholeſome and fit for drinke then raine water. Other Wells there are that affoord moſt excellent water, which is reſerued only for the King and his Courtiers. In this Citie there is one moſt ſtately Temple, furniſhed with ſufficient number of Prieſts, and with rich reuenues. Other Temples there be alſo, but not endowed with ſo ample reuenues: here are Colledges likewiſe and Monaſteries built after their manner, all which are maintained vpon the common beneuolence of the Citie. There are certaine people in this Citie, whom a man would take to bee diſtracted, which goe bare-headed and bare-footed, carrying ſtones about with them, and theſe are reuerenced by the common people for men of ſingular holineſſe. Moreouer, on the behalfe of one of theſe mad fellowes, called Sidi el Dahi; and for the reſidue of his fond Societie, the King of Tunis built one of the foreſaid Monaſteries, and endowed the ſame with moſt ample reuenues. All the houſes of this Citie are indifferently beautifull, being built of excellent ſtones, and adorned with much painting and caruing. They haue very artificiall pargettings or plaiſter-works, which they beautifie with Orient colours; for Wood to carue vpon is very ſcarce at Tunis. The floores of their Chambers are paued with certaine ſhining and faire ſtones: and moſt of their houſes are but of one ſtorie high: and almoſt euery houſe hath two Gates or entrances; one towards the ſtreet, and another towards the Kitchin and other back-roomes, betweene which Gates they haue a faire Court, where they may walke and conferre with their friends. Pouertie conſtraineth ſome of their women to leade an vnchaſt life: they are decently apparelled, and going foorth of the houſe, they weare vailes or maskes before their faces, like vnto the women of Fez: for with one Linnen-cloth they couer their fore-heads, and ioyne thereto another which they call Setfari: but about their heads they lap ſuch fardels of Linnen, as they ſeeme comparable to the heads of Giants. Moſt part of their ſubſtance and labour they beſtow vpon Perfumes and other ſuch vanities. They haue here a Compound, called Lhaſis, whereof whoſoeuer eateth but one Ounce, falleth a laughing, diſporting, and dallying, as if he were halfe drunken, and is by the ſaid Confection maruellouſly prouoked vnto luſt.

Of the King of Tunis his Court, and of the Rites and Ceremonies there vſed.

So ſoone as the King of Tunis hath by inheritance attained to his Kingdome, all his Nobles, Doctors, Prieſts, and Iudges, bind themſelues by ſolemne Oath vnto him. Immediatly after any Kings death, his ſonne and heire apparent ſucceedeth in the Kingdome: then the chiefe Officer of the Court (called the Munafid, becauſe he is the Kings Vice-Roy or High Deputie) preſenteth himſelfe forthwith vnto the new King, and giueth vp an account of all things which hee did while the old King liued: and then at the Kings appointment, euerie of the Nobles receiue Offices from the Munafid according to their ſeuerall places of dignitie. Another principall Officer there is, called the Meſuare, that is, the Great Commander and Gouernour of the warlike forces: who hath authority to increaſe or diminiſh the number of Souldiers, to giue them their pay, to leuie Armies, and to conduct the ſame whither he thinketh good. The third Officer in dignitie, is the Caſtellan, who with his Souldiers taketh charge of the Caſtle, and looketh to the ſafeguard of the Kings owne perſon: and he allotteth puniſhments vnto ſuch priſoners, as are brought into the ſaid Caſtle, as if he were the King himſelfe. The fourth Officer, is the Gouernour of the Citie, whoſe dutie is to adminiſter Iuſtice in the Common-wealth, and to puniſh Malefactors. The fifth Officer, is the Kings Secretarie, who hath authoritie to write, and to giue anſwere in the Kings name: he may open alſo, and reade any Letters whatſoeuer, except ſuch as are ſent vnto the Caſtellan and Gouernour of the Citie. The ſixth, is the Kings Chiefe Chamberlaine, who is to furniſh the Walles with Hangings, to appoint vnto euery man his place, and by a Meſſenger to aſſemble the Kings Counſellors; and this man hath great familiaritie with the King, and hath acceſſe to ſpeake with him, as often as he pleaſeth. The ſeuenth in dignitie, is the Kings Treaſurer, who receiueth all Cuſtomes, Tributes, and yearely reuenues, and payeth them, with the Kings conſent, vnto the Munafid. Theſe are the chiefe Officers vnder the King; of the reſidue (leſt I ſhould ſeeme tedious to the Reader) I haue of purpoſe omitted to intreate of. I could here make a large diſcourſe of the Kings vices that now reigneth (at whoſe hands I confeſſe my ſelfe to haue receiued great benefits) but that is not my purpoſe at this preſent: this one thing I can affirme, that he is maruellous cunning to procure money out of his ſubiects purſes. But he himſelfe liueth ſometimes in his Palace, and ſometimes in Gardens, in the company of his Concubines, Muſicians, Stage-plaiers, and ſuch like. When he calleth for any Muſician, he is brought in blindfold or hoodwinked in manner of a Hawke.

The Towne of El Mahdia, otherwiſe called Africa.

El Mahdia, founded in our time by Mahdi the firſt Patriarke of Cairaoan vpon the Mediterran ſea, and fortified with ſtrong Walls, Towers, and Gates, hath a moſt noble Hauen belonging thereto. Mahdi when he firſt entred into this Region, fained himſelfe in an vnknowne habite to be deſcended of the linage of Mahumet, whereby growing into great fauour of the people, hee was by their aſſiſtance made Prince of Cairaon, and was called El Mahdi Califa: afterward trauelling fortie dayes iourney Weſtward into Numidia to receiue tribute due vnto him, he was tawas by the Prince of Segelmeſſe, and put in priſon; howbeit, the ſaid Prince of Segelmeſſe being preſently moued with compaſſion toward him, reſtored him to his former libertie, and was for his good will not long after ſlaine by him: afterward tyrannizing ouer the people, and perceiuing ſome to conſpire againſt him, he erected this Towne of Mahdia, to the end hee might there find ſafe refuge when need required. At length one Beiezid, a Mahumetan Prelate (whom they called the Caualleir, or Knight of the Aſſe, becauſe that riding continually vpon an Aſſe, hee conducted an Armie of fortie thouſand men) came vnto Cairaoan: but Mahdi fled vnto his new Towne, where with thirtie Sayle of ſhips, ſent him by a Mahumetan Prince of Cordoua, he ſo valiantly encountred the Enemie, that Beiezid and his ſonne were both ſlaine in that battell: afterward returning to Cairaoan, hee grew in league and amitie with the Citizens, and ſo the gouernment remained vnto his poſteritie for many yeares.

Of the great Citie of Cairaoan.

The famous Citie of Cairaoan, otherwiſe called Caroen, was founded by Hucba, who was ſent generall of an Armie out of Arabia Deſarta by Hutmen, the third Muhumetan Califa. From the Mediterran Sea, this Citie is diſtant ſixe and thirtie, and from Tunis almoſt an hundred miles: neither was it built (they ſay) for any other purpoſe, but onely that the Arabian Armie might ſecurely reſt therein with all ſuch ſpoiles, as they wonne from the Barbarians, and the Numidians. He enuironed it with moſt impregnable Walls, and built therein a ſumptuous Temple, ſupported with ſtately Pillars. The ſaid Hucba after the death of Hutmen was ordained Prince of Muchania, and gouerned the ſame till the time of Qualid Califa, the ſonne of Habdul Malic, who as then reigned in Damaſco. This Qualid ſent a certaine Captaine, called Muſe, the ſonne of Noſair, with an huge Armie vnto Cairaoan; who hauing ſtaied a few dayes with his Armie not farre from Cairaoan, marched Weſtward, ſacking and ſpoyling Townes and Cities, till hee came to the Ocean Sea ſhore, and then hee returned towards Cairaoan againe. From whence hee ſent as his Deputie a certaine Captaine into Mauritania, who there alſo conquered many Regions and Cities: inſomuch that Muſe being mooued with a iealous emulation, commanded him to ſtay till himſelfe came. His ſaid Deputie therefore, called Tarich, encamped himſelfe not farre from Andaluzia, whither Muſe within foure moneths came vnto him with an huge Armie; from whence both of them with their Armies croſſing the Seas, arriued in Granada, and ſo marched by land againſt the Gothes. Againſt whom Theodoricus, the King of Goths, oppoſing himſelfe in battaile, was miſerably vanquiſhed. Then the foreſaid two Captaines with all good ſucceſſe proceeded euen to Caſtilia, and ſacked the Citie of Toledo, where amongſt much other treaſure, they found many Reliques of the Saints, and the very ſame Table whereat Chriſt ſate with his bleſſed Apoſtles; which being couered with pure Gold, and adorned with great ſtore of precious ſtones, was eſteemed to bee worth halfe a million of Ducats, and this Table, Muſe carrying with him, as if it had been all the Treaſure in Spaine, returned with his Armie ouer the Sea, and bent his courſe toward Cairaoan. And being in the meane ſpace ſent for by the Letters of Qualid Califa, hee ſayled into Egypt: but arriuing at Alexandria, it was told him by one Heſcian, brother vnto the ſaid Califa, that the Califa his brother was fallen into a moſt dangerous diſeaſe: wherefore hee wiſhed him not to goe preſently vnto Damaſco, for feare leaſt if the Califa died in the meane ſeaſon, thoſe rich and ſumptuous Spoyles ſhould be waſted and diſperſed to no end. But Muſe little regarding this counſell, proceeded on to Damaſco, and preſented all his Spoyles to the Califa, who within fiue dayes after deceaſed. After whom his brother ſucceeding Califa, depriued Muſe of his dignitie, and ſubſtituted one Iezul into his roome, whoſe ſonne, brother, and nephewes ſucceeding, gouerned the Citie of Cairaoan, till ſuch time as the Familie of Qualid was depriued of that dignitie, and one Elagleb was appointed Lieutenant, who gouerned not the Towne as a Califa: from that time the Mahumetan Califas leauing Damaſco, remoued vnto Bagaded, as wee find recorded in a certaine Chronicle. After the deceaſe of Elagleb, ſucceeded his ſonne, and the gouernment remained vnto his poſteritie for an hundred threeſcore and tenne yeares, till ſuch time as they were depriued thereof by one Mahdi Califa. But at the ſame time when Elagleb was Gouernour, the Citie of Cairaoan was ſo increaſed, both with inhabitants and buildings, that a Towne, called Recheda, was built next vnto it, where the Prince with his Nobles vſed to remaine. In his time alſo the Ile of Sicilia was wonne: for Elagleb ſent thither a certaine Captaine, called Halcama, who built vpon the ſaid Iland a Towne in ſtead of a Fort, calling it according to his owne name, Halcama; which name is vſed by the Sicilians euen till this preſent. Afterward this new Towne was beſieged by certaine people that came to aide the Sicilians. Whereupon one Aſed was ſent with an Armie, and ſo the Moores Forces being augmented, they conquered the reſidue of Sicilia, by which meanes the Dominions of Cairaoan began wonderfully to increaſe. The Citie of Cairaoan ſtandeth vpon a Sandie and Deſart Plaine, which beareth no Trees, nor yet any Corne at all. In this Citie for certaine yeares the ſtudie of the Mahumetan Law mightily flouriſhed, ſo that here were the moſt famous Lawyers in all Africa. It was at length deſtroyed, and replanted againe with new inhabitants, but it could neuer attaine vnto the former eſtate. At this preſent it is inhabited by none but Leather-dreſſers, who ſend their Leather vnto the Cities of Numidia, and exchange it alſo for Cloath of Europe.

A mile and a halfe to the South of El Hamma beginneth a certain Riuer of hot water to Spring, which being brought through the midſt of the Citie by certaine Chanels, is ſo deepe that it will reach vp to a mans nauell: howbeit, by reaſon of the extreme heate of the water, there are but few that wil enter thereinto. And yet the inhabitants vſe it for drinke, hauing ſet it a cooling almoſt an whole day. At length this Riuer not far from the Towne maketh a certain Lake, which is called the Lake of Leapers: for it is of wonderfull force to heale the diſeaſe of leproſie, and to cure leprous ſores: wherefore neere vnto it are diuers Cottages of Leapers, ſome of whom are reſtored to their health. The ſaid water taſteth in a manner like Brimſtone, ſo that it will nothing at all quench a mans thirſt, whereof I my ſelfe haue had often triall.

Gerbi being neere vnto the firme land of Africa, and conſiſting of a Plaine and Sandy ground, aboundeth exceedingly with Dates, Vines, Oliues, and other fruits, and containeth about eighteene miles in compaſſe.

Old Tripolis built alſo by the Romans, was after wonne by the Goths, and laſtly by the Mahumetans, in the time of Califa Homar the ſecond. Which Mahumetans hauing beſieged the Gouernour of Tripoli ſixe moneths together, compelled him at length to flee vnto Carthage. The Citizens were partly ſlaine, and partly carried captiue into Egypt and Arabia, as the moſt famous African Hiſtoriographer, Ibnu Rachich reporteth.

The old Citie of Tripolis.

After the deſtruction of old Tripolis, there was built another Citie of that name: which Citie being inuironed with moſt high and beautifull walls, but not very ſtrong, is ſituate vpon a Sandy Plaine, which yeeldeth great ſtore of Dates. The houſes of this City are moſt ſtately, in reſpect of the Houſes of Tunis; and here alſo euery trade and occupation hath a ſeuerall place. Weauers here are many. They haue no Wells nor Fountaines; but all their water is taken out of Ciſterns. Corne in this Citie is at an exceeding rate; for all the Fields of Tripoli are as ſandy and barren as the fields of Numidia. In this Citie were many faire Temples and Colledges built, and an Hoſpitall alſo for the maintenance of their owne poore people, and for the entertainment of ſtrangers. Their fare is very baſe and homely, being onely Betis or Dumplings made of Barley meale: for that Region affoordeth ſo ſmall quantitie euen of Barley, that he is accounted a wealthy man that hath a buſhell or two of corne in ſtore. The Citizens are moſt of them Merchants; for Tripolis ſtandeth neere vnto Numidia and Tunis, neither is there any Citie or Towne of account betweene it and Alexandria: neither is it farre diſtant from the Iles of Sicilia and Malta: and vnto the Port of Tripolis Venetian Ships yeerely reſort, and bring thither great ſtore of Merchandize. This Citie hath alwayes beene ſubiect vnto the King of Tunis: but when Abulhaſen the King of Fez beſieged Tunis, the King of Tunis was conſtrained with his Arabians to flee into the Deſarts. Howbeit, when Abulhaſen was conquered, the King of Tunis returned to his Kingdome: but his ſubiects began to oppoſe themſelues againſt him: and ſo that Common-wealth was afterward grieuouſly turmoyled with ciuill diſſenſions and warres. Whereof the King of Fez hauing intelligence, marched the fifth yeere of the ſaid ciuill warre with an armie againſt the Citie of Tunis, aud hauing vanquiſhed the King thereof, and conſtrained him to flee vnto Conſtantina, he ſo ſtraitly beſieged him, that the Citizens of Conſtantina ſeeing themſelues not able to withſtand the King of Fez, opened their Citie gates to him and to all his armie. Whereupon the King of Tunis was carried captiue vnto Fez, and was afterward kept a while priſoner in the Caſtle of Septa. In the meane ſeaſon Tripolis was by a Genoueſe Fleete of twenty ſailes ſurpriſed and ſacked, and the Inhabitants carried away captiue. Whereof the King of Fez being aduertiſed, gaue the Genoueſes fiftie thouſand Ducats, vpon condition, that he might enioy the Towne in peace. But the Genoueſes hauing ſurrendred the Towne, perceiued after their departure, that moſt part of their Ducats were counterfeit. Afterward, the King of Tunis beeing reſtored vnto his former libertie by Abuſelim King of Fez, returned home vnto his Kingdome, and ſo the gouernement thereof remained vnto him and his poſteritie, till Abubar the ſonne of Hutmen together with his young ſonne was ſlaine in the Caſtle of Tripolis by a nephew of his, who afterward vſurped the Kingdome: but he was ſlaine in a battell which he fought againſt Habdul Mumen, who preſently thereupon became Lord of Tripolis. After him ſucceeded his ſonne Zacharias, who within a few moneths dyed of the peſtilence. After Zacharias, Mucamen the ſonne of Heſen, and couſin to Zacharias was choſen King; who beginning to tyrannize ouer the Citizens was by them expelled out of his Kingdome: and afterward a certaine Citizen was aduanced vnto the Royall Throne, who gouerned very modeſtly. But the King which was before expelled, ſent an army of Souldiers againſt Tripolis, who looſing the field, were all of them put to flight. Afterward, the King that began to Raigne ſo modeſtly, prooued a very tyrant, and being murthered by his kinſmen, the people made choiſe of a certaine Nobleman, leading as then a Heremits life, and in a manner againſt his will appointed him their Gouernour: and ſo the gouernment of the Citie of Tripolis remained vnto him and his poſteritie, till ſuch time as King Ferdinando ſent Don Pedro de Nauarra againſt it: who on the ſudden encountring this City, carried away many captiues with him. The Gouernour of Tripolis and his ſonne in-law were ſent priſoners vnto Meſſina. Where, after certaine yeeres impriſonment, they were reſtored by the Emperour Charles the fift, vnto their former liberty, and returned vnto Tripolis, which Towne was afterward deſtroyed by the Chriſtians. The Caſtle of Tripolis being enuironed with moſt ſtrong walles, begin (as I vnderſtand) to be replanted with new Inhabitants.

IN Barca they haue not any Corne growing at all. But Corne and other neceſſaries are brought vnto them by Sea from Sicilia, which that euery of them may purchaſe, they are conſtrained to lay their ſonnes to gage, and then goe rob and rifle trauellers to redeeme them againe. Neuer did you heare of more cruell and bloody theeues: for after they haue robbed Merchants of all their goods and apparell, they powre warme milke downe their throats, hanging them vp by the heeles vpon ſome tree, and forcing them to caſt their gorge, wherein the lewd varlets ſearch diligently for gold, ſuſpecting that the Merchants ſwallowed vp their Crownes before they entred that dangerous Deſart.

The Arabians of Barca moſt cruell and bloody theeues.

Being about to deſcribe all the Cities and Townes of Numidia, I will firſt begin with Teſſet: which ancient Towne built by the Numidians, neere vnto the Libyan Deſarts, and enuironed with walles of Sun-dried Bricke, deſerueth ſcarcely the name of a Towne; and yet containeth foure hundred Families. It is compaſſed round about with ſandy Plaines, ſauing that neere vnto the Towne grow ſome ſtore of Dates, of Mill-ſeed, and of Barley, which the miſerable Towneſmen vſe for food. They are conſtrained alſo to pay large Tribute vnto the Arabians Inhabiting the next Deſarts. They exerciſe traffique in the land of Negroes and in Guzula, inſomuch, that they ſpend moſt of their time in forren Regions. They are of a blacke colour, and deſtitute of all learning. The women indeed teach their young children the firſt rudiments of learning, but before they can attaine to any perfection, they are put to labour, and to the Ploughtayle. The ſaid women are ſomewhat whiter then other women: ſome of them get their liuing by ſpinning and carding of wooll, and the reſidue ſpend their time in idleneſſe. Such as are accounted richeſt in this Region, poſſeſſe but very few Cattell. They Till their ground with an Horſe and a Camell, which kind of Plowing is obſerued throughout all Numidia.

Plowing with a Horſe and a Camell.

Guaden ſituate vpon the Numidian Deſart, neere vnto Libia, is Inhabited by moſt miſerable and groſſe people. Heere groweth nothing but Dates: and the Inhabitants ar at ſuch enmitie with their neighbours, that it is dangerous for them to goe abroad. Howbeit, they giue themſelues to hunting, and take certaine wilde Beaſts called Elamth, and Oſtriches, neither doe they eate any other fleſh. All their Goats they reſerue for milke. And theſe people alſo are blacke of colour.

The village of Guaden.

The beaſt called Elamth.

The Prouince of Dara beginneth at Mount Atlas, extendeth it ſelfe Southward by the Deſarts of Libia, almoſt two hundred and fiftie miles, and the breadth thereof is very narrow. All the Inhabitants dwell vpon a certaine Riuer which is called by the name of the Prouince. This Riuer ſometime ſo ouerfloweth, that a man would thinke it to be a Sea, but in Summer it ſo diminiſheth, that any one may paſſe ouer it on foot. If ſo be it ouerfloweth about the beginning of Aprill, it bringeth great plenty vnto the whole Region: if not, there followeth great ſcarcitie of Corne. Vpon the banke of this Riuer there are ſundry Villages and Hamlets, and diuers Caſtles alſo, which are enuironed with walles made of Sunne-dried Bricke and Mortar. All their Beames and Planchers conſiſt of Date-trees, being notwithſtanding vnfit for the purpoſe; for the wood of Date-trees is not ſolid, but flexible and ſpungie. On either ſide of the ſaid Riuer for the ſpace of fiue or ſixe miles, the fields abound exceedingly with Dates, which with good keeping will laſt many yeeres: and as heere are diuers kinds of Dates, ſo they are ſold at ſundry prices: for a buſhell of ſome is woorth a Ducat, but others wherewith they feede their Horſes and Camels, are ſcarce of a quarter ſo much value. Of Date-trees ſome are male and female: the male bring foorth flowers onely, and the female fruit: but the flowers of the female will not open, vnleſſe the boughes and flowers of the male be ioyned vnto them: And if they bee not ioyned, the Dates will prooue ſtarke naught, and containe great ſtones. The Inhabitants of Dara liue vpon Barley and other groſſe meate: neither may they eate no bread but onely vpon Feſtiuall dayes. Their Caſtles are Inhabited by Gold-ſmithes and other Artificers, and ſo are all the Regions lying in the way from Tombuto to Fez: in this Prouince alſo there are three or foure proper Townes, frequented Merchants and ſtrangers, and containing many Shops and Temples. But the principall Towne called Beni Sabih, and Inhabited with moſt valiant and liberall people, is diuided into two parts, either part hauing a ſeuerall Captaine or Gouernour: which Gouernours are oftentimes at great diſſenſion, and eſpecially when they moiſten their arable Grounds, by reaſon that they are ſo skanted of water. A Merchant they will moſt courteouſly entertaine a whole yeere together, and then friendly diſmiſſing him, they require nought at his hands, but will accept ſuch liberality as he thinkes good to beſtow vpon them. The ſaid Gouernours ſo often as they fall a skirmiſhing, hire the next Arabians to aide them, allowing them daily halfe a Ducat for their pay, and ſometimes more, and giuing them their allowance euery day. In time of peace they trim their Harquebuzes, Hand-guns, and other weapons: neither ſaw I euer (to my remembrance) more cunning Harquebuziers then at this place. In this Prouince groweth great ſtore of Indico, being an herbe like vnto the wilde woad, and this herbe they exchange with the Merchants of Fez and Tremiſen for other wares. Corne is very ſcarce among them, and is brought thither from Fez and other Regions, neither haue they any great ſtore of Goats or Horſes, vnto whom in ſtead of Prouender they giue Dates, and a kind of herbe alſo which groweth in the Kingdome of Naples, and is called by the Neapolitans Farſa. They feed their Goats with the Nuts or Stones of their Dates beaten to powder, whereby they grow exceeding fat, and yeeld great quantity of milke. Their owne food is the fleſh of Camels and Goats, being vnſauory and diſpleaſant in taſte. Likewiſe they kill and eate Oſtriches, the fleſh whereof taſteth not much vnlike to the fleſh of a dunghill-cocke, ſauing that it is more tough and made of a ſtronger ſmell, eſpecially the Oſtriches legge: which conſiſteth of ſlime fleſh. Their women are faire, fat, and courteous: and they keepe diuers ſlaues which are brought out of the land of Negroes.

This Territory extending it ſelfe along the Riuer of Ziz from North to South almoſt twentie miles, contayneth about three hundred and fiftie Caſtles, beſides Villages and Hamlets: three of which Caſtles are more principall then the reſt. The firſt called Tenegent, and conſiſting of a thouſand and moe Families, ſtandeth neere vnto the Citie of Segelmeſſe, and is inhabited with great ſtore of Artificers. The ſecond called Tebuhaſan, ſtandeth about eight miles to the South of Tenegent, being furniſhed alſo with great numbers of Inhabitants, and ſo frequented with Merchants, that there is not in that reſpect the like place to bee found in all the whole Region beſides. The third called Mamun, is reſorted vnto by ſundry Merchants, both Iewes and Moores.

Infinite numbers of Scorpions.

Theſe three Caſtles haue three ſeuerall Gouernours, who are at great diſſention among themſelues. They will oftentimes deſtroy one anothers Chanels, whereby their fields are watered, which cannot without great coſt be repayred againe. They will ſtow the Palme-trees alſo to the very ſtockes: and vnto them a company of lewd Arabians aſſociate themſelues. They Coyne both Siluer and Gold money: but their Gold is not very ſpeciall. Their Siluer Coyne weigheth foure graines a piece, eightie of which pieces are eſteemed to bee worth one piece of their Gold Coyne. The Iewes and Arabians pay exceſſiue Tribute here. Some of their principall men are exceeding rich, and vſe great Traffique vnto the Land of Negros: whither they tranſport Wares of Barbarie, exchanging the ſame for Gold and Slaues. The Territory of Segelmeſſe liue vpon Dates, except it be in certaine places where ſome Corne grew. Here are infinite numbers of Scorpions, but no Flyes at all. In Summer time this Region is extremely hot, and then are the Riuers ſo deſtitute of water, that the people are conſtrayned to draw ſalt water out of certaine Pits. The ſaid Territory contayneth in circuit about eighty miles, all which, after the deſtruction of Segelmeſſe, the Inhabitants with ſmall coſt walled round about, to the end they might not be moleſted by continuall inrodes of Horſemen. While they liued all at vnitie and concord, they retayned their libertie: but ſince they fell to mutuall debate, their wall was razed, and each faction inuited the Arabians to helpe them, vnder whom by little and little they were brought in ſubiection.

The Towne or Citie of Segelmeſſe.

The common people together with one of our African Coſmographers, called Bicri, ſuppoſe that the Towne of Segelmeſſe was built by Alexander the Great, for the reliefe of his ſicke and wounded Souldiers. Which opinion ſeemeth not probable to me: for I could neuer reade that Alexander the Great came into any part of theſe Regions. This Towne was ſituate vpon a Plaine neere vnto the Riuer of Ziz, and was enuironed with moſt ſtately and high wals, euen as in many places it is to be ſeene at this preſent. When the Mahumetans came firſt into Africa, the Inhabitants of this Towne were ſubiect vnto the Family of Zeneta; which Family was at length diſpoſſeſſed of that authority by King Ioſeph the Sonne of Teſſin, of the Family of Luntuna. The Towne it ſelfe was very gallantly built, and the Inhabitants were rich, and had great Traffique vnto the Land of Negros. Here ſtood ſtately Temples and Colledges alſo, and great ſtore of Conduits, the water whereof was drawne out of the Riuer by Wheeles. The Ayre in this place is moſt temperate and holeſome, ſauing that in Winter it aboundeth with ouermuch moyſture.

The Caſtle of Vmmelhefen.

Vmmelhefen is a forlorne and baſe Caſtle, founded by the Arabians alſo, fiue and twentie miles from Segelmeſſe vpon a Deſart, directly in the way from Segelmeſſe to Dara. It is enuironed with blacke wals, and continually garded by the Arabians. All Merchants that paſſe by, pay one fourth part of a Duckat for euery Camels lode. My ſelfe trauelling this way vpon a time in the company of fourteene Iewes, and being demanded how many there were of vs, wee ſaid thirteene, but after I began particularly to reckon, I found the fourteenth and the fifteenth man amongſt vs, whom the Arabians would haue kept Priſoners, had wee not affirmed them to bee Mahumetans: howbeit not crediting our words, they examined them in the Law of Mahumet, which when they perceiued them indeed to vnderſtand, they permitted them to depart.

The Caſtles of Fighig.

The three Caſtles of Fighig ſtand vpon a certaine Deſart, maruellouſly abounding with Dates. The women of this place weaue a kind of cloth in forme of a Carpet, which is ſo fine, that a man would take it to be Silke, and this Cloth they ſell at an exceſſiue rate at Fez, Telenſin, and other places of Barbarie. The Inhabitants being men of an excellent wit, doe part of them vſe Traffique to the Land of Negros, and the reſidue become Students at Fez: and ſo ſoone as they haue attayned to the degree of a Doctor, they returne to Numidia, where they are made either Prieſts or Senators, and proue moſt of them men of great wealth and reputation. From Segelmeſſe, the ſaid Caſtles are diſtant almoſt an hundred and fiftie miles Eaſtward.

The Region of Tegorarin.

This great and large Region of Tegorarin in the Numidian Deſart, ſtanding about an hundred and twentie miles Eaſtward of Teſebit, contayneth fiftie Caſtles, and aboue an hundred Villages, and yeeldeth great plentie of Dates. The Inhabitants are rich, and haue ordinarie Traffique to the Land of Negros. Their fields are very apt for Corne, and yet by reaſon of their extreme drought, they ſtand in need of continuall watering and dunging. They allow vnto ſtrangers houſes to dwell in, requiring no money for rent but onely their dung, which they keepe moſt charily: yea, they take it in ill part if any ſtranger eaſeth himſelfe without the doores. Fleſh is very ſcarce among them: for their ſoyle is ſo dry, that it will ſcarce nouriſh any Cattell at all: they keepe a few Goats indeed for their Milkes ſake: but the fleſh that they eate is of Camels, which the Arabians bring vnto their Markets to ſell: they mingle their meate with ſalt Tallow, which is brought into this Region from Fez and Tremizen.

Iewes expelled.

There were in times paſt many rich Iewes in this Region, who by the meanes of a certaine Mahumetan Preacher, were at length expelled, and a great part of them ſlaine by the ſeditious people; and that in the very ſame yeare when the Iewes were expelled out of Spaine and Sicily.

The Towne of Techort.

Hoſpitalitie and loue to ſtrangers.

The ancient Towne of Techort was built by the Numidians vpon a certaine Hill, by the foot whereof runneth a Riuer, vpon which Riuer ſtandeth a draw-bridge. The wall of this Towne was made of free ſtone and lime, but that part which is next vnto the Mountayne hath inſtead of a wall an impregnable Rocke oppoſite againſt it: this Towne is diſtant fiue hundred miles Southward from the Mediterran Sea, and about three hundred miles from Tegorarim. Families it contayneth to the number of fiue and twenty hundred: all the houſes are built of Sunne dryed Brickes, except their Temple which is ſomewhat more ſtately. Heere dwell great ſtore both of Gentlemen and Artificers: and becauſe they haue great abundance of Dates, and are deſtitute of Corne, the Merchants of Conſtantina exchange Corne with them for their Dates. All ſtrangers they fauour exceedingly, and friendly diſmiſſe them without paying of ought. They had rather match their Daughters vnto ſtrangers, then to their owne Citizens: and for a Dowry they giue ſome certaine portion of Land, as it is accuſtomed in ſome places of Europe. So great and ſurpaſſing is their liberalitie, that they will heape many gifts vpon ſtrangers, albeit they are ſure neuer to ſee them againe.

The Gouernour at this preſent called Habdulla, is a valiant and liberall yong Prince, and moſt courteous vnto ſtrangers, whereof I my ſelfe conuerſing with him for certayne dayes, had good experience.

This Region is extremely hot, ſandie and deſtitute both of Water and Corne: which wants are partly ſupplyed by their abundance of Dates. It contayneth to the number of fiue Townes and many Villages, all which we purpoſe in order to deſcribe.

The Towne of Peſcara.

Deadly Scorpions.

Their ſoyle in Peſcara, yeeldeth nought but Dates. They haue beene gouerned by diuers Princes; for they were a while ſubiect vnto the Kings of Tunis, and that to the death of King Hutmen, after whom ſucceeded a Mahumetan Prieſt: neyther could the Kings of Tunis euer ſince that time recouer the Dominion of Peſcara. Here are great abundance of Scorpions, and it is preſent death to bee ſtung by them: wherefore all the Towneſmen in a manner depart into the Countrey in Summer time, where they remayne till the moneth of Nouember.

Deuſen.

Not farre from Deuſen are diuers Monuments of Antiquitie like vnto Sepulchres, wherein are found ſundry pieces of Siluer Coyne, adorned with certayne Letters and Hieroglyphicall Figures, the interpretation whereof I could neuer find out.

The Towne of Caphſa.

The ancient Towne of Caphſa built alſo by the Romanes, had for certayne yeeres a Gouernour of their owne: but afterward being ſacked by one Hucba a Captaine of Hutmen Califa, the wals thereof were razed to the ground; but the Caſtle as yet remayneth, and is of great force; for the wall thereof being fiue and twentie Cubits high, and fiue Cubits thicke, is made of excellent ſtones, like vnto the ſtones of Veſpaſians Amphitheatre at Rome. Afterward the Towne wals were re-edified, and were deſtroyed againe by Manſor, who hauing ſlaine the Gouernour of the Towne and all the Inhabitants, appointed a new Gouernour ouer the ſame place. Now this Towne is very populous, all the houſes thereof, except the Temple and a few other buildings, being very deformed and baſe, and the ſtreets are paued with blacke ſtones, like vnto the ſtreets of Naples and Florence. The poore Inhabitants are continually oppreſſed with the exactions of the King of Tunis. In the middeſt of the Towne are certaine ſquare, large, and deepe Fountaines walled round about, the water whereof is hot and vnfit to be drunke, vnleſſe it be ſet an houre or two a cooling. The Ayre of this place is very vnholeſome, inſomuch that the greateſt part of the Inhabitants are continually ſicke of Feuers. People they are of a rude and illiberall diſpoſition, and vnkind vnto ſtrangers: wherefore they are had in great contempt by all other Africans. Not farre from this Towne are fields abounding with Dates, Oliues, and Pome-citrons: and the Dates and Oliues there are the beſt in all the whole Prouince: heere is likewiſe moſt excellent Oyle. The Inhabitants make themſelues Shooes of Buckes Leather.

Water ſcarce.

Hauing hitherto deſcribed all the Regions of Numidia, let vs now proceed vnto the deſcription of Libya; which is diuided into fiue parts, as we ſignified in the beginning of this our Diſcourſe. We will therefore beginne at the dry and forlorne Deſart of Zanhaga, which bordereth Weſtward vpon the Ocean Sea, and extendeth Eaſtward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza, Northward it abutteth vpon Sus, Haccha, and Dara, Regions of Numidia; and Southward it ſtretcheth to the Land of Negros, adioyning it ſelfe vnto the Kingdomes of Gualata and Tombuto. Water is here to be found ſcarce in an hundred miles trauell, beeing ſalt and vnſauourie, and drawne out of deepe Wels, eſpecially in the way from Segelmeſſe to Tombuto. Heere are great ſtore of wilde beaſts and creeping things, whereof wee will make mention in place conuenient. In this Region there is a barren Deſart called Azaoad, wherein neyther water nor any Habitations are to be found in the ſpace of an hundred miles; beginning from the Well of Azaoad, to the Well of Araoan, which is diſtant from Tombuto about one hundred and fiftie miles. Here both for lacke of water and extremitie of heate, great numbers of men and beaſt daily periſh.

Heate and drought.

Great ſtore of Manna.

Not farre from Agadez, there is found great ſtore of Manna, which the Inhabitants gather in certaine little Veſſels, carrying it while it is new vnto the Market of Agadez: and this Manna beeing mingled with water they eſteeme very daintie and precious Drinke. They put it alſo into their Pottage, and beeing ſo taken, it hath a maruellous force of refrigerating or cooling, which is the cauſe that here are ſo few Diſeaſes; albeit, the Ayre of Tombuto and Agadez be moſt vnholſome and corrupt. This Deſart ſtretcheth from North to South almoſt three hundred miles.

Leuata, Berdoa, and others are omitted.

The reſidue of the Libyan Deſart, that is to ſay, from Angela to the Riuer of Nilus is inhabited by certayne Arabians and Africans, commonly called Leuata: and this is the extreme Eaſterly part of the Deſarts of Libya.

The Region of Nun.

This Region bordering vpon the Ocean Sea, contayneth many Villages and Hamlets, and is inhabited with moſt beggerly people. It ſtandeth betweene Numidia and Libya, but ſomewhat neerer vnto Libya. Here groweth neyther Barley nor any other Corne. Some Dates heere are, but very vnſauourie. The Inhabitants are continually moleſted by the Arabians inuaſions: and ſome of them traffique in the Kingdome of Gualata.

The Region of Tegaza.
Salt Mines.
Tombuto.

In the Region of Tegaza, is great ſtore of Salt digged, being whiter then any Marble. This Salt is taken out of certaine Caues or Pits, at the entrance whereof ſtand their Cottages that worke in the Salt Mines. And theſe Workmen are all ſtrangers, who ſell the Salt which they digge vnto certaine Merchants, that carrie the ſame vpon Camels to the Kingdome of Tombuto, where there would otherwiſe be extreme ſcarcitie of Salt. Neyther haue the ſaid Diggers of Salt any victuals but ſuch as the Merchants bring vnto them: for they are diſtant from all inhabited places, almoſt twentie dayes Iourney, inſomuch, that oftentimes they periſh for lacke of food, when as the Merchants come not in due time vnto them: Moreouer, the South-eaſt wind doth ſo often blind them, that they cannot liue here without great perill. I my ſelfe continued three dayes amongſt them, all which time I was conſtrayned to drinke Salt water drawne out of certaine Wels not farre from the Salt Pits.

The Region Berdoa.
A whole Carauan conducted by a blind Guide who lead them by ſcent onely; as at this preſent the Carauans of Maroco are conducted ouer the Libyan Deſarts to Tombuto.

Berdoea, a Region ſituate in the midſt of the Libyan Deſart, and ſtanding almoſt fiue hundred miles from Nilus, contayneth three Caſtles and fiue or ſixe Villages, abounding with moſt excellent Dates. And the ſaid three Caſtles were diſcouered eighteene yeeres agoe, by one Hamar, in manner following: the Carauan of Merchants wandring out of the direct way, had a certaine blind man in their company which was acquainted with all thoſe Regions: this blind Guide riding foremoſt vpon his Camell, commanded ſome Sand to be giuen him at euery miles end, by the ſmell whereof hee declared the ſituation of the place: but when they were come within fortie miles of this Region, the blind man ſmelling of the Sand, affirmed, that they were not farre from ſome places inhabited; which ſome beleeued not, for they knew that they were diſtant from Egypt foure hundred and eightie miles, ſo that they tooke themſelues to bee neerer vnto Angela. Howbeit, within three dayes they found the ſaid three Caſtles, the Inhabitants whereof wondering at the approach of ſtrangers, and being greatly aſtonied, preſently ſhut all their Gates, and would giue the Merchants no water to quench their extreme thirſt. But the Merchants by mayne force entred, and hauing gotten water ſufficient, betooke themſelues againe to their Iourney.

The Region of Alguechet.

Alguechet alſo being a Region of the Lybian Deſart, is from Egypt an hundred and twentie miles diſtant. Here are three Caſtles and many Villages abounding with Dates. The Inhabitants are blacke, vile, and couetous people, and yet exceeding rich: for they dwell in the midway betweene Egypt and Gaoga. They haue a Gouernour of their owne, notwithſtanding they pay Tribute vnto the next Arabians.

§. VII.

Extracts taken out of IOHN LEO his ſeuenth Booke of the Hiſtorie of Africa, wherein he intreateth of the Land of Negros, and of the Confines of Egypt.

Bichri and Meſhudi.

OVr ancient Chroniclers of Africa, to wit, Bichri and Meſhudi, knew nothing in the Land of Negros, but onely the Regions of Guechet and Cano: for in their time all other places of the Land of Negros were vndiſcouered. But in the yeere of the Hegeira three hundred and eightie, by the meanes of a certaine Mahumetan which came into Barbarie, the reſidue of the ſaid Land was found out, beeing as then inhabited by great numbers of people, which liued a brutiſh and ſauage life, without any King, Gouernour, Common-wealth, or knowledge of Husbandry. Clad they were in skinnes of beaſts, neither had they any peculiar wiues: in the day time they kept their Cattell; and when night came they reſorted ten or twelue, both men and women into one Cottage together, vſing hayrie skinnes in ſtead of beds, and each man chooſing his Leman which hee had moſt fancie vnto. Warre they wage againſt no other Nation, nor yet are deſirous to trauell out of their owne Countrey. Some of them performe great adoration vnto the Sunne-riſing: others, namely the people of Gualata, worſhip the fire: and ſome others, to wit, the Inhabitants of Gaoga, approach (after the Egyptians manner) neerer vnto the Chriſtian Faith. Theſe Negros were firſt ſubiect vnto King Ioſeph the Founder of Maroco, and afterward vnto the fiue Nations of Libya; of whom they learned the Mahumetan Law, and diuers needfull handi-crafts: a while after when the Merchants of Barbarie began to reſort vnto them with Merchandize, they learned the Barbarian language alſo. But the foreſaid fiue People or Nations of Libya diuided this land ſo among themſelues, that euery third part of each Nation poſſeſſed one Region. Howbeit, the King of Tombuto that now raigneth, called Abuacre Izchia, is a Negro by birth: this Abuacre after the deceaſe of the former King, who was a Lybyan borne, ſlue all his ſonnes, and ſo vſurped the Kingdome. And hauing by warres for the ſpace of fifteene yeere conquered many large Dominions, hee then concluded a league with all Nations, and went on Pilgrimage to Mecca, in which Iourney hee ſo conſumed his Treaſure, that he was conſtrained to borrow great ſummes of money of other Princes. Moreouer, the fifteene Kingdomes of the land of Negros knowen to vs, are all ſituate vpon the Riuer of Niger, and vpon other Riuers which fall therinto. And all the land of Negros ſtandeth betweene two vaſt Deſarts, for on the one ſide lyeth the maine Deſart betweene Numidia and it, which extendeth it ſelfe vnto this very land: and the South ſide thereof adioyneth vpon another Deſart, which ſtretcheth from thence to the maine Ocean: in which Deſart are infinite Nations vnknowen to vs, both by reaſon of the huge diſtance of place, and alſo in regard of the diuerſitie of Languages and Religions. They haue no traffique at all with our people, but we haue heard oftentimes of their traffique with the Inhabitants of the Ocean Sea ſhoare.

The Negros ſubiect vnto Ioſeph King of Maroco.

Niger.

The Region of Gualata in regard of others is very ſmall: for it containeth onely three great Villages, with certaine Granges and fields of Dates. From Nun it is diſtant Southward about three hundred, from Tombuto Northward fiue hundred, and from the Ocean Sea about two hundred miles. In this Region the people of Libya, while they were Lords of the land of Negros, ordained their chiefe Princely ſeate: and then great ſtore of Barbarie Merchants frequented Gualata: but afterward in the Raigne of the Mightie and rich Prince Heli, the ſaid Merchants leauing Gualata, began to reſort vnto Tombuto and Gago, which was the occaſion that the Region of Gualata grew extreme beggerly. The language of this Region is called Sungai, and the Inhabitants are blacke people, and moſt friendly vnto ſtrangers. In my time this Region was conquered by the King of Tombuto, and the Prince thereof fled into the Deſarts, whereof the King of Tombuto hauing intelligence, and fearing leaſt the Prince would returne with all the people of the Deſarts, graunted him peace, conditionally that he ſhould pay a great yeerely Tribute vnto him, and ſo the ſaid Prince hath remained Tributarie to the King of Tombuto vntill this preſent. The people agree in manners and faſhions with the Inhabitants of the next Deſart. Heere groweth ſome quantity of Mil-ſeed, and great ſtore of a round and white kinde of pulſe, the like whereof I neuer ſaw in Europe; but fleſh is extreme ſcarce among them. Both the men and the women doe ſo couer their heads, that all their countenance is almoſt hidden. Heere is no forme of a Common-wealth, nor yet any Gouernours or Iudges, but the people lead a moſt miſerable life.

A deſcription of the Kingdome of Gualato.

This round & white pulſe is called Maiz in the Weſt Indies.

The Kingdome called by the Merchants of our Nation Gheneoa, by the naturall Inhabitants thereof Genni, and by the Portugals and other people of Europe Ghinea, ſtandeth in the midſt betweene Gualata on the North, Tombuto on the Eaſt, and the Kingdome of Melli on the South. In length it containeth almoſt fiue hundred miles, and extended two hundred and fifty miles along the Riuer of Niger, and bordereth vpon the Ocean Sea in the ſame place, where Niger falleth into the ſaid Sea. This place exceedingly aboundeth with Barley, Rice, Cattell, Fiſhes, and Cotten: and their Cotten they ſell vnto the Merchants of Barbarie, for cloth of Europe, for Brazen veſſels, for Armour, and other ſuch commodities. Their Coine is of Gold without any ſtampe or inſcription at all: they haue certaine Iron-money alſo, which they vſe about matters of ſmall value, ſome peeces whereof weigh a pound, ſome halfe a pound, and ſome one quarter of a pound. In all this Kingdome there is no fruit to be found but only Dates, which are brought hither either out of Gualata or Numidia. Heere is neither Towne nor Caſtle, but a certaine great Village onely, wherein the Prince of Ghinea, together with his Prieſts, Doctors, Merchants, and all the principall men of the Region inhabite. The walles of their houſes are built of Chalke, and the roofes are couered with Strawe: the Inhabitants are clad in blacke or blew Cotten, wherewith they couer their heads alſo: but the Prieſts and Doctors of their Law goe apparelled in white Cotten. This Region during the three moneths of Iuly, Auguſt, and September, is yeerely enuironed with the ouerflowings of Niger in manner of an Iland; all which time the Merchants of Tombuto conueigh their Merchandize hither in certaine Canoas or narrow Boats made of one tree, which they rowe all the day long, but at night they binde them to the ſhoare, and lodge themſelues vpon the land. This Kingdome was ſubiect in times paſt vnto a certaine people of Libya, and became afterward Tributarie vnto King Soni Heli, after whom ſucceeded Soni Heli Izchia, who kept the Prince of this Region pri-

The Kingdom of Melli.

The Region of Melli extending it ſelfe almoſt three hundred miles along the ſide of a Riuer which falleth into Niger, bordereth Northward vpon the Region laſt deſcribed, Southward vpon certaine Deſarts and drie Mountaines, Weſtward, vpon huge Woods and Forreſts, ſtretching to the Ocean Sea ſhoare, And Eaſtward vpon the Territorie of Gago. In this Kingdome there is a large and ample Village containing to the number of ſixe thouſand or moe Families, and called Melli, whereof the whole Kingdome is ſo named. And heere the King hath his place of Reſidence. The Region it ſelfe yeeldeth great abundance of Corne, Fleſh, and Cotton. Heere are many Artificers and Merchants in all places: and yet the King honorably entertaineth all ſtrangers. The Inhabitants are rich, and haue plenty of wares. Heere are great ſtore of Temples, Prieſts, and Profeſſors, which Profeſſors read their Lectures onely in the Temples, becauſe they haue no Colledges at all. The people of this Region excell all other Negros in wit, ciuility, and induſtry; and were the firſt that embraced the Law of Mahumet, at the ſame time when the Vncle of Ioſeph the King of Maroco was their Prince, and the Gouernment remained for a while vnto his poſteritie: at length Izchia ſubdued the Prince of this Region, and made him his Tributarie, and ſo oppreſſed him with grieuous exactions, that he was ſcarce able to maintaine his Family.

Tombuto is ſo called of a certaine Towne ſo called, which (they ſay) King Menſe Suleiman founded in the yeere of the Hegeira 610. and it is ſituate within twelue miles of a certaine branch of Niger, all the houſes whereof are now changed into Cottages built of Chalke, and couered with Thatch. Howbeit, there is a moſt ſtately Temple to be ſeene, the walles whereof are made of ſtone and lime; and a Princely Palace alſo built by a moſt excellent workeman of Granada. Heere are many ſhops of Artificers, and Merchants, and eſpecially of ſuch as weaue Linnen or Cotten cloth. And hither doe the Barbarie Merchants bring cloth of Europe. All the women of this Region except Maid-ſeruants goe with their faces couered, and ſell all neceſſary victuals. The Inhabitants, and eſpecially ſtrangers there reſiding, are exceeding rich, inſomuch, that the King that * now is, married both his daughters vnto two rich Merchants. Heere are many welles, containing moſt ſweet water; and ſo often as the Riuer Niger ouerfloweth, they conueigh the water thereof by certaine ſluces into the Towne. Corne, Cattell, Milke, and Butter, this Region yeeldeth in great abundance: but ſalt is very ſcarce heere; for it is brought hither by land from Tegaza, which is fiue hundred miles diſtant. When I my ſelfe was heere, I ſaw one Camels load of Salt ſold for eightie Duckats. The rich King of Tombuto hath many Plates and Scepters of Gold, ſome whereof weigh one thouſand and three hundred pounds: and he keepes a magnificent and well furniſhed Court. When he trauelleth any whither he rideth vpon a Camell, which is lead by ſome of his Noblemen; and ſo he doth likewiſe when hee goeth to warfare, and all his Souldiers ride vpon Horſes. Whoſoeuer will ſpeake vnto this King muſt firſt fall downe before his feet, and then taking vp earth, muſt ſprinkle it vpon his owne head and ſhoulders: which cuſtome is ordinarily obſerued by them that neuer ſaluted the King before, or come as Ambaſſadours from other Princes. He hath alwayes three thouſand Horſemen, and a great number of footmen that ſhoot poyſoned arrowes, attending vpon him. He ſo deadly hateth all Iewes, that he will not admit any into his Citie: and whatſoeuer Barbarie Merchants he vnderſtandeth to haue any dealings with the Iewes, he preſently cauſeth their goods to be confiſcate. Heere are great ſtore of Doctors, Iudges, Prieſts, and other learned men, that are bountifully maintained at the Kings coſt and charges. And hither are brought diuers Manuſcripts or written Bookes out of Barbarie, which are ſold for more money then any other Merchandize. The Coine of Tombuto is of Gold without any ſtampe or ſuperſcription: but in matters of ſmall value they vſe certaiue ſhels brought hither out of the Kingdome of Perſia, foure hundred of which ſhels are woorth a Duckat: and ſixe peeces of their Golden Coine with two third parts weigh an ounce. The Inhabitants are people of a gentle and cheerefull diſpoſition, and ſpend a great part of the night in ſinging and dancing through all the ſtreets of the Citie: they keepe great ſtore of men and women-ſlaues, and their Towne is much in danger of fire: at my ſecond being there halfe the Towne almoſt was burnt in fiue houres ſpace. Without the Suburbs there are no Gardens nor Orchards at all.

The Towne of Cabra.

Cabra a large Towne built without walles in manner of a Village, ſtandeth about twelue miles from Tombuto vpon the Riuer Niger: and heere ſuch Merchants as trauell vnto the Kingdomes of Ghinea and Melli embarke themſelues. Neither are the people or buildings of this Towne any whit inferiour to the people and buildings of Tombuto: and hither the Negros reſort in great numbers by water. In this Towne the King of Tombuto appointeth a Iudge to decide all controuerſies: for it was tedious to goe thither ſo oft as need ſhould require. I my ſelfe am acquainted with Abu Bacr, ſirnamed Pargama, the Kings Brother, who is blacke in colour, but moſt beautifull in mind and conditions. Heere breed many diſeaſes which exceedingly diminiſh the people; that by reaſon of the fond and loathſome mixture of their meates; for they mingle Fiſh, Milke, Butter, and Fleſh altogether. And this is the ordinary food alſo in Tombuto.

The great Towne of Gago being vnwalled alſo, is diſtant Southward of Tombuto almoſt foure hundred miles, and enclineth ſomewhat to the South-Eaſt. The houſes thereof are but meane, except thoſe wherein the King and his Courtiers remaine. Here are exceeding rich Merchants: and hither continually reſort great ſtore of Negros, which buy Cloath here brought out of Barbarie and Europe. This Towne aboundeth with Corne and Fleſh, but is much deſtitute of Wine, Trees, and Fruites. Howbeit, here is plenty of Melons, Citrons, and Rice: here are many Wells alſo containing moſt ſweet and wholſome water. Here is likewiſe a certaine place where ſlaues are to be ſold, eſpecially vpon ſuch dayes as the Merchants vſe to aſſemble; and a young ſlaue of fifteene yeares age is ſold for ſixe Duckats, and ſo are children ſold alſo. The King of this Region hath a certaine priuate Palace, wherein hee maintaineth a great number of Coucubines and Slaues, which are kept by Eunuches: and for the guard of his owne perſon, he keepeth a ſufficient troope of Horſemen and Footmen. Betweene the firſt Gate of the Palace and the inner part thereof, there is a place walled round about, wherein the King himſelfe decideth all his ſubiects controuerſies: and albeit, the King be in this function moſt diligent, and performeth all things thereto appertaining, yet hath he about him his Counſellors, and other Officers; as namely, his Secretaries, Treaſurers, Factors, and Auditors. It is a wonder to ſee what plenty of Merchandize is daily brought hither, and how coſtly and ſumptuous all things be. Horſes bought in Europe for ten Duckats, are here ſold againe for forty, and ſometimes for fifty Duckats a piece. There is not any Cloath of Europe ſo courſe, which will not here be ſold for foure Ducats an ell; and if it be any thing fine, they will giue fifteene Duckats for an ell: and an ell of the Scarlet of Venice, or of Turkie Cloath is here worth thirty Duckats. A Sword is here valued at three or foure Crownes, and ſo likewiſe are Spurs, Bridles, with other like commodities; and Spices alſo are ſold at an high rate: but of all other commodities, Salt is moſt extremely deare. The reſidue of this Kingdome containeth nought but Villages and Hamlets inhabited by Husbandmen and Shepheards, who in Winter couer their bodies with beaſts skins; but in Summer they goe all naked ſaue their priuie members: and ſometimes they weare vpon their feete certaine ſhooes made of Camels Leather. They are ignorant and rude people, and you ſhall ſcarce find one learned man in the ſpace of an hundred miles. They are continually burthened with grieuous exactions, ſo that they haue ſcarce any thing remaining to liue vpon.

Guber ſtandeth Eaſtward of the Kingdom of Gago almoſt three hundred miles; between which two Kingdomes lieth a vaſt Deſart, being much deſtitute of water, for it is about forty miles diſtant from Niger. The Kingdome of Guber is enuironed with high Mountaines, and containeth many Villages inhabited by Shepheards, and other Heardſmen. Abundance of Cattell here are both great and ſmall: but of a lower ſtature then the Cattell in other places. At the inundation of Niger all the fields of this Region are ouerflowed, and then the inhabitants caſt their ſeed into the water onely. In this Region there is a certaine great Village containing almoſt ſixe thouſand Families, being inhabited with all kind of Merchants; and here was in times paſt the Court of a certaine King, who in my time was ſlaine by Izchia the King of Tombuto, and his ſonnes were gelt, and accounted among the number of the Kings Eunuchs.

He which pleaſeth the inhabitants of the Deſart beſt, is ſure to be King of Agadez. The reſidue of this Kingdome lying Southward is inhabited by Shepheards and Heardſmen, who dwel in certaine Cottages made of boughes, which cottages they carrie about vpon Oxen from place to place. They erect their Cottages alwaies in the ſame field where they determine to feede their cattell; like as the Arabians alſo doe.

Cottages moueable.

The great Prouince of Cano ſtandeth Eaſtward of the Riuer Niger almoſt fiue hundred miles. The greateſt part of the inhabitants dwelling in Villages are ſome of them Heardſmen, and others Husbandmen. Here groweth abundance of Corne, of Rice, and of Cotton. Alſo here are many Deſarts and wild woodie Mountaines containing many Springs of water. In theſe Woods grow plenty of wild Citrons and Lemons, which differ not much in taſte from the beſt of all. In the midſt of this Prouince ſtandeth a Towne called by the ſame name, the walles and houſes whereof are built for the moſt part of a kind of Chalke, The inhabitants are rich Merchants, and moſt ciuill people. Their King was in times paſt of great puiſſance, and had mighty troopes of Horſemen at his command; but he hath ſince been conſtrained to pay tribute vnto the Kings of Zegzeg and Caſena. Afterward, Iſchia the King of Tombuto faining friendſhip vnto the two foreſaid Kings treacherouſly ſlew them both. And then hee waged warre againſt the King of Cano, whom after a long ſiedge he took, and compelled him to marrie one of his daughters, reſtoring him againe to his Kingdome, conditionally that he ſhould pay vnto him the third part of all his tribute: and the ſaid King of Tombuto hath ſome of his Courtiers perpetually reſiding at Cano for the receit thereof.

Caſena bordering Eaſtward vpon the Kingdome laſt deſcribed, is full of Mountaines, and drie fields, which yeeld notwithſtanding great ſtore of Barlie and Mill-ſeed. The inhabitants are all extremely blacke, hauing great noſes and blabber lips. They dwell in moſt forlorne and baſe Cottages: neither ſhall you find any of their Villages containing aboue three hundred Families. And beſides, their baſe eſtate they are mightily oppreſſed with famine: a King they had in times paſt whom the foreſaid Iſchia ſlew, ſince whoſe death they haue all beene tributarie vnto Iſchia.

The Kingdom of Zegzeg.

The South-eaſt part of Zegzeg bordereth vpon Cano, and it is diſtant from Caſena almoſt an hundred and fiftie miles. The inhabitants are rich, and haue great traffique vnto other Nations. Some part of this Kingdome is plaine, and the reſidue Mountainous, but the Mountaines are extremely colde, and the Plaines intollerably hot. And becauſe they can hardly indure the ſharpeneſſe of Winter, they kindle great fires in the midſt of their houſes, laying the coles thereof vnder their high bedſteads, and ſo betaking themſelues to ſleepe. Their fields abounding with water, are exceeding fruitfull, and their houſes are built like the houſes of the Kingdome of Caſena. They had a King of their owne in times paſt, who being ſlaine by Iſchia (as is aforeſaid) they haue euer ſince beene ſubiect vnto the ſaid Iſchia.

The Region of Zanfara.

The King of Zanfara ſlaine by Izchia, and the people made tributary.

The Region of Zanfara bordering Eaſtward vpon Zegzeg, is inhabited by moſt baſe and Ruſticall people. Their fields abound with Rice, Mill, and Cotton. The Inhabitants are tall in ſtature and extremely blacke, their viſages are broade, and their diſpoſitions moſt ſaluage and brutiſh. Their King alſo was ſlaine by Iſchia, and themſelues made tributarie.

The Towne and Kingdome of Guangara.

Gold.

Izchia.

Theſe Kingdomes of Guangara adioyneth South-eaſterly vpon Zanfara. Southward thereof lyeth a Region greatly abounding with gold. But now they can haue no traffique with forren Nations, for they are moleſted on both ſides with moſt cruell enemies. For Weſtward they are oppoſed by Iſchia, and Eaſtward, by the King of Borno. When I my ſelfe was in Borno, King Abraham hauing leuied an huge Armie, determined to expell the Prince of Guangara out of his Kingdome, had hee not been hindred by Homar the Prince of Gaoga, which beganne to aſſaile the Kingdome of Borno. Wherefore the King of Borno being drawne home into his owne Countrey, was enforced to giue ouer the conqueſt of Guangara. So often as the Merchants of Guangara trauell into the foreſaid Region abounding with gold, becauſe the wayes are ſo rough and difficult that their Camels cannot goe vpon them, they carry their wares vpon ſlaues backes; who being laden with great burthens, doe vſually trauell ten or twelue miles a day. Yea, ſome I ſaw that made two of thoſe iournies in one day: a wonder it is to ſee what heauy burthens theſe poore ſlaues are charged withall; for beſides the Merchandize, they carry victuals alſo for their Maſters, and for the Souldiers that goe to guard them.

The Kingdom of Borno.

Where no religious ſet Ceremonies are, men are ſaid to haue no religion: yet vpon better notice of ſuch parts, alway an obſeruation of, and communication with the Deuil is found, where men acknowledge no God as in Braſil, &c. Alſo Sauages are ſaid to haue no religion, hauing no Temples &c.

The large Prouince of Borno, bordering Weſtward vpon the Prouince of Guangara, and from thence extending Eaſtward fiue hundred miles, is diſtant from the Fountaine of Niger almoſt an hundred and fiftie miles, the South part whereof adioyning vnto the Deſart of Set, and the North part vnto that Deſart which lyeth towards Barca. The Inhabitants, in Summer goe all naked ſaue their priuie members which they couer with a peece of leather: but all Winter they are clad in ſkinnes, and haue beds of ſkinnes alſo. They embrace no Religion at all, being neither Chriſtians, Mahumetans, nor Iewes, nor of any other Profeſſion, but liuing after a brutiſh manner, and hauing wiues and children in common: and (as I vnderſtood of a certaine Merchant that abode a long time among them) they haue no proper names at all, but euery one is nicknamed according to his length, his fatneſſe, or ſome other qualitie. They haue a moſt puiſſant Prince, being lineally deſcended from the Libyan people called Bardoa. He is at perpetuall enmitie with a certaine people inhabiting beyond the Deſart of Seu; who in times paſt, marching with an huge army of footemen ouer the ſaid Deſart, waſted a great part of the Kingdome of Borno. Whereupon the King of Borno ſent for the Merchants of Barbarie, and willed them to bring him great ſtore of Horſes: for in this Countrey they vſe to exchange Horſes for ſlaues, and to giue fifteene, and ſometimes twenty ſlaues for one horſe. And by this meanes there were abundance of horſes brought: howbeit, the Merchants were conſtrained to ſtay for their ſlaues till the King returned home conquerour with a great number of Captiues, and ſatisfied his creditors for their Horſes. The King ſeemeth to be maruellous rich; for his Spurres, his bridles, platters, diſhes, pots, and other veſſels wherein his meate and drinke are brought to the table, are all of pure gold: yea, and the chaines of his Dogs and Houndes are of gold alſo. Howbeit, this King is extremely couetous, for he had much rather pay his debts in ſlaues then in gold.

The Deſart of Seu.

Fifteene or twentie ſlaues exchanged for one Horſe.

Veſſels, &c. all Gold.

The Kingdom of Gaoga.

Gaoga bordering Weſtward vpon the Kingdome of Borno, and extending Eaſtward to the Confines of Nubia, adioyneth Southward vnto a certaine Deſart, ſituate vpon a crooked and winding part of Nilus, and is encloſed Northward with the frontiers of Ægypt. It ſtretcheth from Eaſt to Weſt, in length fiue hundred miles, and as much in breadth. They haue neither humanitie nor learning among them, but are moſt ruſticall and ſauage people, and eſpecially thoſe that inhabite the Mountaines, who goe all naked ſauing their priuities: Their houſes are made of boughes and rafts, and are much ſubiect to burning, and they haue great abundance of Cattell, whereunto they giue diligent attendance. This Prince greatly honoreth all learned men, and eſpecially ſuch as are of the linage of Mahumet. I my ſelfe being in his Court, a certaine Noble-man of Damiata brought him very rich and royall gifts; as namely, a gallant Horſe, a Turkiſh Sword, and a Kingly robe, with certaine other particulars, that coſt about an hundred and fiftie Duckats at Cairo: in recompence whereof, the King gaue him fiue ſlaues, fiue Camels, fiue hundred Ducats of that Region, and an hundred Elephants teeth of wonderfull bigneſſe. Nubia bordering Weſtward vpon the Kingdome laſt deſcribed, and ſtretching from thence vnto Nilus, is encloſed on the South-ſide with the Deſart of Goran, and on the North-ſide with the Confines of Egypt. Howbeit they cannot paſſe by water from this Kingdome into Egypt: for the Riuer of Nilus is in ſome places no deeper then a man may wade ouer on foot. The principall Towne of this Kingdome called Dangala, is exceeding populous, and contayneth to the number of ten thouſand Families. The Kingdome of Nubia is moſt rich in Corne and Sugar, which notwithſtanding they know not how to vſe. Alſo in the Citie of Dangala there is great plentie of Ciuet and Sandal-wood. This Region aboundeth with Iuory likewiſe, becauſe heere are ſo many Elephants taken. Heere is alſo a moſt ſtrong and deadly poyſon; one graine whereof being diuided amongſt ten perſons, will kill them all within leſſe then a quarter of an houre: but if one man taketh a grain, he dyeth thereof out of hand. An ounce of this Poyſon is ſold for an hundred Duckats; neyther may it be ſold to any but to forraine Merchants, and whoſoeuer buyeth it is bound by an Oath not to vſe it in the Kingdome of Nubia. All ſuch as buy of this Poyſon are conſtrayned to pay as much vnto the King, as to the Merchant: but if any man ſelleth Poyſon without the Princes knowledge, he is preſently put to death. The people themſelues are called Bugiha, and are moſt baſe and miſerable, and liue onely vpon Milke, Camels fleſh, and the fleſh of ſuch beaſts as are taken in thoſe Deſarts. Some times they receiue Tribute of the Gouernour of Suachen, and ſometimes of the Gouernours of Dangala. They had once a rich Towne ſituate vpon the Red Sea called Zibid, whereunto belonged a commodious Hauen, being oppoſite vnto the Hauen of Zidem, which is fortie miles diſtant from Mecca. But an hundred yeares ſince it was deſtroyed by the Soldan, becauſe the Inhabitants receiued certaine Wares which ſhould haue beene carried to Mecca, and at the ſametime the famous Port of Zibid was deſtroyed, from whence notwithſtanding was gathered a great yeerely Tribute.

The

Egypt foure hundred and fiftie miles long.

The Courſe of Nilus.

Turbant.

THe moſt noble and famous Prouince of Egypt bordering Weſtward vpon the Deſarts of Barca, Numidia, and Libya; Eaſtward vpon the Deſarts lying betweene Egypt it ſelfe and the Red Sea; and Northward vpon the Mediterran Sea; is incloſed Southward with the Land of the foreſaid people called Bugiha, and with the Riuer of Nilus. It ſtretcheth in length from the Mediterran Sea to the Land of the people called Bugiha, about foure hundred and fiftie miles: but in breadth it is very narrow; ſo that it contayneth nought but a ſmall diſtance betweene both the bankes of Nilus, and the barren Mountaynes bordering vpon the foreſaid Deſarts, being inhabited onely in that place where Nilus is ſeparate from the ſaid Mountaynes: albeit, towards the Mediterran Sea it extendeth it ſelfe ſomewhat broader. For Nilus about foureſcore miles from the great Citie of Cairo is diuided into two branches, one whereof running in his Chanell Weſtward, returneth at length into the mayne ſtreame from whence hee tooke his originall, and hauing paſſed about threeſcore miles beyond Cairo, it diuideth it ſelfe into two other branches, whereof the one runneth to Damiata, and the other to Roſetto. And out of that which trendeth to Damiata iſſueth another branch, which diſcharging it ſelfe into a Lake, paſſeth through a certaine gullet or ſtrait into the Mediterran Sea, vpon the banke whereof ſtandeth the moſt ancient Citie of Teneſſe: and this diuiſion of Nilus into ſo many ſtreames and branches cauſeth Egypt (as I haue beforeſaid) to bee ſo narrow. All this Prouince is plaine, and is moſt fruitfull for all kind of Graine and Pulſe. There are moſt pleaſant and greene Medowes, and great ſtore of Geeſe and other Fowles. The Countrey people are of a ſwart and browne colour: but the Citizens are white. Garments they weare which are ſtrait downe to their waſtes, and broad beneath, and the ſleeues likewiſe are ſtrait. They couer their heads with a round and high habit, called by the Italians a Dulipan. Their ſhooes are made according to the ancient faſhion. In Summer they weare Garments of parti-coloured Cotton: but in Winter they vſe a certayne Garment lined with Cotton, which they call Chebre: but the chiefe Citizens and Merchants are apparelled in cloth of Europe. The Inhabitants are of and honeſt, cheerefull, and liberall diſpoſition. For their victuals they vſe a kind of new and extreme ſalt Cheeſes, and ſowre Milke alſo artificially congealed: which fare albeit they account very daintie, yet cannot ſtrangers digeſt it, and into euery Diſh almoſt they put ſowre Milke.

A diuiſion of Egypt.

Since the Mahumetans were Lords of Egypt, it hath beene diuided into three parts. For the Region from Cairo to Roſetto is called the ſhoare of Errif: and from Cairo to the Land of Bugiha, it is called Sahid, that is to ſay, The firme Land: but the Region adioyning vpon that branch of Nilus, which runneth towards Damiata and Teneſſe, they call by the name of Bechria or Maremma. All Egypt is exceeding fertile: but the Prouince of Sahid excelleth the two other parts for abundance of Corne, Cattle, Fowles and Flaxe: and Maremma aboundeth with Cotton and Sugar. Howbeit, the Inhabitants of Maremma, and Errif are farre more ciuill then the people of Sahid: becauſe thoſe two Prouinces lye neerer vnto the Sea, and are more frequented by European, Barbarian, and Aſſyrian Merchants: but the people of Sahid haue no conuerſation with ſtrangers, except it be with a few Æthiopians.

The ancient Pedigree and Originall of the Egyptians. Gen. 10.6.

* Meſraim is recorded to be the Brother of Chus, and the Sonne of Cham Chibith.

Fuſtato.

The Egyptians (as Moſes writeth) fetch their originall from * Meſraim the Sonne of Chus, the Sonne of Cham, the Sonne of Noe; and the Hebrewes call both the Countrey and the Inhabitants of Egypt by the name of Meſraim. The Arabians call Egypt it ſelfe Meſre, but the Inhabitants Chibith. And Chibith (they ſay) was the man, that firſt tooke vpon him the Gouernment of this Region, and beganne firſt to build houſes thereon. Alſo the Inhabitants call themſelues by the ſame name: neither are there left any true Egyptians, beſides a few Chriſtians, which are at this preſent remayning. The reſidue embracing the Mahumetan Religion, haue mingled themſelues amongſt the Arabians and the Moores. This Kingdome was gouerned many yeares by the Egyptians themſelues, as namely, by the Kings that were called Pharao, (who by their Monuments and admirable Buildings, ſeeme to haue beene mightie Princes) and alſo by the Kings called Ptolomai. Afterward, being ſubdued vnto the Romane Empire, this Kingdome ſince the comming of Chriſt was conuerted vnto the Chriſtian Religion, vnder the ſaid Romane Gouernment: ſince the decay of which Empire, it fell into the poſſeſſion of the Emperours of Conſtantinople; who being very carefull to maintayne this Kingdome, were at length depriued thereof by the Mahumetans, vnder the conduct of Hamrus the Sonne of Haſi, being appointed Captaine Generall ouer the Arabian Armie of Homar, the ſecond Califa or Mahumetan Patriarke of that name: who permitting all men to haue their owne Religion, required nought but Tribute at their hands. The ſaid Captaine built vpon the banke of Nilus, a certaine Towne called by the Arabians Fuſtato, which word ſignifieth in their Language a Tabernacle: for when he firſt vndertooke this Expedition, he marched through wild and deſart places void of Inhabitants, ſo that his Armie was conſtrayned to lye in Tents. The common people call this Towne Meſre Hatichi, that is to ſay, the ancient Citie; in compariſon of which Cairo may not vnfitly be called the New Citie.

Neither Cairo nor any place neere vnto it, can by any likelihood challenge that they were at any time inhabited by the ancient Pharaos. But heere it is [illegible] be noted, that the Nobilitie of the ancient Egytians dwelt in times paſt in the Region of Sahid beyond Cairo, in the Cities of Fium, of Manſichmin, and in other ſuch famous Cities. Howbe it, after Egypt was conquered by the Romanes, the Egyptian Nobilitie planted themſelues in the Region of Errif, vpon the Sea ſhoare thereof, namely, about the Cities of Alexandria, Roſetto, and other famous Townes retayning as yet the Latine names. Alſo when the Romane Empire was tranſlated into Greece, the ſaid Nobilitie ſtill inhabited vpon the Sea ſhoare, the Emperours Lieutenant reſiding at Alexandria: but after the Mahumetans got the Dominion of Egypt, the foreſaid Nobiltie retyred themſelues into the in-land, hoping thereby to reape a double commoditie: namely, firſt, in that they might bee a meanes to pacifie the Kingdome on both ſides of them; and ſecondly, that they might bee free from the inuaſions of the Chriſtians, whereof they ſhould haue beene in danger, had they remayned any longer vpon the Sea Coaſt.

The qualitie & temperature of the Ayre in Egypt.

Raine vnwholſome.

The Ayre of this Countrey is hot and vnwholeſome: and it rayneth heere very ſeldome or neuer. And Raine is the cauſe of many Diſeaſes in Egypt: for in raynie weather ſome of the Egyptians are ſubiect vnto dangerous Rheumes, and Feuers; and others vnto a ſtrange kinde of ſwelling in ther priuy Members: which ſwelling the Phyſicians impute vnto Salt Cheeſe and Beefe, which are the common Dyet of the Egyptians. In Sommer time this Countrey is moſt extremely hot, for a remedie of which heat they build in euery Towne certaine high Towres, hauing one doore aloft, another beneath, right ouer againſt the houſes, through the tops whereof the wind paſſing down-ward, doth ſomewhat coole and refreſh the Ayre: otherwiſe in regard of the intolerable heat of the Sunne it were impoſſible for any man to liue there. Sometime the Peſtilence is ſo hot among them, eſpecially at Cairo, that ſometimes there dye twelue thouſand perſons thereof on a day. But with the French Poxe, I thinke, that no other Countrey vnder Heauen is ſo moleſted, nor that contayneth ſo many people infected therewith. About the beginning of Aprill, they reape their Corne, and hauing reaped it, they preſently thraſh the ſame; neyther ſhall you ſee one eare of their Corne ſtanding till the twentieth of May.

Extreame Peſtilence.

The French Maladie moſt riſe in Egypt.

The increaſe of Nilus.

The inundation or ouerflow of Nilus beginneth about the middeſt of Iune, increaſing afterward for the ſpace of fortie dayes, and for the ſpace of other fortie dayes alſo decreaſing: during which time all the Cities and Townes of Egypt are like vnto Ilands, which none can come vnto but by Boats and Barges. At this time alſo Nilus is very fit to be ſailed vpon with veſſels of burthen; ſome whereof are ſo bigge that they will contayne ſixe or ſeuen thouſand buſhels * of Corne: and ſome hundreds of Cattell together: and in theſe Veſſels they ſayle onely downe the ſtreame: for againſt the ſtreame or without the ouer-flowing time they would ſcarſly paſſe emptie. The Egyptians according to the increaſe of Nilus, doe foreſee the plentie or dearth of the yeere following: as wee will more at large declare, when wee come to ſpeake of the Iland of Nilus ouer againſt the olde Citie, where the inundation of Nilus is meaſured. Neither is it our purpoſe in this place particularly to deſcribe all the Cities of Egypt, becauſe our African Writers are of diuers opinions thereabout; for ſome would haue Egypt to bee a part of Africa, but others are of a contray minde. Diuers there are that affirme, that part of Egypt adioyning vpon the Deſarts of Barbarie, Numidia and Libya, to belong vnto Africa. Some others aſcribe vnto Africa all thoſe places that border vpon the principall and mayne Channell of Nilus: but as for other places, as namely, Manf, Fium, Semenud, Damanhore, Berelles, Teneſſe, and Damiata, they thinke them not to be ſituate in Africa: which opinion, I my ſelfe, alſo vpon many and great reaſons take to be true. Wherefore my purpoſe is to deſcribe none other Cities but ſuch as ſtand neere the mayne and principall Channell of Nilus.

* Moggia.

The Citie of Boſtri.

The ancient Citie of Boſtri built by the Egyptians vpon the Mediterran Sea, and ſtanding twentie miles Weſtward from Alexandria, was in times paſt enuironed with moſt ſtrong wals, and adorned with moſt beautifull and ſtately Buildings. At this preſent, it is compaſſed with many poſſeſſions or grounds bearing Dates, whereof no man taketh charge nor reapeth any commoditie: for when Alexandria was wonne by the Chriſtians, the Inhabitants abandoned this Citie, and fled towards the Lake called Buchaira.

The great Citie of Alexandria in Egypt.

The great Citie of Alexandria in Egypt, founded by Alexander the Great, not without the aduiſe of moſt famous and skilfull Architects, vpon a beautifull point of Land ſtretching into the Mediterran Sea, and being diſtant fortie miles Weſtward of Nilus, was in times paſt, till it grew ſubiect vnto the Mahumetans, moſt ſumptuouſly and ſtrongly built, as diuers and ſundry Authors beare record. Afterward this Citie decaying, many yeares together, was depriued of the ancient renowne and honour, and remayned in manner deſolate, becauſe no Merchants of Greece nor of any other part of Europe exerciſed any longer Traffique therein. Howbeit, a certaine craftie Mahumetan Patriarke made the rude people beleeue, that by the Propheſie of Mahumet, moſt ample Indulgences were granted vnto all ſuch as would inhabit the Citie or guard it for certaine dayes, and would beſtow ſome Almes for a publike benefit: by which wily ſtratageme the Citie was in ſhort time filled with forraine people, which from all places reſorted thereunto: by whom were built many houſes neere vnto the Citie wals, and many Colledges of Students, and diuers Monaſteries for the reliefe of Pilgrims.

Indulgences of Mahumet.

The Citie it ſelfe is foure ſquare, and hath foure Gates to enter in at: one ſtanding on the Eaſt ſide towards Nilus, another on the South ſide towards the Lake of Buchaira, the third Weſtward towards the Deſart of Barca, and the fourth towards the Mediterran Sea and the Hauen; whereat ſtand the Searchers and Cuſtomers, which ranſacke ſtrangers euen to their very ſhirts: for they demand cuſtome, not onely for wares and Merchandize, but alſo ſome allowance in the hundred for all kinde of money. Neere vnto this Citie-walles there are two other Gates alſo, being diuided aſunder by a faire walke, and a moſt impregnable Caſtle, which ſtandeth vpon the Strand or Wharfe of the Port, commonly called Marſa el Bargi, that is to ſay, the Port of the Caſtle: in which Port ride the principall and beſt ſhips, namely, ſuch as come from Venice, Genoa, Raguſa, with other Ships of Europe. For hither reſort the Engliſh, the Low Dutch, the Biſcaines, the Portugals, and men of all other Nations in Europe for traffique ſake. Howbeit, this Port is moſt vſually frequented by the Ships of Appulia, Sicilia, and of Greece, which are Turkiſh Ships; all which reſort into this Harbour to ſaue themſelues from Pyrats, and from tempeſtuous weather. Another Port there is alſo, called Marſa Eſſil Sela, that is to ſay, the Port of the Chaine, wherein the Ships of Barbary, namely, thoſe of Tunis and of the Ile of Gerbi harbour themſelues. The Chriſtians are conſtrained to pay about the tenth part of all wares that they bring in and carry out, but the Mahumetans pay but the twentieth part: and whatſoeuer wares are carried by land to Cairo pay no cuſtom at all. And at this preſent that part of the Citie which is next vnto Cairo, is the moſt famous and beſt furniſhed with Merchandize brought by Merchants from all places of the world. The other parts of this Citie are deſtitute both of Ciuility and Inhabitants: for except one long ſtreet, and that part of the Citie next the Hauen which is full of Merchants ſhops, and inhabited by Chriſtians, the reſidue is void and deſolate. Which deſolation happened at that time, when Lewis the fourth, King of France, being reſtored to liberty by the Soldan, the King of Cyprus with a fleet, partly of Venetians, and partly of French-men ſuddenly aſſailed Alexandria, and with great ſlaughter ſurprized and ſacked the ſame. But the Soldan comming with an huge armie to reſcue Alexandria, ſo diſcouraged the Cyprians, that they burnt downe the houſes thereof, and betooke themſelues to flight. Whereupon the Soldan repairing the walles, and building a Caſtle neere vnto the Hauen, the Citie grew by little and little into that eſtate, wherein it ſtandeth at this preſent.

Alexandria ſurpriſed and ſacked by the king of Cyprus.

In the Citie of Alexandria there is a certaine high Mount, faſhioned like vnto the place called Teſtaccio at Rome, whereon, although it hath no naturall ſituation, are found diuers earthen Veſſels of great antiquity. Vpon the top of the ſaid Mount ſtandeth a Turret, where a certaine officer is appointed to watch for ſuch Ships as direct their courſe towards the Citie, who for euery ſhip that he giueth notice of vnto the Cuſtomers, receiueth a certain fee: but if he chanceth to fall aſleepe, or to be out of the way at the arriuall of any Ship, whereof he certifieth not the Cuſtomers, he paieth double for his negligence into the Soldans Exchequer. Vnder each houſe of this Citie there is a great vaulted Ciſterne built vpon mighty Pillars and Arches: whereinto the water of Nilus at euery inundation is conueied vnder the walles of the Citie, by a certaine wonderfull and moſt artificiall ſluce ſtanding without the Citie it ſelfe. But theſe Ciſternes growing ſometime corrupt and foule, are often in Summer the occaſion of many diſeaſes and infirmities. This Citie ſtandeth in the midſt of a ſandy Deſart, and is deſtitute of Gardens and Vines, neither is the ſoile round about it apt to beare Corne; ſo that their Corne is brought them from places forty miles diſtant. Howbeit, neere the foreſaid ſluce, whereby the water of Nilus is conueied into the Citie, are certaine little Gardens, the fruits whereof being growen to ripeneſſe, are ſo vnwholeſome, that they breed Feuers and other noyſome diſeaſes among the Citizens. Sixe miles Weſtward of Alexandria, among certaine ancient buildings, ſtandeth a pillar of a wonderfull height and thickneſſe, which the Arabians call Hemaduſſaoar, that is to ſay, the pillar of trees. Of this pillar there is a Fable reported, that Ptolemey one of the Kings of Alexandria built it vpon an extreme point of land ſtretching from the Hauen, whereby to the end he might defend the Citie from the inuaſion of forraine enemies, and make it inuincible, he placed a certaine Steele-glaſſe vpon the top thereof, by the hidden vertue of which glaſſe, as many Ships as paſſed by while the glaſſe was vncouered ſhould immediately be ſet on fire: but the ſaid glaſſe being broken by the Mahumetans, the ſecret vertue thereof vaniſhed, and the great pillar whereon it ſtood was remooued out of the place. But this is a moſt ridiculous narration, and fit for babes to giue credite vnto.t this preſent there are amongſt the ancient Inhabitants of Alexandria many Chriſtians called Iacobites, being all of them Artizans and Merchants: theſe Iacobites haue a Church of their owne to reſort vnto, wherein the body of S. Marke the Euangeliſt lay in times paſt interred, which hath ſince beene priuily ſtolne by the Venetians, and carried vnto Venice. And the ſaid Iacobites pay Tribute vnto the Gouernour of Cairo. Neither is it to be paſſed ouer in ſilence, that in the midſt of the ruinous Monuments of Alexandria, there remaineth as yet a certaine little houſe built in forme of a Chappell, and containing a Sepulchre much honoured by the Mahumetans, wherein they affirme, out of the authoritie of their Alcoron, that the body of the High Prohpet and King (as they terme him) Alexander the great lieth buried. And thither reſort yeerely great multitudes of Pilgrimes from forraine Nations, to adore and reuerence the ſaid Sepulchre, and oftentimes do beſtow large Almes thereupon.

The Citie of Roſetto was built by a ſlaue of a certaine Mahumetan Patriarke and Gouernour of Egypt, vpon the Eaſterne banke of Nilus three miles from the Mediterran Sea, not far from the place where Nilus diſchargeth his ſtreames into the ſaid Sea. Heere is a ſtately Bath-ſtoue alſo, hauing fountaines both of cold and hot water belonging thereunto, the like whereof for ſtately and commodious building is not to be found in all Egypt beſides. I my ſelfe was in this Citie when Selim the great Turke returned this way from Alexandria, who with his priuate and familiar friends beholding the ſaid Bath-ſtoue, ſeemed to take great delight and contentment therein.

Thebe, at this preſent, containeth but three hundred Families in all, being moſt of them very ſtately and ſumptuouſly built. It aboundeth with Corne, Rice, and Sugar, and with certaine fruits of a moſt excellent taſte, called Muſe. It is alſo furniſhed with great ſtore of Merchants and Artificers: but the moſt part of the Inhabitants are husbandmen: and if a man walke the ſtreets in the day-time, he ſhall ſee none but trim and beautifull women. The Territorie adiacent aboundeth with Date-trees, which grow ſo thicke, that a man cannot ſee the Citie, till he approacheth nigh vnto the walles. Here grow likewiſe ſtore of Grapes, Figs, and Peaches, which are carried in great plentie vnto Cairo. Without the Citie there are many ancient Monuments, as namely, pillars, inſcriptions in Latine, Greeke, and Egyptian Characters, and wals of a great thickneſſe, built of excellent ſtone, and ſuch a number of ruinous places, that this Citie ſeemeth, in times paſt, to haue beene very large.

The women of Fuoa, fortie miles South from Roſecco, liue in ſo great libertie, that they may goe whither they will at the day-time, returning home at night, without any controlement of their husbands. The fields adiacent abound greatly with Dates, and neere vnto them there is a certaine Plaine which is very apt for Sugar and Corne: howbeit, the Sugar Canes there bring not foorth perfect Sugar, but in ſtead thereof a certaine kinde of Honie like ſope, which they vſe throughout all Egypt, becauſe there is but little other Honie in the whole Countrey.

They haue a moſt beautifull Temple at Deretto, and the Citizens are exceeding rich: for their ground yeeldeth ſuch abundance of Sugar, that they pay yeerely vnto the Soldan * an hundred thouſand peeces of Gold, called in their language Saraffi, for their libertie of making and refining thereof. In this Citie ſtandeth a certaine great houſe like vnto a Caſtle, wherein are their Preſſes and Caldrons, for the boyling and preparing of their Sugar. Neither did I euer in all my life ſee ſo many workemen emploied about that buſineſſe, whoſe daily wages (as I vnderſtood by a certaine publike officer) amounted to two hundred Saraffi.

Cairo is commonly reputed to be one of the greateſt and moſt famous cities in all the whole world. But leauing the common reports and opinions thereof, I will exactly deſcribe the forme and eſtate wherin it * now ſtandeth. And that I may begin with the Etymologie or deriuation of the name, Cairo is an Arabian word, corruptly pronounced by the people of Europe: for the true Arabian word is El Chahira, which ſignifieth an inforcing or imperious Miſtreſſe. This City built in ancient times by one Gehoar Chetib a Dalmatian ſlaue (as I haue before ſignified in the beginning of my Diſcourſe) containeth within the walles not aboue eight thouſand Families, being Inhabited by Noblemen, Gentlemen, and Merchants that ſell wares brought from all other places. The famous Temple of Cairo, commonly called, Gemih Haſhare, that is to ſay, the glorious Temple, was built alſo by the foreſaid ſlaue, whom we affirmed to be the Founder of the City, and whoſe ſurname was Haſhare, that is to ſay, Famous, being giuen him by the Mahumetan Patriarke that was his Prince. This Citie ſtandeth vpon a moſt beautifull Plaine, neere vnto a certaine Mountaine called Mucatun, about two miles diſtant from Nilus, and is enuironed with ſtately walles, and fortified with Iron-gates: the principall of which gates is called Babe Nanſre, that is, the gate of Victory, which ſtandeth Eaſtward towards the Deſart of the Red Sea; and the gate called Beb Zuaila, being next vnto the old Citie and to Nilus; and alſo Bebel Futuh, that is to ſay, the gate of Triumph, ſtanding towards the lake and the fields. And albeit, Cairo aboundeth euery where with all kind of Merchants and Artificers, yet that is the principall ſtreet of the whole Citie which ſtretcheth from the gate of Nanſre, to the gate of Zuaila, for in it are built moſt ſtately and admirable Palaces and Colledges, and moſt ſumptuous Temples, among which is the Temple of Gimith Elhechim, the third Schiſmaticall Califa of Cairo. Other Temples there are of a maruellous bignes, which to deſcribe in particular. I thinke it ſuperfluous. Heere are many Bath-ſtoues alſo very artificially built. Next of all is the ſtreet called Beinel Caſrain, containing to the number of threeſcore Cookes or Victuallers ſhops, furniſhed with veſſels of Tinne: there are certaine other ſhops alſo, wherein are to be ſold delicate waters or drinkes made of all kinds of fruits, being for Noblemen to drinke of, and theſe waters they keepe moſt charily in fine veſſels, partly of glaſſe, and partly of Tinne: next vnto theſe are ſhops where diuers confections of Hony and Sugar, vnlike vnto the confections of Europe, are to be ſold: then follow the Fruiterers ſhops, who bring out-landiſh fruits out of Syria, to wit, Quinces, Pomegranates, and other fruits which grow not in Egypt: next vnto them are the ſhops of ſuch as ſell Egges, Cheeſe, and Pancakes fried with Oyle. And next of all there is a ſtreete of the principall Artificers Shops. Beyond which ſtreete ſtandeth a Colledge built by the Soldan, called Ghauri, who was ſlaine in a battaile againſt Selim the great Turke. And next vnto the Colledge are diuers rankes of Drapers Shops. In the firſt ranke there is moſt excellent out-landiſh Linnen Cloth to be ſold, as namely, fine Cloth of Cotten brought from Balabach, and Cloth called Moſall, that is, of Ninou, of a maruellous breadth and fineneſſe, whereof Noblemen and others of account, haue Shirts made them, and Scarffes to weare vpon their Dulipans. Beſides theſe, there are certaine Mercers Shops where the rich Stuffes of Italy, namely, Silke, Damaske, Veluet, Cloth of Gold, and ſuch like are to be bought, vnto which Stuffes I neuer ſaw any comparable (to my remembrance) in Italy, where they vſe to be made. Next vnto the Mercers are the Woollen Drapers, which bring Cloth out of Europe, as namely, from Florence, Venice, Flanders, and other places. Next of all there are Chamblets to be ſold: and from thence the way lieth to the Gate of Zuaila, at which Gate dwell great ſtore of Artificers. Neere vnto the ſaid way ſtandeth the famous Burſe, called Canen Halili, wherein the Perſian Merchants dwell. It is built very ſtately in manner of a Kings Palace, and is of three ſtories high: beneath it are certaine conuenient roomes, whither Merchants for the exchange of rich and coſtly Wares doe reſort: for here doe the principal and moſt wealthie Merchants abide; whoſe Wares are Spices, precious Stones, Cloth of India, & ſuch like. Next vnto the Burſe ſtandeth a ſtreet of Shops, where al kind of Perfumes, namely, Ciuet, Muske, Amber, and ſuch like are to be ſold: which commodities are here in ſo great plenty, that if you ask for twenty pounds of Musk, they will preſently ſhew you an hundred. Next followeth the ſtreet of the Paper-Merchants, where you may buy moſt excellent and ſmooth Paper: here alſo are to be ſold Iewels and precious Stones of great value, which the Brokers carrie from one Shop to another. Then come you to the Gold-Smiths ſtreete, being inhabited for the moſt part by Iewes, who deale for riches of great importance. And next vnto the Gold-Smithes are certaine ſtreetes of Vpholſters or Brokers, who ſell the apparell and rich furniture of Noblemen and other Citizens at the ſecond hand, which are dot Cloakes, Coates, Napery, or ſuch like, but things of exceeding price and value: amongſt which I my ſelfe once ſaw a beautifull Pauilion embroydered with Needle-worke, and beſet with Pearles that weighed fortie pounds, which Pearles being taken out of it, were ſold for ten thouſand Saraffi. In this Citie alſo there is a moſt ſtately Hoſpitall built by Piperis the firſt Soldan of the Mamalucks race: the yearely reuenues whereof amount vnto two hundred thouſand Saraffi. Hither may any impotent or diſeaſed perſons reſort, and bee well prouided of Phyſicians, and of all things neceſſarie for thoſe that are ſicke, who if they chance to die here, all their goods are due vnto the Hoſpitall.

The Suburbs.

The Suburbe, called Bed Zuaila, belonging vnto Cairo, and containing about twelue thouſand Families, beginneth at the Gate of Zuaila, and extendeth Weſtward almoſt a mile and a halfe; Southward it bordereth vpon the Palace of the Soldan, and ſtretcheth Northward for the ſpace of a mile vnto the Suburbe, called Beb Elloch. Here dwell as many Noblemen and Gentlemen almoſt, as within the Citie it ſelfe: and the Citizens haue Shops both here and in the Citie, as likewiſe many Inhabitants of this Suburbe maintaine Families in the Citie alſo. Amongſt all the buildings of this Suburbe, the principall is that ſtately Colledge built by Soldan Heſen, being of ſuch a wonderfull height and great ſtrength, that oftentimes the Colledges haue preſumed to rebell againſt the Soldan, and therein to fortifie themſelues againſt the whole Citie, and to diſcharge Ordnance againſt the Soldans Caſtle, which is but halfe a Croſſe-bow ſhot diſtant.

Palace and Temple.

The Suburbe called Gemeh Tailon, confining Eaſtward vpon the foreſaid Suburbe of Beb Zuaila, exendeth Weſtward to certaine ruinous places neere vnto the old Citie. Before the foundation of Cairo this Suburbe was erected by one Tailon, who was ſubiect vnto the Califa of Bagdet, and Gouernour of Egypt, and was a moſt famous and prudent man. This Tailon leauing the old Citie, inhabited this Suburbe, and adorned the ſame with a moſt admirable Palace, and ſumptuous Temple. Here dwell alſo great ſtore of Merchants and Artificers, eſpecially ſuch as are Moores of Barbary.

Palace and Colledge.

The Suburbe, called Beb Elloch, being diſtant from the Walles of Cairo about the ſpace of a mile, and containing almoſt three thouſand Families, is inhabited by Merchants and Artizans of diuers ſorts, as well as the former. Vpon a certaine large place of this Suburbe ſtandeth a great Palace, and a ſtately Colledge, built by a certaine Mammaluck, called Iazbach, being Counſellor vnto the Soldan of thoſe times; and the place it ſelfe is called after his name, Iazbachia. Hither, after Mahumetan Sermons & deuotions, the common people of Cairo, together with the Bawds and Harlots, doe vſually reſort; and many Stage-Players alſo, and ſuch as teach Camels, Aſſes, and Dogs, to dance; which dancing is a thing very delightfull to behold, and eſpecially that of the Aſſe: who hauing friſked and danced a while, his Maſter comes vnto him, and tels him with a loud voyce, That the Soldan being about to build ſome great Palace, muſt vſe all the Aſſes of Cairo to carry Morter, Stones, and other neceſſary prouiſion. Then the Aſſe falling preſently to the ground, and lying with his heeles vpward, maketh his belly to ſwell, and cloſeth his eyes as if he were ſtarke dead. In the meane while his Maſter lamenting the miſfortune of the Aſſe vnto the ſtanders by, earneſtly craueth their friendly aſſiſtance and liberalitie to buy him a new Aſſe. And hauing gathered of each one as much money as hee can get; You are much deceiued my Maſters (quoth he) that thinke mine Aſſe to be dead: for the hungry Iade knowing his Maſters neceſſity, hath wrought this ſleight, to the end hee might get ſome money to buy him Prouender. Then turning about to the Aſſe, hee commandeth him with all ſpeed to ariſe: but the Aſſe lyeth ſtarke ſtill, though hee command and beate him neuer ſo much: whereupon, turning againe to the people; Bee it knowne (quoth hee) vnto you all, that the Soldan hath publiſhed an Edict or Proclamation, that to morrow next all the people ſhall goe forth of the Citie to behold a Triumph, and that all the honourable and beautifull Ladies and Gentlewomen ſhall ride vpon the moſt comely Aſſes, and ſhall giue them Oates to eate, and Chriſtall water of Nilus to drinke. Which words being ſcarce ended, the Aſſe ſuddenly ſtarteth from the ground, prancing and leaping for ioy: then his Maſter proſecuting ſtill his narration; But (ſaith he) the Warden of our ſtreete hath borrowed this goodly Aſſe of mine for his deformed and old Wife to ride vpon. At theſe words the Aſſe, as though he were indued with humaine reaſon, coucheth his eares, and limpeth with one of his legges, as if it were quite out of ioynt. Then ſaith his Maſter; What, ſir Iade, are you ſo in loue with faire women? The Aſſe nodding his head ſeemeth to ſay, yea. Come on therefore Sirra (quoth his Maſter) and let vs ſee among all theſe pretty Damoſels, which pleaſeth your fancie beſt. Whereupon the Aſſe going about the company, and eſpying ſome woman more comely and beautifull then the reſt, walketh directly vnto her and toucheth her with his head: and then the beholders laugh and crie out amaine: Loe, the Aſſes Paramour, the Paramour of the Aſſe. Whereupon, the fellow that ſhewed all this ſport leaping vpon the backe of his Aſſe rideth to ſome other place. There is alſo another kind of Charmers or Iuglers, which keep certaine little Birds in Cages made after the faſhion of Cupboords, which birds will reach vnto any man with their Beaks certaine ſkroules, containing either his good or euill ſucceſſe in time to come. And whoſoeuer deſireth to know his fortune, muſt giue the Bird an half-penny; which ſhee taking in her bill, carrieth into a little Boxe, and then comming forth againe, bringeth the ſaid ſkroule in her beake. I my ſelfe had once a ſkroule of ill fortune giuen me, which although I little regarded, yet had I more vnfortunate ſucceſſe then was contained therein. Alſo, there are Maſters of defence playing at all kind of weapons, and other that ſing Songs of the Battels fought betweene the Arabians and Egyptians, when as the Arabians conquered Egypt, with diuers others that ſing ſuch Toyes and Ballads vnto the people.

These Aſſes are ſomewhat like to Banks his Curtall, that plaid his Prizes all England ouer.

The Suburbe called Bulach, ſtanding two miles diſtant from the Walles of the Citie vpon the banke of Nilus, containeth foure thouſand Families. Vpon the way lying betweene the Suburbe and this Citie, ſtand diuers Houſes, and Mills turned about by the ſtrength of beaſts. In this Suburbe dwell many Artificers and Merchants, eſpecially ſuch as ſell Corne, Oyle and Sugar. Moreouer, it is full of ſtately Temples, Palaces, and Colledges: but the faireſt buildings thereof ſtand along the Riuer of Nilus, for from thence there is a moſt beautifull proſpect vpon the Riuer, and thither doe the Veſſels and Barkes of Nilus reſort vnto the common ſtathe of Cairo, being ſituate in this Suburbe: at which place you ſhall ſee at ſome times, and eſpecially in the time of Harueſt, aboue one thouſand Barkes. And here the Officers appointed to receiue Cuſtome for Wares, brought from Alexandria and Damiata haue their aboad: albeit, but little tribute be demanded for the ſaid Wares, becauſe it was paid before at the Port of their arriuall: but thoſe Wares that come out of the firme land of Egypt allow entire cuſtome.

The Suburbe of Carafa built in manner of a Towne, and ſtanding from Mount Muccatim a ſtones caſt, and from the Walles of the Citie about two miles, containeth almoſt two thouſand Houſholds. But at this day the greateſt part thereof lyeth waſte and deſtroyed. Here are many Sepulchers built with high and ſtately Vaults and Arches, and adorned on the inner ſide with diuers Emblems and colours, which the fond people adore as the ſacred Shrines and Monuments of Saints, ſpreading the pauement with ſumptuous and rich Carpets. Hither euery Friday morning reſort out of the Citie it ſelfe, and the Suburbs, great multitudes of people for deuotions ſake, who beſtow liberall and large almes.

The Suburbe called Charafa.

The Citie Miſrulbetich was the firſt that was built in Egypt in the time of the Mahumetans, founded by Hamre, Captaine Generall ouer the Forces of Homar, the ſecond Mahumetan Patriarke vpon the banke of Nilus, reſembling a Suburbe becauſe it is vnwalled, and containing to the number of fiue thouſand Families. It is adorned, eſpecially by the Riuer Nilus, with diuers Palaces and Houſes of Noblemen, and alſo with the famous Temple of Hamre, being of an huge bigneſſe, and moſt ſtately built. It is alſo indifferently well prouided of Tradeſmen and Artificers. And here ſtandeth the famous Sepulchre of a Woman, reputed moſt holy by the Mahumetans, and called by them Saint Naſiſſa, which was the daughter of one called Zenulhebidin, being the ſonne of Huſein, the ſonne of Heli, who was Couſen-german vnto Mahumet. The ſaid Niſiſſa ſeeing all of her Family to be depriued of the Mahumetan Patriarkſhip, left Cufa, a Citie of Arabia Fœlix, and came and dwelt in this Citie; vnto whom, partly becauſe ſhee was of the Linage of Mahumet,and partly for that ſhe liued an innocent and blameleſſe life,the people after her death aſcribed diuine honours, canonizing her for a Saint. Wherefore the Schiſmaticall Patriarcks of her Kindred hauing got the vpper hand in Egypt, began to build for Naſiſſa a moſt beautifull Shrine or Sepulchre, which they adorned alſo with Siluer Lamps, with Carpets of Silke, and ſuch like precious ornaments. So great is the renowne of this Naſiſſa, that there commeth no Mahumetan either by Sea or Land vnto Cairo, but he adoreth this Sepulchre, and bringeth his Offering thereunto,as likewiſe doe all the Mahumetans inhabiting thereabout : inſomuch that the yearely Oblations and Almes offered at this Sepulchre, partly for the reliefe of the poore Kinsfolks of Mahumet,and partly for the maintenance of the Prieſts which keepe the ſaid Sepulchre,amount vnto one hundred thouſand Saraffi; which Prieſts by fained and counterfeit Miracles doe daily delude the minds of the ſimple, to the end they may the more enflame their blind deuotion,and may ſtirre them to greater liberalitie. When Selim the Great Turke wonne the Citie of Cairo,his Ianizaries rifling this Sepulchre, found there the ſumme of fiue hundred thouſand Saraffi in ready money,beſides the Siluer Lampes, the Chaines and Carpets : but Selim tooke away a great part of that treaſure from them. Such as write the Liues of the Mahumetan Saints,making very honourable mention of this Naſiſſa,ſay, that ſhe was deſcended of the noble Familie of Heli,and that ſhe was moſt famous for her vertuous and chaſte life : but the fond people and the Prieſt of that execrable Sepulchre,haue deuiſed many fained and ſuperſtitious Miracles. In this Suburbe alſo,neere vnto the Riuer of Nilus,is the Cuſtomers Office,for ſuch wares as are brought out of the Prouince of Sahid. Without the walled Citie ſtand the Magnificent and ſtately Sepulchres of the Soldans,built with admirable and huge Arches. But in my time a certaine Soldan cauſed a Walke to be built betweene two high Walls,from the Gate of the Citie to the place of the aforeſaid Sepulchres, and at the ends of both Walls cauſed two Turrets of an exceeding height to be erected,for Markes and Directions vnto ſuch Merchants as came thither from the Port of Mount Sinai.

The onely Balme-tree in the world. See P. Mart. Legat. Babyl. and Bellon. obſ.

About a mile and an halfe from the ſaid Sepulchres, in a certaine place called Amalthria,there is a Garden containing the onely Balme-tree, (for in the whole world beſides there is not any other tree that beareth true Balme) which Balme-tree growing in the midſt of a large Fountaine, and hauing a ſhort Stocke or Body, beareth leaues like vnto Vine-leaues, but that they are not ſo long : and this Tree (they ſay) would vtterly wither and decay, if the water of the Fountaine ſhould chance to be deminiſhed. The Garden is enuironed with a ſtrong Wall, whereinto no man may enter,without the ſpeciall fauour and licence of the Gouernour.

In the midſt of Nilus,ouer againſt the old Citie,ſtandeth the Ile called Michias,that is to ſay, The Ile of Meaſure; in which Ile (according to the Inundation of Nilus) they haue a kind of deuice,inuented by the ancient Egyptians, whereby they moſt certainely foreſee the plentie or ſcarcitie of the yeare following throughout all the Land of Egypt. This Iland is well inhabited, and containeth about fifteene hundred Families ; vpon the extreme point or ende whereof ſtandeth a moſt beautiful Palace,built in my remembrance by a Soldan,& a large Temple alſo,which is very pleaſant,in regard of the coole Streames of Nilus. Vpon another ſide of the Iland ſtandeth an houſe alone by it ſelfe,in the midſt whereof there is a foureſquare Ciſterne or Chanell of eighteene cubits deepe, whereinto the water of Nilus is conueyed by a certaine Sluce vnder the ground. And in the midſt of the Ciſterne there is erected a certaine Pillar,which is marked and diuided into ſo many cubits, as the Ciſterne it ſelfe containeth in depth. And vpon the ſeauenteenth of Iune when Nilus beginneth to ouerflow, the water thereof conueyed by the ſaid Sluce into the Chanell,increaſeth daily,ſometimes two,and ſometimes three fingers, and ſometimes halfe a cubit in height. Vnto this place there daily reſort certaine Officers appointed by the Senate, who viewing and obſeruing the increaſe of Nilus, declare vnto certaine Children how much it hath increaſed ; which children wearing yellow Skarffes vpon their Heads, doe publiſh the ſaid increaſe of Nilus in euery ſtreete of the Citie and the Suburbs, and receiue gifts euery day of the Merchants,Artificers,and Women,ſo long as Nilus increaſeth. The foreſaid deuice or experiment of the increaſe of Nilus, is this that followeth : If the water reacheth onely to the fifteenth cubit of the foreſaid Pillar,they hope for a fruitfull yeare following : but if it ſtayeth betweene the twelfth cubit and the fifteenth, then the increaſe of the yeare will prooue but meane : if it reſteth betweene the tenth and twelfth cubits, then is it a ſigne that Corne will be ſold ten Duckats the buſhell : But if it ariſeth to the eighteenth cubite,there is like to follow great ſcarcitie,in regard of too much moyſture : and if the eighteenth cubite be ſurmounted, all Egypt is in danger to be ſwallowed vp by the inundation of Nilus. The Officers therefore declare vnto the Children the height of the Riuer,and the Children publiſh the ſame in all ſtreets of the Citie,charging the people to feare God, and telling them how high Nilus is increaſed. And the people being aſtonied at the wonderfull increaſe of Nilus, wholly exerciſe themſelues in Prayers, and giuing of Almes. And thus Nilus continueth fortie dayes increaſing, and fortie dayes decreaſing ; all which time Corne is ſold very deare,becauſe while the Inundation laſteth, euery man may ſell at his owne pleaſure: but when the eightieth day is once paſt, the Clerke of the Market appointeth the price of all Victuals,and eſpecially of Corne, according as hee knoweth by the foreſaid experiment, that the high and low grounds of Egypt haue receiued either too little, or too much or conuenient moyſture: all which Cuſtomes and Ceremonies being duly performed, there followeth ſo great a Solemnitie, and ſuch a thundering noyſe of Drummes and Trumpets throughout all Cairo, that a man would ſuppoſe the whole Citie to be turned vpſide downe. And then euery Family hath a Barge adorned with rich Couerings and Carpets, and with Torch-light, and furniſhed with moſt daintie meates and confections, wherewith they ſolace themſelus. The SOLDAN alſo with all his Nobles and Courtiers reſorteth vnto that Sluce or Conduit, which is called the great Conduit, and is compaſſed round about with a wall, who taking an Axe in his hand breaketh the ſaid wall, and ſo doe his Nobles and Courtiers likewiſe: inſomuch, that the ſame part of the wall being caſt downe, which ſtopped the paſſage of the water, the Riuer of Nilus is ſo ſwiftly and forcibly carryed through that Conduit, and through all other Conduits and Sluces in the Citie and the Suburbes, that Cairo at that time ſeemeth to be another Venice; and then may you row ouer all places of the Land of Egypt. Seuen dayes and ſeuen nights together the foreſaid Feſtiuall Solemnitie continueth in Cairo; during which ſpace the Merchants and Artificers of the Citie may (according to the cuſtome of the ancient Egyptians) conſume and ſpend in Torches, Perfumes, Confections, Muſicke, and ſuch like iollities, all their gaines that they haue gotten the whole yeere paſt. Without the Citie of Cairo, neere vnto the Suburbe of BebZuaila, ſtandeth the Caſtle of the Soldan vpon the ſide of the Mountain called Mochattan. This Caſtle is enuironed with high and impregnable wals, and contayneth ſuch ſtately and beautifull Palaces, that they can hardly be deſcribed. Paued they are with excellent Marble, on the Roofes they are gilt and curiouſly painted, their windowes are adorned with diuers colours, like to the windowes in ſome places of Europe; and their gates be artificially carued and beautified with Gold and Azure. Some of theſe Palaces are for the Soldan and his Family; others for the Family of his Wife, and the reſidue for his Concubines, his Eunuches, and his Guard. Likewiſe the Soldan had one palace to keepe publike Feaſts in; and another wherein to giue audience vnto forraine Ambaſſadours, and to exalt himſelfe with great pompe and Ceremonies: and another alſo for the Gouernours and Officials of his Court. But all theſe are at this preſent aboliſhed by Selim the great Turke.

Iohn Leo tooke theſe notes a little before the Turke had conquered Egypt, after which trauelled thrice into Egypt.

A ſolemne Feaſt of ſeuen dayes for Nilus.

The Inhabitants of Cairo are people of a merry, iocund, and cheerefull diſpoſition, ſuch as will promiſe much, but performe little. They exerciſe Merchandize and Mechanicall Arts, and yet trauell they not out of their owne natiue ſoyle. Many Students there are of the Lawes, but very few of other liberall Arts and Sciences. And their Colledges are continually full of Students, yet few of them attayne vnto perfection. The Citizens in Winter are clad in garments of cloth lined with Cotton: in Summer they weare fine ſhirts; ouer which ſhirts ſome put on linnen garments curiouſly wrought with ſilke, and others weare garments of Chamblet, and vpon their heads they carry great Turbants couered with cloth of India. The women goe coſtly attired, adorning their foreheads and neckes with frontlet and chaines of Pearle, and on their heads they weare a ſharpe and ſlender bonet of a ſpan high, being very precious and rich. Gownes they weare of woollen cloth with ſtrait ſleeues, being curiouſly imbroydered with needle-worke, ouer which they caſt certaine veyles of moſt excellent fine cloth of India. They couer their heads and faces with a kind of blacke Skarfe, through which beholding others, they cannot bee ſeene themſelues. Vpon their feet they weare fine ſhooes and pantofles, ſomewhat after the Turkiſh faſhion. Theſe women are ſo ambitious and proud, that all of them diſdaine eyther to ſpinne or to play the Cookes: wherefore their Husbands are conſtrayned to buy victuals ready dreſt at the Cookes ſhops: for very few, except ſuch as haue a great Family, vſe to prepare and dreſſe their victuals in their owne houſes. Alſo they vouchſafe great libertie vnto their Wiues: for the good man being gone to the Tauerne or Victualling houſe, his Wife tricking vp her ſelfe in coſtly apparell, and being perfumed with ſweet and precious Odours, walketh about the Citie to ſolace her ſelfe, and parley with her kinsfolkes and friends.

The cuſtomes, rites, and faſhions of the Citizens of Cairo.

The attyre of the women of Cairo.

The libertie of the women of Cairo.

They vſe to ride vpon Aſſes more then horſes, which are broken to ſuch a gentle pace, that they go eaſier then any ambling horſe. Theſe Aſſes they couer with moſt coſtly Furniture and let them out vnto women to ride vpon, together with a Boy to lead the Aſſe, and certain Footmen to run by. In this City, like as in diuers others, great ſtore of people carry about ſundry kinds of victuals to be ſold. Many there are alſo that ſell water, which they carry vp and downe in certayne Leather bags vpon the backes of Camels: for the Citie (as I ſaid before) is two miles diſtant from Nilus. Others carrie about a more fine and handſome Veſſell with a Cocke or Spout of Braſſe vpon it, hauing a Cup of Myrrhe or Chriſtall in their hands, and theſe ſell water for men to drinke, and for euery draught they take a farthing. Others ſell young Chickens and other Fowles by meaſure, which they hatch after a wonderfull and ſtrange manner. They put great numbers of Egges into certayne Ouens built vpon ſundry lofts, which Ouens being moderately heat, will within ſeuen dayes conuert all the ſaid Egges into Chickens. Their meaſures are bottomleſſe, which being put into the basket of the buyer, and filled full of Chickens they lift it vp, and ſo let the Chickens fall into the basket. Likewiſe, ſuch as buy thoſe Chickens hauing kept them a few dayes, carry them about to ſell againe. The Cookes ſhops ſtand open open very late: but the ſhops of other Artificers are ſhut vp before ten of the clocke, who then walke abroad for their ſolace and recreation from one Suburbe to another. The Citizens in their common talke vſe ribald and filthy ſpeeches: and (that I may paſſe ouer the reſt in ſilence) it falleth out oftentimes that the Wife will complaine of her Huſband vnto the Iudge, that he doth not his dutie nor contenteth her ſufficiently in the night ſeaſon, wherupon (as it is permitted by the Mahumetan Law) the women are diuorced and maryed vnto other Huſbands.

The reward of new and ingenious deuiſes. One Marke Scaliot in London, made a Locke and Key and Chaine, of 43. linkes, all which a Flea did draw, and weighed but a graine and a halfe, Stow Chron. 1579.

Among the Artizans whoſoeuer is the firſt Inuentor of any new and ingenuous Deuice, is clad in a Garment of cloth of Gold, and carryed with a noyſe of Muſicians after him, as it were in triumph from ſhop to ſhop, hauing ſome money giuen him at euery place. I my ſelfe once ſaw one carryed about with ſolemne Muſicke and with great pompe and triumph, becauſe hee had bound a Flea in a Chaine, which lay before him on a piece of Paper for all men to behold.

Amongſt the ſundry Sects of Religion in this Citie, there is one Sect of the Moores called Cheneſia: and this Sect liueth vpon Horſe-fleſh, ſo that their Butchers when they can heare of any halting or lame Iade, buy him forth-with, and ſet him vp a fatting, and hauing killed him, the ſaid Sect of Cheneſia come and buy vp his fleſh hand-ſmooth. This Sect is riſe alſo among the Turkes, the Mamalukes, and the people of Aſia; and albeit, the Turkes might freely vſe the food before-mentioned, yet doe they not inure themſelues thereunto.

Foure ſeuerall Sects of the Mahumetan Religion, permitted in the Citie of Cairo.

In Egypt and in the Citie of Cairo there are permitted foure ſeuerall Sects, differing each from other both in Canon and Ciuill Lawes: all which Sects haue their originall from the Religion of Mahumet. For there were in times paſt foure men of ſingular Learning, who by ſubtiltie and ſharpneſſe of wit, found out a way to make particular deductions out of Mahumets generall Precepts. So that each of them would interpret the opinions of Mahumet according to their owne fancie, and would euery man apply them to his owne proper ſenſe; and therefore they muſt needs diſagree much betweene themſelues: howbeit, growing famous among the common people in regard of their diuers Canons and Precepts, they were the firſt Authours and Founders of the ſaid foure Sects: any one of which whatſoeuer Mahumetan profeſſeth, cannot renounce the ſame at his pleaſure and embrace another Sect, vnleſſe hee be a man of deepe Learning, and knoweth the Reaſons and Allegations of both parts. Alſo there are in the Citie of Cairo foure principall Iudges, who giue ſentence onely vpon matters of great importance: vnder which foure are ſubſtituted other inferiour Iudges, in euery ſtreet of the Citie, which decide pettie contentions and brabbles. And if the parties which are at controuerſie chance to bee of diuers Sects, the Plaintiffe may ſummon and conuent the Defendant before the Iudge of his ſtreet: howbeit, the Defendant may, if he will, appeale from him vnto the higheſt Iudge of all, being placed ouer the foure principall Iudges aforeſaid, and being gouernour of the Sect, called Eſſafichia; and this high Iudge hath authoritie to diſpenſe withall, or to diſanull the Decrees of the foure principall, and of all the other inferiour Iudges, according as hee ſhall ſee cauſe. Whoſoeuer attempteth ought againſt the Canons and Precepts of his owne Religion, is ſeuerely puniſhed by the Iudge of the ſame Religion. Moreouer, albeit the Prieſts of the foreſaid Sects differ very much, both in their formes of Lyturgie or Prayer, and alſo in many other reſpects, yet doe they not for that diuerſitie of Ceremonies hate one another, neyther yet doe the common people of ſundry Sects fall to mutinie and debate: but men indeed of ſingular Learning and much reading conferre oftentimes together, and as in priuate each man affirmeth his owne Sect to be the beſt, ſo likewiſe doe they confirme their opinions by ſubtile Arguments, neither may any man vnder paine of grieuous puniſhment reproch any of the ſaid foure ancient Doctors. And in very deed they all of them follow one & the ſame Religion, to wit, that which is preſcribed in the Canons of Haſhari, the principall Doctor of the Mahumetans, which Canons goe for currant ouer all Africa, and moſt part of Aſia, except in the Dominions of the Great Sophi of Perſia; who becauſe he reiecteth the ſaid Canons, is accounted by other Mahumetans an Heretike, and a Schiſmaticke. But how ſuch varietie of opinions proceeded from the foure Doctors aforeſaid, it were tedious and troubleſome to rehearſe: he that is deſirous to know more of this matter, let him read my Commentaries which I haue written concerning the Law and Religion of Mahumet, according to the Doctrine of Malich, who was a man of profound Learning, and was borne at Medina Talnabi, where the bodie of Mahumet lyeth buryed: which Doctrine of Malich is embraced throughout all Syria, Egypt, and Arabia: wherewith if any be delighted, let him peruſe my foreſaid Commentaries, and they will ſatisfie him to the full.

An horrible kind of execution.

Vpon Malefactors they inflict moſt grieuous and horrible puniſhment, eſpecially vpon ſuch as haue committed any heynous crime in the Court. Theeues they condemne to the Halter. A murther committed trecherouſly they puniſh in manner following: the Executioners aſſiſtants take the Malefactor one by the head, and another by the feet, and then comes the chiefe Executioner with a Two-hand-ſword, and cutteth his bodie in twaine, the one part whereof adioyning to the head is put into a fire full of vn-ſlaked Lime: and it is a moſt ſtrange and dreadfull thing to conſider, how the ſame diſmembred and halfe bodie will remayne aliue in the fire for the ſpace of a quarter of an houre, ſpeaking and making anſwere vnto the ſtanders by. But rebels or ſeditious perſons they flea aliue, ſtuffing their skins with bran till they reſemble mans ſhape, which being done, they carry the ſaid ſtuffed skins vpon Camels backes through euery ſtreete of the Citie, and there publiſh the crime of the partie executed: then which puniſhment I neuer ſawe a more dreadfull, by reaſon that the condemned party liueth ſo long in torment: but if the tormenter once toucheth his nauell with the knife, he preſently yeeldeth vp the Ghoſt: which he may not doe vntill he be commanded by the Magiſtrate ſtanding by. If any be impriſoned for debt, not hauing where withall to ſatisfie the ſame, the Gouernor of the priſon payeth their creditors, and ſendeth them, poore wretches, bound in chaines, and accompanied with certaine keepers, daily to begge almes from ſtreet to ſtreet, all which almes redoundeth to the Gouernour, and hee alloweth the ſaid priſoners very bare maintenance to liue vpon.

The Nauell being cut is preſent death.

Moreouer, there goe crying vp and downe this Citie certaine aged women, who (though that which they ſay in the ſtreets cannot be vnderſtood) are notwithſtanding inioyned by their office to circumciſe women according to the preſcript of Mahumet: which Ceremonie is not obſerued but in Egypt and Syria.

Women circumciſed.

The dignity and power of the Soldan was in times paſt exceeding great; but Selim the great Turke in the yeere of Chriſt (if I be not deceiued) 1517. vtterly aboliſhed the ſaide dignity, and changed all the Cuſtomes and Lawes of the Soldan. And becauſe it hath beene my hap thriſe to trauell into Egypt ſince the ſaid wonderfull alteration befell, I ſuppoſe, it will not bee much beſide my purpoſe, if I ſet downe in this place ſuch particulars as I know to be moſt certaine true concerning the Court of the Soldan. Vnto this high dignitie was wont to bee choſen ſome one of the moſt noble Mamaluks. Theſe Mamaluks being all Chriſtians at the firſt, and ſtolne in their child-hood by the Tartars out of the Prouince of Circaſſia, which bordereth vpon the Euxin Sea, and being ſold at Caffa, a Towne of Taurica Cherſoneſus, were brought from thence by certaine Merchants vnto the Citie of Cairo, and were there bought by the Soldan; who conſtraining them foorthwith to abiure and renounce their baptiſme, cauſed them to bee inſtructed in the Arabian and Turkiſh Languages, and to bee trained vp in Militarie Diſcipline, to the end they might aſcend from one degree of Honour to another, till at laſt they were aduanced vnto the high dignity of the Soldan. But this Cuſtome whereby it was enacted: that the Soldan ſhould be choſen out of the number of ſuch as were Mamaluks and ſlaues by their condition, began about two hundred and fifty yeers ſithence, when as the Family of the valiant Saladin (whoſe name was ſo terrible vnto Chriſtians) being ſupported but by a few of the kindred, fell to vtter decay and ruine.

The manner of creating the Soldan, and of the orders, degrees, and offices in his Court.

Iohn Leo was thriſe in Egypt.

The Mamaluks.

At the ſame time when the laſt King of Ieruſalem was determined to ſacke the Citie of Cairo, which alſo in regard of the ſloth and cowardize of the Mahumetan Califa then raigning ouer it, intended to make it ſelfe tributarie vnto the ſame King, the Iudges and Lawyers of the Citie with the conſent of the Califa, ſent for a certaine Prince of Aſia, called Azedudin, of the Nation of Curdu (the people whereof liue in tents like the Arabians) which Azedudin together with his ſonne Saladin, came with an armie of fiftie thouſand horſemen. And albeit, Saladin was inferiour in age vnto his Father, yet in regard of his redoubted valour, and ſingular knowledge in Military affaires, they created him Generall of the field, and gaue him free liberty to beſtow all the Tributes and Reuenues of Egypt, as himſelfe ſhould thinke expedient. And ſo marching at length againſt the Chriſtians, he got the Victory of them without any bloodſhed, and draue them out of Ieruſalem and out of all Syria. Then Saladin returning backe with triumph vnto Cairo, had an intent to vſurpe the Gouernment thereof: whereupon hauing ſlaine the Califa his guard (who bare principall ſway ouer the Egyptians) hee procured the death alſo of the Califa himſelfe, being thus bereft of his guard, with a poyſoned cup, and then foorthwith ſubmitted himſelfe vnto the patronage of the Califa of Bagdet, who was the true and lawfull Mahumetan Prelate of Cairo. Thus the iuriſdiction of the Califas of Cairo (who had continued Lords of that Citie by perpetuall ſucceſſion for the ſpace of two hundred and thirty yeeres) ſurceaſed, and returned againe vnto the Califa of Bagdet, who was the true and lawfull Gouernour thereof. And ſo the Schiſmaticall Califas and Patriarkes being ſuppreſſed, there grew a contention betweene Saladin and the Soldan of Bagdet, and Saladin made himſelfe a ſoueraigne of Cairo, becauſe the ſaid Soldan of Bagdet being in times paſt Prince of the Prouinces of Mazandran and Euarizin ſituate vpon the Riuer of Ganges, and being borne in a certaine Countrey of Aſia, laid claime notwithſtanding vnto the Dominion of Cairo, and intending to wage warre againſt Saladin, hee was reſtrained by the Tartars of Coraſan, who made inuaſions and inrodes vpon him. Saladin on the other ſide fearing leaſt the Chriſtians in reuenge of the foreſaid iniury would make an expedition into Syria, and conſidering that his forces were partly ſlaine in the former warres, and partly conſumed by peſtilence, except a few which remained for the defence and ſauegard of his Kingdome, began to imploy himſelfe about buying of ſlaues that came from Circaſſia, whom the King of Armenia by thoſe dayes tooke and ſent vnto Cairo to bee ſold: which ſlaues he cauſed to abiure the Chriſtian faith, and to be trained vp in feats of warre and in the Turkiſh Language, and being the proper Language of Saladin himſelfe: and ſo the ſaid ſlaues within a while increaſed ſo exceedingly both in valour and number, that they became not onely valiant Souldiers, and ſkilfull Commanders, but alſo Gouernours of the whole King-

The originall of the Mamaluks.

Kingdome. After the deceaſe of Salidin, the Dominion remained vnto his Family one hundred and fifty yeeres, and all his ſucceſſors obſerued the Cuſtome of buying ſlaues of Circaſſia: but the Family of Saladin growing at length to decay, the ſlaues by a generall conſent elected one Piperis a valiant Mamaluk of their owne companie to be their Soueraigne Lord and Soldan: which Cuſtome they afterward ſo inuiolably kept, that not the Soldans owne ſonne nor any other Mamaluk could attaine vnto that high dignity, vnleſſe firſt he had beene a Chriſtian, and had abiured his faith, and had learned alſo exactly to ſpeak the Circaſſian and Turkiſh Languages. Inſomuch, that many Soldans ſent their ſonnes in their childhood into Circaſſia, that by learning the Language and faſhions of the Countrey, they might proue in proceſſe of time fit to beare Soueraigne authority; but by the diſſenſion of Mahaluks, they were alwayes defeated of their purpoſe.

The principall Peere next vnder the Soldan called Eddaguadare.

The Eddaguadare being in dignitie ſecond vnto the Soldan, and being as it were, his Vice-roy or Lieutenant, had authoritie to place or diſplace any Magiſtrates or Officers; and maintained a Family almoſt as great as the Family of the Soldan himſelfe.

The Soldans officer, called Amir Caber.

The Amir Cabir hauing the third place of honour, was Lord Generall ouer the Soldans Militarie Forces; who was by office bound to leauy armies againſt the forraine enemie, eſpecially againſt the next Arabians, and to furniſh the Caſtles and Cities with conuenient Gariſons: and alſo had authoritie to diſpend the Soldans Treaſure, vpon ſuch neceſſary affaires as hee thought good.

Nai Beſſan.

The fourth in dignity after the Soldan called Nai Beſſan, beeing the Soldan his Lieutenant in Syria, and gathering vp all the Tributes of Aſſiria, beſtowed them at his owne diſcretion, and yet the Soldan himſelfe was to place Garriſons in the Caſtles and Forts of thoſe Prouinces. This Nai Beſſan was bound yeerely to pay certaine thouſands of Saraffi vnto the Soldan.

The Oſtadar.

The fift Magiſtrate called the Oſtadar, was the great Maſter or Steward of the Palace; whoſe duetie was to prouide apparell for the Soldan, with Victuals and other neceſſaries for his whole family. And vnto this dignity the Soldan vſed to aduance ſome one of his moſt ancient, Honourable, and Vertuous Nobles, vndes whoſe tuition himſelfe had in times paſt beene trained vp.

The Amiri Achor.

The ſixt called the Amiri Achor, was Maſter of the Horſe and Camels; and diſtributed them vnto each man in Court, according to his degree.

The Amiralſ.

The ſeuenth Office was performed by certaine principall Mamalukes, being like vnto the Colonels of Europe: euery of whom was Captaine of a thouſand inferious Mamaluks; and their Office was to conduct the Soldans Forces againſt the enemie, and to take charge of his armour.

The Amirmia.

The eight degree of Honour was allotted vnto certaine Centurions ouer the Mamaluks; who were continually to attend vpon the Soldan, either when he road any whither, or when he exerciſed himſelfe in armes.

The Chazendare.

The ninth perſon was the Treaſurer, who made an account vnto the Soldan of all the Tributes and Cuſtomes of his Kingdome, diſburſing money for the daily and neceſſary expenſes of the Soldans Houſehold, and laying vp the reſt in the Soldans Caſtle.

The Amirſileh.

The tenth called the Amirſileh, had the armour of the Soldan committed to his charge, which being contained in a great Armory was to be ſcoured, furbuſhed, and renued at his direction, for which purpoſe he had ſundry Mamaluks placed vnder him.

The Teſtecana.

The eleuenth called the Teſtecana was Maſter of the Soldans Wardrobe, and tooke charge of all ſuch Robes and Apparell as were deliuered vnto him by the Oſtadar or high Steward of the Houſhold; which Robes he diſtributed according to the appointment of the Soldan; for whomſoeuer the Soldan promoted vnto any dignity, him he apparelled alſo. All the ſaid garments were of cloth of Gold, of Veluet, or of ſilke.

The Citie of Chanca.

The great Citie of Chanca ſituate about ſixe miles from Cairo, at the very entrance of the Deſart lying in the way to Mount Sinai, is repleniſhed with moſt ſtately Houſes, Temples, and Colledges. All the fields betweene Cairo and this Citie abound with great plenty of Dates: but from Chanca to Mount Sinai, which is an hundred and fortie miles, there are no places of habitation at all. Through this Citie lie two maine road-wayes, the one leading to Syria, and the other to Arabia. This Citie hath no other water but ſuch as remaine in certaine Chanels after the inundation of Nilus; which chanels being broken, the water runneth forth into the plaines, and there maketh a number of ſmall lakes, from whence it is conueighed backe by certaine ſluces into the Ciſternes of the Citie.

The Citie of Munia.

Vpon the ſame ſide of Nilus, ſtandeth the faire Citie of Munia, which was built in the time of the Mahumetans by one Chaſib, a Lieutenant and Courtier of the Califa of Bagdet, vpon an high place. Heere are moſt excellent Grapes, and abundance of all kind of fruit, which albeit they are carried to Cairo, yet can they not come thither freſh and new, by reaſon that this City is diſtant from Cairo one hundreth and foureſcore miles. It is adorned with moſt ſtately Temples and other buildings; and here are to be ſeene at this preſent, ſundry ruines of the ancient Egyp- tian buildings. The Inhabitants are rich, for they trauell for their gaine as farre as Gaoga, a Kingdome of the Land of Negros.

At this preſent there are found at Manf-Loth, certaine huge and high Pillars and Porches, whereon are Verſes engrauen in the Egyptian Tongue. Neere vnto Nilus ſtand the ruines of a ſtately building, which ſeemeth to haue been a Temple in times paſt; among which ruines the Citizens find ſometimes Coyne of Siluer, ſometimes of Gold, and ſometimes of Lead, hauing on the one ſide Hielygraphick notes, and on the otherſide the pictures of ancient Kings. The fields adiacent being very fruitfull, are extremely ſcorched by the heate of the Sunne, and much haunted with Crocodiles, which was the occaſion (as ſome thinke) why the Romans abandoned this Citie. The Inhabitants are men of indifferent wealth, for they exerciſe Traffick in the Land of Negros.

The Citie of Azioth.

Azioth founded by the Egyptians vpon the banke of Nilus, two hundred and fifty miles from Cairo, is moſt admirable in regard of the hugeneſſe, and of the varietie of old buildings, and of Epitaphes engrauen in Egyptian Letters; although at this preſent the greateſt part thereof lieth deſolate. When the Mahumetans were firſt Lords of this Citie, it was inhabited by honourable perſonages, and continueth as yet famous, in regard of the Nobility and great wealth of the Citizens. There are in this Citie almoſt an hundred Families of Chriſtians, and three or foure Churches ſtill remaining: and without the Citie ſtandeth a Monaſterie, containing moe then an hundred Monks, who eate neither Fleſh nor Fiſh, but onely Hearbs, Bread and Oliues. And yet haue they dainty Cates without any fat among them. This Monaſterie is very rich, and giueth three dayes entertainement to all ſtrangers that reſort thither, for the welcomming of whom they bring vp great ſtore of Doues, of Chickens, and of ſuch like commodities.

Chriſtians.

The Citie of Ichmin.

Ichmin being the moſt ancient Citie in all Egypt, was built by Ichmin, the ſonne of * Miſraim, the ſonne of Chus, which was the ſonne of * Hen, vpon the Banke of Nilus, next vnto Aſia, and three hundred miles Eaſtward from Cairo. This Citie the Mahumetans, when they firſt began to vſurpe ouer Egypt, ſo waſted and deſtroyed, for certaine cauſes mentioned in Hiſtories, that beſides the foundations and rubbiſh, they left nought remaining: for, tranſporting the Pillars and principall Stones vnto the other ſide of Nilus, they built thereof the Citie called Munſia, euen as we will now declare.

* It is otherwiſe read in the tenth Chapter of Geneſis, verſ.6.

* Dubium.

The Monaſterie called Georgia.

Georgia was in times paſt a famous Monaſterie of Chriſtians, called after the name of Saint George, and being ſixe miles diſtant from Munſia. It was inhabited by more then two hundred Monkes, who enioying large Territories, Poſſeſſions and Reuenues, ſhewed themſelues curteous and beneficiall vnto ſtrangers; and the ouerplus of their yearely reuenues was ſent vnto the Patriarke of Cairo, who cauſed the ſame to be diſtributed amongſt the poore Chriſtians: but about an hundred yeares agoe, all the Monkes of this Monaſterie died of a Peſtilence, which ſpred it ſelfe ouer all the Land of Egypt. Whereupon the Prince of Munſia compaſſed the ſaid Monaſterie with a Wall, and erected diuers houſes for Artificers and Merchants to dwell in. And being allured by the pleaſant Gardens ſituate amidſt the beautifull Hills, hee himſelfe went thither to inhabite: but the Patriarke of the Iacobites making his mone vnto the Soldan, the Soldan cauſed another Monaſterie to bee built in the ſame place, where in times paſt the old Citie ſtood; and aſſigned ſo much allowance thereunto, as might maintaine thirtie Monkes.

A Peſtilence.

The Citie of Chian.

This little Citie of Chian was built in times paſt neere vnto Nilus by the Mahumetans, which notwithſtanding is not now inhabited by them, but by the Chriſtians called Iacobites, who employ themſelues either in Husbandrie, or in bringing vp of Chickens, Geeſe, and Doues. There remaine as yet certaine Monaſteries of Chriſtians, that giue entertainement to Strangers. But Mahumetans (beſides the Gouernour and his Family) there are none at all.

The Citie of Barbanda.

Barbanda founded by the Egyptians vpon Nilus, about foure hundred miles from Cairo, was laid ſo waſte by the Romans, that nothing but the ruines thereof remained, moſt of which ruines were carried vnto Aſna, whereof wee will forthwith intreate. Amongſt the ſaid ruines are to be found many pieces of Gold and Siluer Coyne, and ſundry fragments of Smaragds or Emralds.

Emralds.

The Citie of Cana.

Antonio Galuano maketh large mention of this Citie.

The ancient Citie of Cana, built by the Egyptians vpon the banke of Nilus ouer againſt Barbanda, and enuironed with Walls of Sunne-dried Bricke, is inhabited with people of baſe condition, applying themſelues vnto Husbandrie, by which meanes the Citie aboundeth with corne. Hither are the Merchandiſe brought againſt the ſtreame of Nilus, which are ſent from Cairo to Mecca: for the diſtance from hence ouer the wilderneſſe vnto the Red Sea, is at leaſt 120 miles, all which way there is no water at all to bee found. And at the Hauen of Choſſir vpon the ſhoare of the Red Sea, are diuers Cottages, whereinto the ſaid Merchandiſes are vnladen. And ouer againſt Choſſir on the ſide of Aſia lieth Iambuh, another Hauen of the Red Sea, whereat Trauellers going on Pilgrimage to ſee the Tombe of Mahumet at Medina, muſt make their rendeuous or generall meeting. Moreouer, Chana furniſheth Medina and Mecca with Corne, in which places they ſuffer great and continuall ſcarcitie.

The Hauen of Choſſir.

The Citie of Aſna.

Aſna in times paſt was called Siene. Round about this Citie there are to bee ſeene diuers huge buildings, and admirable Sepulchres, together with ſundry Epitaphes engrauen both in Egyptian and Latine Letters.

The Citie of Aſſuan.

Suachen.

The great, ancient, and populous Citie of Aſſuan was built by the Egyptians vpon the Riuer of Nilus, about foureſcore miles Eaſtward from Aſna. The ſoyle adiacent is moſt apt and fruitfull for Corne. And the Citizens are exceedingly addicted vnto the Trade of Merchandiſe, becauſe they dwell ſo neere vnto the Kingdome of Nubia, vpon the confines whereof ſtandeth their Citie: beyond which Citie, Nilus diſperſing himſelfe ouer the Plaines through many ſmall Lakes, becommeth innauigable. Alſo, the ſaid Citie ſtandeth neere vnto that Deſart, ouer which they trauell vnto the Port of Suachen vpon the Red Sea, and it adioyneth likewiſe vpon the frontiers of Ethiopia. And here in Summer time the Inhabitants are extremely ſcorched with the heate of the Sunne, being of a ſwart or browne colour, and being mingled with the people of Nubia and Ethiopia. Here are to be ſeene alſo many buildings of the ancient Egyptians, and moſt high Towers, which they call in the language of that Countrey Barba. Beyond this place there is neither Citie nor habitation of any account, beſides a few Villages of black people, whoſe ſpeech is compounded of the Arabian, Egyptian, and Ethiopian languages. Theſe being ſubiect vnto the people, called * Bugiba, liue in the Fields after the Arabian manner, being free from the Soldans iuriſdiction, for there his Dominions are limited.

* Bugiba are thoſe which in old time were called Troglodytæ.

The great Trauels of Iohn Leo.

And thus much concerning the principall Cities ſtanding along the maine Chanell of Nilus: Some whereof I ſaw, others I entred into, and paſſed by the reſidue: but I had moſt certaine intelligence of them all, either by the Inhabitants themſelues, or by the Mariners which carried me by water from Cairo to Aſſuan, with whom returning backe vnto Chana, I trauelled thence ouer the Deſart vnto the Red Sea, ouer which Sea I croſſed vnto Iambuth, and Ziddem, two Hauen Townes of Arabia Deſarta; of which two Townes, becauſe they belong vnto Aſia, I will not here diſcourſe, leſt I ſhould ſeeme to tranſgreſſe the limits of Africa. But if it ſhall pleaſe God to vouchſafe me longer life, I purpoſe to deſcribe all the Regions of Aſia which I haue trauelled; to wit, Arabia Deſarta, Arabia Fœlix, Arabia Petræa, the Aſian part of Egypt, Armenia, and ſome part of Tartaria; all which Countries I ſaw and paſſed through in the time of my youth. Likewiſe, I will ſet downe my laſt Voyages from Fez to Conſtantinople, from Conſtantinople to Egypt, and from thence into Italie, in which Iourney I ſaw diuers and ſundry Ilands. All which my Trauels I meane (by Gods aſſiſtance) being returned forth of Europe into mine owne Country, particularly to deſcribe; deciphring firſt the Religion of Europe and Aſia which I haue ſeene, and thereunto annexing this my Diſcourſe of Africa, to the end that I may promote the endeauours of ſuch as are deſirous to know the ſtate of forraine Countries.

Principall occurrents in IOHN LEO his ninth Booke of the Hiſtorie of Africa.

Of the African Beaſts differing from the European.

The manner of taking Elephants in Ethiopia.

* As by a tame Female drawing him to an incloſed place: and by a tame Male fighting with the wilde one in the Wood, and meane while men with ropes faſtning his hinder legs.

THe Elephant keepeth in the Woods, and is found in great numbers in the forreſts of the Land of Negros. They vſe to go many in one company, & if they chance to meet with any man, they either ſhun him, or giue place vnto him. But if the Elephant intendeth to hurt any man, he caſteth him on the ground with his long ſnout or trunke, and neuer ceaſeth trampling vpon him till he be dead. And although it be a mighty and fierce beaſt, yet are there great ſtore of them caught by the Ethiopian Hunters, in manner following. Theſe Hunters being acquainted with the Woods and Thickets where they keepe, vſe to make among the trees a round hedge of ſtrong boughes and rafts, leauing a ſpace open on the one ſide thereof, and likewiſe a doore ſtanding vpon the plaine ground which may be lift vp with ropes, wherewith they can eaſily ſtoppe the ſaid open place or paſſage. The Elephant therefore comming to take his reſt vnder the ſhady boughes, entreth the hedge or incloſure, where the Hunters by drawing the ſaid rope, and faſtening the doore, hauing impriſoned him, deſcend downe from the trees, and kill him with their Arrowes, to the end they may get his Teeth, and make ſale of them. But if the Elephant chanceth to breake through the hedge, he murthereth as many men as he can find. In Ethiopia the higher, and India, they haue other deuices * to take the Elephant, which, leaſt I ſhould ſeeme ouer-tedious, I paſſe ouer in ſilence.

The Beaſt called Giraffa.

* Here is a word wanting in the originall.

The Giraffa ſo ſauage and wild, that it is a very rare matter to ſee any of them: for they hide themſelues among the Deſarts and Woods, where no other beaſts vſe to come; and ſo ſoone as one of them eſpieth a man, it flieth forthwith, though not very ſwftly. It is headed like a Camell, eared like an Oxe, and footed like a * : neither are any taken by Hunters, but while they are very young.

The Camell.

Camels are gentle and domeſticall beaſts, and are found in Africa in great numbers, eſpecially in the Deſarts of Libya, Numidia, and Barbaria. And theſe the Arabians eſteeme to bee their principall poſſeſſions and riches: ſo that ſpeaking of the wealth of any of their Princes, or Gouernours, he hath (ſay they) ſo many thouſands Camels, and not ſo many thouſand Duckets.

Moreouer, the Arabians that poſſeſſe Camels liue like Lords and Potentates in great liberty, becauſe they can remaine with their Camels in barren Deſarts, whither no Kings nor Princes can bring armies to ſubdue them.

The African Camels are the beſt.

Three kinds of Camels.

Camels of a wonderfull ſwiftnes, otherwiſe called Dromidaries.

The Camels great abſtinence from drinke.

How the Camels of Cairo learne to dance.

African Camels farre excell them of Aſia; for trauelling fortie or fifty dayes together, without any prouender at all, they are vnladen in the euening, and turned looſe into the next fields, where they feed vpon Graſſe, Brambles, and the boughes of trees; which hardneſſe the Camels of Aſia cannot endure, but when they ſet foorth any iourney, they muſt be well pampered and full of fleſh. Experience hath taught, that our Camels hauing trauelled laden fifty dayes together without any prouender; haue ſo waſted; firſt, the fleſh of their bunches; ſecondly, of their bellies, and laſtly, of their hips, that they haue ſcarce beene able to carry the weight of one hundreth pounds. But the Merchants of Aſia giue their Camels prouender, halfe of them being laden with wares, and the other halfe with prouender, and ſo their whole Carouan of Camels goeth foorth and returneth home laden: by which meanes they keepe them in good plight. Of Camels there are three kinds; whereof the firſt being called Huguin, are groſſe, and of a tall ſtature, and moſt fit to carrie burthens, but ere foure yeeres end they grow vnprofitable: after which time euery Camell but of meane ſtature will carry a thouſand pounds of Italian weight. When any of the ſaid Camels is to bee laden, being beaten vpon his knees and necke with a wand, he kneeleth downe, and when he feeleth his load ſufficient, he riſeth vp againe. And the Africans vſe to geld their Camels which they keepe for the burthen, putting but one male Camell among ten femals. The ſecond kinde of Camels called Becheti, and hauing a double bunch, are fit both to carrie burthens, and to ride vpon: and theſe are bred onely in Aſia. The third kind called Raguahill, are Camels of a ſlender and low ſtature, which albeit they are vnfit to carry burthens, yet doe they not excell the two other kinds in ſwiftneſſe, that in the ſpace of one day they will trauell one hundred miles, and will ſo continue ouer the Deſarts for eight or ten dayes together with very little prouender: and theſe doe the principall Arabians of Numidia, and the Moores of Libya vſually ride vpon. When the King of Tombuto is deſirous to ſend any meſſage of importance vnto the Numidian Merchants with great celeritie, his poſt or meſſenger riding vpon one of theſe Camels, will runne from Tombuto to Darha or Segelmeſſe, beeing nine hundred miles diſtant, in the ſpace of eight dayes at the fartheſt: but ſuch as trauell muſt be expert in the way through the Deſarts, neither will they demand leſſe then fiue hundred Duckats for euery iourney. The ſaid Camels about the beginning of the ſpring inclining to their luſt and venerie, doe not onely hurt one another, but alſo will deadly wound ſuch perſons as haue done them any iniury in times paſt; not forgetting light and eaſie ſtripes: and whomſoeuer they lay hold on with their teeth, they lift vp on high, and caſt him downe againe, trampling vpon him with their feete, and in this madde moode they continue fortie dayes together. Neither are they ſo patient of hunger as of thirſt; for they will abſtaine from drinke, without any inconuenience, for fifteene dayes together: and if their guides water them once in three dayes, they doe them great hurt, for they are not vſually watered but once in fiue or nine dayes, or at an vrgent neceſſity once in fifteene dayes. Moreouer, the ſaid Camels are of a gentle diſpoſition, and are indued as it were with a kinde of humaine reaſon: for when as betweene Ethiopia and Barbarie they haue a dayes iourney to trauell more then their woont, their maſters cannot driue them on, being ſo tired, with whips, but are faine to ſing certaine ſongs vnto them; wherewith being exceedingly delighted, they performe their iourney with ſuch ſwiftneſſe, that their ſaid maſters are ſcarce able to follow them. At my beeing in Cairo I ſaw a Camell dance; which arte of dancing how he learned of his maſter I will heere in few words report. They take a young Camell, and put him for halfe an houre together in a place like a Bath-ſtoue prepared for the ſame purpoſe, the floore whereof is het with fire: then play they without vpon a drumme, whereat the Camell not ſo much in regard of the noyſe, as of the hot pauement which offendeth his feet, lifteth vp one legge after another in manner of a dance, and hauing beene accuſtomed vnto this exerciſe for the ſpace of a yeere or ten moneths, th[illegible] then preſent him vnto the publike view of the people, when as hearing the noyſe of a drum, and remembring the time when he trode vpon the hot floore, he preſently falleth a dancing and leaping: and ſo, vſe being turned into a kind of nature, he perpetually obſerueth the ſame cuſtome.

Barbary or Arabian Horſes.

The Horſes of Barbary differ not in any reſpect from other Horſes: but Horſes of the ſame ſwiftneſſe and agilitie are in the Arabian tongue called throughout all Egypt, Syria, Aſia, Arabia Fœlix, and Deſerta, by the name of Arabian Horſes: and the Hiſtoriographers affirme, that this kind of wilde Horſes ranging vp and downe the Arabian Deſarts, and being broken and managed by the Arabians euer ſince the time of Iſmael, haue ſo exceedingly multiplied and increaſed, that they haue repleniſhed the moſt part of Africa: which opinion fauoureth of truth, for euen at this preſent there are great ſtore of wild Horſes found both in the African and Arabian Deſarts. And I my ſelfe ſawe in the Numidian Deſart a wild Colt of a white colour, and hauing a curled maine. The moſt certaine triall of theſe Horſes is when they can ouertake the beaſt called Lant, or the Oſtrich in a race: which two, if they be able to performe, they are eſteemed worth a thouſand Duckats or an hundred Camels. Howbeit, very few of theſe Horſes are brought vp in Barbarie, but the Arabians that inhabite the Deſarts, and the people of Lybia bring vp great numbers of them, vſing them not for trauell or warfare, but onely for hunting, neither doe they giue them any other meate but the milke of Camels, and that twiſe euery day and night, to the end they may keepe them nimble, liuely, and of ſpare fleſh; and in the time of Graſſe they ſuffer them to feede in Paſtures, but then they ride not vpon them.

Horſes fed with Camels milke.

The wilde Horſe. Wild Horſes are vſuall with the Tartars & at the Riuer of Plate (but of Lpaniſh bread. Lant.

The wilde Horſe is one of thoſe beaſts that come ſeldome in ſight. The Arabians of the Deſarts take the wild Horſe and eate him, ſaying, that the younger the Horſe be, the ſweeter is his fleſh: but he will hardly be taken either with Horſes or Dogs. In the waters where this beaſt keepeth, they lay certaine ſnares, couering them ouer with ſand, wherein his foot being caught, he is intangled and ſlaine.

The beaſt called Lant or Dant in ſhape reſembleth an Oxe, ſauing that he hath ſmaller legs, and comlier hornes. His haire is white, and his hoofs are as blacke as Iet, and he is ſo exceeding ſwift, that no beaſt can ouertake him, but onely the Barberie Horſe, as is beforeſaid. He is eaſier caught in Summer then in Winter, becauſe that in regard of the extreme fretting heat of the ſand his hoofs are then ſtrained and ſet awry, by which meanes his ſwiftneſſe is abated, like as the ſwiftneſſe of Stagges and Roe-Deere. Of the hide of this beaſt are made Shields and Targets of great defence, which will not be pierced, bnt onely with the forcible ſhot of a bullet, but they are ſold at an extreme price.

Targets made of a skin.

The wild Oxe.

The wild Oxe reſembleth the tame Oxe, ſaue that it is leſſe in ſtature, being of a gray or aſh-colour, and of great ſwiftneſſe. It haunteth either the Deſarts, or the confines of the Deſarts. And the fleſh thereof (they ſay) is very ſauoury.

The wild Aſſe.

The wilde Aſſe being found either in the Deſarts, or vpon the borders thereof, is of an aſh-colour. In ſwiftneſſe they are ſurpaſſed onely by the Barbary Horſes, and when they ſee a man, they bray out aloud, kicking and wincing with their heeles, and ſtanding ſtone-ſtill, till one approacheth ſo neare them, that he may touch them with his hand, and then they betake themſelues to flight. By the Arabians of the Deſarts they are caught with Snares, and other Engins. They goe in companies either when they feede or water themſelues. Their fleſh is hot and vnſauory, and hath a wilde taſte: but being ſet a cooling two dayes after it is ſodden, it becommeth very ſauory and pleaſant.

The Oxen vpon the Mountains of Africa.

All the Oxen vpon the Mountaines of Africa being tame cattell, are of ſo meane a ſtature, that in compariſon of other Oxen they ſeeme to be but Heifers of two yeeres old: but the Mountainers vſing them to the plough, ſay, that they are ſtrong, and will indure much labour.

The beaſt called Adimmain.

Adimmain, is a tame beaſt, beeing ſhaped like a Ramme, and of the ſtature of an Aſſe, and hauing long and dangle eares. The Lybyans vſe theſe beaſts in ſtead of Kine, and make of their milke great ſtore of Cheeſe and Butter. They haue ſome Wooll, though it bee but ſhort. I my ſelfe vpon a time beeing merrily diſpoſed, roade a quarter of a mile vpon the backe of one of theſe beaſtes. Very many of them there are in the Deſarts of Libya, and but fewe in other places: and it is a rare matter to ſee one of them in the Numidian fields.

The African Ramme.

There is no difference betweene theſe Rammes of Africa and others, ſaue onely in their tayles, which are of a great thickneſſe, being by ſo much the groſſer, by how much they are more fat, ſo that ſome of their tayles weigh ten, and other twenty pounds a peece, and they become fat of their owne naturall inclination: but in Egypt there are diuers that fed them fat with Bran and Barley, vntill their tayles growe ſo bigge that they cannot remooue themſelues from place to place: inſomuch that thoſe which take charge of them are faine to bind little carts vnder their tayles, to the end they may haue ſtrength to walke. I my ſelfe ſaw at a City in Egypt called Aſiot, and ſtanding vpon Nilus, about an hundred and fifty miles from Cairo, one of the ſaid Rams tayles that weighed foure-ſcore pounds, and others affirmed, that they had ſeene one of thoſe tayles of an hundred and fifty pounds weight. All the fat therefore of this beaſt conſiſteth in his tayle; neither is there any of them to be found but onely in Tunis and in Egypt.

Huge tayle.

The Lyon.

The Lion is a moſt fierce and cruell beaſt, being hurtfull vnto all other beaſts, and excelling them both in ſtrength, courage, and crueltie, neither is he onely a deuourer of beaſts, but of men alſo. In ſome places one Lyon will boldly encounter two hundred Horſemen. They range without all feare among the flockes and droues of Cattell, and whatſoeuer beaſt they can lay hold on, they carry it into the next Wood vnto their Whelpes: yea, ſome Lyons there are (as I haue before ſaid) that will vanquiſh and kill fiue or ſixe Horſemen in one Company. Howbeit, ſuch Lyons as liue vpon the cold mountaynes are not ſo outragious and cruell: but the hotter the places be where they keepe, the more rauenous and bold are they, as namely, vpon the Frontiers of Temeſna, and of the Kingdome of Fez, in the Deſart of Angad neere Telenſin, and betweene the Citie of Bona and Tunis, all which are accounted the moſt famous and fierce Lyons in all Africa.

frica. In the Spring, while they are giuen to Luſt and Venery, they haue moſt fierce and bloudie conflicts one with an other, eight or twelue Lyons following after one Lyoneſſe. I haue heard many both men and women report, that if a woman chanceth to meet with a Lyon, and ſheweth him her priuie parts, hee will with crying and roaring, caſt his eyes vpon the ground and ſo depart. Beleeue it they that liſt. But this I am well aſſured of, that whatſoeuer a Lyon getteth in his pawes, though it be a Camell, he will carry it away.

The Leopard.

The Leopard liuing in the Woods of Barbarie, will not for all their great ſtrength and crueltie hurt any man, vnleſſe it be very ſeldome, when as they meete with a man in a narrow paſſage, and cannot ſhunne him, or when they are checked and prouoked vnto fury: for then they will flye vpon a man, laying hold vpon his viſage with their talents, and plucking off ſo much fleſh as they can catch, inſomuch that ſometimes they will cruſh his braines in pieces. They inuade not any flockes or droues of tame Cattell, but are at deadly feude with Dogges, whom they will kill and deuoure.

The Mountayners of the Region of Conſtantina hunt them on Horſe-backe, ſtopping all paſſages, where they might eſcape. The Leopard ranging vp an downe, and finding euery place ſo beſet with Horſemen that he cannot get away, windeth and turneth himſelfe on all ſides, and ſo becommeth a fit marke for the Hunters to diſcharge their Darts and Arrowes vpon. But if the Leopard chanceth to eſcape, that man that lets him paſſe, is bound by an vſuall cuſtome to inuite the reſidue of the Hunters vnto a Banquet.

The beaſt called Dabuh.

The beaſt called by the Arabians, Dabuh, and by the Africans, Ieſef, in bigneſſe and ſhape reſembleth a Woolfe, ſauing that his legges and feet are like to the legges and feet of a man. It is not hurtfull vnto any other beaſt, but will rake the carkaſſes of men out of their graues, and will deuoure them, being otherwiſe an abiect and ſilly creature. The Hunters being acquainted with his Den, come before it ſinging and playing vpon a Drum, by which Melodie being allured forth, his legs are intrapped in a ſtrong Rope, and ſo he is drawne out and ſlaine.

The Ciuet Cat.

The manner of gathering Ciuet.

The Ciuet Cats are naturally wilde, and are found in the Woods of Æthiopia. The Merchants taking their young Whelpes or Kittes, feed them with Milke, Branne, and Fleſh, and keepe them in Cages or Grates. But their odoriferous Excrement (which is nought elſe but their ſweat) they gather twice or thrice euery day in manner following: firſt, they driue them vp and downe the Grate with a Wand, till they ſweat, and then they take the ſaid ſweat from vnder their flankes, their ſhoulders, their neckes, and their tayles: which Excrement of ſweat is commonly called Ciuet.

The Ape. Monkeyes and Baboones.

Of Apes there are diuers and ſundry kinds, thoſe which haue tayles, being called in the African Tongue, Monne, and thoſe which haue none, Babuini. They are found in the Woods of Mauritania, and vpon the Mountaynes of Bugia and Conſtantina. They liue vpon Graſſe and Corne, and goe in great companies to feed in the Corne field, and one of their company which ſtandeth Centinell, or keepeth watch and ward vpon the borders, when hee eſpyeth the Huſbandman comming, he cryeth out and giueth as it were an alarme to his fellowes, who euery one of them flee immediately into the next Woods, and betake themſelues to the trees. The ſhee Apes carrie their Whelpes vpon their ſhoulders, and will leape with them in that ſort from one tree to another.

The Sea Horſe.

The Sea Horſe is commonly found in the Riuers of Niger and Nilus. In ſhape it reſembleth an Horſe, and in ſtature an Aſſe, but it is altogether deſtitute of haire. It liueth both in the water and vpon the Land, and ſwimmeth to the ſhoare in the night ſeaſon. Barkes and Boates laden with Wares and ſayling downe the Riuer of Niger, are greatly endangered by this Sea Horſe, for often times he ouer-whelmeth and ſinketh them.

The Sea Oxe.

The Sea Oxe being couered with an exceeding hard ſkinne is ſhaped in all reſpects like vnto the Land Oxe; ſaue that in bigneſſe it exceedeth not a Calfe of ſixe monethes old. It is found in both the Riuers of Niger and Nilus, and being taken by Fiſhers, is kept a long time a liue out of the water. I my ſelfe ſaw one at Cairo lead vp and downe by the necke in a Chaine, which (they ſay) was taken at the Citie of Aſna, ſtanding vpon the banke of Nilus, about foure hundred miles from Cairo.

The Tortoyſe. Bicri his Booke of the Regions of Africa.

In the Libyan Deſarts are found very many Tortoyſes as bigge as a Tunne. And Bicri the Coſmographer in his Booke of the Regions and Iournies of Africa reporteth, that a certaine man being weary of trauelling, aſcended to his thinking, vpon an high ſtone lying in the Deſart, to the end he might free himſelfe from the danger of Serpents and venemous beaſts; who hauing ſlept ſoundly thereupon all night, found himſelfe in the morning remooued three miles from the place where he firſt lay downe, and thereby vnderſtood that it was not a ſtone but a Tortoyſe whereon he repoſed himſelfe, which lying ſtill all the day long creepeth for food in the nightſeaſon, but ſo ſlowly, that her pace can hardly be perceiued.

The Crocodile. The craft of the Crocodile in taking both men & beaſts.

The Crocodile commonly frequenteth the Riuers of Niger and Nilus, and contayneth in length twelue Cubits and aboue, the tayle thereof being as long as the whole bodie beſides, albeit, there are but few of ſo huge a bigneſſe. It goeth vpon foure feet like a Lizard, neither is it aboue a Cubit and an halfe high. The tayle of this beaſt is full of knots, and the skinne thereof is ſo exceeding hard, that no Croſſe-bow will enter it. Some prey vpon fiſhes onely, but others vpon beaſts and men. Which lurking about the bankes of the Riuer, doe craftily lay wait for men and beaſts that come the ſame way, about whom ſuddenly winding their tayles, they draw them into the water, and there deuoure them. Howbeit, ſome of them are not ſo cruell by nature: for if they were, no Inhabitants could liue neere vnto the Riuers of Nilus and Niger. In eating they mooue the vpper Iaw onely, their neather Iaw being ioyned vnto their breſt-bone. Not many yeeres ſithence, paſſing vp the Riuer of Nilus towards the Citie of Cana, ſtanding in the vpper part of Egypt, foure hundred miles from Cairo, on a certaine night whileſt we were in the midſt of our Iourney, the Moone being ouer-ſhadowed with Clouds, the Mariners and Paſſengers all faſt a ſleepe, and the Barke vnder ſayles, I my ſelfe ſtudying by Candle-light in my Cabben, was called vpon by a deuout old man in the Barke, who beſtowed the ſame night in watching and prayer, and ſaid vnto me, call (I pray you) ſome of your company, who may helpe me to draw vp this piece of wood floting vpon the water, which will ſerue to morrow for the dreſſing of our Dinner. My ſelfe, Sir (quoth I) will come and helpe you, rather then wake any of our company in the dead of the night. Nay (quoth the old man) I will try whether I bee able to draw it vp alone or no. And ſo when the Barke was neere vnto the Wood, as he ſuppoſed, holding a Rope in his hand to caſt into the water, hee was ſoddainly intangled with a Crocodiles long tayle, and was in a moment drawne vnder the water. Whereupon, I making a ſhoute, all the people in the Barke aroſe, and ſtriking ſayles we ſtayed for the ſpace of an houre, diuers in the meane time leaping into the water to ſeeke the man, but altogether in vaine: and therefore all of them affirmed, that he was caught by a Crocodile. As we ſayled further, we ſaw great numbers of Crocodiles vpon the bankes of the Ilands in the midſt of Nilus lye beaking them in the Sunne with their Iawes wide open, whereinto certaine little Birds about the bigneſſe of a Thruſh entring, came flying forth againe preſently after. The occaſion whereof was told me to be this: The Crocodiles by reaſon of their continuall deuouring of beaſts and fiſhes, haue certaine pieces of fleſh ſticking faſt betweene their forked teeth, which fleſh being putrified, breedeth a kind of Worme wherewith they are cruelly tormented. Wherefore the ſaid Birds flying about, and ſeeing the Wormes, enter into the Crocodiles Iawes, to ſatisfie their hunger therewith. But the Crocodile perceiuing himſelfe freed from the Wormes of his teeth, offereth to ſhut his mouth, and to deuoure the little Bird that did him ſo good a turne, but being hindred from his vngratefull attempt by a pricke which groweth vpon the Birds head, hee is conſtrayned to open his Iawes and to let her depart. The ſhee Crocodile laying Egges vpon the ſhoare couereth them with ſand; and ſo ſoone as the young Crocodiles are hatched, they crawle into the Riuer. Thoſe Crocodiles that forſake the Riuer and haunt the Deſarts become venemous; but ſuch as continue in Nilus, are deſtitute of Poyſon. Of theſe beaſts I ſaw aboue three hundred heads placed vpon the wals of Cana, with their Iawes wide open, being of ſo monſtrous and incredible a bigneſſe, that they were ſufficient to haue ſwallowed vp a whole Cow at once, and their teeth were great and ſharpe.

Litle Birds flying into the Crocodiles mouth to pick wormes from betweene their teeth.

The Dragon.

In the Caues of Atlas are fonnd many huge and monſtrous Dragons, which are heauie, of a ſlow motion, becauſe the midſt of their body is groſſe, but their neckes and tayles are ſlender. They are moſt venemous creatures, inſomuch, that whoſoeuer is bitten or touched by them, his fleſh preſently waxeth ſoft and weake, neither can he by any meanes eſcape death.

The Hydra.

The Hydra being ſhort in proportion of body, and hauing a ſlender tayle and necke, liueth in the Libyan Deſarts. The poyſon thereof is moſt deadly, ſo that if a man be bitten by this beaſt, he hath none other remedy, but to cut off the wounded part, before the Poyſon diſperſeth it ſelfe into the other members.

The creature called Dub.

The Dub liuing alſo in the Deſarts, reſembleth in ſhape a Lizzard, ſauing that it is ſomewhat bigger, and containeth in length a Cubite, and in breadth foure fingers. It drinketh no water at all, and if a man poure any water into the mouth thereof, it preſently dieth. It layeth egges in manner of a Tortoyſe, and is deſtitute of poyſon. The Arabians take it in the Deſarts: and I my ſelfe cut the throat of one which I tooke, but it bled a very little. Being flayed and roaſted, it taſteth ſomewhat like a frogge. In ſwiftneſſe it is comparable to a Lizzard, and being hunted, if it chanceth to thruſt the head into a hole, it can by no force be drawen out, except the hole be digged wider by the hunters. Hauing beene ſlaine three dayes together, and then being put to the fire, it ſtirreth it ſelfe as if it were newly dead.

The Guarall.

The Guaral is like vnto the former, ſauing that it is ſomewhat bigger, and hath poyſon both in the head and tayle, which two parts being cut off, the Arabians will eate it, notwithſtanding it be of a deformed ſhape and vgly colour, in which reſpects I loathed alwayes to eate the fleſh thereof.

The Camelion

The Camelion being of the ſhape and bigneſſe of a Lizzard, is a deformed, crooked and leane creature, hauing a long and ſlender tayle like a Mouſe, and being of a ſlow pace. It is nouriſhed by the Element of Ayre, and the Sun-beames, at the riſing whereof it gapeth, and turneth it ſelfe vp and downe. It changeth the colour according to the varietie of places where it commeth, being ſometimes blacke and ſometimes greene, as I my ſelfe haue ſeene it. It is at great enmitie with venemous Serpents, for when it ſeeth any lie ſleeping vnder a tree, it preſently climeth vp the ſame tree,and looking downe vpon the Serpents head, it voydeth out of the mouth,as it were,a long thread of ſpittle, with a round drop like a Pearle hanging at the end, which drop falling wrong,the Camelion changeth his place, till it may light directly vpon the Serpents head,by the vertue whereof he preſently dieth.

The Oſtrich.

The Oſtrich in ſhape reſembleth a Gooſe,but that the neck and legges are ſomewhat longer, ſo that ſome of them exceede the length of two cubites. The body of this Bird is large, and the wings thereof are full of great feathers both white and blacke, which wings and feathers being vnfit to flie withall,doe helpe the Oſtrich,with the motion of her traine,to runne a ſwift pace. This Fowle liueth in drie Deſarts,and layeth to the number of ten or twelue Egges in the Sands,which being about the bigneſſe of great Bullets,weigh fifteene pounds a piece ; but the Oſtrich is of ſo weak of memorie,that ſhe preſently forgetteth the place where her Egges were laid. And afterward the ſame,or ſome other Oſtrich-hen finding the ſaid egs by chance,hatcheth and foſtereth them as if they were certainely her owne : the Chickens are no ſooner crept out of the ſhell,but they prowle vp and downe the Deſarts for their food : and before their feathers be growne,they are ſo ſwift,that a man ſhall hardly ouertake them. The Oſtrich is a ſilly and deafe creature,feeding vpon any thing which it findeth,be it as hard and vndigeſtable as yron. The fleſh, eſpecially of their legs,is of a ſlymie and ſtrong taſte : and yet the Numidians vſe it for food, for they take young Oſtriches, and ſet them vp a fatting. The Oſtriches wander vp and downe the Deſarts in orderly troopes,ſo that a farre off a man would take them to be ſo many Horſemen,which illuſion hath often diſmaied whole Carouans.

Of Fowles, and firſt of the Eagle.

A ſtrange narration.

Of Eagles there are diuers kinds, according to their naturall properties, the proportion of their bodies,or the diuerſitie of their colours : and the greateſt kind of Eagles are called in the Arabian Tongue,Neſir. The Africans teach their Eagles to prey vpon Foxes and Wolues ; which in their encounter ceaze vpon the heads of the ſaid Beaſts with their bills, and vpon the backs with their talents,to auoid the danger of biting. But if the Beaſt turne his belly vpward, the Eagle will not forſake him,till ſhe hath either peckt out his eyes,or ſlaine him. Many of our African Writers affirme,that the male Eagle oftentimes ingendring with a ſhee-Wolfe, begetteth a Dragon,hauing the beake and wings of a Bird,a Serpents taile, the feete of a Wolfe, and a skin ſpeckled and partie coloured like the skin of a Serpent ; neither can it open the eye-lids, and it liueth in Caues. This Monſter,albeit my ſelfe haue not ſeene,yet the common report ouer all Africa affirmeth,that there is ſuch an one.

The Fowle called Neſir.

The Neſir is the greateſt Fowle in all Africa,and exceedeth a Crane in bigneſſe,though the bil, necke,and legs are ſomewhat ſhorter. In flying, this Bird mounteth vp ſo high into the Aire, that it cannot be diſcerned : but at the ſight of a dead carkaſſe it will immediately deſcend. This Bird liueth a long time,and I my ſelfe haue ſeene many of them vnfeathered by reaſon of extreme old age : wherefore hauing caſt all their feathers,they returne vnto their neſt, as if they were newly hatched,and are there nouriſhed by the younger Birds of the ſame kind. The Italians call it by the name of a Vulture : but I thinke it to be of another kind. They neſtle vpon high Rocks,and vpon the tops of wilde and deſart Mountaines, eſpecially vpon mount Atlas : and they are taken by ſuch as are acquainted with thoſe places.

Hawkes.

The beſt African Hawkes are white,being taken vpon certaine Mountaines of the Numidian Deſarts,and with theſe Hawkes they purſue the Crane. Of theſe Hawkes there are diuers kinds, ſome being vſed to flie at Patridges and Quailes,and others at the Hare.

Parats or Poppiniay.

Parrats there are as big as a Doue of diuers colors,ſome red, ſome black,and ſome aſh-coloured, which albeit they cannot ſo fitly expreſſe mans ſpeech, yet haue they moſt ſweet & ſhril voices.

The Locuſts.

Of Locuſtes there are ſometimes ſeene ſuch monſtrous ſwarmes in Africa, that in flying they intercept the Sunne-beames like a thicke Cloud. They deuoure trees, leaues,fruites,and all greene things growing out of the earth. At their departure they leaue egges behind them, whereof other young Locuſts breede, which in the places where they are left,will eate and conſume all things euen to the very barke of trees,procuring thereby extreme dearth of Corne, eſpecially in Mauritania. Howbeit,the Inhabitants of Arabia Deſarta,and of Libya, eſteeme the comming of theſe Locuſts as a fortunate boading: for, ſeething or drying them in the Sunne, they bruſe them to powder,and ſo eate them.

Of Minerals and Fruits, Rootes: and firſt of Minerall Salt.

One pound of Salt for halfe a Duckat.

The greater part of Africa hath none other Salt but ſuch as is digged out of Quarries and Mines,after the manner of Marble or Free-ſtone,being of a white,red,and gray colour. Barbarie aboundeth with Salt,and Numidia is indifferently furniſhed therewith : but the Land of Negros,and eſpecially the inner part of Ethiopia, is ſo deſtitute thereof, that a pound of Salt is there ſold for halfe a Duckat. And the people of the ſaid Regions vſe not to ſet Salt vpon their tables ; but holding a crum of Salt in their hands, they lick the ſame at euery morſell of meate which they put in their mouthes. In certaine Lakes of Barbarie all the Summer time,there is faire and white ſalt congealed or kerned,as namely,in diuers places neere vnto the Citie of Fez.

The Minerall called Antimonie.

Antimonie growing in many places of Africa in the Lead-mines, is ſeparated from the Lead by the helpe of Brimſtone. Great plenty of this Minerall is digged out of the bottome of Mount Atlas, eſpecially where Numidia bordereth vpon the Kingdome of Fez. Brimſtone likewiſe is digged in great abundance out of other places of Africa.

Of Euphorbium.

Euphorbium is the Iuyce or Gumme of a certaine Hearbe, growing like the head of a wilde Thiſtle, betweene the branches whereof grow certaine fruites as big in compaſſe as a greene cucumber; after which ſhape or likeneſſe, it beareth certaine little graines or ſeedes; and ſome of the ſaid fruits are an elle long, and ſome are longer. They grow not out of the branches of the Herbe, but ſpring out of the firme ground, and out of one flag you ſhall ſee ſometimes twentie, and ſometimes thirtie of them iſſue forth. The people of the ſame Region, when the ſaid fruites are once ripe, doe pricke them with their kniues, and out of the holes proceedeth a Liquor, or Iuyce much like vnto milke, which by little and little groweth thick and ſlimy. And ſo being growne thick, they take it off with their kniues, putting it in Bladders, and drying it. And the Plant or Hearbe it ſelfe is full of ſharpe prickles.

Of Pitch.

Pitch made in Mount Atlas.

Of Pitch there are two kinds, the one being naturall, and taken out of certaine Stones, which are in Fountaines; the water whereof retained the vnſauorie ſmell and taſte of the ſame; and the other being artificiall, and proceeding out of the Iuniper or Pine-tree: and this artificiall Pitch I ſaw made vpon Mount Atlas, in manner following. They make a deepe and round furnace with an hole in the bottome, through which hole the Pitch may fall downe into an hollow place within the ground, being made in forme of a little veſſell: and putting into the ſaid furnace the boughes of the foreſaid trees broken into ſmall pieces, they cloſe vp the mouth of the furnace, and make a fire vnder it, by the heate whereof the Pitch diſtilleth forth of the wood, through the bottome of the furnace into the foreſaid hollow place; and ſo it is taken vp and put in bladders or bags.

The Fruit called Maus or Muſa.

Muſa is a fruit growing vpon a ſmall tree, which beareth large and broad leaues of a cubit long, hath a moſt excellent and delicate taſte, and ſpringeth forth about the bigneſſe of a ſmall Cucumber. The Mahumetan Doctors affirme, that this was the fruit which God forbad our firſt Parents to eate in Paradiſe, which when they had eaten they couered their nakedneſſe with leaues of the ſame fruit, as being of all other leaues moſt meete for that purpoſe. They grow in great abundance at Sela, a Towne of the Kingdome of Fez; but in farre greater plenty in the land of Egypt, and eſpecially at Damiata.

Of Caſſia.

The trees bearing Caſſia are of great thickneſſe, hauing leaues like vnto the Mulberie tree. They beare a broad and white Bloſſome, and are ſo laden with fruits, that they are conſtrained to gather great ſtore before they be ripe, leaſt the tree ſhould breake with ouermuch weight. And this kind of tree groweth onely in Egypt.

The Roote called Tauzarghente.

The Roote Tauzarghente growing in the Weſterne part of Africa vpon the Ocean Sea ſhore, yeeldeth a fragrant and odoriferous ſmell. And the Merchants of Mauritania carry the ſame into the Land of Negros, where the people vſe it for a moſt excellent Perfume, and yet they neither burne it, nor put any fire at all thereto: for being kept onely in an houſe, it yeeldeth a naturall ſent of it ſelfe. In Mauritania they ſell a bunch of theſe Rootes for halfe a Duckat, which being carried to the Land of Negros, is ſold againe for eighty, or one hundred Duckats, and ſometimes for more.

The Roote called Addad.

The Hearbe Addad is bitter, and the Roote it ſelfe is ſo venemous, that one drop of the water diſtilled thereout, will kill a man within the ſpace of an houre, which is commonly knowne euen to the Women of Africa.

The Roote called Surnag.

The Roote Surnag growing alſo vpon the Weſterne part of Mount Atlas, is ſaid to be very comfortable and preſeruatiue vnto the priuie parts of man, and being drunke in an Electuary, to ſtirre vp venereall luſt, &c. Neither muſt I here omit that, which the Inhabitants of Mount Atlas doe commonly report, that many of thoſe Damoſels which keepe Cattell vpon the ſaid Mountaines, haue loſt their Virginitie by none other occaſion, but by making water vpon the ſaid Roote: vnto whom I would in merriment anſwere, that I beleeued all which experience had taught, concerning the ſecret vertue of the ſame Roote, yea, they affirmed moreouer, that ſome of their Maidens were ſo infected with this roote, that they were not onely defloured of their Virginitie, but had alſo their whole bodies puffed vp and ſwolne.

Theſe are the things memorable and worthy of knowledge, ſeene and obſerued by me Iohn Leo, throughout all Africa, which Country I haue in * all places trauelled quite ouer: wherein whatſoeuer I ſaw worthy the obſeruation, I preſently committed to writing; and thoſe things which I ſaw not, I procured to bee at large declared vnto mee by moſt credible and ſubſtantiall perſons, which were themſelues eye-witneſſes of the ſame: and ſo hauing gotten a fit oportunitie, I thought good to reduce theſe my Trauels and Studies into this one Volume.

* That is, in Barbarie, Numidia, Libya, the Land of Negros, and Egypt.

Foraſmuch, as men deſire to reade later occurrents, and theſe my Labours are intended not to the profit and pleaſure alone, but to the honour alſo of the Engliſh Name and Nation, I haue added this following Diſcourſe of the late Warres in Barbarie: not yet purſuing them to theſe Times, but contenting my ſelfe with the beginnings, and ſome yeares proceedings thereof, the Engliſh hauing (as you ſhall ſee) yea, being no ſmall part therein; Quæ regio in terris noſtri non plena laboris; The voluntarie Engliſh aduentures in the Ciuill vnciuill broiles of Ice-frozen Muſcouia, of Sunne-ſcorched Barbarie, of Turkiſh and Perſian fights by Sea, the Mogols by Land, the Sweden, Poliſh, Germane, Bohemian, Belgian, *and many-headed-*Italian Broyles neerer home; the Eaſterne and Weſterne Indies, the Artike Northerne Circle, and Southermoſt Africa remote, haue really exceeded the fabulous Deuices of deuiſing Fablers, in Knight-Aduentures, the Iſſues and Occupations of idle braines. As for the manner of the Seriffian Family, attayning at firſt to the Barbarian Scepter, and the monſtrous Saint-ſhip and portentuous power of Side Hamet, getting the Kingdome from the Brethren, and of Side Hia which diſpoſſeſſed him of it and his life, you haue more full Relations in my Pilgrimage, with other Occurrents. Here it is more fit to let you heare others ſpeake then my ſelfe.

CHAP. II.

Collections of things moſt remarkeable in the Hiſtory of Barbarie, written by Ro. C.

§. I.

How the Kingdome of Barbarie came to MVLEY HAMET XARIF, the late deceaſed King, and the courſe of his gouernment; of his Sonnes and their behauiour: SHECKS miſgouernment and impriſonment: HAMETS death.

THe Family of the Mareines, being Larbies, were long times Kings of Barbarie: vntill a plaine Hali ſome hundred yeeres ago, calling himſelfe Muley Hamet Xarif, came out of the Countrey of Dara, (lying beyond the Mountaynes of Atlas) with a great number of Mountayners, called in their owne Language Brebers: theſe with their ſtrength got Mornecos from the Mareins. And going forward following the fertilneſſe of the ſoyle, draue the Mareins out of Fez: getting into his power all the flat Countryes comprized vnder the Titles of Sus, Moruecos and Fez, from the hils of Atlas to the Streights of Gibraltar. Being thus growne great, hee would proue himſelfe a Xarif, that is, one of the Kindred of the Prophet Mahomet, deſiring his birth might be held anſwerable to his new acquired fortunes: But within a little time after this his ſodaine inuaſion, Sus rebelling, refuſed his Gouernment, wherefore hee ſent to the bordering Turkes for ayde, who fulfilled therin his requeſt. Ayded with theſe Turkiſh auxiliary forces, he ſet forward, and at his entrance into that Kingdome, the Turkiſh Souldiers through Treaſon killed him, and cut off his head; ſacked Taradant, and running ouer the whole Countrey, ſpoyled it by the ſpace of two monethes, which done, they would gladly haue returned to Trimaſine: yet fearing their owne ſtrength to returne the ſame way Hamet had brought them; it was held their better courſe and ſhorter Iourney, to paſſe ouer the Mountaynes: but the Montayners knowing this their new done bloudie fact, and ſeeing them haue good ſtore of pillage, ſet vpon them, ſo that few or none eſcaped their hands, but were all ſlaine. After this Hamet Xarifs death, who raigned ſome eight yeeres, ſucceeded his Brother Muley Abdela, hauing all his life time great warre with the Mareins, to keepe that his Brother had conquered: he hauing raigned ſome fifteene yeeres dyed, leauing behind him thirteene Sonnes, the eldeſt Muley Abdela (who at his entrance to the Kingdome, commanded all his Brethren to be killed:) but the ſecond Brother Abdelmelech fearing hard meaſure, fled preſently vpon the death of his Father into Turkie, and ſo ſaued his life. The third Brother Muley Hamet of whom wee are hereafter to entreate, being held a great Church-man, ſimple and humble ſpirited, not any way addicted vnto armes, was ſpared aliue as leſſe feared. The other ten were all put to death in one day at Taradant in Sus, where they were kept in their Fathers life time. This Abdela raigned fortie yeeres, and dying, left behind him three Sonnes, Muley Mehamet, Muley Sheck, Muley Naſſar, Muley Mehamet being King, his two young Brethren ranne away into Spaine, the elder whereof named Muley Sheck is yet liuing, and there turned Chriſtian. The younger Brother called Muley Naſſar returned into Barbarie, in the fourteenth yeere of Muley Hamets Raigne, who dyed at laſt. At this Muley Naſſars landing in the Countrey of Fez, much people fauoured him and his Title, and two thouſand of Muley Shecks Souldiers (who now liueth, and then gouerned Fez, for his Father reuolted from him to Naſſar; inſomuch, as Muley Sheck was in minde to haue fled vnto his Father. But that Alkeyd Hamet Ben Iau, being a very wiſe Captaine, and there placed to helpe Muley Sheck by his counſell, who was very young,) kept him from running away: and Muley Naſſar with a dilatorie warre, with whom if the Souldiers had ſtayed, hee might peraduenture haue gotten the Countrey. But their Lent approaching, the Souldiers told Naſſar, they would goe keepe their Eaſter at their owne houſes. Whereupon Naſſar, thinking if they were once gone, they would neuer returne to him againe, would giue preſent battaile,and ſo was this Naſſar ſlaine. Abdelmelech being ſecond Brother to Abdela, got ſuch fauour in Turkie where he liued, as entering Barbarie with foure thouſand Turkiſh Souldiers, he got the Kingdome from his Nephew Mehamet the eldeſt Sonne of Abdela, and there raigned two yeeres. Muley Mehamet thus depriued of his Kingdome, fled for ſuccour to Sebaſtian then King of Portugall, who came in perſon into Barbarie, to helpe him with thirtie thouſand men; giuing battaile, the Moores fled, and the Chriſtians retyred, hoping the Moores would returne, that ſo the Chriſtians might make the greater ſlaughter of them. According to this expectation Abdelmelech with his Armie returned, and the Chriſtians charged the foremoſt of their Horſe-men very hotly, who would haue fled. But ſuch was the abundance of Abdelmelechs Horſe-men, following the foreward which were diſcomfited, as they could not haue field-roome to flye,but were forced to fight it out. This was a bloudie battaile wherein three Kings loſt their liues, Don Sebaſtian King of Portugall: Muley Mehamet vnto whoſe ayde Sebaſtian came ouer: And Abdelmelech who came out of Turkie being ſecond Brother to Abdela; This Abdelmelech left behind him a Sonne yet liuing at this day in Turkie, whoſe name is Muley Smime. After the death of theſe two, Abdelas third Brother, Muley Hamet Xarif, was made King, raigned about ſeuen and twentie yeeres in great peace and felicitie, vntill he went to take his Sonne Muley Sheck at Fez, where the Father dyed, whoſe death hath cauſed all theſe Warres, as yee may reade hereafter.

This is that Seriffe or Xeriffe ſo often mentioned by Leo, which then began (vnder colour of warring againſt the Chriſtians both Spaniards and Portugals which had made (as you ſee in Leo) large entries into Barbary) to vſurpe the State and diſpoſſeſſe the former Kings. So that euen in order of time and affaires, this Hiſtorie fitly ſucceeds the former of Leo, for Barbary. Of their manner of getting the Kingdome, and the reſt of the ſtory, ſee my Pilgrimage, l.6. c.11.§.2.

Touching this Muley Hamet, I thought good, to inſert this Letter of Maſter Bernhere, the Sonne of that worthy Auguſtine Bernhere (as I haue heard) which is ſo commended by Maſter Foxe for his zeale in Queene Maries dayes, in the Hiſtorie of Bradford, Careleſſe, Glouer, &c.

To his louing Brother Maſter Edward Wright.

THis King Muley Hamet is much delighted in the ſtudie of Aſtronomie and Aſtrologie, and valueth Inſtruments ſeruing for the courſe of the Sunne and Moone, that are of rare deuice, exceedingly. Wherefore your Spheare, your Watch, your Mundane Diall, and your Sextans, your new Magneticall Inſtrument for Declination, or any Aſtrolable that hath ſomewhat extraordinarie in it will be accepted: and you might ſell the ſame at good prices. Now with the Eagle there goe from hence certaine Ambaſſadors, and one of them is the Kings Secretarie, named Abdala Wahed Anoone, who hath ſome inſight in ſuch matters. This Bearer my friend Maſter Pate, and Robert Kitchen the Maſter of the Ship, I thinke, will bring him vnto you, vnto whom I would haue you ſhew all the varietie of Inſtruments that you haue either in your owne hands, or haue ſold and lent to others; that hee may chooſe ſome for the Kings vſe and his owne. You may ſhew them alſo the Draughts and Lineaments of whatſoeuer you haue in Paper, all which I know, will make them admire and be deſirous to haue ſome that they can vnderſtand how to vſe. You may cauſe to be framed ſome Inſtruments in Braſſe or Siluer, leauing the ſpaces for Arabique words and figures, yet drawing the Pictures of them in Paper exactly, and ſetting downe the Latine figures, and the words in Latine, or Spaniſh, which is farre better: there will be found here that can graue the ſame in Arabique vpon the Inſtruments hauing ſome direction from you about the matter. Or Abdala Wahed being a perfect Pen-man, can ſet the Arabique Letters, figures, and words downe very faire; and ſo any of your Grauers can worke the ſame in Metall, hauing his Writing before them. Maſter Cyprian would be a good Interpreter betweene you and them, or ſome that vnderſtandeth and ſpeaketh both Latine and Spaniſh, and knoweth what the words of Arte meane.

The experiments Mathematicall of the Load-ſtone, will content the Ambaſſadour much. Make no ſcruple to ſhew them what you can; for it may redound to your good. I deſire to heare more of Magneticall workes, and the diſcouery of the North paſſage. Write to me thereof, and ſend any Maps or draughts of inſtruments, or what you thinke fit about Dyalling, or the courſe of time, and the motion of the Heauens, which you thinke I can vnderſtand: but direct the ſame either to me, or to one Maſter Iohn Wakeman, ſeruant to Maſter Alderman Hamden; who, though he haue ſmall skill in ſuch things, yet is deſirous to ſee and learne, and can preferre ſuch matters to the view of the King, and his ſonnes, who all are exceeding ſtrictious of matters tending this way: ſo that if I had skill my ſelfe, or but ſome of your Inſtruments, whereof I could make demonſtration for their vſe, I could giue great content, and be a meanes to pleaſure you much. But conferre with Maſter Pate, and Maſter Kitchen, who will direct you in this buſineſſe, and from whom you may receiue money before hand, for making any inſtruments that the Ambaſſadours would haue for themſelues or the King.

A Voyage ouer a ſandy Sea to Gago for Gold.

Your Magneticall Inſtrument of Declination, would be commodious for a yeerely Voyage, which ſome make for the King ouer a Sandy Sea (wherein they muſt vſe Needle and Compaſſe) to Gago. If you queſtion about the matter, and ſhew them ſome inſtrument ſeruing for this purpoſe, it will giue great content. Other directions I might adde vnto you; but from the parties aboue named, you may re- ceiue the ſame fully. And thus with my good will, hoping and wiſhing to ſee you ſhortly, I take my leaue. This 24. of Iune, 1600. From the Citie of Maroco.

From Maroco in Barbary.

Your louing Brother in-law,
Thomas Bernhere.

Obtaining the Scepter, hee firſt prouided himſelfe of the graueſt men hee could find in his Kingdomes, to be Counſellors of eſtate; then of the moſt experienced, and valiant Souldiers, for Commanders ouer his Campe, and Garriſon Townes. And whereas he was Monarch ouer two Nations, the Larbies, and Brebers, he found it requiſite to vſe a two-fold gouernment. The Larbies dwelling in the moſt plaine Champion Countrey of his three Kingdomes, Moruecos, Sus, and Fez, were eaſily gouerned, being of mild and peaceable nature, giuen to thrift and tillage of the ground, ſought no alterations, but receiuing from him a due forme of iuſtice, executed by his Miniſters: protecting them from the Montaneirs which are robbers, willingly obeyed his Regall authoritie, and yeerely payed their tenths toward their Kings maintenance. As for the Brebers, or Montaneirs, being of an vntamed and fierce diſpoſition, ſpeaking the Tamſet tongue, which is as much different from the Larbee, as Welch is from our Engliſh, dwelling in places by nature defencible, and almoſt inacceſſible: He could not ſo well gouerne, neither had euer ſuch abſolute power ouer them, nor receiued the fift pennie of profite from them, as he did from the Alarbies. Therefore he ſought by all meanes to diminiſh their ſtrength of people, drawing them alwayes into forraigne expeditions, eſpecially into that warre, againſt the Negros, which continued a long time, thereby extending his Empire ſo farre that way, as by Camell it was ſixe moneths iourney from Moruccos, to the fartheſt parts of his Dominion. Likewiſe, he vſed this people to goe with the Carauans to Gago, to fetch home his yeerely Tribute and Cuſtome, whereby many were conſumed in trauelling ouer the Saharas: for any offence or robbery committed by them, his ſword ſhould puniſh ſeuerely, that the reſt might feare: diuiding their Countrey into ſeuerall diuiſions or Cantons, in euery of which he placed an Alkeid, with Souldiers to ſuppreſſe any ſudden vproares, much like our Lieutenant ſet ouer our ſeuerall Counties, but that the Alkeid is continually reſident, and hath greater power in executing Marſhall law. And laſtly, as pledges of their loyalties, he would get their chiefeſt mens ſonnes into his hands, bringing them vp in his Court to a more ciuill and delicate kind of life. He was alwaies of mind to keepe peace with Chriſtendome; with Spaine, who was his next Potent neighbour; but aboue all loued the Engliſh Nation, and admired the late Queenes happie Gouernment, willing to entertaine trading with vs, witneſſe his many Letters written to that worthy Lady of happie Memorie, and his Embaſſage ſent vnto her, Anno 1601. Performed by Abdala Wahad Anowne, and Hamet Alhadg, their great trauailer to Mecha, and other places.

A Carauan, is a company of Merchants going together for trading, with a great number of Horſes, Camels and Mules, laden with Commodities.

Toward his ſubiects he was not too tyrannicall, but ſweetned his abſolute power and will, with much clemencie. By diuers wayes he got exceſſiue ſtore of gold. Firſt, by ſeeing his tenths truly payd from the Larbees: Secondly, by trading with the Negro, taking vp the ſalt at Tegazza, and ſelling it at Gago, hauing from thence returne in good gold. Thirdly, by huſbanding his Maſeraws, or Ingenewes, where his Sugar Canes did grow, (though now all ſpoyled with theſe warres) for it is ſufficiently knowen, all of them about Moruecos, Taradant, and Magador, were yeerely worth vnto him, ſixe hundred thouſand ounces at the leaſt. I omit his loue he tooke in entertaining forraigne Artizans, the reedifying of his houſe in Moruecos, getting Italian Marbles, the richeſt that could bee bought for money, and workemen hired from thence at great wages. His ſumptuous prouiſions for the Sarraile, and maintenance of his women, not ſo much delighting in the ſinne, as his predeceſſors had done before, as to ſhew his glory, becauſe the faſhion of the Countrey is ſuch, to ſhew their riches and greatneſſe vpon that fraile ſexe, and their attendances. For his chiefeſt pleaſures were to ſee the Gallantrie of his kingdome, managing their good Barbarian Steeds, and the Falchons vpon their wing, making faire flights after the Heron: for theſe ſports he was prouided, no man better, from which he was recalled by certaine diſcontents, which as clouds fore-runned his owne Sun-ſet.

At the time of his death, he left fiue ſonnes aliue. The eldeſt Muley Mahemet, commonly called Muley Sheck, a Title giuen alwayes to the eldeſt of the Kings ſonnes: The ſecond, Muley Boferes, which two ſonnes were both by one woman, a Negra, one of his Concubines: The third ſon Muley Sidan, whom he had by one of his wiues: The fourth ſonne Muley Naſſar, who was about the age of nineteene yeers: And the fift, Muley Abdela, about fourteene yeers old at the time of the old Kings death, and theſe two laſt were the ſons of two ſeuerall Concubines. This deceaſed King in his life time, had placed his three elder ſonnes in ſeuerall parts of his Kingdome, to gouerne for him in them, to Muley Sheck his eldeſt he had giuen the Kingdome of Fez, which Kingdome hath in former times continually beene allotted by the late Kings of Barbary to their eldeſt ſonnes: Muley Boferes he placed in his Kingdome of Sus, to Muley Sidan he gaue the Prouince of Tedula, which lyeth in the mid-way betweene Moruecos and Fez: his two younger ſonnes Muley Naſſar, and Abdela remained with him in his houſe, whom by reaſon of their young yeeres, he had not as yet placed in any part of his Kingdomes. The eldeſt ſonne Muley Sheck in his younger yeeres gouerned Fez, and thoſe parts of Barbarie, with great approbation of his Father, through the Counſell of Baſha Muſtepha a Spaniſh Renegado: which Baſha in continuance of time, grew into ſuch fauour with him, that the whole Gouernment of the Kingdome of Fez was wholly by Muley Sheck put in his hands: Whereupon, the Alkieds of the Countrey that were naturall borne Moores, and continuall attendants vpon the old King, enuying the greatneſſe of the ſaid Baſha, raiſed diuers accuſations againſt him: Complaining to the King that he learned Muley Sheck to drinke wine (a thing vnlawfull to the Moores, being forbidden them by their Prophet Mahomet) and that now hauing the whole Gouernment of the Kingdome of Fez in his hands, vnder the Kings ſon, he purpoſed after he had poſſeſſed himſelf of Muley Shecks Treaſure, to flie, and carrie it with him to ſome parts of Chriſtendome. Which accuſations, the old King vpon ſome probabilities and likelihoods, conceiuing to be true, theſe Alkeids procured at laſt with him, that he ſhould ſend to his ſonne Muley Sheck, commanding him to ſend the head of the ſaid Baſha, which command; howſoeuer, Muley Sheck (who greatly loued, and fauoured the ſaid Baſha) at the firſt delayed to performe, yet after diuers meſſages, the old King ſending at the laſt a principall ſeruant of his, to ſee the execution done, he was forced much againſt his will, to ſee fulfilled.

M. Sheck.

In theſe younger yeeres of Muley Sheck, whileſt this Baſha was aliue, none of the Kings ſonnes was more dutifull to their father then he, neither any of their actions ſo contented the old King as his; inſomuch, as the whole Kingdomes hope for a ſucceſſor after the old Kings deceaſe, was onely in Muley Sheck. Whereupon, and by the Kings voluntary motion, all the principall Alkeids, and men of Command that were in the Kingdomes, by ſolemne oath vowed allegeance to Muley Sheck, after the old Kings deceaſe. And at that time Boferes the ſecond ſonne, by reaſon of the great plague in Sus, and other diſcontents, he receiued from that rebellious people, ſtayed not long there, but returned againe to his Father in Moruecos, where he ſtayed with him vntill his Fathers departure to Fez in September, 1602. Muley Sidan the third ſonne, continued in Tedula, (a Prouince fruitfull and ſcituate in the flat of Barbarie, the mid-way betweene Fez and Moruecos, as I haue told you) who gouerned thoſe parts in great peace and quietneſſe, euen in the chiefe times of the tumults that were in the bordering Dominions of his eldeſt Brother Sheck, (whereof you ſhall read hereafter) inſomuch, that hee was generally commended and liked both of his Father and of all the Kingdome for his gouernment, being ſtrict in ſeeing the execution of Iuſtice to be done in thoſe parts that hee gouerned, not ſparing his Kindred or neereſt Followers in thoſe caſes: From his infancy hee naturally hated all maner of Theeues whatſoeuer, eſpecially thoſe his robbed by the high-wayes, and without any fauour or mercy ſeuerely puniſhed them. Howſoeuer, he carryed himſelfe very dutifull to his Father, whileſt hee was liuing, yet from his child-hood he was alwayes of an aſpiring and ambitious nature, which could neuer be brought to ſubiect it ſelfe to giue any awfull reſpect to his elder Brethren, but to hazard his whole eſtate in obtayning the Kingdome, accounting himſelfe his Fathers lawfull heire, in that he was his Fathers eldeſt Sonne, which he had by any of his marryed Wiues: In this point, not regarding the cuſtome & Law of the Moores, who in title of Inheritance or ſucceſſion, reſpect not the mother, whether ſhe be marryed Wife or Concubine bought with money, ſo that her Sonne be the eldeſt in birth.

But to returne againe to Muley Sheck the Kings eldeſt Sonne, who after the death of his Baſha Muſtepha, (beheaded by his Fathers command) ſoone ſhewed vnto all men the want of gouernment that was in him; for in his latter times, giuing himſelfe ouer to drunkenneſſe, and other deteſtable vices, which amongſt the Moores commonly accompanieth that ſinne, regarded not at all the gouernment of his Kingdome, but ſuffered his ſeruants, followers, and Souldiers to doe what they would in robbing and ſpoyling the goods of his honeſt minded Subiects, without controlment: And through want of Iuſtice duely executed, his whole Countrey in a ſhort time ſwarmed ſo with theeues and robbers by the high wayes, that there was no trauelling through his Dominions, but in Caffilas or companies of three hundred & foure hundred perſons at a time, and they hardly ſomtimes eſcaped the hands of theeues. The Alarbies, who continue to this day, in Tribes and kindreds, beeing the husbandmen of the Countrey, liuing in the fields in Tents, by Tilling of the Ground, and breeding vp of Cattell, when as they could not quietly gather in, and peaceably enioy the Corne and Fruits of the Ground, denied to pay the King their accuſtomed duetie: and in the fields followed the courſes of Muley Shecks ſeruants in the Citie, in robbing of all paſſengers that came within their power. And ſuch was the lauiſhing manner of ſpending and conſuming of his Treaſure, that in his humours, hee neither regarded what he gaue, nor to whom: in ſo much, that a Iew who was a Muſician, and vſed to play before him in his drunken fits, (what with the gifts giuen him by the Prince, and what elſe he got out of his houſe) had gotten together in money and Iewels, (in the ſpace of foure or fiue yeeres) to the value of foure hundred thouſand Duckats, which is about fortie thouſand pound ſterling.

Rich Iew.

This diſſolute life and careleſſe gouernment of Muley Sheck, grieued the old King not a little, eſpecially to ſee ſuch a change or alteration in him, whoſe forwardneſſe in former times had been the ſtay of his age, and had mooued him to cauſe the Alkeids of the Kingdome, by oath to confirme their alleageance after his owne death. Many wayes he ſought to amend what was amiſſe in thoſe parts, and to draw his ſonne to a more ſtrict courſe of life, and more carefull kind of gouernment, as well by his Letters, as by ſending diuers principall Alkeids to be Counſellors vnto him. Yet ſuch was the ſmall account he made either of the one or the other, that the old King in the end ſeeing no amendment, but the eſtate of that Kingdome to grow daily worſe and worſe, determined to goe to Fez in his owne perſon with an Armie, aſwell to diſplace his ſon, who had denied to come vnto him, vpon his ſending for: as alſo to put in order all matters in thoſe parts, which through the ill gouernment of his ſonne, were all out of frame. And ſo about the beginning of October, 1602. hee ſet forwards from Moruecos with an Army of eight thouſand Shot, and ſome fiue thouſand Horſe towards Fez, leauing his ſecond ſonne Muley Boferes to gouerne Mornecos and Sus in his abſence, vntill his returne; making ſuch ſpeedy iourneys, that he was with his Forces within one dayes iourney of Fez, before his ſonne Muley Sheck was certainely aduiſed of his ſetting forth from Moruecos. Who, when he vnderſtood of his Fathers being ſo neere, and himſelfe euery way vnprouided to reſiſt him, would haue fled towards Taſilet; but being followed by Baſha Muſtepha, he was conſtrained to take Sanctuarie, with fiue hundred of his beſt ſouldiers, being very good Shot and well prouided. The old King the Father, ſeeing his ſonne take the Priuiledge of the place (which is much reſpected in that Country) willed him to come forth, and ſubmit himſelfe to his mercy: But Muley Sheck refuſed, either obſtinate in not obeying, or fearefull he could not render a good account of his fiue and twentie yeares gouernment in Fez. Wherefore Muley Hamet commanded Muſtepha, a Baſha of Sidans, though then in the old Muleys ſeruice, to take three thouſand men, and perforce to enter the place; which he performed, bringing Sheck priſoner, and the reſt of his company which were left aliue after the conflict. The old man would in no wiſe admit him into his preſence, but committed him to the charge and cuſtodie of Baſha Iudar, one of greateſt place about the King, who carried Sheck to Mickanes, a ſtrong Garriſon Towne, and there remained vntill the time of his Fathers death, which was ſome fiue moneths after.

The old King in his iourney to Fez, againſt his eldeſt ſonne, paſſed by the Prouince of Tedula, and from thence tooke alongſt with him his third ſonne, Muley Sidan, whom he commanded to remoue his houſhold to Fez, from Sidania (a Citie which he had begun to build in Tedula, and called it after his owne name) intending to leaue him Vice-roy of thoſe parts, in the roome of his eldeſt ſonne, whom he purpoſed to carry with him from Mickanes, where he was priſoner to Moruecos; which he had alſo performed, if hee had not been preuented by ſudden death. For in Auguſt, 1603. he hauing ſet all matters in order in thoſe parts of Fez, prouiding for his returne to Moruecos, put out his Tents without Fez Gates; but being abroad, he ſuddenly fell * ſicke, and his ſickneſſe ſo ſore increaſed, that on Thurſday falling ſicke, on Sunday morning being the fourteenth of Auguſt, 1603. he died.

MVley Sidan, by reaſon his Mother Lilla Iſha gouerned the old Kings Houſe, vnderſtood of his Fathers death, before it was noyſed abroad; whereupon hee preſently went forth into his Fathers Camp and Tents, from whence he carried away al ſuch Iewels and treaſure as he found there. And after his Fathers death, hee cauſed himſelfe in Fez to be proclaimed King of Barbarie, as lawfull Heyre of his deceaſed Father. Lilla Iohora, Mother to Muley Sheck, and Muley Boferes, ſeeing her eldeſt Sonne in priſon, and void of all meanes to helpe himſelfe at that inſtant, was not vnmindfull of her ſecond Sonne Boferes, whom the old King had left to gouerne Moruecos during his abſence. To whom ſhee diſpeeded preſently Letters by one of the Kings Eunuchs; who made ſuch haſte, that in foure dayes hee came from Fez to his Tents, which were ſome two leagues from Moruecos, where hee had lien all the Summer before (to auoide the infection of the Plague, which had been that Summer in Moruecos) and with him was his younger Brother Muley Naſſar, and his eldeſt Brothers Sonne Muley Abdela. Muley Boferes vnderſtanding of his Fathers death, preſently entred Moruecos, and gat poſſeſſion of the Alcaſaua, his Fathers Houſe, before the newes of his Fathers death was noyſed abroad, and generally knowne, fearing how the Alkeyds, and people of Morruecos might ſtand affected vnto him, and knowing that if he had once poſſeſſion of the Alcaſaua, and of his Fathers treaſure, he had the beſt part of the Kingdome. And the next day after his entrance, he cauſed to be publiſhed generally thorow the whole Citie, the newes of his Fathers death and withall, himſelfe to be proclaimed King: writing Letters to the Vice-roy of Sus to doe the like in Taradant, the chiefe Citie of that Kingdome; the which he accordingly performed.

Boſeres proclaimed at Moroco and Taradant.

M.Naſſar.

Muley Naſſar, the fourth ſonne of the deceaſed King, hauing been all the Summer abroad with his brother Boſeres, when now he vnderſtood of his Fathers death, followed his brother a farre off, as though he meant to haue entred Morruecos with him: but comming to the Gates of the Citie, in company with Muley Abdela his Nephew, being ſonne to Muley Sheck, with whom he was familiar, conferred with him about their flying into the Mountaines, perſwading Muley Abdela, that he might no waies put any truſt in Boſeres, ſince his father and hee were the chiefeſt impediments, that hindred Boſeres from claiming the Kingdom by courſe of iuſtice; his Father, Muley Sheck being the old Kings eldeſt ſonne, and he the eldeſt Sonne of his Father. Beſides, his Father being in priſon ſo neare Fez, where Muley Sidan was, it was to bee doubted, that Muley Sidan had already gotten him into his power, and it might be, had made ſome agreement with him already, to ioyne both againſt Muley Boſeres: which if it ſhould ſo fall out, would cauſe Boſeres to deale more cruelly with him. But theſe perſwaſions moued not Abdela, who rather choſe to enter the Citie, and follow his Vncle, on whoſe curteſie he would relie. Though Naſſar fearing how Boſeres would deale with him, with all ſpeed fled into the Mountaines to the Kindred of his Mother, from whence after a few dayes with ſome eight hundred, or a thouſand of thoſe people whom he ioined together, he paſſed into the Plaines of Sus, ſending to the Alkeid in Taradant to proclaime him King, or elſe to ſuffer him quietly to depart. But the Alkeid hauing already proclaimed Muley Boſeres, withſtood him, and hee hauing no meanes wherewith to pay his ſouldiers and people that he had gathered together, was ſoone left of all, and ſo returned againe to his Mothers Kindred, and liued priuately there about ſeuen moneths, and then died of the plague, or as ſome reported, ſecretly poyſoned, was brought to Morruecos, and there buried.

Naſſars flight and death.

But to returne to Fez and thoſe parts: after the death of the old King (Sidan being now proclaimed King in Fez; Boſeres in Morruecos and Sus; and Muley Sheck priſoner in Miokanes, in the keeping of Baſha Iudar) the Souldiers being abroad in their Tents, without Fez Gates, began to be in a muteny, as well for ſixteene moneths pay, which the old King owed them, as alſo about their returne to Morruecos, where the moſt part of them had left their wiues and children. To appeaſe this mutenie, Muley Sidan ſent out of Fez vnto them Alkeid Hamet Monſore, their chiefe Commander in the old Kings time, to promiſe them as well content in payment, as alſo a ſpeedy returne to Morruecos with Muley Sidan himſelfe. But Monſore in ſtead of pacifying, laboured to increaſe their mutenous humours, and at laſt agreed with them ſuddenly in the night to take vp their tents, and to march with him to Morruecos, alleaging vnto them both the vncertaintie of Muley Sidans pay, and the ſmall likelihood of any ſpeedy iourney hee meant to take to Morruecos. And being to paſſe within a little of Mickanes, where the Baſha kept Muley Sheck priſoner, he wrote vnto the ſaid Baſha to know his intent, whither he would goe to Morruecos or no with him. To whom the Baſha came, and brought Muley Sheck with him, whom they brought along as priſoner to Morruecos, and deliuered him vp to his brother Boſeres, who kept him cloſe priſoner in his Houſe, ſome foure or fiue moneths, vntill the comming of Muley Sidan againſt him in battell, by this meanes thinking to haue eſtabliſhed the whole Kingdome to Muley Boſeres; who now, beſides the poſſeſſion of the Citie of Morruecos, and his Fathers treaſure, had brought vnto him the greateſt part of his Fathers forces, and his elder brother put priſoner into his hands. Muley Sidan being thus deceiued by Monſore, and likewiſe by diuers other principall Alkeids (who had ſecretly departed from Fez, and left him) forthwith diſpeeded one Muſtefa, a Renegado of his owne, whom he had made a Baſha, with two thouſand Shot, and ſome Companies of Horſe to Tedula, aſwel to receiue from the Alarbies, thoſe duties which they alwaies pay vnto their King, as alſo to ſtop, and returne to Fez, whomſoeuer he ſhould find flying from thence to Morruecos, keeping poſſeſſion of that Prouince for his vſe. He made likewiſe great preparations both of Horſe and Foot in Fez, to be alwaies readie to accompany himſelfe in perſon if need ſhould ſo require, hauing with him in Fez of principall Alkeids, Azus, chiefe Counſellor to the late deceaſed King, and Lord ouer his Bitlemel: Bocraſia, Abſadiks, and diuers others.

Muley Boſeres likewiſe in Morruecos, fore-ſlacked no time in making preparation to ſend for h againſt him, ſending firſt Alcaide Gowie with ſome ſixe hundred men to make prouiſion of Corne, and other victuals amongſt the Alarbies; and after he had certaine news of Muley Sidans forces to be in Tedula, he ſent out his Baſha Iudar with fiue thouſand Shot, choyce men; foure Pieces of Artilerie, and certaine Companies of Horſe to enter Tedula, and to giue battell to Muſtefa the Generall of Sidans forces, or perforce to driue him out of that Country. ming thither, Muſtefa ſeeing himſelfe no waies ſtrong enough to encounter with Iudar, retyred backe againe with his Armie out of Tedula: and Iudar deſtroyed the foundation of Sidania, (which Muley Sidan at his being in Tedula had begun to build vpon the Riuer of Morbaie, and called it Sidania, after his owne name) likewiſe waſted and deſtroyed the Country thereabout, at leaſt ſo many of the Kindreds of the Alarbies as he knew to be friends to Muley Sidan, or thoſe that would not acknowledge Boferes for King. Sidan vnderſtanding what Iudar had done in Tedula, and likewiſe of the great preparations that his brother in Moruecos daily made to ſend out againſt him, forthwith put forth his Tents, and ioyned together his whole forces, which were ſome eight or nine thouſand Shot, and ſome twelue thouſand Horſe, with two and twentie Pieces of Artillerie, himſelfe in perſon going along with them. And becauſe hee was altogether vnprouided of ſkilfull Gunners for his Ordnances, he procured from Salie out of certaine Engliſh men of warre, who at that inſtant were there, two Engliſh Gunners, to whom he committed the charge of his Artillerie: but by reaſon of much raine that had fallen, it being in the moneth of Ianuarie, 1604. the ground in many places was ſo ſoft, that they could not march with their Artillerie ſo faſt as need required; ſo that his Artillerie neuer came at the battell, which was thought to be a chiefe cauſe of his ouerthrow.

Fokers are men of good life, which are only giuen to peace. Leo calls them Hermites; other call them Talbies and Saints: they are held in great reputation of ſanctitie.

Policie.

Whileſt theſe preparations were in hand on either ſide, Muley Boferes ſent certaine Fokers, held of great eſtimation amongſt the Moores, to his brother Muley Sidan, to treate conditions of peace: howbeit, after their diſpeeding from Moruecos, hee omitted no time and diligence in ſending forth new Armies and freſh ſupplies, both of ſouldiers and prouiſion, to Iudar Baſha that was in Tedula, and vnderſtanding for certaine that his brother Sidan was in the field in perſon (becauſe he himſelfe had neuer been inured to trauell, and knowing it would bee no ſmall diſcouragement to his ſide, and encouragement to the other, that Sidan ſhould be in perſon in the field, and no other his equall in Bloud in his Armie to withſtand him) hee concluded a colourable Peace betweene himſelfe and his eldeſt brother Muley Sheck, whom vntill that time hee kept cloſe priſoner in his houſe, agreeing with him that hee ſhould goe forth into his Armie, and ioyne with Iudar to fight againſt Muley Sidan, whom if hee ouerthrew in battell, hee ſhould enioy the Kingdome of Fez, and ſo much of thoſe Eaſterne parts of Barbarie, as hee inioyed in their Fathers time: on condition, that at his entrance into Fez, he ſhould proclaime Muley Boferes King, and himſelfe onely Vice-roy, and ſo ſtill acknowledge his gouernment there, as deriued from Boferes. And to the intent Muley Sheck ſhould the better obſerue theſe conditions according to their agreement, hee was to leaue his eldeſt ſonne in pawne with Muley Boferes in Moruecos. On theſe plauſible conditions, Muley Sheck was ſet at libertie, a happie turne for himſelfe as hee thought, who neuer looked for any better but perpetuall impriſonment, with much miſerie. But the truth is, Baſha Iudar had ſecret aduertiſement from his Maſter Boferes (yet not ſo ſecret, but it was knowne to Muley Sheck, and cloſely carried of him by interception of Letters betwixt Moruecos and the Campe in Tedula), that hee ſhould abridge Muley Sheck of any command in the Campe, or matter of counſell in ordering of the Fight; onely ſhew him to the Souldiers vnder his Canopie, that the Fezes who were the ſtrength of Sidans Armie, might know Sheck was in the Campe of Boferes, whom they loued in regard partly of his long abode amongſt them, but eſpecially of his great liberalitie, or rather prodigalitie, formerly ſhewed vnto them, which wrought much in their minds at the enſuing battell: and withall the Baſha had a ſpeciall charge ſent, and his Guard ſo to watch him, that (if hee got the battell) hee ſhould bring Muley Sheck in Yrons as ſafe a priſoner from the Campe to Moruecos, as once hee had done from Mickanes. But this being diſcouered, Muley Sheck ſo ſhufled his Game, that though Iudar won the Field, Muley Sheck eſcaped vnto Fez, and was louingly entertained of the Citizens, proclaiming himſelfe King of Barbarie.

Fokers ſuſpected, and peace denied.

Almohalla is a Campe.

But returne we to the Fokers, treating about conditions of Peace in Fez with Muley Sidan, who by intelligence vnderſtood from Moruecos of the freſh ſupplies of Souldiers, daily ſent out by his brother to the Baſha, whereby hee greatly ſuſpected thoſe offers of Peace, to bee but a deuice to prolong the time, whileſt his whole forces were in a readineſſe, and then ſuddenly to haue come vpon him vnawares, before he ſhould be prouided for him. And therefore hee returned the Fokers with denials of the offered conditions of Peace, and himſelfe thinking to take the oportunitie and aduantage of the time, before either his brothers new forces ſhould come to the Baſha, or Muley Sheck his eldeſt brother be ſet at libertie. He cauſed with all diligence to bee gotten together ſome two thouſand Mules and Horſes, and vpon euerie Mule to bee ſet two Souldiers with their furniture, and ſo (without any ſtay for the reballing of Tents, or carrying along of his Artillerie with him) to bee with all haſte poſſible, ſent and ioyned to the Almohalla of Alkeid Muſtefa which lay hard by the Riuer of Morbaie, in the ſight of the Almohalla of Baſha Iudar, the Riuer onely betweene them: hee himſelfe likewiſe in perſon went along with ſome ſeuen or eight thouſand of his Horſemen, thinking by this meanes to come with the chiefeſt and beſt of his forces vpon Baſha Iudar, before the Baſha ſhould expect him, or before the comming of Muley Sheck, who for his liberalitie and bounty in former times, was greatly beloued of all the Souldiers both of Fez, and alſo of Moruecos. But this policie of his herein tooke no place, for Muley Sheck after hee was ſet at libertie, made ſuch ſpeedie Iournies that he came to the Almohalla of the Baſha, before the Muley Sidan had certaine intelligence of his libertie, and yet hee entred the Almohalla but on the Tueſday, the battel being fought vpon the Friday following. Muley Sidan vnderſtanding for certayne that his eldeſt Brother was come into the Baſha his Almohalla, thought it no time for him to deferre giuing of Battayle, leaſt it ſhould be knowne amongſt his Souldiers, (many of whom in former times had ſerued the ſaid Muley Sheck.) And therefore on Friday the ſixt of Ianuary 1604. the Forces of each ſide met and ioyned together, betweene whom there was no long fight, for vpon the diſcharging of foure Peeces of Artillery, (which Iudar Baſha had with him) ſome three or foure times, a great part of the Souldiers of Muley Sidan beganne to flye: except ſome choice men which were in that part of the Battayle where the Muley himſelfe was: by reaſon of the reſolution of their Commander, continued ſomewhat longer, but in the end fled when as the Canopie ouer Muley Sidans head was ſhot downe with a Piece of Ordnance. At which miſchance, and not before, the Muley himſelfe began to leaue the field; who in the managing of this battayle was ſome thing to be blamed; for being come to his Campe an houre before day, he ſhould not haue delayed two houres and more the preſent on-ſet, gazing in his Enemies face, and giuing them time to ready themſelues to fight, whom otherwiſe hee might haue taken at the diſper-view, and his Fezzes whom he halfe miſtruſted, no premeditation to reuolt or runne away. On Muley Shecks ſide few were ſlaine, and of Muley Sidans ſide the greateſt number was ſome ſixe hundred men.

Vniuſt Iuſtice.

Treaty of peace.

Treaſure taken

The three Brethren thus ſtriuing for the Golden Ball of Soueraigntie, Iuſtice was trodden downe. The Larbees robbed one another, the ſtrongeſt carrying away all. Quarrels betwixt Families and Tribes, which durſt not be talked of in old Muley Hamets time, came to be decided with the Sword. After this battaile all wayes were ſtopped with Robbers, no trading from the Port Townes to Moruecos, without great ſtrength of men. Muley Boferes (who had the Imperiall ſeat) was neither ſo fit for action, or to doe Iuſtice, as Muley Sidan who had loſt the day. And that the Kindred, called Weled Entid, well knew, which preſuming vpon the ſoft nature of Boferes and their owne ſtrength, which conſiſted of fifteene thouſand horſe, foraged vp to Moruecos gates, fore-cloſed all paſſages for Trauellers, making Merchants goods their prizes: Wheras an exemplary puniſhment executed vpon them for their robbing in Fez by Muley Sidan, whileſt he raigned there, made them thinke the Countrey too hot: For Sidan commanded Alkeid German with two thouſand Souldiers in hoſtile manner, to fall vpon the next Dwar of Tents belonging to that Tribe, to burne Man, Woman, Childe, Kine, Sheepe, and whatſoeuer belonged to them, not to ſpare it vpon his owne life from Fire and Sword, which fully executed and ſo bloudily, that Muley Sidan ſighed hearing the true report, yet it made Fez the peaceableſt part in Barbarie. But returne we to Sidans fortunes after he loſt the field, hauing the ouerthrow, retyred backe to Fez, and forthwith was Alkeid Azus (the onely man in the latter dayes of the old King, fauored by the whole Countrey) diſpeeded towards Moruecos, to treate of a peace, and himſelfe beganne to make head againe to reſiſt ſuch forces as ſhould follow him; but before he could bring his forces together againe, newes was brought vnto him that his Brother Muley Sheck, was neere at hand with certain companies of Horſe-men, and that the whole Almohalla of the Baſha was not farre behind. So that then hee was rather to conſider of, and to prouide for his eſcaping by flight, then any wayes to reſiſt: and hauing before put ſome nine hundred thouſand Duckats in Allarocha, for the which money he had ſent one of his Alkeids after his returne from the battayle; hee thought it his beſt courſe to paſſe that way, and to take that money along with him, but he was followed ſo hardly by Alkeid Abdela Wahad, and Alkeid Vmſoud Vmbily, Boferes Seruants, that he was forced to flye directly towards Trimiſine, and to leaue that Treaſure behind him which was taken by his Brother Mley Sheck.

Abſadicke.

Sidans valour.

In theſe his frowning fortunes, the moſt of his Alkeids left him, and amongſt others Mumine Bocraſia flying to Moruecos, in whom he put no ſmall truſt: and more then the Seruants of his houſe, he had no man of account but forſooke him, onely Alkeid Abſadicke, Hado Tabid, and Muſtepha; the two latter of them being his houſhold Seruants, and belonging to him in his Fathers time, left him not in his aduerſitie: So that any Alkeid of the Caſſas or Caſtes in Barbarie, he had no more then Abſadicke, who rather then he would leaue him (although allured by the perſwaſions of his Brother Alkeid Abdela Wahad, and entreated by the teares of his Sonne to returne, both of them then being in the purſuit of Muley Sidan, and in a Playne ouertooke the ſaid Abſadocke, yet he left his houſe and children at the mercie of Muley Boferes his Maſter and Enemie. The Alkeids who followed in purſuite of Muley Sidan, followed him ſo hard, that beſides the treaſure of Allarocha, they likewiſe tooke much of the Muleys Treaſure that hee carryed along with him, although with that ſmall company of Horſes, which were no more then twentie Horſe-men or thereabout, hee returned many times, and fought with thoſe who purſued him, in perſon, being ſtill one of the foremoſt in theſe Skirmiſhes, vntill Alkeid Vmbilie who purſued him, admiring his reſolution, and pittying his miſerable eſtate, requeſted his Maieſtie to keepe on his way, and ſaue himſelfe by flight, he not purpoſing to purſue him any further. And ſo the Muley in this miſerable eſtate (forſaken almoſt of all) kept on his way to Trimaſine a Towne bordering vpon the Turkes, in the Frontiers of the Kingdome of Argiers: and the Alkeids who purſued him, returned againe to Fez.

§. III.

MULEY SHECK proclaymeth himſelfe King in Fez. SIDAN goeth to Tafilet, from thence into Sus. Peace concluded betweene MULEY BOFERES, and MULEY SIDAN. ABDELA SHECKS Sonne eſcapeth. Sir ANTHONY SHERLEYS Embaſſage, Bountie and State.

AFter Muley Sidans flight in this manner, Muley Sheck entred Fez, where hee was ioyfully receiued of them, proclaymed himſelfe King, and not Gouernour vnder his Brother Boferes. And it being in the time of Rummadan, all the Almohallas of Moruecos returned home againſt the Paſcha: from whence after the celebration of the Feaſt, they were ſent forth to all parts of the Country againſt the Larbies: among whom were as great Ciuill Warres, as among the Brethren, for in this time of ſo many Kings, they would acknowledge none, or pay duty to any of the three Brethren. Whereupon Hamet Monſore with three thouſand Souldiers, was ſent into Sus in the moneth of Aprill, 1604. but his men dying of the Plague (which was very hot at that time) and thereby the Larbies little regarding his power, would bring him no victuals, ſo that with the remaynder of his men, he was conſtrayned to returne towards Moruecos. Diuers other Almohallas were ſent abroad into ſeuerall parts of the Countrey, but in the beginning of Iune, newes comming of Muley Sidans returne from Trimaſine to Tafilet, they were all ſent for by Boferes to returne to Moruecos, and be ioyned together the ſecond time againſt Muley Sidan: who hauing ſome few monethes liued about Trimaſine with ſome fiftie Souldiers, went towards Tafilet, about which part liued the Caſſa or Caſte of Alkeid Abſadock (who was Maſter of the Hawkes to Muley Hamet) and brought to Sidan, of his Caſte ſome twelue hundred Horſes, with which force he entered Tafilet: The Alkeid of Muley Boferes flying to Dara or Draw with his Souldiers. In Tafilet, Muley Sidan ſtayed ſome forty dayes, where he vnderſtood perfectly of the eſtate of Sus, and had Letters from diuers of his Wel-willers there: vnderſtanding of Alkeid Hamet Monſores departure from thence: And that the Shebanites which is the greateſt Caſt in all Barbarie, and the Caſſe or Caſt of the Muleys Mother, would not acknowledge Boferes for King, and likewiſe, how moſt of all the Caſts in Sus deſired his comming thither: Whereupon hee prepared what Forces he could there get, to goe into Sus. Muley Boferes vpon the firſt newes of his Brothers comming to Tafilet, called in all his Almohallas, and ioyning ſome foure thouſand ſhot of them beſides Horſe, ſent them from Moruecos to Dara, vnder the command of his Son Muley Abdelmelech, with whom went diuers principall Alkeids, as Alkeid Gowie, Vmbilie, and Mumine Bocraſia, who in the firſt battayle of Muley Sidan was a principall man of command on his ſide, and after his ouerthrow fled from him to Moruecos, with diuers others. The chiefe intent of theſe Forces was to ſtop the paſſages from thence to Sus, which Muley Sidan perceiuing before the comming of their whole Forces, he paſſed by Alcatouy, where the Horſe-men on each ſide skirmiſhed, the Footmen not being able to come vp, and ſome ſlaine of either ſide, but no man of account, ſaue onely Alkeid Mumine Bocraſia, who as ſome reported dyed with thirſt, being ouer-heated (the battayle beeing fought in the middeſt of July) or as others reported, beeing wounded, and returning to his Tent, calling for water, after hee had drunke it preſently dyed; whoſe death was little lamented or pittyed of the Moores, they ſaying, hee was iuſtly rewarded for being a Traytour to Muley Sidan his Maſter, who was not onely contented to leaue him in his miſfortunes, and to flye to his Brother, but alſo to goe forth into the field againſt him.

Death of Bocraſia.

Muley Sidans Forces were ſo ſmall, that he was not able to match in ſtrength the Forces of his Enemies, & therefore was conſtrayned to paſſe into Sus by the way of the Sahara, and durſt not paſſe by Draw: In which Sands for want of water, both he and his whole company had almoſt periſhed, and after much miſery indured in that Iourney, hee arriued at Aca, where Sidie Abdela Imbark the great Foker dwelleth, the friendſhip of whom obtayned, hee knew that all his Brothers Forces could not diſpoſſeſſe him of the Kingdome of Sus, in ſuch great reuerence is that Church-man held in thoſe parts, that the people will obey none, but whom he commandeth them.

Sahara, the Countrey or Deſerts of Sands.

The reputation of Heremites or Fokers.

He being come hither, the Foker by letters to Muley Boferes, then at Moruecos, procured that there might be a Treaty of peace betweene the two brethren: Wherupon, in Auguſt following, Peace concluded betwixt Boſeres and Sidan.

Anno 1604. Alkeyd Azus was ſent to Muley Sidan to Aca, where by the endeuours of the ſaid Alkeyd and the Foker, a peace was concluded, betweene Muley Boſeres and his brother Muley Sidan, this to inioy the Kingdome of Sus, and the other the reſidue of the Empire, whereupon Sidan peaceably entered Taradant the chiefe City in that Kingdome: vpon whoſe entrance thither, Sus which in all former times had beene the moſt vnquiet and rebellious part of all Barbary, through his execution of Iuſtice, became the onely peaceable and well gouerned Countrey of that Kingdome, all other parts of Barbarie, that were vnder the gouernment, and belonging to the other two brethren, as then remaining very vnquiet, and full of all tumults: Neither was his gouernment any way to be miſliked, but that ſcarce ſetled, he charged the Countrey with greater impoſitions then his Father euer demanded, inſomuch as Sedie Abdela Imbark, who was the onely man that firſt brought him thither, reproued his courſes: and the Mountainers of Atlas, being good Souldiers, excellent ſhot, and their dwelling by nature defencible, finding his yoke too heauy, the leſſe regarded him or his power; which humour of theirs was nouriſhed by ſecret practiſes of Boſeres, loth that Sidan ſhould either grow great in friends, or treaſure. But the Inhabitants of the Plaine and lower Regions felt the ſmart of his rod, knowing their throats lay at his mercy, when as the Mountainers defended themſelues with open armes, and oftentimes gaue the new king his hands full.

Abdelas eſcape.

The peace concluded betwixt Boſeres and Sidan, by the meanes of Abdela Imbark, and Azus, the wiſeſt Counſellor that Barbary hath: we will leaue Sidan at Sus, ſeeking his owne end once more to become Maſter of Mornecos, and returne to Boſeres, who was troubled which way to contriue the regaining of Muley Sheck: who like a Bird had broken cage, and was flowen to Fez, making a faire pretence to gouerne but as Vice-roy, yet ſecretly practiſed with forraine States, either to make them his friends, whereunto he might flie, if Muley Boſeres by force ſhould driue him out of Fez, or rather then he would loſe footing in Afrike, determined to bring in forraine power, for his aid. Wherefore Boſeres fearing a Chriſtian ſtorme which might haile bullets, was carefull to keepe Abdela, Muley Sheck his eldeſt ſon, the ſafer to keepe the father ſurer from doing miſchiefe. But it happened the plague was ſharpe in Mornecos, therefore Boſeres ſent his ſon Muley Abdelmelch ſome fiue miles foorth of Mornecos with his Tents, and Muley Shecks ſonne with him, but either his keepers were negligent and corrupted, or elſe young Abdela too wilie, for one night he made eſcape out of the Campe, and hauing horſes ready layd, poſted to his Father at Fez. This gallant being at liberty, ſought all meanes to defend his Title, being the eldeſt brothers ſonne: his ſtirring ſpirit and youthfull hope drew all the minds of the Fezzes vnto him: inſomuch as Muley Boſeres ſore afflicted with his eſcape, but more with the newes of his preparations, diſpeeded Azus vnto Muley Sidan then in Sus, with requeſt he would goe perſonally to battaile againſt Sheck and Abdela his ſonne: Muley Sidan well entertained this meſſage, and with all conuenient ſpeed drawing his owne forces together, came within halfe a dayes iourney of Mornecos, there pitching his Tents, but not determining to hazard his fortune, or truſt the price of his owne head vnder his brothers hands, yet daily he ſent letters by his ſeruants of great credite, wherein he was willing to vndertake the charge of warre againſt Abdela, ſo that he might make choice of Captaines and Commanders, and ſuch proportion of Souldiers as he thought fit, to vndergoe an action of ſuch import. This propoſition was neither liked of Boſeres or his Counſell, yet making faire weather to Muley Sidan, letters paſſed from him daily of great loue farced with many complements, much miſliking his brothers miſtruſt, not daring to ieopard his perſon within Mornecos.

Sidans policie.

Abdelmelech made Generall.

His retreat.

Muley Sidan meaning to proue what correſpondency his brother Boſeres heart carried with his hand, framed a letter which was ſent as from the chiefeſt man in thoſe Mountaine Countreys of Atlas, to Muley Boſeres, full of duety and ſeruices, offering withall to ſend him Sidans head, who was encamped within his Countrey, at the foot of the hilles. Anſwere to this letter was returned with great thankes, and a large reward of gold promiſed, if a buſineſſe of that high and important ſeruice would be performed. When Sidan by this had conſtrued his brothers meaning, he rayſed Campe, went to Tafilet, and remained in the Countrey of Dara, gathering in of money and men, after two moneths ſpent with his brother to no effect at all. Boſeres ſeeing Sidan departed, and deſtitute of his helpe for Fez, committed his Campe to Abdelmelech his owne ſon, who was to be aduiſed by the Counſels of Baſha Iudar, Alkeyd Hamet Monſore, Sedy Gowie, and Alkeyd Bokerſe (thorow whoſe hands paſſed all buſineſſe of Chriſtian Merchants, ſo well diſpatched, and ſo good regard thereof taken, that he was well liked of euery man for his good dealing.) This Campe being come within a dayes iourney of Fez, which is twenty dayes march from Mornecos, there the Souldiers fell to a mutenie, and three thouſand of them reuolted vnto Sheck, crying openly, Long liue Muley Sheck. Hereupon Abdelmelech called a Counſell of warre, wherein it was concluded, though their number were twice as many, to returne without blow giuen backe to Mornecos, perceiuing indeed their Souldiers hearts quite alienated from them.

S. Anth. Sherley, an Engliſhman ſent Ambaſſador from the Emperour.

About this time being the beginning of October, arriued at Saphia Sir Anthony Sherley, as Ambaſſadour from the Emperour of Germanie, to the King of Mornecos: his attendance was better then a priuate man, though ſomewhat wanting of the perſon from whom he was ſent, few of note were in his company, being in all about thirteene perſons, of euery Chriſtian language one, becauſe he would be fitted for interpretation of tongues. Amongſt theſe was Sir Edwin Rich, whoſe behauiour was good and well ſpoken of in euery place where he came, not ſtrayning his credite to borrow money, but well prouided to ſerue his owne turne, anſwering to his birth, ſtate, and disburſements for the time. Sir Anthonie then taking the Title of Ambaſſadour, during foure Moneths aboad in Saphia, kept open houſe, inuited all Chriſtian Merchants daily, both to dinner and ſupper: to ſupplie his owne turne for money, he got credite of Iewes to take vp money, and pay them in Morruecos, but at exceſſiue rate, almoſt fifty for a hundred. He bought likewiſe of an Engliſh Merchants Factor, being at dinner with him, at two or three words, a ſhip of a hundred & ſixty Tunne, with all her lading being Wheat, paying him in hand two thouſand ounces, and if he were not paid the reſt of his money within ten dayes after his arriuall in Morruecos, then the buyer to loſe his earneſt. But before he went vp, Abdelmelech returning from Fez, by reaſon of his Souldiers Treaſon, the King of Fez marched towards Morruecos, ſome foure dayes iourney, and there gaue ſiege vnto a Port Towne called Sally, and tooke it, but the Caſtle he could not win. So the Alkeyd of the Caſtle wrote to Muley Boferes, that though the Towne were loſt, the Caſtle he would keepe for him, if he ſent three hundred quarters of Corne to victuall his men, and a freſh ſupply for fifty Souldiers. Boferes loath to loſe the the place, and hearing Sir Anthonie had bought a ſhip of Corne, writ to Saphie, and willed him to ſend his ſhip to Sallie, and there to vnlade her Corne for the reliefe of the Caſtellan, and his Souldiers. Sir Anthonie, willing to doe the King a fauour, ſent for the Captaine and Merchant of the ſhip, willed them to goe for Sallie, and paying them for three hundred quarters, dealt ſo that thither they went, but the Caſtell being yeelded before they came, the Captaine and Merchant landed neither men, nor corne, but returned to Saphie.

Sir Edwin Rich.

The Ambaſſadors bounty.

By this time were ſent for the Conduct of the Embaſſador fiue hundred men, vnder the command of two Alkeyds: vnto euery Souldier Sir Anthonie gaue a Turbith as a Liuery of his loue, which made them reſpect and honour him exceedingly; inſomuch as one of the two Alkeyds, not haſtning to conduct the Embaſſador vp to Morruecos, but to prouide himſelfe of Corne, it being exceeding deare at Morruecos, Sir Anthonie deſirous to ſet forward, and the Souldiers willing to pleaſure him, fell to mutenie, in regard of the Alkeyds ſlackneſſe, killing two of his men to haſten their maſter forward. After his foure moneths abode in Saphie, wherein his bountie was extraordinary, not to his Countri-men onely, but to Flemiſh, French, and Spaniſh, admired of his Souldiers, he was receiued into Morruecos with great ſtate, hauing by the way, as alſo during his abode in Saphie, diuers letters from the King, extolling his honourable endeuours, and approoued valiantneſſe in his farre aduentures both by ſea and land, not omitting any Courtſhip to win his loue, or make him doubt his welcome.

His famous aduentures.

After two dayes ſtay in the Citie, the King made preparation for his entertainment at Court, whether he went, ſuting his followers as well as the ſhortneſſe of time could ſuffer, and his credite with the Chriſtian Merchants could affoord, which was good, for two Spaniards were ſo rapt with admiration of his worth, and by his ſpeeches allured with ſo ſtrange hope, that they fell in emulation, whether ſhould doe him more ſeruices, or helpe him to more money: reaſonably attended, he rode to Court, not lighting from his horſe, where the Kings ſonnes vſually doe, but rode thorow the Muſhward, (which is the Kings great Hall, wherin moſt of his Lords, Gentlemen, and chiefe ſort of people doe attend, when they come to Court) which none but the King himſelfe doth. Being come into the Kings preſence, his Letters of credite were receiued, with great ſhew of kindneſſe, and himſelfe entertained with all gracious reſpect, not onely at the Kings hands, but of the principalleſt men in office or fauour about the Court, and ſo for that time was diſmiſſed, the chiefeſt men attending him backe to the place where hee tooke horſe. Some fiue dayes after, Sir Anthonie Sherley comming to audience, and thinking to haue ridden in as he did before, a chaine was hung croſſe the entrance of the Muſhward, which he perceiuing onely done to hinder his paſſage, would not alight from his Horſe, but returned backe very diſcontented. This being certified to Boferes, preſently three of his chiefeſt Alkeyds were ſent to qualifie the matter. But Sir Anthonie tooke the diſgrace not as his owne, but his whoſe perſon he repreſented, telling the Alkeyds, his maſter the Emperour, was able and would requite the iniury, neither did he feare, though now within the power of Boferes, knowing the greatneſſe of him in whoſe ſeruice he was imployed, ſo farre ſurpaſſing the King of Morruecos, as maugre the proudeſt, he would be fetched from thence, and be fully reuenged of the leaſt iniury done vnto him. The three Alkeyds layd the blame vpon the Kings Porter, offering Sir Anthonie the Porters head, if he would haue it, ſo ſpending an houre to pacifie his choller, and bring him backe, the Porter before his face was ſore beaten and impriſoned, neither euer after was hee hindered of riding thorow the Muſhward.

Spaniards in loue with Sir Anthony Sherley.

His ſtate.

His affront and diſcontent.

During his abode in Morruecos, which was fiue moneths, Boferes and he had diuers priuate conferences, as it was generally thought, which way to keepe him in the Kingdome againſt his two brethren Sheck and Sidan; as alſo to giue the great Turke a blow to driue him out of Ar-

giers

His bounty to two Portugals.

giers and Tunes. From Mornecos Sir Anthonie departed with great content to himſelfe, and good liking of Boferes, of whom he bought two Portugall Gentlemen, for a hundred and fifty thouſand ounces, which amounteth to ſome ten thouſand pound ſterling. Theſe two had beene Captiues in Mornecos almoſt ſixteene yeeres, the one, ſonne to the Vice-roy of the Eaſt Indies, the other of a Noble houſe in Portugall. The firſt had his reſgat thriſe ſent for to ranſome him out of the Eaſt Indies, but twiſe it was taken by the Engliſh, once by Flemmings during our late warres with them: the other, his brethren driue him off for his reſgat, either to ſaue ſo much money, or not able to pay ſo great a fine. To accompany him from the Court to Saphie, was ſent one of the Kings Gentlemen Vſhers, to whom at his parting, he threw him his Hat which he wore from his head, with a Iewell of great value, rewarding largely all the Vſhers followers. For his Guard (the wayes being then very dangerous) was ſent downe with him, foure hundred ſhot, vnder the Command of Alkeyd Abdela Sinko, a Portugall Renegago, (which is a Chriſtian turned Moore.) This man, whether by perſwaſion, or voluntarily, deſiring to ſee his natiue Countrey, in the night gat aboard of the ſhip Sir Edwin Rich was in, not Sir Anthonies, the ſhip preſently weighing Ancher, made ſaile for Spaine, but the other remaining with S. Anthony in the Harbour.

Eſcape of a Renegago.

This dealing was taken in ill part, inſomuch that fiue of his men being ſent to ſhoare for certaine prouiſion which they lacked, were clapped vp in priſon, and ſent in chaines to Mornecos, but afterward releaſed. Sir Anthonie writing to the King, both to cleare himſelfe of the fact, and deſiring remedie for theſe his new ſuſtained grieuances, ſet a good ſhew vpon the matter, ſtaid foure dayes after the other ſhip which had carried away the Alkeyd, and would haue tarried vntill he had his fiue men againe, but that he was written vnto to be gone from an eſpeciall friend a ſhoare, aduiſing him he did not wel to ride ſo long in the Port, diuers Flemmiſh-men of war being abroad, and if any ſhould chance to come in there, as ſeldome it is without, they finding theſe two Gentlemen as prize would ſeaſe vpon them, and then was there loſt thirty fiue thouſand ounces, which a Merchants Factor had lent Sir Anthonie Sherley to cleare him out of the Countrey, for which the Factor had the two Portugals bound to pay this debt at their arriuall in Liſbon. Vpon this aduertiſement he departed, and the next day Boferes ſent him a letter, to cleare his men. And ſo I returne to the file of my continued Hiſtory.

MVley Sheck, putting his ſonne Abdela forward to the whole Command of the armie, himſelfe meaning to ſaue one, kept in Allaroca three Italian ſhips, purpoſing if matters proſpered not well, with Treaſure ſufficient to goe to Florence: but the battell not fought, his determination altered, for he preſently ſeized all ſtrangers ſhips which came either to Laratch, Salie, or other parts, as alſo ſome Merchants ſhips of Fez, robbing them of their goods, making their Mariners land their Peeces, and all the men either to ſerue him, or elſe to haue the Iron giuen them. Heereby he fitted himſelfe of Captaines and Souldiers being Engliſh, French, and Dutch, with ſeuen and twentie Peeces of Ordnance and ſhot threunto ſufficient. And ſo fired the mind of his ſonne Abdela, with hope of winning Mornecos (being of himſelfe drunken with the ambitious deſire of a Kingdome) that Abdela about the latter end of Nouember 1606. marched to Mornecos with his troupes being ſome ten thouſand horſe and foot, beſides his Chriſtian Mariners, whoſe helpe won him the field, fought ſome ſixe miles Southeaſt from Mornecos, on the eight of December, 1606. Sheck bore his ſonne company no farther then Salie, from whence three houres riding, is a Riuer called Mamora, into which Bay the Italian ſhips put in: Sheck went thither, and hard by the ſhips vpon the ſhoare pitched his Tent wherein he lay, part of his Treaſure being ſhipped, himſelfe determined there to ſtay, and expect the euent of his ſonne, if it paſſed well with him, then Africke ſhould hold him, otherwiſe to viſite the great Duke of Thuſcane, on whoſe curteſie he much reſted. But the Chriſtian Gunners ſo well obſerued their times of ſhooting and placing their Ordnance, as they got Abdela the field, hoping thereby to haue obtained both liberty, and pillage, of which moſt of them poore men failed, as afterward you ſhall read.

Abdela, by help of Engliſh and other Chriſtian Gunners, wins the field and Morocco.

When Sheck heard Abdela had got Mornecos, hee grew careleſſe to ſend prouiſion or ſupplie the wants of his three Italian ſhips, wherefore, they ſet ſayle from Mamora homewards, taking ſuch Treaſure for their pay as were in their cuſtodies. Boſeres loſt in this battayle about ſixe hundred men, fled into the Citie to ſaue his Treaſure and his women, but for feare of being ſurprized, durſt not tarry to take his Treaſure away with him, but in all haſte poſted toward the Mountaynes, willing the Alkeids and chiefeſt men of his Court to bring it after him, with the rich Sword, the like whereof is not in the World: committing alſo to their conduct his Daughter, and the choyſeſt of his women, amongſt whom was the Wife of Ben Waſh the Kings Merchant. At the entry of the hils, a Kindred of the Larbies being fiue hundred Horſe-men, ſeized vpon theſe people, pillaged their Carriages, rifled and diſhonoured the women, not ſparing Boferes Daughter, (whom Abdela determined to haue marryed, but hearing diuers Moores to haue lyen with her, and alſo that ſhe was ſuſpected to haue liued in Inceſt with her Father; after his entrance into Moruecos, he neuer enquired farther after her. The Alkeids beeing well mounted by the ſwiftneſſe of their Horſes, returned backe to Moruecos, and there tooke Sanctuary. Abdela vpon their ſubmiſſion promiſed them pardon, on whoſe Princely word they relying, came forth, the Foker of the place preſenting them: But Muley Abdela, whether incited by enuious counſell, or on his owne bloudy minde, putteth them ſo ſecretly to death, that ſending all their heads in one Sacke to Fez, for a Preſent to his Father, Their deaths was not fully knowne in the Citie of Moruecos, before their heads were ſet vpon Fez gates. Here was the end of Baſha Iudar a great Souldier in old Hamets time, a faithfull Commander during his life to Boſeres, accompanyed with Sedie Gowie, Alkeid Azus his Sonne, Alkeid Moden the Caſſemie, and ſome foure great men more.

Abdelas perfidy

This tyranny of Abdela ſhewed vpon theſe valiant and worthy men; and the ſpoyle which the Fezees had made aſwell in robbing the Alkeids houſes, as in rifling the Citizens goods, and committing all out-rages which follow Warre, cauſed many to flye to Muley Sidan, and the reſt which remayned in Moruecos grew diſcontented, ſo that the Sunne-ſhine of Abdelas happineſſe ſcarce laſted two monethes: for Sidan reſting in the halfe way betweene Moruecos and Fez, taking oportunitie of this vproare of the Towneſmen, marched toward Moruecos on the North-ſide of the Towne, determining to giue preſent battayle, hearing by the Scowts, that Muley Abdela his Campe was lodged in the great Garden or Orchard called the Almowetto, being ſome two Engliſh miles about. The firſt night of Sidans approach, the Priſoners were releaſed, and Priſons broken open, ſo that theſe men getting libertie, ranne halfe madde vp and downe the Citie, crying, Long liue Sidan, which troubled the Citizens not a little: And in this vproare, Sidans Faction let into the Citie (at a ſecret gate) many of his Souldiers, which made a Sally vpon the Regiment of Zalee, meaning to haue ſurprized Abdelas Campe, but himſelfe comming to the reſcue with two thouſand men, continued a hot Skirmiſh againſt the Sidanians, in which the Chriſtians fought valiantly to recouer their Peeces of Artillery which were loſt, vntill the Sidanians were forced to retyre. The next day beeing the fiue and twentieth of Aprill, Stilo nouo, Abdela remooued towards Muley Sidan, who was encamped on the North-ſide of the Citie, not daring to come on the South-ſide, for feare of the ſhot which galled his men from the Battlements of the Kings Houſe. Therefore he hearing of Abdelas remoue, and intending to venture his fortune vpon a preſent battayle, ſet forward to meet him with a Regiment of his beſt Horſe: Abdela perceiuing this, cauſed his Canoniers to march formoſt, which could but place fiue Peeces of their Artillery in a breſt, becauſe the Orchards and Gardens made the paſſages very narrow and ſtrait; where as the Armies ſhould meete, Sidans Horſe-men gaue a very gallant charge, but the Canoniers made them retyre: Which Abdelas Horſe-men perceiuing, being encouraged, and too eager of the Chaſe, ſome thouſand Horſe galloped before their owne Ordnance, and followed their Enemie cloſe to Sidans Campe, their Peeces of Artillery being drawne after them. Muley Sidan well knowing the aduantage of the place, ſeeing his Enemies depriued of the benefit of their great Ordnance, which he moſt feared, encouraged his men to keepe their ground, and bringing with his owne perſon freſh ſupplyes to ſecond them, gaue his Aduerſaries the Abdelians ſo hot a charge, that they were fayne to retyre in great diſorder, vpon the mouthes of their owne Artillery. This diſ-array perceiued by the Chriſtian Gunners, it put them in minde to diſcharge vpon their owne men the Abdelians, holding it better to kill fiue or ſixe hundred of their owne ſide, then to loſe the battayle. But the Moore, who was Captayne ouer the Canoniers and other Commanders, would not ſuffer it: Wherefore the Sidanians following in good order, and very cloſe, fell to the execution with their Swords, ſurprized the Artillery, and ſlue the men. The ſlaughter continued ſome foure houres, betwixt ſeuen or eight thouſand killed, and few to ſpeake on left aliue, for what the Souldiers ſpared, the Citizens in reuenge of their Diſorders, Pillages, and Villanies done to their women, bereaued them of their liues, who beeing dead were not ſuffered to bee buryed, but lay aboue the ground as a prey to the Dogges and Fowles of the Ayre. Heauie likewiſe was the Conquerours hand vpon the Chriſtians which tooke Abdelas part, moſt of them for their fiue monethes ſeruice to Abdela, were either ſlayne in the fury of battayle, or after had his throat cut. was the end of them, who had liued in the Streights of Gibraltar, and the Mediterranean Sea, not as Merchants by honeſt Trading, but hauing committed ſpoyle vpon diuers Sea-faring men, felt the bloudie hand of a barbarous Nation, (as a deſerued puniſhment ſent from God) to execute Iuſtice for their manifold committed wrongs and out-rages.

Sidan Maſter of the field, and Moroco or Moruecos.
The Kings Houſe a Caſtle

This battayle being loſt with the greateſt bloud-ſhed that any hath beene ſince theſe Warres beganne, Muley Abdela fled to Fez, a hundred perſons of his whole Army not left aliue to beare him company: And Sidan Maſter of the field, entred the Citie of Moruecos, hauing another taske to take in hand ere he could ſettle himſelfe quietly in his owne Neſt. For the Kings Houſe being Caſtle-wiſe builded, and ſeuered from the Citie with a defencible and a ſtrong wall, lacking no kind of Munition for the defence thereof, had within it, beſides Souldiers of Moruecos, three thouſand Fezees who were not at the laſt battayle, but left there to guard the place for Abdela.

Sanctuary taken in the Great Church belonging to the Kings Houſe.

Theſe preſuming on their owne valour and ſtrength of the place, denyed to render it vpon any termes to Sidan, though they were ſollicited, during the ſpace of two dayes, by all faire meanes thereunto: Sidan bringing his Artillery to the wals, yet delayed, as loth to deface a building ſo ſtrong, coſtly, and beautifull; So that in the meane time a Captaine whoſe houſe ioyned to the wall by ſtealth with fiue hundred men, ſcaled and wonne the top of the wall, crying, Victory for Muley Sidan, which ſo amazed the Souldiers within, thinking the Forces which were entered farre greater then they were, without more adoe or offering to reſiſt, they tooke Sanctuary in the great Church belonging to the Kings Houſe, euery man with his Peece and Furniture about him.

Perfidious crueltie.

Muley Sidan vpon this, ſent Baſha Seleman, willing them to deliuer vp their Armes, with promiſe they ſhould bee pardoned, which preſently they did, yeelding and deliuering both Swords and Peeces. Thus diſarmed, they, ſilly ſoules came forth, when preſently after, meſſage came from the King to butcher and cut the throats of them all, which was executed. A pittifull matter in my iudgement, ſo many men yeelding vpon good compoſition, after fury of battayle, vpon cold bloud to bee made ſo pittifull a ſpectacle: it was bootleſſe for them to alleage eyther Law or reaſon in defence of their liues; ſuch is the miſery and ſlauery of that people, whoſe goods and liues lyeth alwayes in the will of the King, eyther to ſaue, or deſtroy at his pleaſure.

Famine followeth Warre, as that the Peſtilence.

Faithleſſe butcherie.

Now is Sidan ſetled in Moruecos but ſcarce ſecure, for the chiefeſt men in the Citie wiſhed an alteration, becauſe their King to get their money and wealth to maintayne his owne eſtate, beganne to picke quarrels with them, making ſome who began to ſpeake and repine at his doings, loſe their heads, Quoniam Canis mortuus non latrat: The common people whoſe naturall condition is alwayes to deſire Nouelties, wiſhed for a new King, feeling his oppreſſion, and the Famine whereof many dyed, grew careleſſe of peace, thinking euery change would bring a remedie, when indeed it was like the Inciſion of an vnskilfull Surgeon, not curing the Malady, but making the wound wider, Gangrened, and incurable. Sidan purpoſing to purge this male-contented humour of the Commonalty, rayſed an Army of twelue thouſand Foot, and ſixe thouſand Horſe, determining to take Fez. The chiefe men of command ouer this Army, were theſe, Baſha Muſtepha, Alkeid Hamet Benbreham, Alkeid Ally Tabila, Alkeid Gago, and Alkeid Hadoe Tobib, with diuers others: Muley Sidan not going in perſon with this Army, leaſt in his abſence Moruecos the Seat of the Empire ſhould reuolt. Muley Sheck hearing theſe newes, went to Allarocha, there tooke a great Flemmiſh ſhip from the Merchants, with all the goods in her, therein ſhipping his Treaſure, determining to runne away, if his Sonne Abdela ſhould loſe Fez. Abdela omitted no time to gather new Forces, ſo that in ſmall time he thought himſelfe ſufficient to meete the Sidanians in open field, and ſo he did neere to Mickanes, where the people on Sidans part, miſſing their King in the field, or any one of the Bloud Royall refuſed to fight, and in ſtead of ſtriking, fell to parley; That if Abdela would pardon them, they would yeeld, and ſo they did, yet moſt of them ranne away, except three thouſand Morruekyns, who preſuming vpon Abdelas gentle nature, ſtayd with him, hoping kind entertaynment into his pay, in ſtead whereof, Muley Abdela commanded all their throats to be cut, granting them onely this fauour: firſt, to be ſtripped for fowling their clothes.

Thirty or forty Engliſhmen Canoniers, taken by Abdela.

Thus we may ſee, mercileſſe Sidan butcher poore ſoules at Moruecos, pittileſſe Abdela murder theſe vnfortunate ſlaues at Mickanes, both verifying the old Prouerbe, Quicquid delirant Reges, plectuntur Achimi. In this battayle were taken betwixt thirtie and fortie Engliſhmen, who ſerued Muley Sidan as Canoniers, yet not any of that company which ſerued Abdela at Moruecos, when he loſt the Citie and field, but other Voluntaries, part of theſe fled with the bodie of the Army backe to Moruecos, part were taken, whom Abdela ſpared, as well in regard of former ſeruices the Nation had done him, as alſo for the preſent vſe he was to employ them in. This Expedition of Sidans comming to ſo vnlooked a diſaſter, made him ſend forth his Commanders with diuers companyes, to the Alarbies, for freſh ſupply of Men and Treaſure: amongſt which as Chiefe was diſpeeded Baſha Seleman, Maſter of the old Kings Horſe for Tafilet, there to gouerne the Countrey, carrying with him ſome fifteene hundred Shot, of which ſixe hundred were Shraceis, people of the King of Chaus, or Concoes Countrie, who hath alwaies warres with Algers or Argiers. Theſe Shraceis were borne in the Mountaines at Atlas, being of a fierce and bloody nature, not reſpecting the Turkes might or gouernment, no more then the Mountainers of Moruecos, will acknowledge the Soueraigntie of the Barbarian. Some twelue hundred of theſe had Sidan in his pay, halfe part whereof he kept at Moruecos, the other was ſent with Solyman. Theſe amongſt themſelues fell into a muteny, neither for want of pay, or ill vſage, but in deſire to doe a miſchiefe, by force cut off the Baſhaes head, carrying it with them as a Trophy of their victorie, and a fit preſent to win Abdelas fauour, who was then at Fez, whither they went for intertainement, Sidan herewith moued, made Proclamation, that for three moneths what Shracee ſoeuer, Souldier, or any other, were to be found in Moruecos, or elſwhere in his Dominions, ſhould be put to the Sword, and to haue it better & more fully executed, it was proclaimed, that the Man-killer ſhould haue the goods of the Shracee ſo killed. Many rich men of this Nation or Kindred reſiant in Moruecos, felt the furie of the Sword, for the folly and foule fault of their Tribe: ſuch as could get packing, ran away: others of the better ſort, their friends hid them in their houſes, vntill Sidan ſcared with newes of Abdelas comming towards him, proclaimed generall pardon for the remainder left aliue, and free paſſage of trading or cōmerce for any Shracee, which would venture to Mornecos. Yet few durſt come vpon theſe goodly termes, or thoſe who lay hid in Moruecos, if they were worth any thing, ſhew themſelues in publike, for feare this were a pretence to bring the reſidue vnto the halter. Thoſe Shracees who were ſole cauſers of this maſſacre, being with Abdela at Fez, daily moued him to goe towards Moruecos, vowing euerie man to die in his cauſe, and for reuenge of their Wiues, Children, and Friends, who had ſmarted for their ſakes. Abdela ſomething animated with their offers, yet delayed, knowing his Forces farre inferior vnto Sidans, vntill ſtill vrged by the Shracee; which had brought from the Mountaines ſome ſtore of their Kindred, very able and reſolute men to his aide, he ſet forwards about the latter end of Auguſt, towards Moruecos, determining to giue battell once more to Muley Sidan. Of what ſtrength Abdelas Armie conſiſted, the certaintie is not knowne, but geſſed to bee very neere fifteene thouſand Horſe and Foote.

Their treacherie.

Bloudy decree.

Muley Sidan was very ſtrong, for beſide his owne Souldiers, the Moruecans aided him with eight thouſand men, and diuers tribes ſent ſupplies to augment his forces. He had two hundred Engliſh, the moſt of them voluntaries, ſixtie field Pieces, with ſufficient Shot and Powder. Ouer the Engliſh and all the Chriſtians, was Generall Captaine Iohn Giffard, a Gentleman of a worthy ſpirit, and diſcended from the ancient and honourable ſtem of the Giffards in Buckingham-ſhire. Vpon his firſt entertainement and welcome into the Country, Sidan beſtowed vpon him a rich Sword, valued at a thouſand Marks, and a Scarlet Cloake, richly imbroidered with Pearle, ſent as a preſent to Muley Hamet, the Kings Father, from our late Soueraigne of famous memorie Queene Elizabeth, beſides many other extraordinarie fauours of good value; and often conuerſing familiarly; yea, ſometimes viſiting Captaine Giffard at his owne Tent. His entertainement was twentie fiue ſhillings per diem, beſides many ſupplies proceeding from the Kings bountie. With him as ſecondary men in charge, was one Maſter Philip Giffard, his neere and very deare Kinſman; Captaine Iaques, a very valiant Souldier; Captaine Smith, one of the moſt exquiſite Enginers in Europe; Captaine Baker, an ancient Britaine Souldier; Captaine Tailer, Captaine Faukes, Captaine Chambers, Captaine Iſack, men euery way able to vndergoe their ſeuerall commands. Theſe were daily ſtipendaries, at twelue ſhillings a man, except the two Sea Captaines, Iſack, and Chambers, who had foure ſhillings a day, and euerie common Souldier twelue pence truly payd them. Theſe preparations conſidered, Muley Sidan had ſmall reaſon to leaue the field, or feare Abdelas forces, being nothing in reſpect of his. But certaine it is, the Muley ſending for his Wizzards, Soothſayers, willing them to for tell, that he might foreknow the ſucceſſe of his embattailed Armie. Their anſwere was; He ſhould looſe the battell, bee driuen into Sus, within fiue moneths ſhould regaine Moruecos, and there during life enioy the Kingdome. Vpon this anſwere, the Muley giuing great credit thereunto, as the nature of a Barbarian is very ſuſpicious, commanded Baſha Muſtepha; with three thouſand Souldiers to conuey away his Mother, Wiues and Children. To Alkeid Hamet Benbreham and Hado Tahib, hee commended the charge of his Treaſure, who laded ſixtie Mules with Gold, garding them and the Muleters, with two thouſand of his choyſeſt Shot.

The battell.

Theſe diſpeeded, it may appeare Sidan but houered, and would follow; yet the battels met the 26 of Nouember, 1607. ſome ſixteene miles from the Citie of Moruecos, the Canoniers of Muley Sidan, part hauing in the forefront diſcharged, their Enemies being ſomewhat farre off; but before they could charge againe, the Enemie was with them. The Shracies did not once diſcharge a Piece, great nor ſmall, but ioyning themſelues cloſe to the Abdelians, charged the Sidanians very fiercely with their Sables, in reuenge of Sidans tyrannie ſhewed vpon their Kindred, enraging their minds and courages, or their faithfull promiſe (which they ſought to make good) to Abdela, made them put the Sidanians to flight: or elſe it was Sidans feare, that hee ſhould not make good his Soothſayers Prophecie, which made his men to runne away: For at the firſt encounter, his Moores fell into a diſ-array, and preſently into a diſhonorable flight: whereupon Muley Sidan fled, ſent to the Engliſh Captaines to be gone, and to Captaine Giffard a good Horſe to ſaue himſelfe. The Engliſh returned word, that they came not thither to run, but rather die an honourable death. Captaine Giffard encouraged his men, telling them, there was no hope of victorie, but to prepare and die like men, like Engliſh men: and then asking for his Iaques, whom he loued dearely, and taking a Pike in his hand, thought to haue rode vnto him, being told hee was not ſixeſcore from him, and to haue died together; but in the way, Captaine Giffard being charged by eight Abdelians, one behind him ſhot him thorow, and ſo was he there ſlaine. Few of all the Engliſh Nation were left aliue, the number not exceeding thirtie, and none of the Commanders eſcaped, except Captaine Iſack, and Captaine Faukes; of the Moores were not ſlaine in all fortie perſons.

Abdela ſecond time Maſter of Moruecos.

Sbracies depart.

Sidan being gone, as loath to tarry, ſpend bloud, and win a Field, Abdela got the ground, his Enemies marched vpon, but no great victory, entred Morruecos without applauſe, or reioyce of the Citizens, ſome yet feeling his late done iniuries, ſorie for the loſſe of Sidan, who had proued a Tyrant, nor welcomming Abdela vpon hope of amendment, but with policie and patience fitted themſelues to the miſerie of the time. Abdela once againe Maſter of Moruecos, got the Kings Houſe, but found no treaſure to relieue his wants. Great were his promiſes to reward the Sbracies with bountie, and enrich his followers, when the Citie was recouered: now hee hauing it, there failed of his expectation, and his Souldiers lacking both meate and money: yet to keepe them ſtill in hope, and ſo in gouernment, it was bruited, the young King had found a Well full of treaſure within the Houſe, which Muley Hamet Xarif had layed vp for a deare yeare: but this good newes quickly vaniſhed, the Well not yeelding water to refreſh their fainting ſtomacks Therfore the Sbracies hauing releaſed their Kindred, recouered their Wiues and Children, which had eſcaped the fury and bloudie Decree of Sidan the laſt King, they tooke good words and kind vſages of Abdela, in lieu of payment, ſeeing Moruecos neither affoorded them meate, nor Abdelas fortune further maintenance, and ſo three thouſand of them departed at one time. Muley Abdela with the reſidue of his forces kept Moruecos, laboring by all poſſible meanes to giue his ſouldiers content, and keepe them together; ſo with much adoe hee liued in Moruecos ſome two moneths, during which time, Muley Sidan was gathering a freſh Army in Sus.

Muley Hamet Boſonne.

BVt whileſt Abdela and Sidan were contriuing their owne ends, there aroſe a ſtorme in the Mountaines which fell in the Plaines of Moruecos. The tempeſt driuer was one Muley Hamet Boſonne, Couſin to the three Brethren which haue ſtriuen for the Kingdome. This man gathering treaſure, and temporiſing with them all three, ſo played their Game, that finding their weakeneſſe which theſe quarrels had brought them vnto, vpon a ſudden ſeeing his time, went into the Mountaines to his Mothers Kindred, muſtered verie neere twenty thouſand able men. The Muley being well prouided of treaſure, gaue them due pay and large, winning them to his reſpect and ſeruice, ſo that in leſſe then two moneths ſpace, he got all things in readineſſe, deſcended from the Teſſeuon Mountaines towards Moruecos.

Fond feare.

How vaine is man? a fearefull armie of men.

This newes brought to Abdela was very vnwelcome, yet (calling his wits and Counſell together) it was concluded, conſidering the Sbracees were gone, his remnant of Souldiers feeble and out of heart, and the Mornecans daily fled to Hamet Boſonne, whoſe vpriſing like a blazing Star drew their eyes vpon him, that Abdela ſhould trauell to Fez, which hee might well doe without a guide, hauing heretofore vpon like neceſſities, often meaſured the miles: and though hee was determined ſo to do, yet a ſmal occaſion haſtned his iourney, for ſome mile from Abdelas Campe, vpon a Hill on the back-ſide of Moruecos, a man being ſeene with a Speare in his hand, and a white linnen vpon it as a Flagge. Abdela thought Hamet Boſonne to be with his whole Forces behind the Hill, when he was a full dayes march from Moruecos. Therfore in all haſte he tooke vp ſome of his Tents, but the greater part left ſtanding in a manner, being feared, ran away. And afterward when this matter was diſcouered, which Abdela held a token of his ſurpriſe, it was nothing els but a poore Moore waſhing his Napery, and for the ſpeedier drying vſed this meanes, which terrified Abdela from the ſeate of his Empire, to Fez, the ſafeſt place for his abode.

Lylla Iſba, Sidans Mother, hearing of Hamet Boſonnes approch, was perſwaded, his mouements were onely to defend her Sonnes right, knowing Boſonne of late fauoured Sidans title, comming into his pay, and in perſon ſeruing the Muley at the laſt battaile when Sidan fled into Sus. Heereupon ſhe ſent diuers Captaines, part of her owne Guard, others of her friends and kindred to his ayd, thinking he would haue taken Moruecos for Sidan. But Boſonne hauing entred the Citie peaceably, proclaimed himſelfe King, diſmiſſed all Sidans fauourers, which were not wilto be his ſeruants, who returned to their Lady Miſtreſſe, certifying her error and their ſucceſſe: his Treaſure he imparted largely to his followers, by ſtrong hand deſired no mans ſeruice, but thoſe who were willing. Some thirty Engliſh-men remayning, weary of their ſuſtained meſery, and the ſtate of the Countrey, he gaue them licence to imbarke, and writ to the Gouernour of Saphia to giue them their paſſe, notice whereof being giuen to the Factor Marine for the Engliſh, he diſparted them into diuers ſhips with all conueniency, though to his coſt and charges; charity to helpe the diſtreſſed ſoules, and loue to his natiue Countrey, moouing him thereunto. This Muley Hamet Boſonne, during the time of his gouernment was a very good and iuſt man, offered no diſcourteſie, or tooke away any mans goods, but paid the Merchants truely for the ſame, who liked well his current and true dealing.

Boſonne proclaimed King.

Boſonnes mother hearing her ſonne was ſetled in Moruecos, brought what ſtrength ſhe could from the Mountaines, and in her way knowing Boſeres lodged in a fortreſſe, whereunto hee was fled, not to bee well guarded, ſhe beſet the houſe, meaning to take the Muley priſoner, who being void of meanes to reſiſt in the night, made a hole through the wall and ſo eſcaped priuately to Salie, a Port Towne within the iuriſdiction of his brother Sheck, where at this day he remaineth.

On the morrow betimes, Boſonnes mother with her men entered the Fort, miſſing Boſeres, cut off the head of Vmſed Benbela, one of his chiefeſt ſeruants and Commanders: then went ſhe forward to congratulate her ſonnes comming to the Kingdome, being then in Moruecos. But an Empire ill got, is ſeldome ſeene of long continuance, for within leſſe then two moneths, Muley Sidan came out of Sus with a great armie, for whoſe ayd Lylla Iſha ſold her Iewels, and Plate, to furniſh her ſon with Swords, Pikes, Horſemen, Staues, and other Warl-like Munition.

Boſeres beſieged: his eſcape and pouertie.

On the other ſide Hamet Boſonne prepared to welcome his couſin the Muley Sidan; ſo about the beginning of Aprill, 1608. both their Forces met hard by Moruecos where a chiefe of a kinred one Gruſe, which came out of Sus, a great wine drinker, alwayes a fauourer of Muley Sidan (though little valuing any of the three Kings) preſuming vpon his owne ſtrength and valour, deſired the honour, that hee might giue charge vpon the enemy with fiue hundred Horſe, which was his owne Regiment, and of his owne kindred: Sidan refuſed to grant him his requeſt, therefore the Caſima tooke his owne leaue and gaue the enemy a full charge vpon the body of his armie, which receiuing him very brauely, the Caſima and his company were in great danger to be ouerthrowne: but Sidan to releeue him, ſent fiue hundred Horſe-men of his own: ſo with theſe thouſand, the Caſima broke the ranks of Boſonnes battalions, then with their ſables fell to execution, vntill the whole campe ſeeing the field loſt, fled towards the Mountaines: thus Sidan without further reſiſtance entering Moruecos; reſting there in quiet three moneths, vntill Hamet Boſon recouering new Forces in Iuly following, preſented himſelfe before the Citie, truſting aſwel vpon his own ſtrength, as the loue of the Citizens: hoping his good and gentle vſage when he was amongſt them, would haue bred a liking in them, of his mild and gentle gouernment: but either the ſeruile mind of the multitude little reſpected his fore-paſſed kindnes, or the feare of Sidan made them loath to ſhew any ſigne of good will; for at his approach no man in the Citie was knowne to draw a ſword in his defence. So on the eight of Iuly, Boſonne was diſcomfited with the loſſe of ſome thouſand men, fled to the Mountaines, where within foure dayes after Alkeid Azus got him poyſoned, hoping thereby to win the fauour of Muley Sidan, Boſonne poiſoned.

This Azus is aged and ſubtill, by his long experience beſt knoweth the ſecrets of that ſtate, was brought vp vnder Abdela, Muley Hamet Xarifs brother, and for his Counſell to Abdela, willing him either to put out the eyes of Hamet Xarif, or cut his throat, was in danger to haue loſt his life when Hamet Xarif came to be King, but the wiſedome of the man won ſuch reſpect with Hamet, that of a priſoner, he made him his chiefeſt Counſellor, and Maſter of his Treaſurie, during whoſe life time his behauiour was ſuch, as he won great loue among the Commons, Nobility, and many of the blood Royall. When old Hamet died, he was in his Campe neere Fez, and after his death reſted all his loue vpon Muley Sidan (holding him the prime man and fitteſt of the three brethren, to rule the Kingdome) vntill both he and Sidy Imbark could not counſell and rule Muley Sidan, for his owne good and benefit of the Common-weale being head-ſtrong, and would take no mans counſell but to his owne liking and hurt. Therefore Sedy Abdela Imbark went to his contemplation at Aca: And Azus to a Caſtle in the Mountaines, which he had ſtored with Treaſure againſt a ſtorme, or to refreſh the winter of his age, from whence he will not come downe, vntill he ſee ſome hope of peace, hauing at this inſtant more Treaſure in his Coffers, then all the three brethren beſides, and hopeth to keepe it, being in the midſt of his friends and kindred, and in a place as well fortified as any in Barbary.

Alkeid Azus.

Iohn Etina.

Muley Sheck fearefull leſt Sidans next enterpriſe would be to rowze him out of Fez, fell in conference with an Italian Merchant, named Iohn Etina, making him his Agent to go into Spain, there to conclude, that if the Catholique King would ayde him with men and money to recouer his right, there ſhould be deliuered vp into his hands, Allaroche, Saly, Alcaſar, and other Townes lying fit for his mouth: This negotiation was well entertained. And Iohn Etina was promiſed for his labour in this buſineſſe, and bringing it to effect, vpon the deliuerie of the Port Townes, to haue yeerely paid him two thouſand Duckats during his life. In Iune, this matter was firſt mooued; in the latter end of Auguſt, ſeuen Gallions (as was reported) and the Gallies of Naples, in all a hundred ſayle, well manned with ſtore of Pioners to rayſe Forts, went to Allaroche, thinking to be receiued, but thirty thouſand Alarbees came downe to the ſhoare, not alowing any ſuch neighbour-hood, though they hold the Andeluſian halfe their blood.

Sir Anthony Sherleyes preferment.

Whether Sir Anthony Sherley was imployed in this ſeruice it is not certainly knowen: ſome are of opinion that hee was induced thereunto, becauſe they haue formerly heard the King of Spaine hath royally rewarded him for his trauailes with Boferes, by giuing him the places and pay of two Captaines in the Indies, made him Admirall of the Leuant Seas, and next in place to the Vice-roy of Naples, hauing for his entertainement fiue hundred Duckats a moneth. Without queſtion, he knoweth well the ſtate of that vnciuill and barbarous Nation, hauing an apprehending and admirable wit to conceiue the diſpoſition of any people with whom hee ſhall conuerſe, whileſt he was amongſt them, he behaued himſelfe very well toward the better ſort, winning credite with them, and gaining the loue of the poorer ſort exceedingly, by his larges (for if a Moore or ſlaue gaue him but a diſh of Dates, he ſhould receiue a reward as from an Emperour) and howſoeuer ſome may hold this a vice, counting him a lauiſher: yet by this meanes he came to the knowledge of that which otherwiſe he neuer ſhould haue attained vnto, The more credible fame is, Sir Anthonie was not with this Fleet, therefore they ſped neuer the better, for had he beene in company, and had command, he would either haue taken footing, or ventered all, ſcorning to returne with doing nothing, and ſo be laughed at.

The Author added a diſcourſe alſo of their Religion: but I omit it and referre the Reader to my Pilgrimage, and proceed to the reports of their Policie.

The Policie of Barbarie.

EVery Kingdome conſiſteth of men, not of buildings, therefore the Kingdome of Barbary conſiſteth of bond and free men: the naturall bond men are ſuch as are deſcended either from Chriſtians or Negros; the free men are Larbies or Brebers, which may be termed the Valley and Mountaine men. Ouer all, as abſolute Monarch is the King, who maintaineth his ſeat by the ſword, and power of Iuſtice: the ſword men according to their degrees are thus placed.

Firſt, the Muleis, are the Kings children, and all other who are of the blood Royall, are termed by this name. Secondly, Baſhas, are Captaine Generals ouer armies. Thirdly, Alkeids be the Lords, ſet aſwell ouer Garriſon Townes as Countreys, to rule and keepe the people in ſubiection. Fourthly, Ferres, Gentlemen who carrie armes, yet leſſe Commanders then Alkeids. Fiftly, Babaia, Lieutenant to an Alkeid. Sixtly, Brakbaſhi, a Sergeant at armes. Seuenthly, Debuſhi, a Captaine ouer thirty. Eightly, Romie, the common Souldier of theſe men of warre, there were kept in daily pay in the old Kings time, to the number of fifty thouſand Horſemen: part ſeruing with the Launce, others with the Speare called Spahaias, and ſome, eſpecially the Horſemen of Fez, ſerue with the Croſſe-bow on Horſe-backe, bending it as they ride, ſhooting a ſtrong ſhot and ſure: and ſixteene thouſand foot-men, the Alarbies being fitter for the Horſemen, but the Brebers the ſtronger footmen, moſt of them ſhot.

The chiefeſt men of Command in the latter times, were theſe.

FIrſt, Alkeid Azus, chiefe Counſellor of State. Secondly, Hamet ben Breham Seſiani, Maſter of the Horſe, and ruler ouer the Alkeids. Thirdly, Sedi Hamet ben Bouker. Fourthly, Sedi Abdela Wahad Anoune: Theſe two were Treaſurers. Fiftly, Alkeid Hamet, a Capatbo or Eunuchs, Gouernour ouer the women and Eunuches. Sixtly, Alkeid Muſtepha File Maſter of the Ordnance. Seuenthly, Riſhauan, Admirall ouer the Gallies at Saly.

Note, though theſe be enobled, taking priority or precedency before others, yet is not this nobleneſſe hereditary, for the children of theſe men muſt claime no honour by birth-right, but what they get by their ſeruice and honour of their ſword, liue vnreſpected vnleſſe they be valiant, and ſo proouing, the King will take them into his ſeruice, whereupon by deſert, the ſonne may obtaine his fathers fortune and honour.

Shecks of Families or Tribes.

There is another title of dignity termed Sheck, attributed to the chiefe man of euery Family or Caſt, neither doth the Kings eldeſt ſonne ſcorne the title, ſignifying that he is the prime or beſt blood of his Royall kindred. Theſe Shecks are much reſpected, becauſe it is the nature of the people, the whole kindred to follow their head: inſomuch, as one of theſe Shecks can bring into the field ten thouſand Horſemen of their owne Caſt, or kindred, and ſome more. So that it is a matter of great conſequence, the King to haue an eye ouer ſuch a man, and know how his affection reſteth towards him, either in loue or hatred.

Execution of Iuſtice.

The King once in a moneth, on Fridayes in the afternoone after prayers, either in his houſe or Church ſitteth to doe Iuſtice, hearing complaints or appeales from ſubalterne Miniſters, from whom the grieued perſons doe appeale to his Royall perſon: when the King ſitteth, the ſtranger ſhall haue freer acceſſe to plead his cauſe before the King, then his owne borne ſubiect.

All inferiour Iudges and Miniſters are their Church-men or Talbies, and thoſe are ſooneſt choſen into offices which are of ſtrickteſt life, being free from auarice, and ſuch other ſinnes as may peruert and hinder the courſe of equitie and iuſtice. The chiefeſt man for iudgement vnder the King is Muſtie, to whom the party grieued may appeale from any other ordinary Iudge. There be three of theſe men, one in Moruecos, another in Fez, the third at Taradant in Sus. The Muſtie of Moruecos, ſitteth with the King in Iudgement, and euery Friday in the afternoone by himſelfe, to heare and determine cauſes of the ſubiect and ſtranger, though hee bee in eminent place, he is a poore man, in reſpect what he might be, if he would ſell Iuſtice, and take bribes.

Three Muſtiis.

Ordinary Iudges.

The ordinary Iudge ſitteth all the yeere long two houres before noone, and two houres after noone: in euery great Towne throughout the three Kingdomes in places one of theſe Iudges, to whom not onely the Inhabitants of euery Towne and Citie doe repaire, but the Countrey people or Larbees vpon differences come thither to haue their cauſes decided: euery one muſt tell his owne tale, and plead his owne matter. When both parties haue ſpoken, then giueth the Iudge ſentence; ſo that in one day the cauſe is brought into Court, and the ſame day ended. If either part haue witneſſe to produce, then the Iudge giueth three dayes reſpite to bring them in, which being brought, the aduerſe party ſhall haue other three dayes reſpite to diſproue them. And if he can prooue the witneſſes either infamous in manners, or giuen to deteſtable ſinne, as drunkenneſſe, adultery, or ſuch like: And can prooue the witnes ſaith not his prayers ſixe times duely in foure and twenty houres, then ſhal he be vtterly diſabled to beare witneſſe, and thus in ſeuen dayes the longeſt ſute ſhall be ended. If an Obligation or rather Bill of debt be brought into Court, the Obligee muſt either pay the debt, goe to priſon, or to pawne the value of the debt, or better: which pawne may be kept in Depoſito nine dayes vpon great reaſon, to ſee if the debtor can redeeme it at the nine dayes end, if he doth it not, then is it ſold, and the party who ſhould pay the money, muſt ſuſtaine the loſſe.

Their manner of iudicature.

Allegations againſt witneſſes.

Debts.

Coadiutors to the Iudges.

As Coadiutors to theſe Iudges, and next in place to them be the Scriuanos, who vpon death or other remooue, are commonly made Iudges. Theſe are Talbies which make writings betweene partie and partie, ſhort and plaine, without multiplication of words, and they are of opinion, Abundans cautela nocet: in their Obligatory Bils they put neither Forfeit nor Condition, hauing for the making thereof two pence Engliſh, and no more. They vſe no long draughts in matters of purchaſe, or theſe tripartite Indentures, with ſuch large and long implicite and explicite Couenants, but thus the people deale in matters of Contracts and Bargaines. I buy of you a Vineyard, Houſe, Merchandize, at ſuch a price, to be paid at ſuch a time, calling two honeſt men, whereof one ſhall be a Talbie, if I can get him, to witneſſe this our Bargaine. We foure goe to the Scriuener, who likewiſe is a Talbie, and haue this ſet downe in writing, and if our bargaine be for twenty thouſand pounds, it is ſet downe in ten lines, and the Iuſtice of the Countrey will allow me my bargaine with as great reaſon, as if I had a great ingroſſed Booke of Conueyance, as big as the Map of the whole world in the neweſt Edition.

Manner of Contracts.

Steryes or Officers of the Court.

Next in this nature to theſe, be the Steryes, which haue ſmal Fees to ſee the execution of Law an ſentence of the Iudge fulfilled; theſe likewiſe fetch men to anſwere their Aduerſary, which would delay, and not come before the Iudge, eyther vpon peruerſeneſſe, or badneſſe of their plea, or any other cauſe whatſoeuer. Wherefore to bee alwayes ready, theſe are continually attendant in the Houſe of the Iudge, and wayting vpon him whetherſoeuer he goeth.

Muttiſeb.

Muttiſeb, is an Officer to ſee true Weights and Meaſures; if any bee faultie, all the Wares in ſuch a mans ſhop hee giueth to the poore, the party proclaymed an vniuſt man, and ſore whipped.

Hackam.

The Hackam, is the Lord Marſhall in euery City, who iudgeth vpon life and death, aſſoone as the party Delinquent is taken, and his offence proued, preſently his throat is cut: Murder there is death, ſo is manifeſt Theft, Adultery, likewiſe proued by very good witneſſe: And ſomtimes it is death for any man to weare a Sword who is not an Officer, yea, though hee bee a Souldier. Other offences according to the neceſſitie of the time and pleaſure of the King, by Proclamation are made death, which the Hackam muſt ſee executed vpon loſſe of his owne head.

Muckadens.

Muckadens, be Snbſtitutes to the Hackam, ſeeing his iudgement fulfilled, and in his abſence hath his authortie.

Fokers.

Fokers or Saints, dwell in the beſt places of the Countrey, keepe great Hoſpitality for all Trauellers, whither any man come for a night, and be gone in the morning: much good theſe doe in the Countrey by their example of morall liuing, and beſtowing their owne goods in their life time to helpe the needy and diſtreſſed, comprimiſing differences betwixt parties, and repreſſing all diſorders, winning great loue and reſpect, for their Houſes are held Sanctuaries, whoſe Priuiledges the King will not violate, but vpon great and weightie reaſon.

The cauſes & manners of their fights.

The King, Nobility, and Souldiers deſire to ſerue on Horſe-backe, which moſt commonly they doe, for in any Army there be three Horſe for one foot: the King will ſeldome venture to fight out a battayle, but as you may perceiue by the precedent, it was and is the vſage amongſt the three Brethren, when they meete in a field, whoſoeuer getteth at the firſt on-ſet the aduantage, maketh the other preſently leaue the field, and flye vnto ſome place of ſtrength: they fight with no Armour except a Buffe Ierkin, for the better ſort; and a Leather Hide tanned for the meaner, and ſome Coats of Male, their Armes is a Horſe-mans Staffe, Target, and Sword, or a Horſe-mans Peece and Sword.

Deadly feud with the Larbies.

The Alarbies ſerue all vpon Horſe, will fight ſorer battayles to maintayne their deadly feud, than in ſeruice of their King: Inſomuch that vpon loſſe of any great Lord or Chiefe man of their Bloud, crull battailes haue enſued, wherein ten thouſand men haue beene ſlayne at one time, and it is their faſhion, the faireſt Virgin to ride vpon a Camell with a flagge in her hand decked in all pompe to ſollicite her Kindred to reuenge, and goeth foremoſt in the field, encouraging them to follow; vpon which incitement much bloud is ſpilt, her Kindred as loth to loſe their Virgin, and not reuenge their iniuries: the other ſide ſtriuing to winne her and the field, holding that a continuing glory to the ſeuenth Generation.

When a man is killed, his Tribe ſeeketh not reuenge only vpon the man which killed the party, but the firſt man of that Tribe hee meeteth withall, him will hee kill if he can, and ſo thinketh he hath ſatisfied his Kinſmans death.

With the Brebers.

The Brebers or Mountayners likewiſe maintayne this feud, who are moſt ſhot and Swordmen, vpon the day of battayle their women follow hard behind them, with a colour in their hands, called Hanna: And if they ſee any of their ſide offer to runne away, or retyre, preſently they will throw ſome of this Hanna vpon their clothes, which will ſtayne, and the party euer after is held for a Coward and a diſhonoured Iew. For feare of this Infamy, few forſake the field, but eyther conquer their Enemies, or dye like men, who are preſently ſtripped and buryed by theſe women which follow them.

The trading of the Moores into Guinee and Gago for Gold Ore, or ſandie Gold.

Effadiuntur opes irritamenta malorum.

M*Vley Hamet* being at peace with his Neighbours, at quiet with his Subiects, determined to warre vpon the Negros, knowing the conqueſt eaſie, becauſe the people are vndiſciplined in warre, and the profit would be exceeding great by bringing their Gold into his Countrey, exchanging for it Salt, and other baſer Commodities. And howſoeuer certayne Miners had found rich Mines of Gold in the Hils of Atlas, yet hee held it better policy to fetch his Gold farther off, then to digge that which was found in the Centre of his owne Kingdome, fearing if the Mines proued rich, the Golden Ore would draw thither Chriſtian Armes, therefore he cut the throats of all ſuch as were the Authors, and gaue the Maſters of the Workes death for their hyre.

Gago.

Six monethes Iourney.

Dreadfull Deſarts.

* Mummi, but the beſt Mummi is made of embalmed bodies which haue been long ſince buryed, as in Egypt, &c.

Salt.

But to perfect his other Deſigne, he choſe Iudar Baſha, ſent him with great ſtore of Souldiers, who entred farre into the Negros Countrey, depriuing them of a great City, called Gago, which ſtandeth vpon the Riuer of Synega, three hundred Leagues within the firme Land, builded there an Alpandeca for Barbarian Merchants, and a Cuſtome-houſe for the King. The Merchants make it ſixe monethes Iourney from Moruecos thither, of which, two monethes they paſſe thorow the Sandy Deſarts, where no people dwell, neyther any road way, but directed by Pilots, as ſhips at Sea, obſerue the courſes of Sunne, Moone, and Stars, for feare of miſſing their way: If they loſe themſelues, they meete with Famine, and dye for lacke of water, whoſe dead carkaſſes conſume not, but maketh Mumna, * or Otema fleſh, euery way as Phyſicall or Medicinable, as that which commeth from Alexandria. They neuer trauell vnder two or three hundred in a company: it may be not meeting with water in twelue or fifteene dayes ſpace, but carry water by Camels, both for them and their beaſts to drinke, which failing, to ſaue their owne liues, they kill their Camels, and drinke the blood. If the wind blow at North-eaſt, they cannot vnlade their Camels, leaſt the Sands ſhould couer them. The Merchandize carried from Morhecos to the Negros, is much Cloth, Amber Beads, Corall, but the chiefeſt Commodity is Salt, which is bought at Tegazza, and other places, for foure ſhillings a Camels lading, which is ſixe hundred weight, and payeth at Gago fiue pounds for Cuſtome to the King of Barbarie, afterward ſold farre within the Countrey to a kind of deformed Negros, who will neuer be ſeene in the commerce of trading with the Barbarian, or any ſtranger: Wherefore they lay their Salt in the fields and leaueth it, then commeth the deformed Negro, and layeth againſt euery mans pricell of Salt, as much of his gold as he thinketh the Salt is worth, and goeth his way, leauing his gold with the Salt: Then returneth the Moore, if he like the gold, taketh it away, if not, detracteth ſo much from his heape, as he will ſell to the Negro for his gold. The Negro returning, if he like the quantity, putteth too more gold, or elſe will not barter, but departeth. Yet they ſeldome miſlike, for the Moore maketh a rich returne, and his King a full Treaſure. Wherefore, the deformed Negro is prayſed for the trueſt dealing man in the world: the gold which they haue is not coyned, but like ſmall Grauell or Sand gathered after the gluts of raine, in the drie bankes of Mountaines and Riuers.

Touching Voyages of Engliſhmen to Barbarie, as alſo Embaſſages ſent thither by Queene Elizabeth: likewiſe touching many Engliſh Voyages to Guinny, Benin, and other places on the Continent, and the Ilands adioyning; with Patents alſo for thoſe parts: the Reader may, if he pleaſe, certifie and ſatisfie himſelfe in Maſter Edens, and Maſter Hackluyts Voyages. Engliſh Nauigations are now aduanced to ſo great Aduenture, and new or remote Diſcoueries, that I rather haſte to them: Yet becauſe I thinke it meete to acquaint the Reader with the preſent State of the neerer parts of Africa: I haue added theſe following Diſcourſes. And becauſe Algier is the Whirle-poole of theſe Seas, the Throne of Pyracie, the Sinke of Trade and Stinke of Slauery; the Cage of vncleane Birds of Prey, the Habitation of Sea-Deuils, the Receptacle of Renegadoes to God, and Traytors to their Countrey; I haue the longer ſtayed there: both to ſhew the place out of Nicholay; His Maieſties zealous Deſigne againſt them, and Gods goodneſſe in two notable Deliuerances from them.

As for Ward, or other Engliſh, infeſting the World from that Hel-mouth, I was loth to blot theſe Papers with ſo rotten Names.

CHAP. III.

The African Poſſeſsions of the King of Spaine, and the Turke.

§. I.

*The Dominions and Fortreſſes * which the King of* Spaine hath vpon the Iles and mayne Lands of Africa, and of the Great Turkes.

* Taken out of Botero, Pery, &c.

BEſides Oran, Merſalquibir, Mililla and Pennon which the King of Spaine poſſeſſeth within the Streights; as likewiſe, Ceuta, Tanger, and Arzil, which by the Title of Portugall, he holdeth very neere the Streights of Gibraltar; and Muzagan in like ſort without the Streights mouth, twenty miles to the South-ward of Arzil: he hath along the Coaſt of Africk, from Cape de Guer, to that of Guardafu, two ſorts of States: for ſome are immediately vnder him; and others are as it were his Adherents. The Ilands of Madera, Puerto Santo, the Canaries, the Iles of Arguin, of Cabo Verde, the Ile Del Principe, with that of Sant Thomas, and others neere adioyning, are immediately vnder his Dominion. Theſe Ilands are maintayned with their owne victuall, and prouiſion, and yet they haue alſo ſome out of Europe, as in like manner they ſend ſome thither: eſpecially Sugars and Fruits, wherewith the Ile of Madera wonderfully aboundeth, as alſo with Wine. And the Iland of Sant Thomas likewiſe hath great abundance of Sugars.

He hath ſince gotten Mamora

Theſe States haue no incumbrance, but by the Engliſh and Frenchmen of Warre. At the Ilands of Arguin, and at Sant George de la Mina, the Portugals haue planted Factories in forme of Fortreſſes, by meanes of which, they trade with the bordering people of Gynny and Libya, and get into their hands the Gold of Mandinga, and other places neere about. Among the adherent Princes, the richeſt and moſt honourable, is the King of Congo, in that his Kingdome is one of the flouriſhing and plentifull Countryes in all Æthiopia. The Portugals haue there two Colonies, one in the City of S. Saluador, and another in the Iland Loanda. They haue diuers rich Commodities from this Kingdome, but the moſt important is euery yeere about fiue thouſand Slaues, which they tranſport from thence, and ſell them at good round prices in all the Iles and mayne Lands of the Weſt Indies: and for the head of euery ſlaue ſo taken vp, there is a good taxe payd to the Crowne of Portugall.

From this Kingdome one might eaſily goe to the Country of Prete Ianni, for it is not thought to be very farre off: and it doth ſo abound with Elephants, Victuall, and all other neceſſarie things, as would bring ſingular eaſe and commoditie to ſuch an enterpriſe. Vpon the Kingdome of Congo confineth Angola, with whoſe Prince of late yeares, Paulo Dias, a Portugall Captaine, made warre. And the principall occaſion of this warre are certaine Mines of Siluer, in the Mountaines taines of Gabambe, no whit inferior to thoſe of Potoſſi; but by ſo much are they better, as fine Siluer goeth beyond that which is baſe, and courſe. And out of doubt, if the Portugals had eſteemed ſo well of things neere at hand, as they did of thoſe farther off and remote, and had thither bent their forces wherewith they paſſed Capo de buena eſperança, and went to India, Malaca, and the Malucoes; they had more eaſily, and with leſſe charge found greater wealth: for there are no Countries in the world richer in Gold and Siluer, then the Kingdomes of Mandinga, Ethiopia, Congo, Angola, Butua, Toroa, Maticuo, Boro, Quiticui, Monomotapa, Caſati, and Bohenemugi. But humane auarice eſteemeth more of another mans, then his owne; and things remote appeare greater, then thoſe neere at hand. Betweene Capo de buena eſperança, and Cape Guardafu, the Portugals haue the Fortreſſes of Sena, Cephala, and Mozambique. And by theſe they continue Maſters of the Trade with the bordering Nations, all which abound in Gold and Iuorie. By theſe Fortreſſes they haue ſpeciall commoditie for their Nauigation to the Indies, becauſe their Fleetes ſometimes winter, and otherwiſe victuall, and refreſh themſelues there. In theſe parts the King of Melinde is their greateſt friend; and thoſe of Quiloa, and other Neighbour Ilands, are their Tributaries. The Portugals want nothing but men: for beſides other Ilands, which they leaue in a manner abandoned, there is that of Saint Laurence, one of the greateſt in all the world (being a thouſand two hundred miles long, and foure hundred and foureſcore broad) the which, though it be not well tilled, yet for the goodneſſe of the ſoyle, it is apt and fit to be manured, nature hauing diſtinguiſhed it with Riuers, Harbours, and moſt commodious Bayes. Theſe States belonging to the Crowne of Portugall, were wont to feare no other, but ſuch Sea-forces as may be brought thither by the Turks But the daily going to and fro of the Portugall Fleetes, which coaſt along vp and downe thoſe Seas, altogether ſecureth them. In the yeare 1589. they tooke neere vnto Mombaza foure Gallies, and a Galliot, belonging to the Turkes, who were ſo bold as to come euen thither. But ſince the Engliſh and Hollanders haue traded the Indies, the Portugall affaires haue much decaied in thoſe parts, their oppoſing them turning to ſuch effect as you haue heard.

The African Trade might haue been as rich as the Indian.

The Dominions of the Great Turke in Africa.

The great Turke poſſeſſeth in Africa all the Sea-coaſt from Velez de Gumera, or (as ſome hold opinion) from the Riuer Mulnia, which is the Eaſterne limite of the Kingdome of Fez, euen to the Arabian Gulfe or Red Sea, except ſome few places (as namely, Merſalcabir, Melilla, Oran, and Pennon) which the King of Spaine holdeth. In which ſpace before mentioned, are ſituate ſundry of the moſt famous Cities and Kingdomes in all Barbarie; that is to ſay, Tremizen, Alger, Tenez, Bugia, Conſtantina, Tunis, Tripolis, and all the Country of Egypt, from Alexandria to the Citie of Aſna, called of old Siene, together with ſome part of Arabia Troglodytica, from the Towne of Suez to that of Suachen. Alſo in Africa the Grand Signior hath fiue Vice-royes, called by the names of Beglerbegs or Baſſas, namely, at Alger, Tunis, Tripolis, at Miſſir for all Egypt, and at Suachen for thoſe places which are chalenged by the Great Turke, in the Dominions of Prete Ianni. Finaly, in this part at Suez, in the bottome of the Arabian Gulfe, is one of his foure principal Arſenals, or places for the building, repairing, docking, and harboring of his warlike Gallies, which may lie here vnder couert, to the number of fiue & twentie Bottoms.

CHAP. IIII.

The Deſcription of the Citie of Alger, written by NICHOLAS NICHOLAY, and how it came into the poſſeſſion of BARBAROSSA, and alſo of Malta and Tripolie.

Change of names of Alger.

ALger is a Citie in Africa very ancient, firſt builded by a people of Africa, called Meſgana, of whom ſhe tooke her firſt name: afterwards was called Iol, and was the Seate Royal of Iuba, in the time when the Romans bare dominion in Africa, in honour of Caſar it was called Iulie Caſare; and ſince the Moores called it Gezeir Arab Eleagair, which in their Language ſignifieth Iles, becauſe ſhe is cituated neere Maiorque-Minorque Ieuiſe, and Fromentierre: but the Spaniards now doe call her Alger: howbeit, ſhee is ſituated vpon the Mediterran Sea, vpon the hanging of a Mountaine enuironed with ſtrong Walls, Ramperds, Ditches, Platformes, and Bulwarks, in forme almoſt three-ſquare; the largeneſſe which goeth towards the Sea ſide ſtretcheth narrowly almoſt vnto the higheſt part, whereas there is a great building made in forme of a Citadell, to command the Towne and entrie of the Hauen. As for the buildings being beyond the Pallace Royall, are very faire Houſes belonging too particular men, with a great number of Bathes and Cookes houſes. The places and ſtreetes are ſo well ordained, that euery one in his Occupation apart: there are about three thouſand Hearth-ſteeds. At the bottome of the Citie which is towards the North ioyning to the Walles, which are beaten with the Surges of the Sea in a great place, is by great Artifice and ſubtill Architecture builded their principall and head Moſquee; and a little below that is the Arcenall, which is the place into which are hailed vp, and trimmed the Gallies and other veſſels. This Citie is very Merchant-like, for that ſhe is ſituated vpon the Sea, and for this cauſe marueilouſly peopled, for her bigneſſe : ſhe is inhabited of Turkes, Moores, and Iewes in great number, which with marueilous gaine exerciſe the Trade of Merchandiſe, and lend out money at Vſury. They haue two Market dayes in euery weeke, to the which reſort an infinite number of people of the Mountaines, Plaines and Vallies, being neighbours thereabouts, which do bring thither all ſorts of Fruits, Corne and Foule, of very cheape price: for I haue ſeene a Patridge ſold for a Iudit, which is a ſmall piece of Siluer mony, in manner foure ſquare, and is in value of our mony foure pence and a mite, but true it is that their Partridges be not ſo big nor delicate as ours are : the Hennes and Chickins be alſo very good cheape, for that they haue in moſt parts of their Houſes Furnaces, made in manner like vnto the Hot-houſes or Stoues of Germany, in the which with a ſmall heate they doe breed and hatch their Eggs without helpe of the Hen, and therefore it is not to be marueiled at, though they haue great plentie of ſuch Pullen. They alſo haue a great number of Camels and Oxen, which they doe ſhoo, lade, and ride vpon, as vpon Horſes. And going through the ſtreetes, becauſe of the multitude of people, which there is marueilous, they goe crying with a loud voyce, Baluc, Baluc ; which is too ſay, Beware, beware. I haue alſo ſeene diuers Moores mounted on Barbarie Horſes without Saddle, Bridle, Stirrops or Spurres, hauing onely a ſtring in the mouth to ſtay them withall. And as for the men, they are altogether naked, hauing onely about their middle part to couer their priuities, ſome piece of a white Sarge or Blanket in manner of an apron, and about their head a Linnen cloth rowled, which they bring about and vnder their chin.

Furnaces fitly made for breeding of Chickins.

Camels and Oxen ſhod.

The Moores do ride their horſes without ſaddle or bridle.

Their weapons are three Darts or long Iauelins, which they carry in their right hand, and doe ſhoote and throw with wonderfull dexteritie, and vpon their left arme is faſtned a large Dagger made a little crooked after the faſhion of a Wood-knife, which they call Secquin, and vſe to fight at hand ſtrokes withall, and to annoy their Enemies comming to the cloſe. The moſt part of the Turkes of Algier, whether they be of the Kings Houſhold or the Gallies, are Chriſtians renied, or Mahumetiſed, of all Nations, but moſt of them Spaniards, Italians, and of Prouence, of the Ilands and Coaſts of the Sea Mediterran, giuen all to Whoredome, Sodometrie, Theft, and all other moſt deteſtable vices, liuing onely of rouings, ſpoyles, and pilling at the Seas, and the Iland, being about them : and with their practike Art bring daily to Algier a number of poore Chriſtians which they ſell vnto the Mo ,and other Merchants of Barbarie for ſlaues, who afterward tranſport them, and ſell them where they thinke good, or elſe beating them miſerably with ſtaues, doe imploy and conſtraine them to worke in the Fields, and in all other vile and abiect occupations and ſeruitude almoſt intollerable. And therefore it is not to be marueiled at, though theſe poore Chriſtian Slaues made of it no ſcruple at all in putting of vs in danger, to ſet themſelues at libertie.

Many renied Chriſtians in Algier.

A miſerable life of the Chriſtian ſlaues in Algier.

Without the Citie towards the Weſt are many faire and pleaſant Gardens, ſet and adorned with diuers trees bringing forth fruits of al ſorts. Amongſt other things there be Milons of marueilous goodneſſe, and incomparable ſweetneſſe : they haue alſo another fruite called Pateque, which the Italians call Anguries, being like in bigneſſe and colour to our greene Citrouilles in Winter, which they eate raw without Bread or Salt, and hath a taſte ſo delicate and ſweete, that it melteth in ones mouth, giuing a water as it were ſugred, and ſerue greatly to refreſh and digeſt. About their Gardens are many Wells full of good water, and the ground there abouts, although it is Mountaines and Vallies, is very fertile for fruites and Vines. On the other part towards the Eaſt, without the Towne runneth into the Sea a ſmall Riuer called Sauo, which ſerueth aſwell to drinke of, as other commodities, and alſo maketh many mills to grind. The courſe of the Sea from the Cape of Marfuz, (where as yet are ſeene the foundations of the ancient Citie Tipaſu, which in times paſt was by the Emperours of Rome honoured in prayſe of the Country Latine) doth bow and wind like vnto a Croſebow-lath, and all along the Riuer and the ſhoare the Mooriſh Women and Maiden Slaues of Algier doe goe to waſh their Linnen, being commonly whole naked, ſauing that they weare a piece of Cotten Cloth of ſome ſtrange colour to couer their ſecret parts (which notwithſtanding for a little piece of money they will willingly vncouer.) They weare alſo for an ornament about their necke, armes, and legges, great collers or bracelets of Latten, ſet with certaine falſe Stones. But as for the Wiues of the Turks or Moores, they are not ſeene go vncouered, for they weare a great Barnuche made of a Blanket of white, blacke, or violet colour, which couereth their whole body and the head.

Tipaſa an old Citie.

The ſecond day after our arriuall at Algier, I found the meanes for money, and with faire word too hyre a renyed Spaniard, to conduct and leade me thorow all places that I moſt deſired to ſee. So as by his meanes, I ſaw and learned many things within foure or fiue dayes that wee were there in quiet. And namely, brought mee vpon a high Mountayne being a mile from the Towne, to ſee and behold the ſituation of a very ſtrong and great Tower, beeing builded vpon another Mountayne there neere about, and gently enquiring of him what ſtrength the Tower might be of: he declared vnto me, that the breadth of the Ditches about the ſame, was ſeuenteene braſes, ſauing about the gate and entry into it towards the North, it was only ſeuen fathomes broad, and two Speares lengths deepe. Moreouer, he ſaid vnto mee, that within the Fortreſſe there were nine great caſt Pieces, and eighteene other, as well Mynions, as Fawconets, and other: and that in the middeſt of the Tower there was a Well of very good water, vpon the height thereof ſtanding a wind-mill, and another ſtanding without the gates. And that thirtie ordinary Souldiers are committed within it to keepe the ſame. And to make ſhort, that this Tower was made to none other intent (as alſo others ſince haue confirmed) then for the garding and keeping of the Fountayne heads, which from thence are brought and conueyed vnder the water into the Citie.

Alger was long time vnder the Dominion of the King of Telenſin, vntill ſuch time as they of Bugie choſe a new King, vnto whom they gaue and rendred themſelues as his Tributarie, becauſe he was neerer vnto them then the King of Telenſin, and that hee could ſooner helpe them (if need were.) But in proceſſe of time, perceiuing themſelues to be as it were free and out of all doubt: armed certayne ſhips to the Sea, with the which they became ſuch Courſaires or Pirates, that in ſhort time they annoyed by their Piracies and Robberies on the Sea, not onely the Coaſt of Spaine, but alſo all the Mediterrane Ilands. Which perceiuing, Ferdinando the King Catholike ſent to Alger a great Armie to aſſiege them, and for to keepe them in moſt diſtreſſe, cauſed with a maruellous readineſſe a Fort to bee made in a ſmall Iland, which lyeth before the Citie, keeping them by that meanes ſo ſtraightly beſieged, that in ſhort time they were conſtrayned to require a Truce for ten yeeres: Which was agreed vnto them vpon condition of a certayne Tribute, which they payed vntill the death of King Ferdinando, for then they eſpying a conuenient time and meanes, to breake the Truce, and to ſet themſelues at liberty, called vnto them Cairadin Barbaroſſe, who after the ſiege of Bone, retyred to the Caſtle of Gegill, ſtanding in the Coaſt of the Mediterran Sea, vpon the top of a high Rocke, ſeuentie miles from Bugie, who being by them choſen to bee their chiefe Captayne, gaue many fierce aſſaults vnto the Fortreſſe, ſo as he put the Spaniards to flight, and incontinent after cauſed it to bee ruined and pulled downe euen to the foundation. He then ſeeing ſo happie ſucceſſe of his Enterprize, could no longer abide to be as companion, but in a Bath trayterouſly ſlue a Prince of Arabie, called Selim: who declared himſelfe to be Lord of the Citie.

Ferdinando King Catholike conſtrayneth the Mores to a Truce.

Selim ſlaine by Treaſon.

Afterwards forſaking the name of a Captaine any longer, cauſed himſelfe to bee called King, and coyned money vnder his name, and ſo well guided his Affaires that in ſhort time after hee brought all his Neighbours about him to become contributory vnto him. Such was the beginning of the magnificent eſtate of Cariedin Barbaroſſe: after whoſe death, his Brother Hariadene ſucceeded him in the Kingdome, and after him his Sonne Caſſam, who raigned at the time we arriued there.

The King had not complete power: but they enioyed, as this Author ſaith, a kind of Common-wealth.

This Hariadene was the famous Sea Captaine, Admirall of the Turkes Nauie, mentioned in the Turkiſh Hiſtorie, which affrighted Rome, and was terrible to Chriſtendom, See my Pilgrimage, l.6.c.9.

To returne to the Diſcourſe of our Nauigation, which I left at the Cape Matafuz, from whence (hauing ſoiourned there a night) wee departed in the morning: the wind was ſo contrary that it forced vs to come to an Anchor neere to the Cape Tedele: at which place wee ſaw within a great Rocke a deepe entrance, being two flight ſhot long, into the which the Sea entreth euen to the very bottome, where we entred with our Skiffe, euen to the halfe way of it: and thinking to paſſe on further, we found ſo great a number of ſtrange Mice, that we were conſtrayned to turne backe: ſo were we perſecuted. And ſo for feare they ſhould piſſe on our heads (their piſſe being venemous) we were forced to couer vs, and to wrap our ſelues in our Clokes. This part of the Sea is very full of Mountaynes and great Rockes.

Strange Mice.

Teddell is a Citie contayning about two thouſand Harth-ſteeds, ſituated vpon the Sea Mediterrane, threeſcore miles from Alger at the bottome of a Mountayne, and on the hanging of a great Rocke. On the midſt of the Mountayne is a little Caſtle, from the which along goeth a wall ſtretching to that of the Citie. The Africans firſt did edifie it, and at this preſent is inhabited of a people very merry and pleaſant. For, for the moſt part of them they are giuen to the exerciſe of the Harpe and Lute. Their principall Craft and Occupation is fiſhing, and dying of Wooles and Cloth, by reaſon of diuers ſmall Brookes very fit for their dyings, which deſcending from the Mountaynes through diuers places of the Towne, iſſue into the Sea. The Inhabitants of the ſame place are vnder the ſame Obeyſance and Iuſtice that they of Alger are. Leauing the Coaſt and Towne of Teddell, we bare roome to Sea-wards, and had ſo good ſpeed, that the foure and twentieth of Iuly in the Euening, we diſcouered the Citie of Gigeri, but euen thinking to be neere it, within a moment aroſe ſuch a ſudden Boraſque or Flaa, that if our Mariners had not nimbly beſtirred themſelues in taking in of their Sayles, wee had beene in great danger to haue beene all drowned, and immediately ſaw our Frigat (which was made faſt to our Gally) loſt before our eyes, becauſe they had not quickly cut the Halſer, but all our men were ſaued by ſwimming to our Gallies. Theſe Boraſques (engendred of a wind, called by the Gracians, Typhon; of Plinie, Vertex or Vortex, but vulgarly Tourbillon, or Whirlewind proceed not out of the Weſt, notwithſtanding doe often happen in Winter) are very often and dangerous all along the Coaſt of Barbarie, and as they come very ſuddenly, ſo are againe ſoone appeaſed.

Teddell.

Boraſque of Barbarie, moſt dangerous for Saylers.

Porte of Bone.

The twentie fiue in the Euening, we arriued at the Port of Bone: where wee being come to an Anker, the Ambaſſadour ſent to ſalute the Caddy, which keepeth the towne vpon tribute vnder the King of Alger. This Caddy was a renyed Chriſtian, and notwithſtanding ſhewed himſelfe very curteous and liberall towards vs, for ouer and aboue the refreſhings of fleſh, bread and fruits which he gaue vs, about ſupper time ſent vnto the Ambaſſador two great Platters of Macolique, full of their kinde of meate, dreſſed according to their faſhion, which was a kinde of Menudes made in Paſte with Onions, and fat Pullets with certaine ſawces of very good taſte and ſauour.

This Ambaſſador was the Lord of Aramont ſent 1551. by the French King to the Great Turke at Conſtantinople.

Bone, anciently called Hippon, of which Saint Auguſtine hath beene Biſhop in times paſt, edified of the Romans vpon the Mediterran Sea, ſtandeth of the one ſide vpon high and ragged Rockes, and there is a very faire and ſumptuous Moſquee, vnto which is adioyned the houſe of the Caddy: but the other ſide of the Towne towards the South, and the Valley is ſituated more lower, and as well within as without accommodated with Wells and good Fountaines. The Houſes within it (hauing beene twice ſaccaged and ſpoyled by the Spaniards) are euill builded, and this Towne doth not now containe aboue three hundred Harthes. The Emperour Charles the fift, after he had ſubdued the Towne, cauſed vpon a height of one ſide towards the Weſt, a great Caſtle to be builded: which commanded of all ſides, and did accommodate it with a number of Ciſternes to gather Water in, for that on this height there is neither Well nor Fountaine. Notwithſtanding, ſhortly after it was raſed by the Turkes and Moores, and the Spaniards driuen out of it: without the City towards the Eaſt, is ſeene a goodly and large Champion Conntrey, inhabited and tilled by a kinde of People called Merdez; which Countrey, beſides the great quantitie of Corne that it bringeth forth, nouriſheth and paſtureth in the Valley a great number of Oxen, Kine, Sheepe and other Cattell, ſo plentifully, that with their Milke and Butter, not onely the City of Bone is prouided and furniſhed, but alſo Tunes and the Iſle of Gerbes: there are alſo about it many faire Garden Plats, plentifully abounding with Dates, Figges, and ſweet Mellons. At the beginning of the Valley paſſe two ſmall Riuers, whereof, the next and greateſt hath a Bridge of ſtone, vnder the which is a way to an old ruined Church, being betweene two Rocks, which the Moores doe ſay to haue beene the Church of Saint Auguſtine, which made me the more deſirous to goe and ſee it: Notwithſtanding, that a Iew, borne in Spaine, being then with me, vſed all the meanes he could to perſwade mee from it: for the dangers which he ſaid to be there of the Theeues called Alerbes, which thereabouts doe lye ſecretly hid, to intrap them that came thereabouts; by which his remonſtrances notwithſtanding he could not diſſwade me, but that needes he muſt accompanie mee: and certainely there I found by experience: and vpon the top of a high Mountaine hee ſhewed me a ſmall troope of theſe Alerbes ſtarke naked, mounted on horſe-backe with their Dartes in their hands, after the faſhion of thoſe I ſaw in Alger: In the Hauen or Roade which lyeth before the Fortreſſe is found great quantitie of very faire Corrall, which Andre Doria then had in farme of the King of Alger, for which he paid vnto him yeerely great ſummes of Money. By chance we found there a Ship of Marſellie conducted by a Curſarie, to gather the ſame, who preſented vnto the Ambaſſador, many faire and great branches. The next day being the ſix and twentieth, after Sunne-ſet, waying our Ankers, we departed from Bone, and paſſed from the Gulfe, which continueth about eighteene miles to the Cape of Roſe, and paſſing further towards the ſight of the Iles De la Galite, and des Symboles, there flew a Fiſh into our Gallie, of the length, colour and bigneſſe of a great Sardin, which before had two great wings, and two leſſe behinde; his head and mouth being great according to the proportion of the body: this fiſh is by the Moores called Indole. And hauing doubled the Cape Bone, the twenty and eight day we arriued at the Ile of Pantalaree.

This Ile of Pantalaree, which by the Ancients was called Paconia, is very Hilly and full of great Rocks. There groweth great quantitie of Cotton, Capers, Figges, Mellons and Reiſins: and throughout the Ilands is full of Ciſternes. There are alſo many ſmall Houſes very anciently builded within the ground (made like vnto Caues) made by the Moores in the time they poſſeſſed the Iland: along the Sea ſide are found Stones being blacke, and gliſtering like vnto fine Iet, and certaine rough Stones. They haue no Horſes, but of Oxen great ſtore, with the which they do labour and till the ground, how well there groweth no Corne. Of which they furniſh themſelues out of the Ile of Sicilia, vnto which they are ſubiect. But well there groweth certaine other Graine and Herbes of ſmall eſtimation. There groweth a ſmall Tree like vnto Nerte: which the Moores called, Verb; and the Sicilians, Stinco, bringing forth a ſmall round fruit, which at the firſt is red, and being ripe, waxeth blacke. Of which, the Inhabitants of the Iland (which are very poore) make Oyle, which they vſe as well to bu[illegible] in their Lampes, as to eate: and the Women after hauing waſhed their heads, doe anoint their haire with it to make it grow long and faire: As well the men as women are of nature good Swimmers, as by experience we ſaw by a woman of the Countrey, bringing a great Basket with Fruit, entred into the Sea, and ſwimming, brought the ſame to ſell in our Galley. This Iland containeth thirty miles in length, and in breadth about ten miles.

Pantalaree anciently Paconie.

The Women of this Countrey are very good Swimmers.

The thirtieth day of the ſame moneth of Iuly, we departed from Pantalaree with ſuch a fauourable wind : that the firſt day of Auguſt, being paſſed the Ile of Goze, we arriued about the euening in the Road of Malta, where incontinent we were viſited by the Knights Pariſot and Villegaignon, and of many others of diuers Nations. And after the Ambaſſador had giuen to vnderſtand to the great Maſter his comming, the chaines of the Hauen being opened with ſaluation accuſtomed of the one ſide and other, we entred into the Hauen, vpon the ſides whereof were with the afore named, diuers other Knights come thither in the behalfe of the grand Maſter (of birth a Spaniard) named Omede, which receiued, the Ambaſſador, and preſented vnto him a Mulet, on which he lighted, and accompanied him to the great Hall of the Caſtle, where the grand Maſter with diuers Knights attended him, and hauing done reuerence vnto him, and declared part of his authoriſation, the night approaching, taking his leaue returned to his Gallies. The next day he was by the great Maſter bidden to a ſumptuous dinner, vnto the which all the ancient and notable Knights of the Religion were alſo bidden and aſſembled, and there was openly rehearſed, how that certaine dayes before Sinan Baſha, Captaine Generall of the Turkes army had taken and ſaccaged the Caſtle of the Towne of Auguſta in Sicilia, and that he from thence arriuing in a Port of Malta called Mechetto, neere vnto that of the Caſtle, put his men there on land to ouer-run, rauiſh and ſpoyle all whatſoeuer they ſhould find for their aduantage, which they executed moſt cruelly, as ſuch barbarous people in like affaires are accuſtomed to doe. But a moſt valiant and well aduiſed Knight a Spaniard, named Guimeran, Captaine of one of the Gallies of the Religion, who could not abide ſuch inſolency, and ſecretly aſſembling certaine number of Souldiers, did by ambuſhes and other meanes ſo diſtreſſe them, that after hauing taken and ſlaine ſuch as fell into his laps, made them to remooue from that place : but notwithſtanding did not deſiſt of their enterpriſe : for from thence they went to the Road of S. Paul where they landed their Ordnance to aſſiege the City, whereof they got the Suburbs, and framed their Trenches to make the battery. And forſomuch, as they could not atchieue the end of their enterpriſe (by reaſon as well of the roughneſſe of the place being full of Rocks, as ſeeing their men faile them, dying through extreme heat) they reſolued to remoue their ſiege, and to imbarke themſelues with their Ordnance, hauing ſlaine, taken and ſaccaged all that they met withall at aduantage. From thence they went to the Ile of Goze, being very neere and ſubiect to the Ile of Malta, which they ſaccaged, and by deceitfull compoſition tooke the Caſtle, leading the people both men, women and children as ſlaues into miſerable captiuity : being in number ſixe thouſand and three hundreth. The Knight de Villegaignon in his Treaty which he hath made of the warres of Malta, doth recite a Hiſtory no leſſe lamentable then full of diſpaire, and vnnaturall cruelty: and is of a Sicilan which in that place had dwelled of long time, and there married a wife, by whom he had two faire daughters then, being in ſtate to be married, who ſeeing his laſt calamity approaching, becauſe he would not in his preſence ſee his wife and his daughters rauiſhed and violated, and to be brought in ſhamefull ſeruitude, and to deliuer them from all ſhame and bondage, hauing called them into his houſe, firſt ſlew with his ſword his two daughters, and afterwards their mother. And this done, with a Harquebuſe and a Croſſe-bow bent (as cleane bereft of ſences) made towards his enemies, of whom he ſlew twaine at the firſt encounter, afterwards fighting a while with his ſword, being inuironed with the multitude of the Turkes, brought himſelfe to the end of his moſt vnhappy life. Behold the ſummary of the miſeries happened through the Turkes in few dayes in the Iles of Sicila, Malta, and Goze. After which things the Baſcha cauſed his army with the whole booty and prey to embarke, and remoued the ſeuen and twenty of Iuly towards Barbary, to aſſiege the Caſtle of Tripoli.

A pitifull Hiſtory.

A ſtrange cruelty.

The ſixt of Auguſt we came to Tripoli, a City which Charles the fifth had giuen in keeping to the Knights of Malta, and then beſieged by Sinan Baſha. Where hauing well conſidered the placing of the Campe, the Towne and Caſtle, we returned to the Baſcha, with whom the Ambaſſador talked a while, and in the meane while I went to ſee the market of the Turkes (which they call Baſar) being hard by where the poore Chriſtians of Sicil, Malta, and Goze, were ſold vnto thoſe that moſt offered for them (and laſt inhaunſers, being permitted vnto thoſe that bought them (as the ancient Cuſtome of the Orientall Barbarians is) to ſtrip them ſtarke naked, and to make them goe, to the intent to ſee if they haue any naturall impediment in their bodies, viſiting afterwards their teeth and eyes, as though they had beene horſes, and ſtanding there, I ſaw creeping vpon the ground a Scorpion of yellow colour, being of length more then a long finger. The ſame day the Turkes brought their Ordnance and Gabions vnto the Trenches, which Gabions are made of great Plankes of three inches, which they carry vpon their Gallies or Shippes to ſerue them when they haue need of them : for when they will batter any place, they ſet them in the ground in forme of Baskets, Afterwards being ſet in rankes, they fill them with earth, and is a very commodious inuention, for the ſhot which can but ſlippering paſſe ouer it, and can doe no hurt nor dammage. The Turkes hauing in the night placed their Gabions, and their Ordnance ready to the Battery, did the next day following being the eight of Auguſt, begin to ſhoot at the Caſtle with great furie, which was not left vnanſwered, and euery houre ſome ſlaine.

The beſieged ſent to the Baſha, if he would receiue certaine of them to treat of ſome good accord touching the giuing ouer of the Caſtle, whereunto the Baſcha lightly conſenting, was in all diligence diſpatched a braue Spaniard, named Guinare, and a Knight of Maiorque, to offer vnto the Baſcha the Caſtle with the Artillery and Munition, ſo as he would furniſh them of ſhips to bring them with bagge and baggage ſafely to Malta: to whom ſummarily was anſwered, that (foraſmuch as, as yet they had not deſerued any grace, preſuming to be ſo bold as to keepe ſo ſmall a place againſt the armie of the higheſt Prince on the earth) if they would pay the whole charges of the armie, he would gladly agree to the matter proponed, or if they would not thereunto conſent (as it became them) that for their recompence, all they within the Caſtle ſhould continue ſlaues and priſoners: notwithſtanding, if they incontinently and without delay, did ſurrender the place he would exempt out of them two hundreth. Whereupon, the meſſengers returning in diſpaire of any further grace, was ſtayed by Drogot and Salaraiz, with flattering words, and fayned promiſes, that they would endeuour ſo much as in any wiſe lay in them, to make the Baſcha condiſcend to a better and more gracious compoſition: for they feared that the aſſieged through diſpaire, would reſolue (as their extreame refuge), to defend themſelues euen to the laſt man. And incontinent went to the Baſcha, to declare vnto him his ouerſight, in refuſing thoſe which of their owne voluntary came to ſurrender themſelues into his hands, and that to put them out of doubt and diſpayre, hee ought with all mildneſſe to agree vnto all that they demanded. For after he had the Caſtle, and all the men vnder his authoritie, he might afterwards diſpoſe of them, as he ſhould thinke good. The Baſcha finding this counſell good, cauſed the two meſſengers to be called agaiue vnto him, declariug vnto them with fained and diſſembling words, that at the inſtance and requeſt of Drogot and Salaraiz there preſent, inclining vnto their requeſt, he did diſcharge them of all their coſts and charges of the armie, ſwearing vnto them (the better to deceiue them) by the head of his Lord and his owne, inuiolably to obſerue all that which he had promiſed vnto them, which they (too eaſily) beleeued, and forthwith went to declare the ſame vnto the Gouernour and others within the Caſtle.

The Baſcha the better to atchieue to his enterpriſe, ſent foorth after the Deputie aforeſaid, a Turke (one of the moſt ſubtill to his mind, that he could chooſe) to whom he gaue expreſſe charge to perſwade the Gouernour to come with him, to conclude and treat concerning the giuing ouer, and for the veſſels which ſhould bee neceſſary for their conduct to Malta, and that if hee made difficultie to come, he ſhould make a ſemblance as though hee would remaine there in hoſtage for him, and that aboue all things hee ſhould haue an eye to conſider of the ſtrength and aſſurance of the aſſieged, and of the diſpoſition of all things there, which the Turke could execute ſo finely, that the Gouernour by the counſell of thoſe that had perſwaded him to ſurrender, notwithſtanding the reaſons of warres, and duetie of his office, forbade him in ſuch manner to abandon the place of his charge, reſolued vpon ſo ſmall an aſſurance of the Baſcha, who hauing rigorouſly reproached his timerity, ſaid vnto him: that forſomuch as he had giuen his word, that if he would pay the charges of the armie, he would let them go with bagge and baggage, otherwiſe hee would diſcharge but two hundred, whereat Vallier being greatly mooued, anſwered, that it was not that which with the Deputie of the Caſtle he had agreed vnto: But ſeeing he would doe none otherwiſe, that it would pleaſe him to ſuffer him to returne to the place for to haue the aduiſe and deliberation of the aſſieged, which he could not obtaine, but it was onely permitted vnto him, to ſend backe the Knight that he had brought with him, to make report of theſe pittious newes vnto the aſſieged; and on the other party, Vallier was ſent to the Gallie with Irons on his legges. They of the Caſtle hauing vnderſtood the Premiſſes, were greatly afraid of the miſchiefe, which they perceiued approaching towards them, and could take none other reſolution, then the next day in the morning earely to returne the ſaid Knight to the Baſcha, to know whether they ſhould looke for no better. But as ſoone as he was come before him, the Gouernour was brought in, of whom the Baſcha asked, which of both he would chooſe, either to pay the expences of the armie, or that he and all they of the Caſtle would remaine priſoners, to whom he anſwered, that a ſlaue had none other authoritie then that which by his maſter was giuen vnto him, and that hauing loſt, beſides his libertie, the power to command if any thing were yet reſerued in him, could not counſell him to command to agree vnto any thing but that which was concluded with the delegates, which the Baſcha hearing, for feare that ſuch an anſwere ſhould not come to the knowledge of the aſſieged, and that it ſhould cauſe them deſperately to fight it out, hauing taken counſell of his Captaines, tooke the Gouernour by the hand, and with a ſmiling and diſſembling countenance ſaid vnto him, that without any doubt he would as he had promiſed them, ſet them at free liberty: and that therefore without fearing any thing, hee would cauſe them all to come out of the Caſtle: but the Gouernour, becauſe he had before beene deceiued, would not truſt to his words, but ſaid vnto him, that he ſhould command him that was come from the Caſtle, for that he knew they would doe neuer a whit the more for him. So that the Baſcha turning towards the Knight, commanded him that he forthwith ſhould goe vnto him, and cauſe them to come Vallier ſent to the Gallies with irons vpon him.

A good and wiſe anſwere of Vallier.

foorth: ſwearing vnto them by the head of his great Lord, and his owne, that they ſhould all be deliuered and ſet at liberty, according to the firſt conuentions agreed vpon. Which the Knight beleeuing, went to report vnto them theſe good newes: which they receiued with ſuch ioy, that without any further care or conſideration of their miſſe-hap ſo neere, and prepared for them, they ran to the preaſe with their wiues, children, and beſt moueables, preaſing who ſhould firſt goe forth. But they were not ſo ſoone iſſued, but were cleane ſpoyled, and of the enemies, part of the Knights were ſent to the Gallies, and the reſt to the Baſcha: who beeing by the Knight Vallier admoniſhed of his faith, which hee had twiſe giuen, anſwered, that there was no promiſe to be kept with dogges, and that they had firſt violated their Oath with the great Lord, vnto whom at the giuing ouer of the Rhodes, they had ſworne that they neuer would take on armes againſt the Turkes. The Caſtle being taken and ſpoyled, and about two hundreth Moores of that Countrey that had ſerued the Knights, cut in peeces, with great cries and ſhouts, reioycing of their victory, they diſcharged a great peale of Ordnance.

Faith and promiſe broken.

An Arch triumphal.

Munitions of warre reſting within the Caſtle.

Although the houſes and buildings within the Towne be ruined, yet it is inuironed with very faire and ſtrong wals, accompanied with a great number of Turrets, double Ditches and falſe breaches, and the ſame are on the three parts inuironed with the ſea, and within them are very good Wels and Fountaines. We ſaw in the middeſt of the Towne an Arch triumphall of white Marble with foure faces vpon foure pillars of Corinth foure ſquare, being grauen in the Front that looketh towards the Eaſt (by excellent Sculpture) a Chariot drawen by two great Griffins, and within it was Victory ſitting with two wings: Toward the Weſt was grauen a Chariot, whereupon was ſitting Pallas, and about the edge were written diuers Romane letters, but were ſo ruined, that ſcarce they were to be knowne. Notwithſtanding, by that which can be read, we vnderſtand, that they were made in the time of P. Lentulus, which is a good witneſſe to beleeue that this City, as before I haue ſaid, was builded by the Romanes. The inſide of the Arch was full of diuers inrichments, and aboue after the faſhion of a foure-ſquare Turret: and two other faces looking towards the North and South, were cut as from the vpper part of the body vnto the girdleſtead without any heads, two great figures of the ouercome. All the reſt was ſet foorth with all ſorts of weapons in forme of Trophee, not farre from thence was ſeene a great foure-ſquare place, inuironed with many great and high Pillars in two rankes, after the manner of a Porch, and neere that are the deſtructions of a high Tower, which in times paſt was (as a Moore of that Countrey told me) the great Temple or Moſque of the Citie: there are a number more of antiquities ruined. The Chiaous being come was ſent by the Baſcha, we returned towards the Caſtle, but might not at that time enter in all, becauſe the Baſcha had giuen commandement, that there ſhould not enter with the Ambaſſadour aboue fiue or ſixe at the moſt, which were Sant Veran de Fleury, de Montenard, Batolomy and the Dragoman, and I: at the entry we met with Morataga and the Captaine which had the charge of the Caſtle, which cauſed vs to be brought vpon the Rampards, to the end we might the better view and conſider of all things, and hauing ſeene both aboue and below, we perceiued for certaine, that all things were well repaired and furniſhed, and well appointed with ſixe and thirty peeces of Ordnance, as well ſmall as great, and that there was a great number of Pikes, and pots to caſt fire, abundance of all kind of victuals and other Munitions, a good Well and Fountaine: and that at the time when the ſiege was laid to it, there was as well of Knights as Souldiers of diuers Nations, about ſixe hundred, and the beſt Gunners of the world, it is an euerlaſting ſhame to them that ſo faint-heartedly ſurrendred the ſame vnto thoſe barbarous people without any warlike reaſon. All which hauing well conſidered, with a heauy mind we returned againe to our Gallies, whither incontinent the Baſcha ſent to deſire the Ambaſſador that the next day he would come to his ſolemne dinner, which he pretended to make for ioy of his victory, and taking of the Caſtle, and that he would bring Vallier with him, which he would not refuſe, thinking by ſuch occaſion to recouer the reſt of the two hundred Knights and Souldiers which were yet to be deliuered: and therefore the day following, being the ſixteenth day of Auguſt, 1551. accompanied by the Gouernour Vallier, the Knight de Seur, Cotignac, Captaine Coſte, Montenard and me, went towards Baſcha, being within the Ditch againſt the breach of the Caſtle, where for a magnificency were ſet vp two faire Pauillions, the one for him, ioyning vnto a very faire Fountaine: and the other for the Ambaſſador and his company: and ſo ſoone as he had ſent his preſents, as well to the Baſcha, as to others his familiars (which of old time hath beene the manner and cuſtome that they that haue to do with theſe Barbarians muſt obſerue) he was brought vnto the Pauillion that was prepared for him, and forthwith ſerued with all magnificence, honour, and ſuperfluity of meats as well of fleſh as fiſh, diuerſly dreſſed according vnto their faſhion: and with wines very excellent that they had found within the Caſtle, and this ſeruice was done with noyſe of all their inſtruments, and by Officers in number aboue one hundred, apparelled for the moſt part in long Gownes of fine cloth of Gold, tuffed or figured, and the other of Veluet and Crimſon Damaske, and diuers others colours. The Baſcha was no ſooner ſet downe, but all the Ordnance of the Gallies, Foiſts and Galliots of the army (being in all one hundred and forty, beſides the great Gallion and two Mahumez) was diſcharged, with ſuch a noyſe and thundring, that it ſeemed the heauens and ſkies did ſhake. The table being taken vp, the Ambaſſador and Gouernour Vallier entred into the Pauillion of the Baſcha, which in the end agreed to deliuer the two hundred men which he had promiſed: and moreouer, gaue twenty vnto the Ambaſſador vpon promiſe, that he ſhould cauſe to be releaſed the thirty Turkes taken at Malta, at the landing of the army. But the moſt part of them that were deliuered, were Spaniards, Sicilians and Calabres, and few French-men: for the moſt part of them were put to the ranke of criminels forſworne: that day were brought into our Gallies, the Coffers of Vallier, within which were found certaine apparell, a ſacke with money, and a cup of ſiluer, the reſt which he ſaid to be more worth then two thouſand Crownes, the Turkes had taken away and ſpoiled: beſides, two Pauillions which he eſteemed worth three hundred Crownes. The Turkes hauing in their hands an ancient Gunner of the Caſtle, named Iohn de Chabas, borne within the Towne of Romance in Daulphine (to the end that their feaſt of victory ſhould not be vnfurniſhed of ſome ſacrifice of cruelty) for that with a Canon he had ſhot off the hand of the Clerke generall of the army, brought him into the Towne: and hauing cut off his hands and his noſe, they put him quicke into the ground euen to the girdle ſtead, and there with a cruelty was perſecuted and ſhot at with arrowes, and in the end for to accompliſh the execution of his glorious martyrdom, they cut his throat. About eight a clocke in the euening, were lighted vpon all the Gallies, Galliots, Foiſts, & other veſſels, all along vpon the Tackels, Yeards, and other ropes and poupes, in euery of them aboue three hundred candles, with cries and ſhouts accuſtomed, and ſound of drums and other inſtruments. To make an end of all their triumps, they againe diſcharged all their Ordnance. The next day being the ſeuenteenth, the Baſcha ſent to be preſented vnto the Ambaſſador a gowne of cloth of Gold tiſſed, and with the ſame his leaue to depart, which he ſo long had deſired: and was not receiued without a preſent giuen him that brought it, and to diuers other Officers of the Baſcha, which on all ſides came running one after another, as a ſort of Hounds, to haue their fee and ſhare in the Game, for they are the moſt barbarous, couetous, and cruell Nation of the world, and in whom there is neither truth nor fidelity, neuer obſeruing the one halfe of that they promiſe: and yet men muſt alwayes bee giuing to them.

A cruell ſacrifice vpon the perſon of Iohn Chabas a Gunner of the Caſtle.

The Fleet thus furniſhed ſet ſayle in the ſound of Plimmouth, the twelfth of October in the morning, in the yeare 1620.

The one and thirtieth of October, in the morning wee turned into the Road of Gibraltar, where were riding at anchor two of the King of Spaines ſhips of warre, the Vice-Admirall of a Squadron with the Kings Armes in his fore-top and another, who ſo ſoone as they perceiued vs weighed their Anchors, ſet ſayle, and comming Lee-ward of our Admirall, ſtrooke his flag, ſaluting him with their ſmall ſhot and great Ordnance, after haled him with voyces; our Admirall ſtriking his flag, anſwered them with voyces, gaue them his Ordnance and ſmall ſhot, all the Fleet following in order: this done, we ſaluted the Towne with our Ordnance, the Towne doing the like by anſwering vs. Our Admirall being at an Anchor, the Spaniſh Captaine accompanyed with other Gentlemen, came aboord our Admirall, who told vs that there were great ſtore of Pirats abroad, and that two of the Pirats ſhippes had fought with ſeuen Spaniſh Gallies, and had ſlaine them foure hundred men, and that they had beene at Steria a ſmall Towne with thirty ſayle of ſhips and ten Gallies, and had taken it, and carryed away diuers Priſoners, and that they had threatned to take Gibraltar; there the Admirall ſent his ſicke men aſhoare, hauing houſes and lodgings prouided for them, amongſt whom was Captaine Iohn Fenner who here dyed.

The ſecond of Nouember, about ſeuen in the morning, hauing a freſh gale at North-weſt, the Admirall with the reſt of the Fleet weighed Anchor and ſtanding off, met North the Reare-Admirall of the Spaniſh Fleet, who ſaluting vs North his Ordnance and wee ſtood on our courſe North-eaſt and by Eaſt, being bound for Malhaga. The third, about two in the morning, wee came to an Anchor in Malhaga Road, and about eight of the clocke wee ſaluted the Towne with our Ordnance and diuers Vollies of ſmall ſhot; here diuers Spaniards of account came aboord our ſhips whom we kindly entertayned, here we likewiſe expected Letters but heard not of any.

The ſixth, our Admirall diſpatched a Gentleman, one Maſter Iohn Duppa, with Letters to the Engliſh Embaſſador at the Court of Spaine, to let him know of our arriuall and proceedings. This day about eleuen of the clocke, the Fleet weighed Anchor and ſet ſayle the wind at North-weſt. But before wee weighed, our Admirall gaue order to the Fleet to diuide themſelues into three Squadrons, the Admirall Squadron was kept ſixe leagues from the ſhore, with pendants in the mayne tops for their ſignes; the Vice-Admirals Squadron three leagues without him, on his Bow with pendants on his fore-tops; the Reare-Admiral three leagues within him on his quarter with pendants on their Miſen tops, who deuiding themſelues according to their order ſteered away Eaſt and by South along the ſhoare, being bound for Allicant.

The ſeuenth, about ſixe in the morning, it being calme, and all the Fleet together, the Admirall tooke in all her ſayles, and lay a hull, all the Fleet doing the like, the Admirall put out his flag of generall Councell which was Saint George. Whereupon all the Captaines and Maſters repayred aboord him, where it was concluded, and thought meet that two ſhips of leaſt draught of water, and one Pinnaſſe ſhould hale the ſhoare cloſe aboord to ſee if any Pirats were at an Anchor, eyther in Bayes or Coues, and to free the ſhoare; here likewiſe was giuen a word wherby to know our owne Fleet from others, if any ſtrangers ſhould chance to fall amongſt vs in the night, the word was Greenwich Tower. The Councell ended, and euery man repayred aboord his owne ſhippe, in the euening the whole Fleet in their order ſayled alongſt towards Cape Degat.

The eight and ninth dayes hauing but little wind, we gayned not much way. The tenth, in the morning, falling with the point of Muttrill, and hauing the wind Southerly, the whole Fleet put into the Road and there anchored.

The nineteenth, in the morning, we came to Anchor in Allicant Road, where the whole Fleet ſaluted the Towne with their Ordnance, and the Towne vs: heere our Admirall hauing prouided houſes for his ſicke men, as before hee had done at Gibraltar, ſent thirty ſeuen ſicke men of his owne ſhips Company aſhoare, here likewiſe he diſpatched a Gentleman, one Maſter Walter Long to Carthagena, with Letters of aduice; but all this while could receiue no ſuch Letters as we expected.

The fiue and twentieth, beeing fitted with Wine, Water, and other ſuch neceſſaries as wee wanted, the wind being Northerly, the whole Fleet ſet ſayle, leauing behind the Good Will, out of whom our Admirall had taken moſt of her men to ſupply his wants for thoſe ſicke hee left aſhoare, and being vnder ſayle we ſhaped our courſe South-weſt for Algier.

Algier.

The ſeuen and twentieth, about ten in the morning, wee came to Anchor in Algier Road in ſeuen and twentie fathome water, out of command of the Towne or Caſtle, the Admirall and Reare-Admirall wearing white Ancients on their Poops, the reſt of the Fleet wearing no Ancients at all, going in the whole Fleet, ſaluted the Towne with their Ordnance, but the Towne gaue vs none againe.

The eight and twentieth, our Admirall ſent a Gentleman aſhore, one Captaine Squibe, with a white flag of Truce in his Boat, to giue the Vice-Roy to vnderſtand the cauſe of our comming; hereupon the Vice-Roy ſent a Boat aboord our Admirall, with a white flag and foure men in her, one principall man in the Towne who deliuered our Admirall, ſignifying the Vice-Roy, had receiued command from the Grand Seignior, to vſe vs with all reſpect, and that our men might haue the free libertie of the ſhoare to buy freſh victuals or whatſoeuer they wanted; they promiſed our Admirall if on the morrow hee would ſend any Gentleman of qualitie aſhoare with the Kings Maieſties Letters, that vpon the ſhooting off a Peece of Ordnance, according to our Admirals demand, he ſhould receiue ſufficient Hoſtages aboord for his ſafetie: this night the Pirats brought in three Prizes, one Femming, the other two Engliſhmen, the one a Plimmouth man, and the other of North Yarmouth.

The third of December, came ſixe of the King of Spaines ſhips into the Road, the Admirall ſtriking his flag, ſaluted our Admirall with ſmall ſhot and Ordnance, this done, he came aboord our Admirall in his Boat, and told him hee came in purſuite of certaine Pirats, who had taken diuers of their men, who being in a ſhip of ſeuen hundred tuns neere Carthagena, in fight with a Turkiſh Pirat, had boorded her, entred her men and taken her, had not their owne ſhip vnfortunately falne on fire with a miſchance hapning, they were forced to forſake the Turkes ſhip to ſaue their owne, and ſo loſt both, for being not able to quench the fury of the fire, were forced to yeeld themſelues to the ſlauery of the Turkes to ſaue their liues, beeing in all three hundred men, whereof thirty periſhed in the fire. This Spaniſh Admirall ſayling neere the Towne, the Turkes let flye ſeuentie foure great ſhot at him, and hee gaue them ſome ſixteene backe in exchange, but the diſtance betweene them was ſo farre, that the ſhot falling ſhort, no harme was done on eyther ſide.

The fourth, our Admirall receiued from the Towne an anſwere of the Kings Letters.

The ſixth, after long debating, finding the Turkes perfidious and fickle, as well in detayning our Meſſenger, who deliuered his Maieſties Letters, notwithſtanding we had ſufficient Hoſtages for him, as in breaking all other promiſes: in the end it was agreed thus, vpon leauing a Conſull with them, they would let our Meſſenger come aboord againe; whereupon the Admirall ſent a common man, well clothed, by the name of a Conſull, whom they receiued with good reſpect, and ſending our Meſſenger aboord, receiued their owne pledges, and deliuered vs ſome forty poore Captiues, which they pretended was all they had in the Towne, this was all wee could draw from them. The ſeuenth, in the morning, our Admirall ſent a Letter with inſtruon to our Councell, with another Letter to the Baſhaw, to let him know how ill wee tooke his perfidious dealing.

The eight, in the morning, our Admirall and all the reſt of the Fleet weighed Anchor and ſet ſayle.

The tenth day at night, the wind ſhifted to the South and Eaſt, and ſo to the Eaſt.

The fourteenth, came to Anchor in the Road of Alacotha, on the North ſide of the ſaid Iland, we found this to be a very good place, yeelding vs Wood, Water and Ballaſt, whereof we had great need, the people very kind courteous, bringing vs great ſtore of all manner of prouiſions which we bought at eaſie rates, whereby wee ſupplyed our wants, and releeued our ſicke men, whereof we had gread ſtore in our Fleet.

The foure and twentieth, in the morning, the Fleet weighed Anchor and ſet ſayle.

The fiue and twentieth, about nine at night, came eight or nine ſayle of Turkes into our Fleet, whom ſo ſoone as we diſcouered, we chaſed them and made ſhot at them, but by reaſon it was a darke night, and that they ſayled better then our ſhips, they eſcaped vs.

The ſixe and twentieth, about three in the afternoone, wee put into Alicant Road, hoping there to receiue Letters of aduice, elſe ſome newes of a ſupply of victuals out of England, but miſſed both.

The ſeuen and twentieth at night the Reare-Admirals Squadron went out to Sea in purſuit of two Turkiſh Pirats, who had taken about three houres before two Flemmiſh ſhips; the Flemmings quiting their ſhips, ſaued themſelues in their Boats.

The fourth of Ianuary at night, the Conſtant Reformation and the Golden Phenix had order to goe to Sea, to ſeeke two Pirats ſhips, which we heard were on the Chriſtian ſhoare. The fifth at night, they returned into the Road againe, but met not with any.

The ſixth, the Vice-Admirall with his Squadron ſet ſayle for Malhaga, to ſee if they could heare of any newes of a ſupply of victuals, or whether the two Princes which were long expected were come thither. The twelfth, Maſter Iohn Duppa came from Carthagena, bringing with him a packet of Letters of aduice ſent out of England, bearing date the fourteenth of December, he ſignified that there was ſixe monethes victuals ſent out of England, for a ſupply of his Maieſties ſhips, and that they were at Malhaga with the two Pinnaſſes, this night the Reare-Admirall with his Squadron was ſent to Sea to ſee if he could meet with certaine Pirats, which we had intelligence of. The thirteenth, the Reformation, the Samuel, and the Reſtore, put to Sea, to ſee if they could meet with any Pirats. The eighteenth, the Reformation with the other ſhips returned into the Road, where we found the Reare-Admirall with his Squadron likewiſe returned, but met no Pirats.

The one and twentieth, there came a Flemmiſh Boat with fifteene Flemmings in her aboord our Admirall, who being chaſed by the Turkiſh Pirats off, of Cape Martine, left their ſhippe and ſaued themſelues by their Boat, this night was the Anthelope with other ſhips ſent out to to ſee if they could meete with them. The foure and twentieth, the Anthelope with the other ſhips returned into the Road, but met with none.

The fiue and twentieth, our Admirall beeing inuited to the Engliſh Conſuls houſe went aſhoare, where at his arriuall he was entertayned with ſmall ſhot and Ordnance both from the Towne and Caſtle, and at night with Fire-workes, running of Horſes, ſhooting of Ordnance, and other ſports; this day Captaine Iohn Roper was diſpatched with Letters for England. The ſixe and twentieth, our Admirall returned aboord the Towne, giuing him a friendly farewell with their Ordnance.

The ſeuen and twentieth, the Admirall with the reſt of the Fleet ſet ſayle, leauing the Marmaduke behind, whoſe Captaine and Maſter were both ſicke aſhoare. The eight and twentieth at midnight, we met with ſeuen ſayle of Flemmings ſhips of Warre, neere Cape Paul, vnder the command of Captaine Haughton Admirall of Zealand, who the next morning, after he had ſaluted our Admirall with Ordnance, came aboord in his Boat, he told our Admirall hee had two and twentie ſhips of Warre vnder his charge, whom he had diuided into Squadrons, imploying them ſome without the Streights, and ſome within. The one and thirtieth, wee came to an anchor againe in Alicant Road.

The firſt of February, the Reare-Admirall put to Sea with foure ſhippes, to ſee if he could meet with any Pirats, and this day dyed Captaine Euſabey Caue, Captaine of the Hercules, and the Admirall diſpoſed the command of the ſame ſhip to Captaine Alexander Bret. The fifth, the Reare-Admirall returned with the other foure ſhips but had met none.

The ſixth, the wind being Eaſterly, the Fleet weighed Anchor about midnight, ſhaping our courſe for Malhaga, during the time of our ſtaying here we refreſhed our ſicke men aſhoare, hauing conuenient houſes prouided for them in the fields Gardens, with carefull people to attend them, prouiding them ſuch neceſſaries as they ſhould need. The Conſtant, for her part, ſent aſhore ninetie two perſons, who as they recouered their ſtrength were ſent for aboord, yet notwithſtanding all their care, at their departure they were forced to leaue behind them fortie two deſperately ill, the Admirall taking order both for them and others, that they ſhould bee carefully prouided for vntill the Fleets returne.

The ſixteenth, came into the Road the Vice-Admirall and his Squadron with the two Pinnaſſes which we ſo long expected out of England, the one the Mercurie, of the burden of two hundred and fortie tunnes, ſixtie fiue men, and twentie peeces of Braſſe Ordnance, vnder the command of Captaine Phineas Pet; the other the Spy, of the burden of one hundred and ſixtie tunnes, fiftie fiue men, and eighteene Peeces of Braſſe Ordnance, vnder the command of Captaine Edward Gyles: there came alſo two Merchants ſhips with a ſupply of victuals for his Maieſties ſhips.

The eighteenth, the Zouch Phenix, the Hercules, the Neptune, and the Spy put to Sea, with order to ply betweene Gibraltar and Shutte point. The nineteenth, the Anthelope put to Sea, and with thoſe ſhips which went out the day before, had order to ride in Shutie Road, to ſee if they could deſcry any Pirats come into the Streights.

The three and twentieth, the Reare-Admirall put to Sea with fiue other ſhippes, the Golden Phenix, the Samuel, the Centurion, the Marigold, and the Reſtore, with order to ride in Tanſey Bay, where they were to attend the comming in of diuers Pirats whom we heard to be without the Streights mouth.

The foure and twentieth, the Anthelope with the reſt of the ſhippes returned, bringing with them a prize being a ſmall Frenchman, which had fiftie Buts of Oyle in her, and diuers Moores and Iewes, men, women and children, Paſſengers bound from Tituon to Algier, all the Turkes ſauing themſelues in their Boat: this day alſo came into the Road Captaine Gyles Penne, in a ſhip of Briſtoll, from Tituon Road, bringing a Letter from the Mogoden to our Admirall, and two Moores who treated with him concerning the redemption of their people, whom our ſhips had taken, offering for ſo many Moores, ſo many Engliſh, whom they held in the Towne as ſlaues, hauing bought them of the Turkes Pirats. The ſeuen and twentieth, the Samuel and the Centurion returned into the Road from Tanſey, then alſo went out the Anthelope, the Zouch Phenix, the Barbarie, the Neptune and the Reſtore, with order to ride at Shutey, to ſee if they could diſcouer any Pirats comming into the Streights, the wind being Weſterly. The eight and twentieth, the wind likewiſe Weſterly, the Reformation hauing taken in ſome of the Captiues, had order to weigh and ſet ſayle for Tituon, to treat with the Moores, and to take in her company the Samuel, the Bonauenture, and the ſhip of Briſtoll, where the ſame day about noone they came to an Anchor in the Road of Tituon in twelue fathome water, the wind at Weſt.

The fourth of March, Maſter Aſhfield, Miniſter of the Reformation dyed, much lamented of the whole company, of whom in the extreame of their ſickneſſes they had receiued much comfort. The fifth, hauing a faire gale at South-eaſt, our Admirall with the reſt of the Fleet weighed Anchor, and ſet ſayle for Gibraltar, hauing concluded nothing with the Mogoden. The ſixth, wee came to an Anchor in Gibraltar Road, where wee found our Vice-Admirall with his Squadron.

The thirteenth, we came to an Anchor in Malhaga Road.

The eight and twentieth, about eight in the morning, the Admirall and Reare-Admirall ſet ſayle for Alicant.

The ſecond of Aprill dyed Captaine Manwaring. The fourteenth, about three in the afternoone wee came to an Anchor in Alicant Road, where wee found our Admirall with the reſt of the Fleet: here our Admirall had hyred a Pollacre about the burden of one hundred and twentie tunne, for that ſhe was reported to bee an excellent Sayler, and likewiſe bought three Brigandines which rowed with nine Oares on a ſide: hee alſo hyred a houſe wherein hee made diuers workes for the firing of the ſhips within the Mould of Algier.

The one and twentieth, we receiued Letters out of England, by a Poſt ſent from Malhaga, ſignifying a remaynder of victuals, which wee expected, was arriued at Malhaga. The fiue and twentieth, about nine in the morning, the whole Fleet ſayle for Alicant Road, beeing bound for Firma terra, to ſupply our wants for wood. The eight and twentieth in the euening, hauing fitted our ſelues with wood, we ſet ſayle for Mayorke to take in water. The nine and twentieth, in the after-noone, we came to an Anchor in Mayorke Road. The Towne of Mayorke is large and well fortified, the people induſtrious, both men, women and children giuen to labour, louing and courteous to ſtrangers: heere wee found all manner of victuals in plentie and at eaſie rates. Their chiefe Merchandiſe are Oyle, Wood, and Cheeſe, whereof the Countrey affoordeth plentie.

The one and twentieth of May, at ſixe in the after-noone, we came to an Anchor in Algier Road, order being firſt giuen by our Admirall how euery ſhip ſhould berth herſelfe.

They come againe to Algier.

The ſhips being come to an Anchor in their orders, our Admirall cauſed ſixe of the Merchants ſhips preſently to weigh, with directions to ply off and on of the Weſtermoſt part, keeping as neere the ſhoare, as conueniently they might, to preuent the comming in of any Pirats betweene the Fleet and the ſhoare. In the beginning of this night, the Boats and Brigandines appointed for the aſſiſtance of two ſhippes, which our Admirall reſolued ſhould that night goe into the Mould, and there to ſet themſelues on fire, being chained and linked to the Pirats ſhips, repayred aboord our Admirall, there to receiue their directions. The manner and preparations for firing of the ſhips was thus.

Firſt, there were two ſmall ſhips which we had taken from the Turkes, the one of the burden of an hundred tunnes, the other of ſixtie, with great ſtore of fire-workes in them. There was layd in them plentie of dry Wood, Wood of Ocham, Pitch, Rozen, Tarre, Brimſtone and other Materials fit to take fire: they had likewiſe in them Chaines and Grapnels of Iron to faſten themſelues to the ſhips which they were to fire: they had alſo Boats to bring off their men when they had fired the ſhips: then were there three Brigandines fitted with fire-bals, buckets of wild-fire, and fire Pikes to make their fire-workes faſt vnto the ſhips: there was alſo a Gund-lod fitted with fire-workes, Chaines and Grapnels of Iron; ſhe was to goe into the middeſt of the ſhips in the Mould, where faſtning her to ſome ſhip, was to be ſet on fire. Shee had likewiſe with her a Boat to bring off her men. Likewiſe, there were ſeuen Boates which wee called Boats of reſcue, well filled with armed men, who were to reſcue and releeue the Boats of execution, if they ſhould chance to be purſued by other Boats or Gallies at their comming off. Theſe had alſo fire-workes in them, to fire the ſhips which rode without the Mould: theſe Boats being all aboord, the Admirall ſent for moſt of the Captaines and Maſters in the Fleet, to aduiſe whether it were fit to attempt it with Boats and Brigandines, in regard it was little wind, and that Weſterly, ſo that it was impoſſible for the ſhips to get in. After ſome deliberation, it was concluded, that it was not fit, for that the ſureſt and moſt certaine meanes of firing was by the ſhips which were to bee made faſt to the ſhippes in the Mould, and to burne with them. Whereupon it was deferred for that time till a fitter opportunitie was offered. The two and twentieth at night, there were like preparations made, but deferred for like reaſons. The three and twentieth, in the beginning of the night wee had a freſh gale of wind at South by South-weſt, continuing the ſpace of two houres or more, with Thunder, Lightning, and ſome drops of Raine: the two ſhips weighed, and with the Brigandines and Boats ſet forwards towards the Mould, but the wind ſhifting before they came neere, they were forced alſo to giue ouer for that night.

The foure and twentieth at night, after a great ſhowre of Raine, wee had the wind out of the Bay at South South-weſt, the weather then cleering vp, both the ſhips and Boats aduanced themſelues towards the Mould, as before they had done: but comming within leſſe then Muſket ſhot of the Moulds head it fell calme, ſo that the ſhips could by no meanes get in, the Boats aud Brigandines finding that they were diſcouered, by reaſon of the brightneſſe of the Moone, which was then at full, and hearing it reported by a Chriſtian Captiue which did ſwimme from the Towne the night before to the ſhips, that rhe Turkes had left their ſhips without guard, ſauing one or two in a ſhip, as fearing no ſuch attempt from vs. And moreouer, hearing the Alarum giuen to the Towne by thoſe which kept watch on the walls, with good reſolution went on, but wanting wind to nouriſh and diſperſe the fire, the fire-workes tooke no effect at all. In this ſeruice were onely ſixe men ſlaine out-right, foure or fiue dangerouſly hurt (which not long after dyed) and ſome thirteene ſleightly hurt, yet notwithſtanding, the attempt was giuen vnder the wals of the Towne, where both ſmall ſhot and Ordnance played continually vpon them: the hurt done our men was their comming off, for that they were got into the Mould before the Towne was riſen, and beeing in, the ſhippes in the Mould defended them both from ſmall ſhot and Ordnance of the Towne, our Boates ſtill keeping the ſhippes betweene them and the Towne.

The reſt of this Iournall contayning their returne, &c. is for breuitie, omitted. Among many Engliſh which ſince the ſtirring of this Waſpes Neſt, haue bin ſtung, wee haue thought fit to adde to the glory of God, and honour of the Engliſh: theſe two ſtrange deliuerances following, the Stories of two ſhips of Briſtow which tooke their takers.

The fiue and twentieth, there came in foure ſayle of Pirates by the Weſter-moſt point of Land, notwithſtanding ſixe ſhips were appointed to lye off at that place, for the wind being Weſtward and a great Current ſetting to the Eaſtward our ſhips were put ſo farre to lee-ward that they could not preuent the Pirats comming in betweene the ſhoare and them, but yet the Bonauenture looſed ſo neere, that there paſſed ſome ſhot betweene her and the Pirats ſhips, but no hurt done: this night our Admirall and the whole Fleet weighed Anchor and ſtood off to the Sea.

The ſix and twentieth, the fore-part of the day, the wind was ſhifting to and fro, from the South-eaſt to the South-weſt; in the after-noone at South, and South South-eaſt hard gale and raynie weather; and at night hauing the wind ſhifting at South and South-weſt, we played off and on all night by a wind.

The eight and twentieth, we had faire weather the wind Weſterly, this night the Bonauenture, and the Hercules put a Pirat aſhoare, he hauing an hundred and thirtie Turkes in her, and twelue poore Chriſtians Captiues, they were all drowned but twelue Turkes, who got the ſhoare by ſwimming.

The one and thirtieth in the morning, our Boates tooke vp two Genowayes Captiues, who aduentured to ſwimme from the Towne to the ſhips. They told that the ſame night our ſhippes ſtood off to Sea, there came into the Mould ſeuen of the beſt ſhips belonging to Algier, and that if we had ſtayed they had fallen into our laps. They likewiſe told vs, that the Turkes had Boomed vp the Mould, ſo that it was not poſſible for eyther ſhippe or Boate to get into to fire the ſhips, which were now filled with armed men, beſides three Gallies and fifteene Boates which lay continually well fitted without the Mould before the Boome for a Guard, &c.

CHAP. VI.

The Relation of the Iacob, a ſhip of Briſtoll, of one hundred and twentie Tunnes, which was about the end of October, 1621. taken by the Turkiſh Pirats of Argier: and within fiue dayes after, foure Engliſh youths did valiantly ouercome thirteene of the ſaid Turkes, and brought the ſhip to Saint Lucas in Spaine, where they ſold nine of the Turkes for Gallie-ſlaues: with mention of ſome other like Engliſh aduentures.

NEere the latter end of October laſt, 1621. a ſhip belonging to the Citie of Briſtoll, being about the burden of one hundred and twenty Tuns, was met withall and ſet vpon by Turkes or Pirats of Argier, where after a long and ſharpe fight (being in the mouth of the Straits of Gibraltar) the Engliſh ſhip being oppreſt with the multitude of their enemies, was taken, their Ordnance, Cables, Anchors, Sailes, Ship and men pillaged, ranſacked, and at the mercy of the inſulting Barbarians, who to make their worke the ſurer, tooke all the Engliſh-men out of the ſhip, except foure youths, whoſe names were, Iohn Cooke, William Ling, Dauid Iones, and Robert Tuckey, into which ſhip the Turkes did put thirteene of their owne men to command the Engliſh, and to bring the ſhip as a prize to Argier; amongſt which one of the Pirats was appointed Captaine, being a ſtrong, able, ſterne, and reſolute fellow.

Theſe foure poore youths being thus fallen into the hands of mercileſſe Infidels, began to ſtudie and complot all the meanes they could for the obtayning of their freedomes: Firſt, they conſidered the lamentable and miſerable eſtates that they were like to be in, as to be debard for euer from ſeeing their friends and Countrey, to be chained, beaten, made ſlaues, and to eate the bread of affliction in the Gallies, all the remainder of their vnfortunate liues, to haue their heads ſhauen, to feed on courſe dyet, to haue hard boords for beds, and which was worſt of all, neuer to be partakers of the heauenly Word and Sacraments.

Thus being quite hopeleſſe, hapleſſe, and for any thing they knew, for euer helpleſſe, they ſayled fiue dayes and nights vnder the command of the Pirats, when on the fifth night, God in his great mercy ſhewed them a meanes for their wiſhed for eſcape, for in the dead of the night, the wind began to ariſe, and in ſhort ſpace it blew ſo ſtiffe that they were enforced to ſtrike both their top Sayles; and at laſt, it encreaſed to ſuch a guſt or ſtorme, that they muſt take in their maine Saile, and being vnable to doe it themſelues, Iohn Cooke and William Ling did call to the Turkes for helpe: whereupon the Captaine himſelfe came to helpe them; who ſtanding by the ſhips ſide, betweene the foreſaid Iohn and Dauid Iones, lending his hand to hale in the ſaile, the ſaid Iohn and Dauid ſuddenly tooke him by the breech and threw him ouer-boord, but by fortune hee fell into the bunt of the ſayle, where quickly catching hold of a rope, he (being a very ſtrong man) had almoſt gotten into the ſhip againe: which Iohn Cooke perceiuing, leaped ſpeedily to the Pumpe, and tooke off the Pumpe brake or handle, and caſt it to William Ling, bidding him knocke him downe, which he was not long in doing, but lifting vp the woodden weapon, he gaue him ſuch a palt on the pate, as made his braines forſake the poſſeſſion of his head, with which his body fell into the Sea.

An Obiection may be made here, why the Turke cried not to his fellowes at firſt for helpe, or how theſe things could be done, but the reſt of his company muſt either ſee or heare it: to which I anſwere, that at Sea a Guſt, Flaw, or Storme, hath many times a louder voice then a man; beſides, when Mariners doe hale or pull any thing, they doe make a noyſe, as it were crying ha woet hale men hale, which with the noyſe of the wind whizzing and hizzing in the ſhrowds and cordage, would ouercome and drowne the voice or crie of any man whatſoeuer. Beſides, his companions were all buſie, ſome at the mizen, ſome at the ſprit-ſaile, ſome to trim the fore-ſaile, and the night exceeding darke, all theſe things concurring, and chiefly, God graciouſly aſſiſting, thus theſe braue Lads began the buſineſſe luckily.

Nor muſt I forget Robert Tuckey, who was imployed all this while in a place of maine importance, for he ſtood at the Helme, and in all the weather guided the Ship; now after the Captaine was thus caſhierd, Iohn Cooke ran haſtily vp the halfe Decke to the Maſters Cabine, neere which, were ſtanding ſix or ſeuen Turkes, but hee being nothing daunted or diſcouraged for them, ſlipt roughly by them, and gat out two good Cuttleaxes, or ſhort Swords, one of which he deliuered to William Ling, withall ſaying, courage my fellowes and Countrey-men, God ſtrengthen and aſſiſt vs; with that, they laid about them ſo manfully, that they droue the Turkes from place to place in the Ship, and hauing courſed them from the Poope to the Forecaſtle, they there valiantly killed two of them, and gaue another a dangerous wound or two, who to eſcape the further fury of their Swords, leap'd ſuddenly ouer-boord to goe ſeeke his Captaine. Thus foure of the thirteene Turkes being made ſure for doing any harme, they chaſed and followed the other nine ſo cloſe, that they (to ſaue themſelues) being alſo many of them, ſore hurt and wounded, ranne betweene the Ships Decks; whereupon the Engliſh men faſtned the Deckes to keepe them vnder: the Turkes not knowing how to be reuenged, ran afterward toward the Helme, and vnſhipt their Whip-ſtaffe, or as ſome call it, a Whip-ſtocke (which is the ſtaffe that a Mariner holds in his hand, when he guides or ſteeres a Ship) by which meanes the Engliſh men were in ſome diſtreſſe, by reaſon the Sip lay tumbling and rowling vnguided in the raging and boyſtrous billowes of the Sea: at laſt, Iohn Cooke and William Ling got each of them a Muſket, which they quickly charged, and went downe where the nine Turkes were, making offers to ſhoote at them, at which they were much terrified; whereupon they quickly ſhip'd their Whip-ſtocke againe, deliuering the Helme to Robert Tuckey, and then preſently they ſtowed all the Turkes vnder the Hatches, where they kept them cloſe till the next morning, and then as they had occaſion to vſe them, they would call vp two or three of them at a time, to hale and pull Sheetes, Tackes, Braces and Boleins, to hoyſe and ſtrike Sayles, or any ſuch neceſſary and laborious imployments; in all which, the Engliſh made the Turkes attend them, and directing their courſe for the Port of Saint Lucas in Spaine, they in ſhort time (by Gods ayde) happily and ſafely arriued at the ſaid Port, where they ſold the nine Turkes for Gally-ſlaues, for a good ſumme of money, and as I thinke, a great deale more then they were worth.

Nor doe I write this to the intent that any man ſhould preſume that their owne ſtrengths, valour or courage, is ſufficient to doe theſe or the like actions, for they are not ordinary, and therefore man is but made the ordinary inſtrument of an extraordinary power, and he that ſhall attribute ſuch things as theſe to the arme of fleſh and bloud, is forgetfull, ingratefull, and in a manner Atheiſticall.

See the Hiſtory in Hack. Voyages.

One Iohn Fox an expert Mariner, and a good approoued and ſufficient Gunner, was (in the raigne of Queene Elizabeth) taken by the Turkes, and kept eighteene yeeres in moſt miſerable bondage and ſlauery, at the end of which time, he eſpied his opportunity (and God aſſiſting him withall) that hee ſlew his Keeper, and fled to the Seas ſide, where he found a Gally with one hundred and fifty Captiue Chriſtians, which hee ſpeedily waying their Anchor, ſet Saile, and fell to worke like men, and ſafely arriued in Spaine; by which meanes, he freed himſelfe and a number of poore ſoules from long and intolerable ſeruitude; after which, the ſaid Iohn Fox came into England, and the Queene (being rightly informed of his braue exploit) did graciouſly entertaine him for her Seruant, and allowed him a yeerely Penſion.

Cap. Nicholes.

Captaine Nichols with a Ship of London, called the Dolphin, fought a long and bloudy fight, with many of the Turkiſh men of warre at one time, at which time hee ſunke ſome of them, ſlew many of their men, and hauing his owne Ship exceedingly rent and torne with the Enemies great ſhot, yet at laſt it pleaſed God to deliuer him from them, ſo that hee ſafely arriued at home.

Maſter Malam.

Maſter William Malam of Rotherhith within theſe three yeeres was ſet vpon by theſe Rouers, and after a long fight, being much hurt by the Ordnance of the Turkes (the night comming on) which made the fight to ceaſe, when the Generall of the Pirates paſt his word, and bound it with an Oath, that if Maſter Malam would come aboord his Ship all night, that hee ſhould well and ſafely bee ſet aboord againe his owne Ship the next morning, vpon which word and oath Maſter Malam went aboord the Turke, and a Merchant with him; but firſt, before he went, commanded his Mate to watch his opportunitie, and ſteale away with the Ship in the night, if he could, which fell out as he wiſhed, whereby all the Merchants goods were ſaued, and the Ship ſafely arriued here at London: but in the morning, when the Turkes did perceiue the Engliſh Ship was gone, then would they haue put Maſter Malam and the Merchant that was with him, to death, whereupon he vrged him with his oath and promiſe, which was, that he ſhould come and goe ſafely, and that if a Chriſtian had made him or any man ſuch a promiſe, and bound it with a vow, hee would haue kept his word. And (that for any thing hee knew) his Ship being ſo dangerouſly hurt by them, might be ſunke in the night, and not eſcaped away as he imagined. Now whilſt they were in this diſcourſe, preſently came a Saile in ſight, which afterward they found to be a ſmall Scottiſh Ship bound for England, whom the Turkes quickly tooke, and pillag'd at their pleaſure, taking from them their Sailes, Cables, Anchors and all things neceſſary for their vſe or preſeruation, and hauing robd, a rifled the poore Scot in that manner, they put Maſter Malam and the Merchant into her, to trie their fortunes, either to ſinke or ſwim, but it pleaſed God, they ſafely arriued in the Weſt part of England, where they came home by land ſad and diſconſolate, becauſe they could not heare any newes of the Ship: but the ſame night that hee came home, before day, there was happy tidings brought of the Ships ſafe arriuall into the Riuer of Thames.

All theſe things are true vpon mine owne knowledge, and theſe worthy Mariners that haue beene ſo deliuered, doe, and euer did, attribute all the meanes of their deliuerance to the mighty hand of God; and they are ſo farre from taking any of theſe things to their owne praiſe or glory, that ſome of them haue euer done their beſt to ſuppreſſe them from being printed.

CHAP. VII.

The wonderfull recouery of the Exchange of Briſtow, from the Turkiſh Pirats of Argier, publiſhed by IOHN RAWLINS, heere abbreuiated.

IN the yeere 1621. the firſt of Nouember, there was one Iohn Rawlins, borne in Rocheſter, and dwelling three and twenty yeere in Plimmoth, imployed to the ſtrait of Gibraltar, by Maſter Richard, and Steuen Treuiles, Merchants of Plimmoth, and fraighted in a Barke, called the Nicholas of Plimmoth, of the burden of forty Tun, which had alſo in her company another ſhip of Plimmoth, called the George Bonauenture of ſeuenty Tun burthen, or thereabout; which by reaſon of her greatneſſe beyond the other, I will name the Admirall; and Iohn Rawlins Barke ſhall, if you pleaſe, be the Vice-admirall. Theſe two according to the time of the yeere, had a faire paſſage, and by the eighteenth of the ſame moneth came to a place at the entring of the ſtraits, named Trafflegar: but the next morning, being in the ſight of Gibraltar, at the very mouth of the ſtraits, the watch deſcried fiue ſaile of ſhips, who as it ſeemed, vſed all the means they could to come neere vs, and we as we had cauſe, vſed the ſame means to go as farre from them: yet did their Admirall take in both his top ſailes, that either we might not ſuſpect them, or that his owne company might come vp the cloſer together. At laſt perceiuing vs Chriſtians, they fell from deuices to apparent diſcouery of hoſtility, and making out againſt vs: we againe ſuſpecting them Pirats, tooke our courſe to eſcape from them, and made all the ſailes we poſſibly could for Tirriff, or Gibraltar: but all we could doe, could not preuent their approach. For ſuddenly one of them came right ouer againſt vs to wind-ward, and ſo fell vpon our quarter: another came vpon our luffe, and ſo threatned vs there, and at laſt all fiue chaſed vs, making great ſpeed to ſurpriſe vs.

Their Admirall was called Callfater, hauing vpon her maine top-ſaile, two top-gallant ſailes, one aboue another. But whereas we thought them all fiue to be Turkiſh ſhips of war, we afterwards vnderſtood, that two of them were their prizes, the one a ſmal ſhip of London, the other of the Weſt-countrey, that came out of the Quactath laden with figges, and other Merchandiſe, but now ſubiect to the fortune of the Sea, and the captiuity of Pirats. But to our buſineſſe. Three of theſe ſhips got much vpon vs, and ſo much that ere halfe the day was ſpent, the Admirall who was the beſt ſailer, fetcht vp the George Bonauenture, and made booty of it. The Vice-admirall againe being neereſt vnto the leſſer Barke, whereof Iohn Rawlins was Maſter, ſhewed him the force of a ſtronger arme, and by his Turkiſh name, called Villa-Riſe, commanded him in like ſort to ſtrike his ſailes, and ſubmit to his mercy, which not to be gaine-ſaied nor preuented, was quickly done: and ſo Rawlins with his Barke was quickly taken, although the Reare-Admirall being the worſt ſayler of the three, called Reggipriſe, came not in, till all was done.

The ſame day before night, the Admirall either loth to peſter himſelfe with too much company, or ignorant of the commodity was to be made by the ſale of Engliſh priſoners, or daring not to truſt them in his company, for feare of mutinies, and exciting others to rebellion; ſet twelue perſons who were in the George Bonauenture on the land, and diuers other Engliſh, whom he had taken before, to trie their fortunes in an vnknowne Countrey. But Villa-Riſe, the Vice-Admirall that had taken Iohn Rawlins, would not ſo diſpence with his men, but commanded him and fiue more of his company to be brought aboord his ſhip, leauing in his Barke three men and his boy, with thirteene Turkes and Moores, who were queſtionleſſe ſufficient to ouer-maſter the other and direct the Barke to Harbour. Thus they ſailed directly for Argier; but the night following, followed them with great tempeſt and foule weather, which ended not without ſome effect of a ſtorme: for they loſt the ſight of Rawlins Barke, called the Nicholas, and in a manner loſt themſelues, though they ſeemed ſafe a ſhipboord, by fearefull coniecturing what ſhould become of vs: at laſt, by the two and twentieth of the ſame moneth, they, or we (chuſe you whether) arriued at Argier, and came in ſafety within the Mould, but found not our other Barke there; nay, though we earneſtly inquired after the ſame yet heard we nothing to our ſatisfaction; but much matter was miniſtred to our diſcomfort and amazement. For although the Captaine and our ouer-ſeers, were loth we ſhould haue any conference with our Country-men; yet did we aduenture to informe our ſelues of the preſent affaires, both of the Towne, and the ſhipping: ſo that finding many Engliſh at worke in other ſhips, they ſpared not to tell vs the danger we were in, and the miſchiefes we muſt needs incurre, as being ſure if we were not vſed like ſlaues, to be ſold as ſlaues: for there had beene fiue hundred brought into the market for the ſame purpoſe, and aboue a hundred hanſome youths compelled to turne Turkes, or made ſubiect to more vilder proſtitution, and all Engliſh: yet like good Chriſtians, they bade vs be of good cheere, and comfort our ſelues in this, that Gods trials were gentle purgations, and theſe croſſes were but to cleanſe the droſſe from the gold, and bring vs out of the fire againe more cleare and louely. Yet I muſt needs confeſſe, that they afforded vs reaſon for this cruelty, as if they determined to be reuenged of our laſt attempt to fire their ſhips in the Mould, and therefore proteſted to ſpare none, whom they could ſurpriſe, and take aliue, but either to ſell them for money, ney,or torment them to ſerue their owne turnes. Now their cuſtomes and vſages in both theſe was in this manner.

Firſt,concerning the firſt. The Baſhaw had the ouer-ſeeing of all priſoners, who were preſented vnto him at their firſt comming into the harbour, and ſo choſe one out of euery eight for a preſent or fee to himſelfe: the reſt were rated by the Captaines,and ſo ſent to the Market to be ſold; whereat if either there were repining, or any drawing backe,then certaine Moores and Officers attended either to beate you forward,or thruſt you into the ſides with Goades; and this was the manner of the ſelling of Slaues.

Execrable tortures by Helliſh Pirats inflicted on the Engliſh to make them Renegadoes and Apoſtataes.

Secondly,concerning their enforcing them, either to turne Turke, or to attend their filthines and impieties,although it would make a Chriſtians heart bleed to heare of the ſame, yet muſt the truth not be hid,nor the terror left vntold. They commonly lay them on their naked backs or bellies,beating them ſo long, till they bleed at the noſe and mouth; and if yet they continue conſtant,then they ſtrike the teeth out of their heads,pinch them by their tongues,and vſe many other ſorts of tortures to conuert them; nay,many times they lay them their whole length in the ground like a graue,and ſo couer them with boords,threatning to ſtarue them,if they will not turne; and ſo many euen for feare of torment and death, make their tongues betray their hearts to a moſt fearefull wickedneſſe, and ſo are circumciſed with new names, and brought to confeſſe a new Religion. Others againe, I muſt confeſſe, who neuer knew any God, but their owne ſenſuall luſts and pleaſures,thought that any religion would ſerue their turnes, and ſo for preferment or wealth very voluntarily renounced their faith, and became Renegadoes in deſpight of any counſell which ſeemed to intercept them: and this was the firſt newes wee encountred with at our comming firſt to Argier.

Sale of the Engliſh.

The 26. of the ſame moneth, Iohn Rawlins his Barke, with his other three men and a boy, came ſafe into the Mould, and ſo were put all together to be carried before the Baſhaw, but that they tooke the Owners ſeruant,and Rawlings Boy, and by force and torment compelled them to turne Turkes: then were they in all ſeuen Engliſh,beſides Iohn Rawlins,of whom the Baſhaw tooke one,and ſent the reſt to their Captaines,who ſet a valuation vpon them, and ſo the Souldiers hurried vs like dogs into the Market,whereas men ſell Hacknies in England, we were toſſed vp and downe to ſee who would giue moſt for vs; and although we had heauy hearts, and looked with ſad countenances,yet many came to behold vs, ſometimes taking vs by the hand, ſometime turning vs round about,ſometimes feeling our brawnes and naked armes,and ſo beholding our prices written in our breaſts,they bargained for vs accordingly,and at laſt we were all ſold,and the Souldiers returned with the money to their Captaines.

Iohn Rawlins was the laſt, who was ſold, by reaſon of his lame hand, and bought by the Captaine that tooke him,euen that dog Villa Riſe, who better informing himſelfe of his skill fit to be a Pilot,and his experience to bee an ouer-ſeer, bought him and his Carpenter at very eaſie rates. For as we afterwards vnderſtood by diuers Engliſh Renegadoes,he paid for Rawlins but one hundred and fiftie Doublets,which make of Engliſh money ſeuen pound ten ſhillings. Thus was he and his Carpenter with diuers other ſlaues ſent into his ſhip to worke, and imployed about ſuch affaires,as belonged to the well rigging and preparing the ſame. But the villanous Turkes perceiuing his lame hand,and that he could not performe ſo much as other Slaues, quickly complained to their Patron, who as quickly apprehended the inconuenience; whereupon hee ſent for him the next day,and told him he was vnſeruiceable for his preſent purpoſe, and therefore vnleſſe he could procure fifteene pound of the Engliſh there for his ranſome, he would ſend him vp into the Countrey, where he ſhould neuer ſee Chriſtendome againe,and endure the extremity of a miſerable baniſhment.

The Exchange of Briſtow.

Chandler a Renegado.

But ſee how God worketh all for the beſt for his ſeruants, and confoundeth the preſumption of Tyrants,fruſtrating their purpoſes,to make his wonders knowne to the ſonnes of men, and releeues his people,when they leaſt thinke of ſuccour and releaſement. Whileſt Iohn Rawlins was thus terrified with the dogged anſwere of Villa Riſe,the Exchange of Briſtow,a ſhip formerly ſurpriſed by the Pirats,lay all vnrigged in the Harbour,till at laſt one Iohn Goodale,an Engliſh Turke,with his confederates, vnderſtanding ſhee was a good ſailer,and might be made a proper Man of Warre,bought her from the Turkes that tooke her,and prepared her for their owne purpoſe: now the Captaine that ſet them on worke, was alſo an Engliſh Renegado, by the name of Rammetham Riſe, but by his Chriſten name Henrie Chandler, who reſolued to make Goodale Maſter ouer her; and becauſe they were both Engliſh Turkes, hauing the command notwithſtanding of many Turkes and Moores,they concluded to haue all Engliſh ſlaues to goe in her, and for their Gunners,Engliſh and Dutch Renegadoes, and ſo they agreed with the Patrons of nine Engliſh,and one French Slaue for their ranſoms,who were preſently imployed to rig and furniſh the ſhip for a Man of Warre,and while they were thus buſied, two of Iohn Rawlins men, who were taken with him,were alſo taken vp to ſerue in this Man of Warre,their names,Iames Roe, and Iohn Dauies,the one dwelling in Plimmoth, and the other in Foy, where the Commander of this ſhip was alſo borne,by which occaſion they came acquainted,ſo that both the Captaine,and the Maſter promiſed them good vſage, vpon the good ſeruice they ſhould performe in the voyage, and withall demanded of him, if he knew of any Engliſhman to be bought, that could ſerue them as a Pilot, both to direct them out of Harbour, and conduct them in their voyage. For in truth neither was the Captaine a Mariner, nor any Turke in her of ſufficiency to diſpoſe of her through the Straites in ſecuritie, nor oppoſe any enemie, that ſhould hold it out brauely againſt them. Dauies quickly replied, that as farre as he vnderſtood, Villa Riſe would ſell Iohn Rawlins his Maſter, and Commander of the Barke which was taken, a man euery way ſufficient for Sea affaires, being of great reſolution and good experience; and for all he had a lame hand, yet had he a ſound heart and noble courage for any attempt or aduenture.

When the Captaine vnderſtood thus much, he imployed Dauies to ſearch for Rawlins, who at laſt lighting vpon him, asked him if the Turke would ſell him: Rawlins ſuddenly anſwered, that by reaſon of his lame hand he was willing to part with him; but becauſe he had disburſed money for him, he would gaine ſomething by him, and ſo prized me at three hundred Dooblets, which amounteth to fifteene pound Engliſh; which I muſt procure, or incurre ſorer indurances When Dauies had certified thus much, the Turks a ſhip-boord conferred about the matter, and the Maſter whoſe Chriſten name was Iohn Goodale ioyned with two Turkes, who were conſorted with him, and disburſed one hundred Dooblets a piece, and ſo bought him of Villa Riſe, ſending him into the ſaid ſhip, called the Exchange of Briſtow, as well to ſuperuiſe what had been done, as to order what was left vndone, but eſpecially to fit the ſailes, and to accommodate the ſhip, all which Rawlins was very carefull and indulgent in, not yet thinking of any peculiar plot of deliuerance, more then a generall deſire to be freed from this Turkiſh ſlauerie, and inhumane abuſes.

By the ſeuenth of Ianuarie, the ſhip was prepared with twelue good caſt Pieces, and all manner of munition and prouiſion, which belonged to ſuch a purpoſe, and the ſame day haled out of the Mould of Argier, with this company, and in this manner.

There were in her ſixtie three Turkes and Moores, nine Engliſh Slaues, and one French; foure Hollanders that were free men, to whom the Turkes promiſed one priſe or other, and ſo to returne to Holland; or if they were diſpoſed to goe backe againe for Argier, they ſhould haue great reward and no enforcement offered, but continue as they would, both their religion and their cuſtomes: and for their Gunners they had two of our Souldiers, one Engliſh and one Dutch Renegado; and thus much for the companie. For the manner of ſetting out, it was as vſuall as in other ſhips, but that the Turkes delighted in the oſtentous brauerie of their Streamers, Banners, and Top-ſayles; the ſhip being a handſome ſhip, and well built for any purpoſe: the Slaues and Engliſh were imployed vnder Hatches about the Ordnance, and other workes of order, and accommodating themſelues: all which Iohn Rawlins marked, as ſuppoſing it an intolerable ſlauerie to take ſuch paines, and be ſubiect to ſuch dangers, and ſtill to enrich other men and maintaine their voluptuous filthineſſe and liues, returning themſelues as Slaues, and liuing worſe then their Dogs amongſt them. Whereupon hee burſt out into theſe, or ſuch like abrupt ſpeeches: Oh Helliſh ſlauerie to be thus ſubiect to Dogs! Oh, God ſtrengthen my heart and hand, and ſomething ſhall be done to eaſe vs of theſe miſchiefes, and deliuer vs from theſe cruell Mahumetan Dogs. The other Slaues pittying his diſtraction (as they thought) bad him ſpeake ſoftly, leſt they ſhould all fare the worſe for his diſtemperature. The worſe (quoth Rawlins) what can be worſe? I will either attempt my deliuerance at one time, or another, or periſh in the enterpriſe: but if you would be contented to hearken after a releaſe, and ioyne with me in the action, I would not doubt of facilitating the ſame, and ſhew you a way to make your credits thriue by ſome worke of amazement, and augment your glorie in purchaſing your libertie, I prethee be quiet (ſaid they againe) and thinke not of impoſſibilities: yet if you can but open ſuch a doore of reaſon and probabilitie, that we be not condemned for deſperate and diſtracted perſons, in pulling the Sunne as it were out of the Firmament: wee can but ſacrifice our liues, and you may be ſure of ſecrecie and taciturnitie.

The fifteenth of Ianuarie, the morning water brought vs neere Cape de Gatt, hard by the ſhoare, we hauing in our companie a ſmal Turkiſh ſhip of Warre, that followed vs out of Argier the next day, and now ioyning with vs, gaue vs notice of ſeuen ſmall veſſels, ſixe of them being Sattees, and one Pollack, who very quickly appeared in ſight, and ſo we made toward them: but hauing more aduantage of the Pollack, then the reſt, and loth to loſe all, we both fetcht her vp, and brought her paſt hope of recouerie, which when ſhe perceiued, rather then ſhe would voluntarily come into the ſlauerie of theſe Mahumetans, ſhe ran her ſelfe a ſhoare, and ſo all the men forſooke her; we ſtill followed as neere as we durſt, and for feare of ſplitting, let fall our anchors, making out both our boates, wherein were many Musketeers, and ſome Engliſh and Dutch Renegadoes, who came aboord home at their Conge, and found three pieces of Ordnance, and foure Murtherers: but they ſtraightway threw them all ouer-boord to lighten the ſhip, and ſo they got her off, being laden with Hides, and Logwood for dying, and preſently ſent her to Argier, taking nine Turkes, and one Engliſh Slaue, out of one ſhip, and ſix out of the leſſe, which we thought ſufficient to man her.

In the rifling of this Catelaynia, our Turks fell at variance one with another, and in ſuch a manner, that we diuided our ſelues, the leſſer ſhip returned to Argier, and our Exchange tooke the opportunitie of the wind, and plyed out of the Streights, which reioyced Iohn Rawlins very much, as reſoluing on ſome Stratageme, when opportunitie ſhould ſerue: in the meane-while, the Turkes began to murmurre, and would not willingly goe into the Marr Granada, as the phraſe is amongſt them: notwithſtanding the Moores being very ſuperſtitious, were contented to be directed by their Hoſhea, who with vs, ſignifieth a Witch, and is of great account and reputation amongſt them, as not going in any great Veſſell to Sea without one, and obſeruing whatſoeuer he concludeth out of his Diuination: the Ceremonies he vſeth are many, and when they come into the Ocean, euery ſecond or third night he maketh his Coniuration; he beginneth and endeth with Prayer, vſing many Characters, and calling vpon God by diuers names: yet at this time, all that he did conſiſted in theſe particulars.

Ceremonies of their diuining.

Vpon the ſight of two great ſhips, and as wee were afraid the chaſing, beeing ſuppoſed to bee Spaniſh men of Warre, a great ſilence is commanded in the ſhip, and when all is done, the company giueth as great a ſkrich; the Captaine ſtill comming to Iohn Rawlins, and ſometimes making him take in all his ſayles, and ſometimes cauſing him to hoyſe them all out, as the Witch findeth by his Booke, and preſages; then haue they two Arrowes, and a Curtleaxe, lying vpon a Pillow naked; the Arrowes are one for the Turkes, and the other for the Chriſtians; then the Witch readeth, and the Captaine of ſome other taketh the Arrowes in their hand by the heads, and if the Arrow for the Chriſtians commeth ouer the head of the Arrow for the Turkes, then doe they aduance their ſayles, and will not endure the fight, whatſoeuer they ſee: but if the Arrow of the Turkes is found in the opening of the hand vpon the Arrow of the Chriſtians, then will they ſtay and encounter with any ſhippe whatſoeuer: the Curtleaxe is taken vp by ſome Childe, that is innocent, or rather ignorant of the Ceremonie, and ſo layd downe againe; then doe they obſerue, whether the ſame ſide is vppermoſt, which lay before, and ſo proceed accordingly.

They alſo obſerue Lunatickes and Changelings, and the Coniurer writeth downe their Sayings in a Booke, groueling on the ground, as if he whiſpered to the Deuill to tell him the truth, and ſo expoundeth the Letter, as it were by inſpiration. Many other fooliſh Rites they haue, whereon they doe dote as fooliſhly.

Whileſt he was buſied, and made demonſtration that all was finiſhed, the people in the ſhip gaue a great ſhout, and cryed out, a ſayle, a ſayle, which at laſt was diſcouered to bee another man of Warre of Turkes: for he made toward vs, and ſent his Boat aboord vs, to whom our Captaine complained, that being becalmed by the Southerne Cape, and hauing made no Voyage, the Turkes denyed to goe any further Northward: but the Captaine reſolued not to returne to Argier, except he could obtayne ſome Prize worthy his endurances, but rather to goe to Salle, and ſell his Chriſtians to victuall his ſhip; which the other Captaine apprehended for his honour, and ſo perſwaded the Turkes to be obedient vnto him; whereupon followed a pacication amongſt vs, and ſo that Turke tooke his courſe for the Streights, and wee put vp Northward, expecting the good houre of ſome beneficiall bootie.

All this while our ſlauery continued, and the Turkes with inſulting tyrannie ſet vs ſtill on worke in all baſe and ſeruile actions, adding ſtripes and inhumane reuilings, euen in our greateſt labour, whereupon Iohn Rawlins reſolued to obtayne his libertie, and ſurprize the ſhip; prouiding Ropes with broad ſpeckes of Iron, and all the Iron Crowes, with which hee knew a way, vpon conſent of the reſt, to ramme vp or tye faſt their Scuttels, Gratings, and Cabbins, yea, to ſhut vp the Captaine himſelfe with all his conſorts, and ſo to handle the matter, that vpon the watch-word giuen, the Engliſh being Maſters of the Gunner roome, Ordnance, and Powder, they would eyther blow them into the Ayre, or kill them as they aduentured to come downe one by one, if they ſhould by any chance open their Cabbins. But becauſe hee would proceed the better in his enterpriſe, as he had ſomewhat abruptly diſcouered himſelfe to the nine Engliſh ſlaues, ſo he kept the ſame diſtance with the foure Hollanders, that were free men, till finding them comming ſomewhat toward them, he acquainted them with the whole Conſpiracie, and they affecting the Plot, offered the aduenture of their liues in the buſineſſe. Then very warily he vndermined the Engliſh Renegado, which was the Gunner, and three more his Aſſociats, who at firſt ſeemed to retract. Laſt of all were brought in the Dutch Renegadoes, who were alſo in the Gunner roome, for alwayes there lay twelue there, fiue Chriſtians, and ſeuen Engliſh, and Dutch Turkes: ſo that when another motion had ſettled their reſolutions, and Iohn Rawlins his conſtancie had put new life as it were in the matter, the foure Hollanders very honeſtly, according to their promiſe, ſounded the Dutch Renegadoes, who with eaſie perſwaſion gaue their conſent to ſo braue an Enterprize; whereupon Iohn Rawlins, not caring whether the Engliſh Gunners would yeeld or no, reſolued in the Captaines morning watch, to make the attempt: But you muſt vnderſtand that where the Engliſh ſlaues lay, there hung vp alwayes foure or fiue Crowes of Iron, being ſtill vnder the carriages of the Peeces, and when the time approached being very darke, becauſe Iohn Rawlins would haue his Crow of Iron ready as other things were, and other men prepared in their ſeuerall places, in taking it out of the carriage, by chance, it hit on the ſide of the Peece, making ſuch a noyſe, that the Souldiers hearing it awaked the Turkes, and bade them come downe: whereupon the Boteſane of the Turkes deſcended with a Candle, and preſently ſearched all the ſlaues places, making much adoe of the matter, but finding neyther Hatchet nor Hammer, nor any thing elſe to moue ſuſpition of the Enterprize, more then the Crow of Iron, which lay ſlipped downe vnder the carriages of the Peeces, they went quietly vp againe, and certified the Captaine what had chanced, who ſatisfied himſelfe, that it was a common thing to haue a Crow of Iron ſlip from his place. But by this occaſion wee made ſtay of our attempt, yet were reſolued to take another or a better oportunitie.

For we ſayled ſtill more North-ward, and Rawlins had more time to tamper with his Gunners, and the reſt of the Engliſh Renegadoes, who very willingly, when they conſidered the matter, and perpended the reaſons, gaue way vnto the Proiect, and with a kind of ioy ſeemed to entertayne the motiues: only they made a ſtop at the firſt on-ſet, who ſhould begin the enterprize, which was no way fit for them to doe, becauſe they were no ſlaues, but Renegadoes, and ſo had alwayes beneficiall entertaynment amongſt them. But when it is once put in practice, they would be ſure not to faile them, but venture their liues for God and their Countrey. But once againe he is diſappointed, and a ſuſpitious accident brought him to recollect his ſpirits anew, and ſtudie on the danger of the enterprize, and thus it was. After the Renegado Gunner, had proteſted ſecrecie by all that might induce a man to beſtow ſome beliefe vpon him, he preſently went vp the Scottle, but ſtayed not aloft a quarter of an houre, nay he came ſooner down, & in the Gunner roome ſate by Rawlins, who tarryed for him where he left him: he was no ſooner placed, and entred into ſome conference, but there entred into the place a furious Turke, with his Knife drawne, and preſented it to Rawlins his body, who verily ſuppoſed, he intended to kill him, as ſuſpitious that the Gunner had diſcouered ſomething, whereat Rawlins was much moued, and ſo haſtily asked what the matter meant, or whether he would kill him or no, obſeruing his countenance, and according to the nature of iealouſie, conceiting that his colour had a paſſage of change, whereby his ſuſpitious heart, condemned him for a Traytor: but that at more leiſure he ſware the contrary, and afterward proued faithfull and induſtrious in the enterprize. And for the preſent, he anſwered Rawlins in this manner, no Maſter, be not afraid, I thinke hee doth but ieſt. With that Iohn Rawlins gaue backe a little and drew out his Knife, ſtepping alſo to the Gunners ſheath and taking out his, whereby he had two Kniues to one, which when the Turke perceiued, he threw downe his Knife, ſaying, hee did but ieſt with him. But (as I ſaid) when the Gunner perceiued, Rawlins tooke it ſo ill, hee whiſpered ſomething in his eare, that at laſt ſatisfied him, calling Heauen to witneſſe, that he neuer ſpake word of the Enterprize, nor euer would, either to the preiudice of the buſineſſe, or danger of his perſon: Notwithſtanding, Rawlins kept the Kniues in his ſleeue all night, and was ſomewhat troubled, for that hee had made ſo many acquainted with an action of ſuch importance; but the next day, when hee perceiued the Coaſt cleere, and that there was no cauſe of further feare, hee ſomewhat comforted himſelfe.

Another danger.

All this while, Rawlins drew the Captaine to lye for the Northerne Cape, aſſuring him, that thereby he ſhould not miſſe purchaſe, which accordingly fell out, as a wiſh would haue it: but his drift was in truth to draw him from any ſupply, or ſecond of Turkes, if God ſhould giue way to their Enterprize, or ſucceſſe to the victorie: yet for the preſent the ſixth of February, being twelue leagues from the Cape, wee deſcryed a ſayle, and preſently tooke the aduantage of the wind in chaſing her, and at laſt fetcht her vp, making her ſtrike all her ſayles, whereby wee knew her to be a Barke belonging to Tor Bay, neere Dartmouth, that came from Auerare laden with Salt: ere we had fully diſpatched, it chanced to be foule weather, ſo that we could not, or at leaſt would not make out our Boat, but cauſed the Maſter of the Barke to let downe his, and come aboord with his Company, being in the Barke but nine men, and one Boy; and ſo the Maſter leauing his Mate with two men in the ſame, came himſelfe with fiue men, and the boy vnto vs, whereupon our Turkiſh Captaine ſent ten Turkes to man her, amongſt whom were two Dutch, and one Engliſh Renegado, who were of our confederacie, and acquainted with the buſineſſe.

Tor Bay.

But when Rawlins ſaw this partition of his friends, before they could hoyſe out their Boat for the Barke, he made meanes to ſpeake with them, and told them plainly, that he would proſecute the matter eyther that night, or the next and therefore whatſoeuer came of it they ſhould acquaint the Engliſh with his reſolution, and make toward England, bearing vp the helme, whiles the Turkes ſlept, and ſuſpected no ſuch matter: for by Gods grace in his firſt watch about mid-night, he would ſhew them a light, by which they might vnderſtand, that the Enterprize was begunne, or at leaſt in a good forwardneſſe for the execution: and ſo the Boat was let downe, and they came to the Barke of Tor Bay, where the Maſters Mate beeing left (as before you haue heard) apprehended quickly the matter, and heard the Diſcourſe with amazement. But time was precious, and not to be ſpent in diſputing, or caſting of doubts, whether the Turkes that were with them, were able to maſter them, or no, beeing ſeuen to ſixe, conſidering they had the helme of the ſhip, and the Turkes being Souldiers, and ignorant of Sea Affaires, could not diſcouer, whether they went to Argier or no; or if they did, they reſolued by Rawlins example to cut their throats, or caſt them ouer-boord: and ſo I leaue them to make vſe of the Renegadoes inſtructions, and returne to Rawlins againe.

The Maſter of the Barke of Tor Bay, and his Company were quickly ſearched, and as quickly pillaged, and diſmiſſed to the libertie of the ſhippe, whereby Rawlins had leiſure to entertayne him with the lamentable newes of their extremities, and in a word, of euery particular which was befitting to the purpoſe: yea, he told him, that that night he ſhould loſe the ſight of them, for they would make the helme for England, and hee would that night and euermore pray for their good ſucceſſe, and ſafe deliuerance.

When the Maſter of the Barke of Tor Bay had heard him out, and that his company were partakers of his Storie, they became all ſilent, not eyther diffident of his Diſcourſe, or afraid of the attempt, but reſolued to aſſiſt him. Yet to ſhew himſelfe an vnderſtanding man, hee demanded of Rawlins, what weapons he had, and in what manner he would execute the buſineſſe: to which he anſwered, that he had Ropes, and Iron Hookes to make faſt the Scottels, Gratings, and Cabbines, he had alſo in the Gunner roome two Curtleaxes, and the ſlaues had fiue Crowes of Iron before them: Beſides, in the ſcuffling they made no queſtion of ſome of the Souldiers weapons: then for the manner, hee told them, they were ſure of the Ordnance, the Gunner roome, and the Powder, and ſo blocking them vp, would eyther kill them as they came downe, or turne the Ordnance againſt their Cabbins, or blow them into the Ayre by one Stratageme or other, and thus were they contented on all ſides, and reſolued to the Enterprize.

The Prize out of ſight.

The next morning, being the ſeuenth day of February, the Prize of Tor Bay was not to bee ſeene or found, whereat the Captaine began to ſtorme and ſweare, commanding Rawlins to ſearch the Seas vp and downe for her, who beſtowed all that day in the buſineſſe, but to little purpoſe: whereupon when the humour was ſpent, the Captaine pacified himſelfe, as conceiting he ſhould ſure find her at Argier: but by the permiſſion of the Ruler of all actions, that Argier was England, and all his wickedneſſe fruſtrated: for Rawlins beeing now ſtartled, leſt hee ſhould returne in this humour for the Streights, the eight of February went downe into the hold, and finding a great deale of water below, told the Captaine of the ſame, adding, that it did not come to the Pumpe, which he did very politickly, that he might remoue the Ordnance: For when the Captaine askt him the reaſon, he told him the ſhip was too farre after the head: then hee commanded to vſe the beſt meanes he could to bring her in order: ſure then, quoth Rawlins, wee muſt quit our Cables, and bring foure Peeces of Ordnance after, and that would bring the water to the Pumpe, which was preſently put in practice, ſo the Peeces beeing vſually made faſt thwart the ſhip, we brought two of them with their mouthes right before the Biticle, and becauſe the Renegadoe Flemmings would not begin, it was thus concluded: that the ſhip hauing three Deckes, wee that did belong to the Gunner roome ſhould bee all there, and breake vp the lower Decke. The Engliſh ſlaues, who alwayes lay in the middle Decke, ſhould doe the like, and watch the Scuttels: Rawlins himſelfe preuayled with the Gunner, for ſo much Powder, as ſhould prime the Peeces, and ſo told them all there was no better watch-word, nor meanes to begin, then vpon the report of the Peece to make a cry and ſkrich, for God, and King Iames, and Saint George for England.

When all things were prepared, and euery man reſolued, as knowing what hee had to doe, and the houre when it ſhould happen, to be two in the afternoone, Rawlins aduiſed the Maſter Gunner to ſpeake to the Captaine, that the Souldiers might attend on the Poope, which would bring the ſhip after: to which the Captaine was very willing, and vpon the Gunners information, the Souldiers gat themſelues to the Poope, to the number of twentie, and fiue or ſixe went into the Captaines Cabbin, where alwayes lay diuers Curtleaxes, and ſome Targets, and ſo wee fell to worke to pumpe the water, and carryed the matter fairely till the next day, which was ſpent as the former, being the ninth of February, and as God muſt haue the prayſe, the triumph of our victorie.

For by that time all things were prepared, and the Souldiers got vpon the Poope as the day before: to auoid ſuſpition, all that did belong to the Gunner-roome went downe, and the ſlaues in the middle decke attended their buſineſſe, ſo that we may caſt vp our account in this manner. Firſt, nine Engliſh ſlaues, beſides Iohn Rawlins: fiue of the Tor Bay men, and one boy, foure Engliſh Renegadoes, and two French, foure Hollanders: in all foure and twenty and a boy: ſo that lifting vp our hearts and hands to God for the ſucceſſe of the buſineſſe, we were wonderfully incouraged; and ſetled our ſelues, till the report of the peece gaue vs warning of the enterpriſe. Now, you muſt conſider, that in this company were two of Rawlins men, Iames Roe, and Iohn Dauies, whom he brought out of England, and whom the fortune of the Sea brought into the ſame predicament with their Maſter. Theſe were imployed about noone (being as I ſaid, the ninth of February) to prepare their matches, while all the Turkes or at leaſt moſt of them ſtood on the Poope, to weigh downe the ſhip as it were, to bring the water forward to the Pumpe: the one brought his match lighted betweene two ſpoons, the other brought his in a little peece of a Can: and ſo in the name of God, the Turkes and Moores being placed as you haue heard, and fiue and forty in number, and Rawlins hauing proined the Tuch-holes, Iames Roe gaue fire to one of the peeces, about two of the clocke in the afternoone, and the confederates vpon the warning, ſhouted moſt cheerefully: the report of the peece did teare and breake downe all the Biticke ll, and compaſſes, and the noiſe of the ſlaues made all the Souldiers amaſed at the matter, till ſeeing the quarter of the ſhip rent, and feeling the whole body to ſhake vnder them: vnderſtanding the ſhip was ſurpriſed, and the attempt tended to their vtter deſtruction, neuer Beare robbed of her whelpes was ſo fell and mad: For they not onely cald vs dogs, and cried out, Vſance de Lamair, which is as much as to ſay, the Fortune of the wars: but attempted to teare vp the planckes, ſetting a worke hammers, hatchets, kniues, the oares of the Boate, the Boat-hooke, their curtleaxes, and what elſe came to hand, beſides ſtones and brickes in the Cooke-roome; all which they threw amongſt vs, attempting ſtill and ſtill to breake and rip vp the hatches, and boords of the ſteering, not deſiſting from their former execrations, and horrible blaſphemies and reuilings.

The onſet.

When Iohn Rawlins perceiued them ſo violent, and vnderſtood how the ſlaues had cleared the deckes of all the Turkes and Moores beneath, he ſet a guard vpon the Powder, and charged their owne Muskets againſt them, killing them from diuers ſcout-holes, both before and behind, and ſo leſſened their number, to the ioy of all our hearts, whereupon they cried out, and called for the Pilot, and ſo Rawlins, with ſome to guard him, went to them, and vnderſtood them by their kneeling, that they cried for mercy, and to haue their liues ſaued, and they would come downe, which he bade them doe, and ſo they were taken one by one, and bound, yea killed with their owne Curtleaxes; which when the reſt perceiued, they called vs Engliſh dogs, and reuiled vs with many opprobrious tearmes, ſome leaping ouer-boord, crying, it was the chance of war, ſome were manacled, and ſo throwne ouer-boord, and ſome were ſlaine and mangled with the Curtleaxes, till the ſhip was well cleared, and our ſelues aſſured of the victory.

At the firſt report of our Peece, and hurlyburly in the decks, the Captaine was a writing in his Cabbin, and hearing the noyſe, thought it ſome ſtrange accident, and ſo came out with his Curtleaxe in his hand, preſuming by his authority to pacifie the miſchiefe: But when hee caſt his eyes vpon vs, and ſaw that we were like to ſurpriſe the ſhip, he threw downe his Curtleaxe, and begged vs to ſaue his life, intimating vnto Rawlins, how he had redeemed him from Villa-Riſe, and euer ſince admitted him to place of command in the ſhip, beſides honeſt vſage in the whole courſe of the Voyage. All which Rawlins confeſſed, and at laſt condeſcended to mercy, and brought the Captaine and fiue more into England. The Captaine was called Ramtham-Riſe, but his Chriſten name, Henry Chandler, and as they ſay, a Chandlers ſonne in Southwarke. Iohn Good-ale, was alſo an Engliſh Turke. Richard Clarke, in Turkiſh, Iafar; George Cooke, Ramdam; Iohn Browne, Mamme; William Winter, Muſtapha: beſides all the ſlaues and Hollanders, with other Renegadoes, who were willing to be reconciled to their true Sauiour, as being formerly ſeduced with the hopes of riches, honour, preferment, and ſuch like deuilliſh baits, to catch the ſoules of mortall men, and entangle frailty in the tarriers of horrible abuſes, and impoſturing deceit.

The Victory.

When all was done, and the ſhip cleared of the dead bodies, Iohn Rawlins aſſembled his men together, and with one conſent gaue the praiſe vnto God, vſing the accuſtomed ſeruice on ſhip-boord, and for want of bookes lifted vp their voyces to God, as he put into their hearts, or renewed their memories: then did they ſing a Pſalme, and laſt of all, embraced one another for playing the men in ſuch a Deliuerance, whereby our feare was turned into ioy, and trembling hearts exhillirated, that we had eſcaped ſuch ineuitable dangers, and eſpecially the ſlauery and terror of bondage, worſe then death it ſelfe: The ſame night we waſhed our ſhip, put euery thing in as good order as we could, repaired the broken quarter, ſet vp the Biticle, and bore vp the Helme for England, whereby Gods grace and good guiding, we arriued at Plimmoth, the thirteenth of February, and were welcommed like the recouery of the loſt ſheepe, or as you read of a louing mother, that runneth with embraces to entertaine her ſonne from a long Voyage and eſcape of many dangers.

Praiſe giuen to God.

They arriue in England.

Not long after we vnderſtood of our confederats, that returned home in the Barke of Torbay, that they arriued in Penſance in Corne-wall the eleuenth of February: and if any aske after their deliuerance, conſidering there were ten Turkes ſent to man her, I will tell you that too: the next day after they loſt vs, as you haue heard and that the three Renegadoes had acquainted the Maſters Mate, and the two Engliſh in her with Rawlins determination, and that they themſelues would be true to them, and aſſiſt them in any enterpriſe: then if the worſt came, there were but ſeuen to ſixe: but as it fell out, they had a more eaſie paſſage, then turmoile, or man-ſlaughter. For they made the Turkes beleeue, the wind was come faire, and that they were ſayling to Argier, till they came within ſight of England, which one of them amongſt the reſt diſcouered, ſaying plainely, that that land was not like Cape Vincent; yes ſaith he, that was at the Helme, and you will be contented, and goe downe into the hold, and trim the ſalt ouer to wind-ward, whereby the ſhip may beare full ſaile, you ſhall know and ſee more to morrow: Whereupon fiue of them went downe very orderly, the Renegadoes faining themſelues aſleepe, who preſently ſtart vp,and with the helpe of the two Engliſh,nailed downe the hatches, whereat the principall amongſt them much repined, and began to grow into choller and rage, had it not quickly beene ouerpaſſed. For one of them ſtepped to him,and daſht out his braines, and threw him ouer-boord: the reſt were brought to Exceſter, and either to be arraigned, according to the puniſhment of deliquents in ſuch a kind,or diſpoſed of,as the King and Counſell ſhall thinke meet: and this is the ſtory of this deliuerance,and end of Iohn Rawlins Voyage. The Actors in this Comick Tragedie are moſt of them aliue; The Turkes are in priſon; the ſhip is to be ſeene,and Rawlins himſelfe dare iuſtifie the matter.

The names of the Engliſh Renegadoes, which conſented, and ioyned with the ſlaues in the recouery of the ſhip, were theſe.

RIchard Clarke, the Gunner, called in Turkiſh, Iafar. George Cooke, Gunners-mate, called in Turkiſh, Ramedam. William Winter, Carpenter, in Turkiſh, Muſtapha. Iohn Browne, in Turkiſh, Memme. One Dutch Renegado. Foure Dutch ſlaues. One French ſlaue. Fiue Engliſhmen and one boy, taken but three dayes before. Nine Engliſh ſlaues which they tooke with them from Argier. In all foure and twenty men and a boy. Which were all ſafely landed at Plimmoth, the thirteenth of February, 1621. They ſaued aliue the fiue and forty Turkes and Moores, the Captaine, one Henry Chandlor, borne in South-warke, an Engliſh Renogado; and fiue Turkes more, who are at this preſent in Plimmoth Goale,&c.

CHAP. VIII.

Relations of Africa, taken out of Maſter GEORGE SANDYS his larger diſcourſe obſerued in his Iourney, begun Ann. 1610. LIB. 2.

§. I.

His Voyage from Rhodes to Alexandria, obſeruations there, of Egypt, in generall, and of Nilus.

I haue contracted this Hiſtory (as others) for breuity: omitting nothing willingly which the Author ſaw: in other things commonly referring the Reader to M. Sandys his owne booke or other Authors which were his guides. For we write of mens trauailes, rather then a hiſtory of places & Regions in this worke: which herein differeth from that which I haue called my Pilgrimage. Many alſo of the things left out are in Leo or others here inſerted.

RHodes is now inhabited by the Turkes and Iewes: thoſe Chriſtians that be, being Greekes, and not ſuffered after Sun-ſet to abide in the Citie: the Suburbs whereof are vtterly razed. I haue heard that all the Monuments, Statues, and inſcriptions belonging to the Knights of the Order, are by the Turkes preſerued entire, excepting ſuch as the warres had demoliſhed. Heere the Grand Signior mainteineth fiue Gallies. About this Iland, we expected to haue met with Pirats, but were happily deceiued.

Now hauing loſt the ſight of Rhodes, we ſaw no land vntill the third night after: in the Euening, doubtfully diſcouering the Coaſt of Ægypt. Fearing the Lee-ſhoare, all night we bore out to Sea: the lightning miniſtring vncomfortable light, intermixed with thunder and tempeſts. The next day we entred the Hauen of Alexandria, newly defamed with a number of wracks, which ſcattered here and there, did miſerably teſtifie the vnſafe protection of that Harbour. For not paſt two nights before the Northerne winds beating full vpon the mouth of the Hauen, with violent Seas droue the fore-moſt ſhips from their Anchors, who falling foule on the reſt, ſunke all for company, euen two and twenty in number: amongſt the reſt, that great and warlike ſhip, called the Red-Lion, but taken the yeere before from the Knights of Malta.

But before we proceed any further in particulars, meet it is that ſomething be ſaid of Ægypt in generall. The wonderfull fertility of the ſoile, is rather to bee admired then expreſſed: in times paſt reputed the granary of the world; inſomuch as it was not thought poſſible for the Romane Empire to ſubſiſt, if not aſſiſted by the affluence of Ægypt. The occaſion of that ſaying of Selymus when he had conquered the Country, that, Now he had taken a Farme that would feed his Iemoglans. Amongſt other commodities which this earth doth yeeld, and are fetcht from hence by forrainers, Sugar, Flaxe, Rice, all manner of Graine, Linnen-cloth, Hides, Salt, Buttargo, and Caſſia, being now the principall.

Whatſoeuer here is eſtimable, proceedeth from the munificency of this Riuer; for progreſſe, and property of all other the moſt excellent: vnto former ages, though often attempted, (and that by great Potentates) of an vndiſcouered originall, Foure miles below Cairo, it deuideth into two maine and nauigable branches; that next the Eaſt running into the Mid-land Sea by Damiata (heretofore Peluſium:) the other inclining vnto the Weſt, and formerly called Canopus, falleth into the ſelfe-ſame Sea a litle below Roſetta, making of the richeſt portion of the Land a triangular Iland, named Delta, in that it beareth the forme of that letter: the freſh water keeping together, and changing the colour of the Salt, farre further into the Sea, then the ſhoare from thence can be diſcerned. Two other branches there be that runne betweene theſe, but poore in waters; beſides diuers channels cut by the labour of man, for conueiances in the time of the inundation; which alſo are no ſmall ſtrengthning to the Countrey. Of thoſe ſeuen mentioned by Herodotus, and thoſe nine by Ptolomy, theſe are all that I either ſaw or could heare of. Nor is it a thing extraordinarie for Riuers to loſe their channels, either choaked by themſelues, or by the aduerſe Seas, with beds of Sand, and turned vp grauell reſiſting their paſſages. But amongſt the hidden myſteries of Nature, there is none more wonderfull, then is the ouerflowing of this Riuer; making of a meere Deſart (for ſuch is Egypt vnwatred by Nilus) the moſt fruitfull part of the habitable world, little when others are great, and their decreaſe increaſing.

Not tide to lawes of other ſtreames; the Sunne
When fartheſt off, thy ſtreames then pooreſt runne.
Intemperate heauen to temper, midſt of heate;
Vnder the burning Zone, bid to grow great.
Then Nile aſſiſts the world; leſt fire ſhould quell
The earth: and makes his high-borne waters ſwell
Againſt the Lions flaming iawes———

Inde etiam leges aliarum neſcit aquarum:
Nec tumet hybernus quum longe Sole remoto
Officijs caret vnda ſuis, date iuſſus iniquo
Temperiem cœlo, medijs æſtatibus exit.
Sub torrente plaga, ne terras diſſipet ignis
Nilus adeſt mundo, contraque accenſa leonis
Ora tumet———Lucan. l. 10.

The earth then burnt with the violent feruour, neuer refreſhed with raine (which here falls rarely, and then onely in the Winter) hath helpe from Nilus, moſt conſtantly obſeruing his accuſtomed ſeaſons, beginning to ariſe with the ariſing Sunne on the ſeuenteenth of Iune; ſwelling by degrees vntill it mount ſometimes foure and twentie cubits, but that the vttermoſt.

This yeare * at Cairo it riſe three and twentie. About two miles aboue the Citie, at the end of old Cairo, in the beginning of Auguſt they cut the bankes; then when aſcended vnto his principall height; before kept in, leſt that the too timely deluge ſhould deſtroy the fruites of the earth ere fit to be reaped. At which the Baſſa is himſelfe in perſon (who giueth the firſt ſtroke) accompanied with a world of people, rowed in Gallies and Barges of triumph, and for diuers dayes feaſting: the Baſſa in the Caſtle of Michias, an Iland ſurrounded with Nile (ſo called, in that there the Pillar doth ſtand, by which they obſerue the increaſe of the Riuer) others vnder Pauilions pitched by the ſhoare, with barbarous ſolemnities, and generall reioycings. At their returne they are met by thoſe of the Citie, who beſtrew their heads with flowers, as the welcome forerunners of that they long wiſhed. They turned in water following them at the heeles; boats now rowed, where but now they trampled, filling the duſtie trenches and long emptied Ciſternes: and a while after couering in many places the ſuperficies of the land, which there then appeareth as a troubled Lake. Anſwerable to the increaſe of the Riuer, is the plentie or ſcarcitie of the yeare ſucceeding, bringing with it both earth and water into a ſandie and thirſtie ſoile, of it ſelfe vnprofitable: ſo that it as well manures as moiſtens, with the fat and pregnant ſlime which it leaueth behind it. Vnto which they owe not their riches onely, but themſelues. For the plague which here oft miſerably rageth, vpon the firſt of the flood doth inſtantly ceaſe: inſomuch as when fiue hundred die at Cairo the day before, which is nothing rare (for the ſound keepe companie with the ſicke, holding death fatall, and to auoid them irreligion) not one doth die the day following. Wherefore no maruell though ignorant and ſuperſtitious antiquitie, vnder the name of Oſyris adored this Riuer, which affoorded them ſo many benefits, and ſuch as not apprehended were thought ſupernaturall. Thus where couered with water, it is no vnpleaſant ſight to behold the Townes appearing like little Ilands; the people paſſing and repaſſing by boate, and not ſeldome ſwimming: who the leſſe they ſee of their Country, the more is their comfort. About the midſt of September it ceaſeth to augment: and retiring a moneth after within his proper bounds, giueth way vnto Husbandrie (the earth vntilled, by throwing the Graine on the mud, and Rice into the water, affoording her firſt increaſe) vntill May decreaſing, and then in a maruellous penurie of water. To proue that it proceedeth from a naturall cauſe, this one, though ſtrange, yet true experiment will ſuffice. Take of the earth of Egypt adioyning to the Riuer, and preſerue it carefully, that it neither come to be wet nor waſted; weigh it daily, and you ſhal find it neither more nor leſſe heauie vntil the ſeuenteenth of Iune, at which day it beginneth to grow more ponderous, and augmenteth with the augmentation of the riuer, whereby they haue an vnfallible knowledge of the ſtate of the Deluge: proceeding without doubt from the humiditie of the Aire, which hauing a recourſe through all paſſible places, and mixing therewith, increaſeth the ſame as it increaſeth in moyſture. In the tenth and eleuenth yeare of Cleopatra, it is by Writers

* He began his iourney, 1610. They cut it againe in the halfe way betweene Cairo and Roſetta.

Perhaps rather ceaſing vpon Sunnes entring into Leo, as it doth at Aleppo, and elſewhere in thoſe parts.

A vulgar experiment generally affirmed: as by Alpinus in Med. Egypt, l.4.c.8. who long liued here, vpon the the teſtimonies of Paulus Marcitus the French Conſul, Baptiſte Euanns a Ieſuite, and Iohn Varot an Engliſh man ters of thoſe times for a certainty affirmed,that the Nilus increaſed not ; which two yeares defect prognoſticated the fal of two great Potentates,Cleopatra and Anthony. Many ages before, Callimachus reports,that it did the like for nine yeares together.From the ſame cauſe,no queſtion,but that ſeuen yeares dearth proceeded in the time of Pharao.

It alſo produceth abundance of Fiſh,in ſhape and qualitie much differing from ours : but by reaſon of the muddy channell,not altogether ſauorie nor wholſome.

Palmetrees.

Male and Female.

Wood ſold by weight.

Paper-ſedge.

Throughout this Countrey there are no Wines, yet want they none,in that they deſire them not. Neither are here any trees to ſpeake of,but ſuch as are planted,and thoſe in Orchards only: excepting Palmes,which delight in Deſarts ; and being naturally theirs, doe grow without limits. Of theſe they haue plenty,pleaſing the eye with their goodly formes,and with diuerſitie of benefits inriching their owners. Of body ſtraight,high,round,and ſlender (yet vnfit for buildings) creſted about,and by meanes thereof with facilitie aſcended. The branches like Sedges, ſlit on the neather ſide,and euer greene ; growing onely on the vppermoſt height,reſemble faire plumes of feathers ,, which they yearely prune,by lopping off the loweſt, and at the top of all by bearing a little of the bole.Of theſe there be male and female , both thruſt forth cods(which are full of ſeeds like knotted ſtrings) at the roote of their branches, but the female is onely fruitfull ; and not ſo, vnleſſe growing by the male (towards whoſe vpright growth ſhe inclines her crowne) and haue of his ſeedes commixed with hers ; which in the beginning of March they no more faile to doe,then to ſow the earth at accuſtomed ſeaſons. Their Dates doe grow like fingers,and are thereof named ; not ripe vntill the fine of December, which begin to cod about the beginning of February. They open the tops of ſuch as are fruitleſſe, or otherwiſe periſht ; and take from thence the white pith,of old called the braine,which they ſell vp and downe : an excellent ſallad,not much vnlike in taſte,but farre better then an Artichoke.Of the branches they make Bed-ſteads, Lattices,&c.of the web of the Leaues,Baskets,Mats,Fans, &c. of the outward huske of the Cod,good Cordage ; of the inward, Bruſhes, &c. ſuch and ſuch like affoord they yearely without empaire to themſelues. This tree they held to be the perfect image of a man, and by the ſame repreſented him : Firſt,for that it doth not fructifie, but by coiture : next,as hauing a Braine,as it were, in the vppermoſt part ; which once corrupted, as man, euen ſo it periſheth : and laſtly,in regard that on the top thereof grow certaine ſtrings, which reſemble the haire ; the great ends of the branches appearing like hands ſtretcht forth, and the Dates as fingers. And becauſe the Palme is neuer to be ſuppreſſed, but ſhooteth vp againſt all oppoſition, the boughs thereof haue been propoſed as rewards for ſuch as were either victorious in armes or exerciſes. Wood then is here but ſcarce in regard of the quantitie ; and yet enough,if their vſes for the ſame be conſidered. For they eate but little fleſh (freſh Cheeſe, ſowre Milke made ſolid, Roots,Fruits and Herbs,eſpecially Colocaſia,anciently called the Egyptian Beane, though bearing no Beane,but like the leafe of a Colewort,being their principal ſuſtenance;baking their bread in Cakes on the harth,and mingling therewith the ſeeds of Coriander.) As for cold,they know it not; hauing ſufficient of the refuſe of Palmes , Sugar-canes, and the like, to furniſh them with fuell, anſwerable to their neceſſities. But forrainers that feed as in colder Countries, doe buy their Wood by weight,which is brought in hither by ſhipping. The Gallions alſo of Conſtantinople,alwaies goe into the Blacke Sea for timber,before they take their voyage for Cairo. Omit I muſt not the ſedgie reeds which grow in the Mariſhes of Egypt,called formerly Papyri,of which they made paper ; and whereof ours made of rags,aſſumeth that name. They diuided it into thin flakes,whereinto it naturally parteth : then laying them on a table, and moiſtning them with the gluttinous water of the Riuer,they preſt them together, and ſo dried them in the Sunne. It is now gouerned by a Baſſa who hath his reſidence in Cairo,and commandeth as an abſolute Soueraigne ; vnder whom are ſixteene Sanziacks, and a hundred thouſand Spacheis. The reuenues of this little Countrie amounting to three Millions of * Shariffes. The Great Turke hauing one (viz. foure hundred thouſand disburſed yearely in Sugar and Rice,and ſent to Conſtantinople; the reſidue ſent ouer-land with a guard of ſixe hundred Souldiers,for feare of the Florentine:) another Million is ſpent in payes,and in ſetting forth the Caruan vnto Mecha ; the third hee hath for the ſupportance of his owne eſtate,and entertainement of his dependents. But this is little in regard of that which was raiſed thereof in the reigne of Aulctes,who receiued ſeuen Millions and a halfe of Crownes ; much more ſuppoſed to haue yeelded to the more prouident Romanes.

* Hauing the ſtampe with the Sultany,the name of Cairo added where it is coined : of better value in that of finer gold by two or three Aſpers.

1610.

The Baſſas ſeuere iuſtice.

Theeues,how puniſhed.

The Baſſa now being,and called Mahomet, is a man well ſtriken in yeares,of a ſowre and inflexible nature. At his firſt entrance hee cut off the heads of foure thouſand Spacheis, that had borne themſelues too inſolently,and committed many outrages and extortions. Hee ſent the great men that bore ouermuch ſway vnto Conſtantinople ; thoſe that refuſed to goe,he cauſed to be ſtrangled,vſing the aide of the Arabians(who iuſtly hated the other) in all his executions.If a robberie be committed,and the theeues eſcape,ſuch as are appointed to guard thoſe quarters,do ſuffer in their ſtead ; inſomuch as often they attach poore innocents when they cannot apprehend the guiltie,to deliuer themſelues from puniſhment : boring holes through the condemneds armes,ſtretcht wide on ſtaues, in which are Candles ſtucke,that burne downe into the fleſh,and are led in that manner through the Citie vnto the place of execution. Others are ſtript of their ſkinnes, yet liue in horrible torment ſo long as the Executioners Steele offends not the Nauell. Drunkenneſſe is puniſhed with death; and all diſorders ſo ſeuerely lookt into, that I thinke in no other place you ſhall ſee ſo few amongſt ſuch a multitude of people. The malice his rigour procured, had cauſed himſelfe to confine himſelfe to the Caſtle for a twelue-moneth, before our comming to Cairo: but his gouernment is ſo well approued by the Grand Signior, that to doe him the more honour, he hath giuen him his daughter in marriage, a childe of foure yeares old, which hath beene ſolemnized with all poſſible Ceremonies. One thing more is in him prayſe-worthy; that hee will hardly ſuffer a Chriſtian to turne Mahometan, either out of the diſlike of his owne Religion, or knowing well that they doe it onely for commoditie and preferment.

Drunkenneſſe puniſhed with death.

Thoſe that now inhabit the Countrey, are for the moſt part Moores. Turkes there are many, and Iewes, which reſide onely in Cities. Store of Arabians, and not a few Negroes. Of Chriſtians, the natiue Copties are the moſt in number: ſome Greekes there bee, and a few Armenians.

The Moores.

The Egyptian Moores (deſcended of the Arabians, and vnderſtanding each other) are men of a meane ſtature, tawnie of complexion, and ſpare of bodie, ſhrill tongued, and nimble footed; naturally induſtrious, affecting more their profit then their eaſe; yet know they not how to liue of a little, as in nothing riotous. Rather craftie they are then wiſe; more obſeruant then faithfull, by much more deuout then the Turkes in the Mahometan Religion. In Learning they are vtterly ignorant. Amongſt them none are Noble: few admitted to the Souldiery, (nor ſuffered in Townes to weare Weapons) not any to Magiſtracie. In Cities the beſt of them exerciſe Merchandize: rich by meanes of their Trafficke with the Indians, yet that decayed ſince our Eaſt Indian Voyages: inſomuch, as Spices brought out of the Leuant heretofore, are now with profit brought thither by our Merchants. In habit they differ little from the Turkes, excepting ſome of the yonger ſort, who weare ſide Coates of Linnen (the ancient habit of that Countrey) girt to their waſtes, and Towels throwne about their neckes of the ſame. Diuers of the Negroes weare Veſts like Surplices. Thoſe of the pooreſt, long Garments of Hayre, ſtreakt blacke and white; in the winter, ſide Coates of Cotten. The Beggers by ſinging, both get reliefe, and comfort their pouertie, playing withall vpon Drummes which are faſhioned like Siues.

Their apparell.

A number here be afflicted with ſore eyes, eyther by the reflecting heate, the ſalt duſt of the ſoyle, or exceſſiue Venerie: for the Pockes is vncredibly frequent amongſt them. The women when out of their houſes, are wrapt from the crowne of the head to the foot in ample Robes of Linnen, ſpreading their armes vnderneath to appeare more corpulent: for they thinke it a ſpeciall excellencie to be fat; and moſt of them are ſo; ſo in frequenting the Bannias for certayne dayes together, wherein they vſe ſuch dyet and frictions, as daily vſe confirmeth for effectuall. They couer their faces with black Cypreſſe beſpotted with red. Their vnder garments of lighter ſtuffes then the Turkiſh, not differing in faſhion. The better ſort weare hoopes of Gold and Siluer about their armes, and aboue their ancles: others of Copper, with Peeces of Coyne halfe couering their fore-heads, and plates hung about their neckes, &c. Both men and women doe brand their armes for the loue of each other. Diuers of the women haue I ſeene with their chinnes diſtayned into knots and flowres of blue, made by pricking of the ſkinne with Needles, and rubbing it ouer with Inke and the Iuyce of an herbe, which will neuer weare out againe. They haue quicke and eaſie labour, bearing heretofore often two, and ſometimes three at a burthen: thoſe alſo borne in the eighth moneth liuing, rarely if elſe-where heard of. In the adioyning Deſerts of Saint Macario, a Plant there is, low, leaueleſſe, browne of colour, branched like Corall, and cloſed at the top, this in the time of the labour of women, they ſet in water in ſome corner of the roome, which ſtrangely diſplayeth, procuring (as they generally coniecture) eaſie deliueries. The Countrey people doe follow Husbandry. They are not long in dreſſing themſelues, being onely wrapt in a ruſſet Mantle: nor haue the women any better couerture, hiding their faces with beaſtly clouts, hauing holes for their eyes; which little is too much to ſee, and abſtayne from lothing. Ouer their ſhaſhes the men weare rounds of ſtiffned ruſſet, to defend their braines from their piercing feruour. A people breathes not more ſauage and naſtie, cruſted with dirt, and ſtinking of ſmoke, by reaſon of the * fuell, and their houſes which haue no Chimnies. Some of them dwell vnder beggerly Tents, and thoſe eſteemed of the old Inhabitants.

The women.

* Stercus bouinum.

But the Copties are the true Egyptians, retayning the name of Coptus that ancient Citie and Territorie, a litle below, and on that ſide the Riuer where once ſtood Thebes, againſt the Iland of the Tenterites. The name ſignifieth Priuation, ſo called, for that there Iſis cut off a locke of her Hayre, and put on funerall Garments for the death of Oſiris. Others will haue them ſo called in regard of their Circumciſion. Theſe, as I ſaid, are Chriſtians, notwithſtanding they are circumciſed, whereof they now begin to bee aſhamed; ſaying, that in the Countrey they are thereunto compelled by the Moores; and in Cities where ſecure from violence, they vſe it not; howbeit, doing it rather in that an ancient cuſtome of their Nation (mentioned by Herodotus) then out of Religion. They were infected with that hereſie of one nature in Chriſt, long before Iacobus (of whom now named, and of whom wee ſhall ſpeake hereafter) divulged it in Syria.

The Chriſtians called commonly and corruptly Copties.

Their Chriſtianity & rites.

At this day they profeſſe him to be perfect God and perfect man; yet dare not diſtinguiſh his natures, for feare of diuiding his perſon. They baptize not their Children vntill fortie dayes old. Preſently after mid-night they repayre to their Churches, where they remaine wel-nigh vntill Sunday at noone; during which time, they neither ſit nor kneele, but ſupport themſelues vpon crutches. The Prieſt is veiled and veſted in Linnen, hauing two or three Boyes apparelled alike, and ſequeſtred from the reſt of the people, to aſſiſt him; for they conferre inferiour Orders vpon children. They ſing ouer moſt part of the Pſalms of Dauid at euery meeting, with diuers parcels of the Old and New Teſtaments; the latter, as written by Nicomedes: ſome in the Copticke Language, vnderſtood but by few, moſt in the Moreſco. Often both Prieſt and people conioyned in Sauage noyſes, to our iudgements not articulate. The Prieſt not ſeldome eleuating a red cloth (vnder which, I ſuppoſe, was the Sacrament) which they adminiſter in both kinds, and giue it to Infants preſently after Baptiſme. In their Churches they haue the Picture of our Sauiour, and the bleſſed Virgin; but not ouer their Altars; nor for any thing I could perceiue, doe they reuerence them.

Patriarke of Alexandria.

Faſting.

In certaine Cheſts they preſerue the bones and aſhes of ſuch as haue turned Mahometan, and afterward recanted; for which they haue ſuffered Martyrdome. At their entrance they kiſſe their hands, and lay them vpon one another: the women in grated Galleries ſeparated from the men. Extreame Vnction, Prayer for the Dead, and Purgatory, they admit not of. The Romane Church they hold for Hereticall, and reiect all generall Councels, after that of Epheſus. Yet a multitude of late haue beene drawne to receiue the Popiſh Religion (eſpecially in Cairo) by the induſtry of Friers, hauing had the Romane Liturgie ſent them from Rome, together with the Bible, in the Arabecke Language. Of Alexandria hath their Patriarke his name, but his abode is in Cairo. Sixe dayes iourney aboue Cairo vp the Riuer, they haue a great Citie, called Saiet; where Chriſt, with his mother, is ſaid to haue made their abode vntill the death of Herod: vnto which, growing old and ſickly, they repaire, as deſirous to die there: where there is a goodly Church, though ſomething ruinous, built by Hellen the mother of Conſtantine, and conſecrated to the bleſſed Virgin. They neuer eate in the day time during the Lent, but on Saturdayes and Sundayes. They weare round Caps, Towels about their neckes, and gownes with wide ſleeues of Cloth, and Stuffes leſſe ponderous. Theſe liue in more ſubiection then the Moores, by reaſon of their Religion, and pay yerely a certaine ſumme for their heads to the Baſſa. Ignorant in the excellencies of their anceſtors, but retaining their vices. Some of them profeſſe ſome knowledge in Magicke, being but Iuglers, compared with the former, by whom ſuch miracles were effected.

* Alexandria.

The Lake Mardotis afforded another Hauen vnto the Citie,* then that of the Sea more profitable: by reaſon of the commodities of India, the Arabian Gulph, and vp-land parts of Ægypt, brought downe by the conueniency of that paſſage by Channels now vtterly ruined. And the ſame by a narrow cut was ioyned vnto another Lake, farre leſſe, and neerer the Sea, which at this day too plentifully furniſheth all Turkie with Salt-peter. Betweene the leſſe Lake and the Citie, there paſſeth an artificiall channell which ſerueth them with water (for they haue no wells) in the time of the deluge, conueyed by Conduits into ample Ciſterns (now moſt of them Fennie for want of vſe, an occaſion of much ſickeneſſe in the ſummer) and ſo preſerued vntill the ſucceeding ouerflow. For Alexandria is all built vpon vaults, ſupported with carued pillars one aboue another, and lined with ſtone; inſomuch, as no ſmall proportion thereof lay concealed in earth, conſider we either of the Coaſt or quantity.

Such was this Queene of Cities and Metropolis of Africa: who now hath nothing left her but ruines; and thoſe ill witneſſes of his periſhed beauties: declaring rather, that Townes as well as men, haue their ages and deſtinies. Onely thoſe wals remaine which were founded (as ſome ſay) by Ptolomie: one within another, imbatled, & garniſhed with threeſcore & eight Turrets; rather ſtately then ſtrong, if compared with the moderne. Yet theſe, by the former deſcriptions, and ruines without appeare to haue immured but a part of the Citie. After that deſtroyed by the Saracens, it lay for a long time waſte, vntill a Mahometan Prieſt, pronouncing (as he ſaid, out of Mahomets propheſies) indulgences to ſuch as ſhould re-edifie, inhabite, or contribute money thereunto, within certaine dayes, did in a ſhort ſeaſon repeople it. But a latter deſtruction it receiued by the Cypriots, French, and Venetians, about the time that Lewis the fourth was enlarged by the Sultans, who ſurpriſed the Citie with a marueilous ſlaughter. But hearing of the approach of the Sultan, (who had raiſed a great army for their reliefe) deſparing to maintaine it, they ſet it on fire, and departed. The Sultan repairing the walls as well as he could, built this Caſtle that now ſtands on the Pharus for the defence of the Hauen; and brought it to the ſtate wherein it remaineth. Sundry Mountaines are raiſed of the ruines, by Chriſtians not to be mounted ; leſt they ſhould take too exact a ſuruey of the Citie : in which are often found (eſpecially after a ſhower) rich ſtones, and medals engrauen with the figures of their Gods, and men, with ſuch perfection of Art ; as theſe now cut, ſeeme lame to thoſe, and vnliuely counterfeits. On the top of one of them ſtands a watch-tower, where continuall centinell is kept, to giue notice of approaching ſailes. Of Antiquities there are few remainders : onely Hieroglyphicall Obeliſke of Theban Marble, as hard wel-nigh as Porphir, but of a deeper red, and ſpeckled alike, called Pharoes Needle, ſtanding where once ſtood the Palace of Alexander : and another lying by, and like it, halfe buried in rubbidge. Without the walls on the South-weſt ſide of the Citie, on a little hill ſtands a Columne of the ſame, all of one ſtone, eightie ſixe Palmes high, and thirty ſixe in compaſſe, the Palme conſiſting of nine inches and a quarter, according to the meaſure of Genoa, as meaſured for Zigal Baſſa by a Genoues, ſet vpon a ſquare cube (and which is to be wondered at) not halfe ſo large as the foot of the Pillar, called by the Arabians, Hemadeſlaeor, which is, the Columne of the Arabians. They tell a Fable, how that one of the Ptolomies erected the ſame in the furtheſt extent of the Hauen, to defend the Citie from Nauall incurſions : hauing placed a Magicall glaſſe of Steele on the top, of vertue (if vncouered) to ſet on fire ſuch ſhips as ſailed by. But ſubuerted by them, the glaſſe loſt that power, who in this place re-erected the Columne. But by the Weſterne Chriſtians it is called the pillar of Pompey : and is ſaid to haue beene reared by Caſar, as a memoriall of his Pompeian Victory. The Patriarke of A- lexandria hath here a houſe adioyning to a Church, which ſtands (as they ſay) in the place where Saint Marke was buried, their firſt Biſhop and Martyr : who in the dayes of Traian, haled with a rope tied about his neck, vnto the place, called Angeles, was there burned for the teſtimo-nie of Chriſt, by the idolatrous Pagans. Afterward his bones were remoued to Venice by the Venetians, he being the Saint and Patron of that Citie. There be at this day two Patriarkes, one of the Greeks ; another of the Circumciſed, the vniuerſall Patriarke of the Cofties and Abaſ- ſines. The name of the Greeke Patriarke now being, is Cyril, a man of approued vertue and learning, a friend to the reformed Religion, and oppoſing the contrary ; ſaying, that the differences betweene vs and the Greekes, be but ſhels ; but that thoſe are Kernels betweene them and the other. Of whom ſomething more ſhall be ſpoken hereafter. The buildings now being, are meane and few, erected on the ruines of the former : that part that lieth along the ſhoare inhabited onely, the reſt deſolate : the walls almoſt quadrangular ; on each ſide a gate, one opening towards Nilus ; another regards Mariotis ; the third, the Deſarts of Barcha ; and the fourth, the Hauen. Inhabited by Moores, Turkes, Iewes, Cofties, and Grecians ; more in regard of Merchandize, (for Alexandria is a Free Port, both for friend and enemy) then for the conueniency of the place : ſeated in a Deſart, where they haue neither Tillage nor Paſturage, except what borders on the Lake ; that little, and vnhusbanded : yet keepe they good ſtore of Goats, that haue eares hanging downe to the ground, which feed amongſt ruines. On the Ile of Pharus, now a part of the Continent, there ſtands a Caſtle, defending the entrance of the Hauen ; which hath no water but what is brought vpon Camels from the Ciſterns of the Citie : this, at our comming in, as is the vſe, we ſaluted with our Ordnance. As many of vs as came aſhoare, were brought to the Cuſtome-houſe, to haue our ſelues and our valeiſas ſearched : where ten in the hundred is to be paid for whatſoeuer we haue, and that in kind, onely money payes, but one and a halfe ; whereof they take an exact account, that thereby they may aime at the value of returned commodities ; then paying eleuen in the hundred more, euen for ſuch goods as are in property vnaltered. At ſo high a rate is this free traffique purchaſed, the Mahumetan here paying as much as the Chriſtian. The Cuſtomes are framed by the Iewes, paying for the ſame vnto the Baſſa twenty thouſand * Madeins a day, thirty of them amounting to a Ryall of eight. Wee lodged in the houſe of the French Conſul, vnto whoſe protection all ſtrangers commit themſelues. The Cane lockt vp by the Turkes at noones and at nights, for feare that the Franks ſhould ſuffer or offer any outrage. The Vice-conſul keepes a table for Merchants, he himſelfe a Magnifico, leſſe liberall of his preſence, then induſtrious to pleaſure ; yea, rather ſtately then proud ; expecting reſpect, and meriting good will : that was a Prieſt, and would be a Cardinall ; with the hopes whereof, they ſay, that he feaſteth his ambition. By him we were prouided of a Ianiſary for our guard vnto Cairo : his hire, fiue peeces of gold, beſides his owne diet and his mans, with prouiſion of Powder. For our Aſſes (not inferiour in this Countrey vnto horſes for trauell) halfe a Shariffe a peece, for our Camels a whole one. At the gate they tooke a Madein a head, for our ſelues and our Aſſes, ſo indifferently doe they priſe vs : through which wee could not paſſe without a Teſcaria from the Cadee, the principall officer of this Citie.

§. II.

His Iourney to Cairo, the things remarkeable there, and by the way.

A Deſart.

Matter of Chriſtall Glaſſes.

ON the ſecond of February in the afternoone, we vndertooke our Iourney: paſſing through a Deſart, producing here and there a few vnhusbanded Palmes, Capers, and a weed called Kall by the Arabs. This they vſe for fuel, and then collecting the aſhes, which cruſht together like a ſtone, they ſell them in great quantity to the Venetians; who equally mixing the ſame with the ſtones that are brought them from Pauia by the Riuer of Ticinum, made thereof their Chriſtaline Glaſſes. On the left hand we left diuers ruinous buildings: one ſaid to haue been the Royall manſion of Cleopatra. Beyond which, Bucharis, once a little, but ancient Citie, now onely ſhewing her foundations, where grow many Palmes which ſuſtaine the wretched people that liue thereabout in beggerly Cottages; where on a Rock ſtands a Tower, affoording light by night to the ſailer, the place being full of danger. Anon we paſſed by a guard of Souldiers, there placed for the ſecuring of that paſſage, paying a Madein for euerie head. Seuen or eight miles beyond, we ferried ouer a Creeke of the ſea. On the other ſide ſtands a handſome Cane, not long ſince built by a Moore of Cairo for the reliefe of Trauellers, containing a quadrangle within, and arched vnderneath. Vnder one of theſe wee repoſed; the ſtones our beds, our fardels the bolſters. In ſuch like places they vnloade their merchandize, refreſhing themſelues and their Camels with prouiſion brought with them, ſecured from theeues and violence. Giuing a trifle for Oyle, about midnight we departed, hauing here met with good ſtore of company, ſuch as allowed trauelling with their matches light, and prepared to receiue all onſets. The Moores to keepe themſelues awake, would tell one tale a hundred times ouer. By the way againe we ſhould haue paid Caphar, but the benefit of the night excuſed vs. Trauelling along the Sea ſhoare, and at length a little inclining on the right hand, before day we entred Roſetta, repairing to a Cane belonging to the Frankes. Our beſt entertainement an vnder-roome, muſty, without light, and the vnwholſome floore to lie vpon.

Roſetta.

Or rather in the Hungarian.

This Citie ſtands vpon the principall brance of the Nile, (called heretofore Canophus) which about ſome three miles beneath diſchargeth it ſelfe into the Sea. Hauing here (as at Damiata) his entrance croſſed with a barre of Sand, changing according to the changes of winds, and beating of the Surges, inſomuch, that the Ierbies that paſſe ouer, are made without keeles, hauing flat and round bottoms. A Pilot of the Towne there ſounding all the day long, by whoſe directions they enter, and that ſo cloſe vnto him, that one leapes out of that boate into the other to receiue pilotage, and returneth ſwimming. The Ierbies that can paſſe ouer this barre, may, if well directed, proceed vnto Cairo. Roſetta (called Raſid by the Egyptians) perhaps deriued of Ros, which ſignifieth Rice in the Turkiſh Tongue, and ſo named for the abundance that it vttereth (they here ſhealing monethly three hundred quarters) was built by the ſlaue of an Egyptian Caliph. The houſes are all of Brick, not old, yet ſeeming ancient: flat-rooft, as generally all bee in theſe hotter Countries (for the Moores vſe much to lie on the tops of their houſes) ietting ouer aloft like the poopes of ſhips, to ſhadow the ſtreets that are but narrow, from the Sunnes reflections. Not ſmall, yet of ſmall defence; being deſtitute of walls, and other fortifications. I thinke no place vnder heauen is better furniſhed with Graine, Fleſh, Fiſh, Sugar, fruites, Rootes, &c. Raw hides are here a principall commoditie, from hence tranſported into Italy.

Breadth of Nilus.

Cut of the Riuer.

Letting in of the Riuer drawne vp by Buffolo's.

Elough is their naming of God, as we begin, In Gods Name.

The next day but one that followed, we imbarked for Cairo in a Ierbie, vnto which ſeuen water men belonged, which we hired for twelue Dollars. This Arme of the Nile is as broad at Roſetta, as Thames about Tilbury, ſtreightening by little and little: and then in many places ſo ſhallow, that oft we had much adoe to free our ſelues from the flats that had ingaged vs: the water being euer thicke, as if lately troubled; and paſſing along with a mute and vnſpeedy current. Ten miles aboue Roſetta, is that cut of the Riuer which runnes to Alexandria. By the way wee often bought as much Fiſh for ſixe pence, as would haue ſatisfied twentie. On each ſide of the Riuer ſtands many Townes, but of no great eſteeme, for the moſt part oppoſite, built partly of Brick, and partly of Mud; many of the poorer houſes appearing like Bee-hiues, ſeated on little Hills throwne vp by the labour of man, to preſerue them and their Cattell in the time of the ouerflow. Vpon the bankes all along are infinite numbers of deepe and ſpacious Vaults, into which they doe let the Riuer, drawing vp the water into higher Ciſterns, with wheeles ſet round with Pitchers, and turned about by Buffoloes: from whence it runnes along little trenches, made vpon the ridges of banks, and ſo is conueied into their ſeuerall grounds, the Countrie lying all in a leuell. The winds blew ſeldome fauourable, inſomuch as the poore Moores for moſt part of the way were enforced to hale vp the boate, often wading aboue their middles to deliuer it from the ſhallowes. At euery enforcing of themſelues (as in all their labours) crying Elough, perſwaded that God is neare them when they name him, the diuell farre off, and all impediments leſſened. Of theſe it is ſtrange to ſee ſuch a number of broken perſons, ſo being by reaſon of their ſtrong labour and weake food. The pleaſant walkes which we had on the ſhoare, made our lingring paſſage leſſe tedious. The fruitfull ſoyle poſſeſſing vs with wonder; and early maturitie of things, there then as forward as with vs in Iune, who beginne to reape in the ending of March.

The Sugar Canes ſerued our hands for ſtaues, and feaſted our taſtes with their Liquor. By the way we met with Troupes of Horſemen, appointed to cleere thoſe paſſages from Theeues, whereof there are many, who alſo rob by water in little Frigats. Which made our carefull Ianizary (for ſo are moſt in their vndertaken charges) aſſiſted by two other (to whom wee gaue their paſſage, who otherwiſe would haue taken it) nightly to keepe watch by turnes, diſcharging their Harquebuſes in the euening, and hanging out kindled matches, to terrifie the Theeues, and teſtifie their vigilancie. Fiue dayes now almoſt ſpent ſince we firſt imbarked, an houre before Sun-ſet we ſayled by the Southerne angle of Delta: where the Riuer deuideth into another branch, not much inferiour vnto this, the Eaſt bounds of that Iland (which whether of Aſia or Africa is yet to be decided) entring the Sea (as hath beene ſaid before) below Damiata. Proceeding vp the riuer, about twilight we arriued at Bolac the Port Town to Cairo, and not two miles diſtant: where euery Franke at his landing is to pay a Dollar. Leauing our carriages in the Boat, within night we hired ſixe Aſſes with their driuers for the value of ſixe pence, to conduct vs vnto Cairo, where by an Engliſh Merchant we were kindly entertayned, who fed and houſed vs gratis.

Bolac.

Bountie of an Engliſh Merchant at Cairo.

Cairo deſcribed

This Citie is ſeated on the Eaſt ſide of the Riuer, at the foote of the rockie mountaine Muctac: winding therewith, and repreſenting the forme of a creſcent, ſtretching South and North with the adioyning Suburbs, fiue Italian miles; in breadth ſcarce one and a halfe where it is at at the broadeſt: the walles (if it be walled) rather ſeeming to belong vnto priuate houſes then otherwiſe. Yet is the Citie of a marueilous ſtrength, as appeared by that three dayes battell carried through it by Selymus, and maintained by a poore remainder of the Mamalucks. For the ſtreets are narrow, and the houſes high-built, all of ſtone well nigh to the top, at the end almoſt of each a Gate, which ſhut (as nightly they are) make euery ſtreet as defenſiue as a Caſtle. The houſes more beautifull without, then commodious within, being ill contriued with comberſome paſſages. Yet are the roofes high pitcht, and the vppermoſt lightly open in the middeſt to let in the comfortable aire. Flat, and plaiſtred aboue: the walls ſurmounting their roofes, commonly of ſingle bricks (as are many of the walls of the vppermoſt ſtories) which ruined aboue, to ſuch as ſtand aloft affoord a confuſed ſpectacle, and may be compared to a Groue of flouriſhing Trees that haue onely ſeere and periſhed Crownes. Their Lockes and Keyes bee of wood; euen vnto doores that are plated with Iron. But the priuate buildings are not worth the mentioning, if compared to the publike, of which the Moſques exceed in magnificencie: the ſtones of many being curiouſly carued without, ſupported with Pillars of Marble, adorned with what Art can deuiſe, and their Religion tollerate. Yet differ they in forme from thoſe of Conſtantinople; ſome being ſquare with open roofes in the middle of a huge proportion, the couered Circle Tarraſt aboue: others ſtretching out in length, and many fitted vnto the place where they ſtand. One built (and that the greateſt) by Gehor, called Gemith Haſhare: hee beeing named Haſhare by the Caliph, which ſignifieth Noble. Of theſe in this Citie there is reported to bee ſuch a number, as paſſes beliefe, ſo that I liſt not name it.

Lockes and Keyes of wood.

Adioyning vnto them are lodgings for Santons, (which are fooles, and mad men) of whom we haue ſpoken already. When one of them dye, they carry his body about in proceſſion with great reioycings, whoſe ſoule they ſuppoſe to bee rapt into Paradiſe. Heere bee alſo diuers goodly Hoſpitals, both for building, reuenue, and attendance.

Fooles fooliſhly admired, and mad Saints.

Next to theſe in beautie are the Great mens Serraglios. By which if a Chriſtian ride they will pull him from his Aſſe (for they prohibit vs Horſes as not worthy to beſtride them) with indignation and contumely. The ſtreets are vnpaued, and exceeding dirtie after a ſhower (for here it rayneth ſometimes in the winter contrary to the receiued opinion, and then moſt ſubiect to plagues) ouer which many beames are laid athwart on the tops of houſes, and couered with Mats to ſhelter them from the Sunne. The like couerture there is betweene two high Moſques in the principall ſtreet of the Citie, vnder which when the Baſha paſſeth, or others of qualitie, they ſhoot vp arrowes, which ſticke aboue in abundance. The occaſion of that cuſtome I know not. During our abode in the Citie fell out the Feaſt of their little Byram, when in their priuate houſes they ſlaughter a number of ſheepe; which cut in gobbets, they diſtribute vnto their ſlaues and poorer ſort of people, beſmearing the doores with their bloud: perhaps in imitation of the Paſſeouer.

Contempt of Chriſtians.

Raine in Egypt.

Little Byram.

The Nile (a mile diſtant) in the time of the inundation, by ſundry channels flowes into the Citie. When theſe channels grow emptie, or the water corrupted, they haue it brought them thence-forth from the Riuer by Camels. For although they haue many Wels, yet is the water bad, and good for no other vſe then to coole the ſtreets, or to cleanſe their houſes. In the heart of the Towne ſtands a ſpacious Caue, which they call the Beſeſtan; in which (as in thoſe at Conſtantinople) are ſold all kind of Wares of the finer ſort, ſelling old things by the call, or, Who giues more? imitating therein the Venetians, or imitated by them. Three principall gates there be to this Citie, Bebe Naufre, or the Gate of Victorie, opening towards the Redde Sea; Bab Zueila leading to Nilus, and the old Towne (betweene theſe the chiefe ſtreet of the Citie doth extend) and Bebel Futuli, or the Port of Triumph, on the North of the Citie, and opening to the Lake called Esbykie. Three ſides thereof are incloſed with goodly buildings, hauing galleries of pleaſure which iettie ouer, ſuſtayned vpon Pillars. On the other ſide (now a heape of ruines) ſtood the ſtately Pallace of Dultibe, Wife to the Sultan Caitbeus: in which were doores and Iaumes of Iuorie; the walles and pauements checkered with diſcoloured Marble, Columnes of Porphir, Alablaſter, and Serpentine: the ſeelings flouriſhed with Gold and Azure, and inlayd with Indian Ebony, a Tree, which being cut downe, almoſt equals a ſtone in hardneſſe. In a word, the magnificencie was ſuch as could be deuiſed or effected by a womans curioſitie, and the Purſe of a Monarch, leuelled with the ground by Selymus, the ſtones and ornaments thereof were coueyed vnto Conſtantinople.

Stately palace.

The Lake.

Fiue Harueſts in a yeare.

Baſe knauerie, & good iuſtice.

Admirable fertility of fruits, and their varietie.

Plantans ſuppoſed ſupplanters.

Embleme of good Magiſtrates.

The Lake both ſquare and large, is but onely a Lake when the Riuer ouer-floweth; ioyned thereunto by a channell, where the Moores (rowed vp and downe in Barges, ſhaded with Damaskes, and Stuffes of India) accuſtome to ſolace themſelues in the euening. The water fallen, yet the place rather changeth then loſeth his delightfulneſſe: affoording the profit of fiue Harueſts in a yeare, together with the pleaſure, frequented much in the coole of the day. I cannot forget the iniurie receiued in this place, and withall the iuſtice. Abuſed by a beggerly Moore, (for ſuch onely will) who then but ſeemed to begin his knauery, wee were glad to flye vnto another for ſuccour, ſeeming a man of good ſort; and by kiſſing of his garment, inſinuated into his fauour; who rebuked him for the wrong hee did vs. When croſſing vs againe, ere wee had gone farre, he vſed vs farre worſe then before: we offering to returne to the other, which he fearing, interpoſed; doing vs much villany to the mertiment of the beholders, eſteeming of Chriſtians as of Dogges and Infidels. At length we got by, and againe complayned. Hee in a maruellous rage made his ſlaues to purſue him; who caught him, ſtript him, and beat him with Rods all along the Leuell, calling vs to bee lookers on, and ſo conueyed him to the place of correction; where by all likelihood he had a hundred blowes on the feet to ſeaſon his paſtimes. Beyond this are a number of ſtragling houſes, extending well-nigh to Bolac, which is the Key vnto Cairo, a large Towne, and ſtretching alongſt the Riuer; in faſhion of building, in ſome part not much inferiour to the other. Within and without the Citie are a number of delicate Orchards, watered as they doe their fields, in which grow variety of excellent fruits; as Oranges, Lemons, Pomegranates, Apples of Paradiſe, Sicamor figs, and others, (whoſe barkes they bore full of holes, the trees being as great as the greateſt Oakes, the fruit no growing amongſt the leaues, but out of the bole and branches) Dates, Almonds, Caſſia fiſtula, (leaued like an Aſh, the fruit hanging downe like Sauſages) Locuſt, (flat, and of the forme of a Cycle) Galls growing vpon Tamarix, Apples no bigger then Berries, Plantains that haue a broad flaggie leafe, growing in cluſters, and ſhaped like Cucumers, the rind like a Peſcod, ſolid within, without ſtones or kernels, to the taſte exceeding delicious, (this the Mahometans ſay was the forbidden fruit; which beeing eaten by our firſt Parents, and their nakedneſſe diſcouered vnto them, they made them Aprons of the leaues thereof) and many more, not knowne by name, nor ſeene by mee elſe-where: ſome bearing fruit all the yeare, and almoſt all of them their leaues. To theſe adde thoſe whole fields of Palmes (and yet no preiudice to the vnder-growing Corne) of all others moſt delightfull.

Cameleons deſcribed at large.

In the aforeſaid Orchards there are great numbers of Cameleons; yet not eaſily found, in that neere to the colour of that whereon they ſit. A creature about the bigneſſe of an ordinary Lizard. His head vnpropotionably bigge, his eyes great, and mouing without the writhing of his necke which is inflexible, his backe crooked, his skinne ſpotted with little tumors, leſſe eminent as neerer the belly; his tayle ſlender and long: on each foot he hath fiue fingers, three on the out-ſide, and two on the inſide ſlow of pace, but ſwiftly extending his tongue, of a maruellous length for the proportion of his body, wherewith he preyes vpon Flyes, the top thereof being hollowed by Nature for that purpoſe. So that deceiued they be who thinke that they eat nothing, but onely liue vpon Ayre; though ſurely Aire is their principall ſuſtenance. For thoſe that haue kept them for a whole yeare together, could neuer perceiue that they fed vpon any thing elſe, and might obſerue their bellies to ſwell, after they had exhauſted the Ayre, and cloſed their iawes; which they expanſe againſt the rayes of the Sunne. Of colour greene, and of a duskey yellow: brighter and whiter towards the belly, yet ſpotted with blue, white, and red. They change not into all colours, as reported: laid vpon greene: the greene predominates; vpon yellow the yellow: but laid vpon blue, or red, or white, the greene retayneth his hue notwithſtanding; onely the other ſpots receiue a more orient luſtre: laid vpon black, they looke black, yet not without a mixture of greene. All of them in all places are not coloured alike. They are ſaid to beare a deadly hatred to the Serpent, inſomuch as when they eſpie them basking in the Sunne, or in the ſhade, they will climbe to the ouer-hanging branches, and let downe from their mouthes a thred, like to that of a Spinſters, hauing at the end a little round drop, which ſhineth like Quickſiluer, that falling on their heads doth deſtroy them: and what is more to be admired, if the boughes hang not ſo ouer, that the thred may perpendicularly deſcend, with their former feet they will ſo direct it, that it ſhall fall directly.

The Caſtle.

Marbles maruels.

Aloft, and neere the top of the Mountaine, againſt the South end of the Citie, ſtands the Caſtle (once the ſtately Manſion of the Mamaluck Sultans, and deſtroyed by Selymus) aſcended vnto by one way onely, and that hewen out of the Rocke; which riſing leiſurely with eaſie ſteepes and ſpacious diſtances, (though of a great height) may bee on horſe-backe without difficultie mounted. From the top, the Citie by reaſon of the Palmes diſperſed throughout, appeareth moſt beautifull; the whole Countrey below lying open to the view. The Caſtle ſo great, that it ſeemeth a Citie of it ſelfe, immured with high wals, diuided into partitions, and entred by doores of Iron; wherein are many ſpacious Courts, in times paſt the places of exerciſe. The ancient buildings all ruinated, doe onely ſhew that they haue beene ſumptuous, there beeing many Pillars of ſolid Marble yet ſtanding, of ſo huge a proportion, that how they came thither is not leaſt to be wondred at. Here hath the Baſſa his Reſidence, wherein the Diuan is kept, on Sundayes, Mondayes, and Tueſdayes the Chauſes as Aduocates, preferring the Suites of their Clients. Fortie Ianizaries he hath of his Guard, attyred like thoſe at Conſtantinople, the reſt employed about the Countrey, for the moſt part are not the ſonnes of Chriſtians, yet faithfull vnto ſuch as are vnder their charges, whom ſhould they betray, they not onely loſe their liues, but alſo the pay which is due to their Poſteritie. Such is this Citie, the faireſt in Turkie, yet differing from what it was, as from a body beeing young and healthfull, doth the ſame growne old and waſted with Diſeaſes.

Armenians.

Laonicus Chal. lib. 3.

Now Cairo, this great Citie is inhabited by Moores; Turkes, Negroes, Iewes, Copties, Greekes, and Armenians: who are here the pooreſt, and euery-where the honeſteſt; labouring painfully, and liuing ſoberly. Thoſe that are not ſubiect to the Turke, if taken in warres, are freed from bondage: who are, liue freely, and pay no Tribute of Children as doe other Chriſtians. This priuiledge enioy they, for that a certaine Armenian foretold of the greatneſſe and glory of Mahomet. They once were vnder the Patriarke of Conſtantinople: but about the Hereſie of Eutyches they fell from his gouernment, and communion with the Grecians, whom they deteſt aboue all other: rebaptizing ſuch as conuert to their Sect. They beleeue that there is but one nature in Chriſt, not by a commixtion of the diuine with the humane, as Eutyches taught, but by a coniunction, euen as the ſoule is ioyned to the body. They deny the Reall Preſence in the Sacrament, and adminiſter it as the Copties doe: with whom they agree alſo, concerning Purgatorie, and not praying for the dead: as with the Greekes, that the Holy Ghoſt proceedeth onely from the Father, and that the dead neither doe nor ſhall feele ioy or torment vntill the day of Doome.

Their Patriarke hath his being at Tyberis in Perſia: in which Countrey they liue wealthily, and in good eſtimation. There are three hundred Biſhops of that Nation; the Prieſts marry not twice: eat fleſh but fiue times a yeare, and then leſt the people ſhould thinke it a ſinne to eate, in regard of their abſtinence. They erre that write, that the people abſtaine from all meates prohibited by the Moſaicall Law; for Hogges fleſh they eate where they can, without offence, to the Mahometans. They obſerue the Lent moſt ſtrictly, yet eate fleſh vpon Fridayes betweene Eaſter and Whitſontide. As for Images they adore them not. Here they haue their Aſſemblies in obſcure Chambers. Comming in (which was on a Sunday in the after-noone) we found one ſitting in the middeſt of the Congregation, in habit not differing from the reſt, reading on a Bible in the Chaldean Tongue. Anon the Biſhop entred in a Hood and Veſt of blacke, with a ſtaffe in his hand, to which they attributed much holineſſe. Firſt, hee prayed, and then ſung certaine Pſalmes, aſſiſted by two or three; after all ſung ioyntly, at interims praying to themſelues: reſembling the Turkes in the poſture of their bodies, and often proſtrations: the Biſhop excepted; who erecting his hands ſtood all the while with his face to the Altar. The Seruice ended, one after another doe kiſſe his hand, and beſtow their Almes, he laying the other on their heads, and bleſſing them. Laſtly, preſcribeth ſucceeding Faſts and Feſtiuals. Where is to be noted, that they faſt vpon the Day of the Natiuitie of our Sauiour.

Greekes.

Here alſo is a Monaſterie of Greeke Coloieros, belonging vnto the capitall Monaſtery of Saint Katherine of Mount Sina, from Cairo ſome eight dayes iourney ouer the Deſerts; ſaid to bee the daughter of King Coſta, a King of Cyprus, who in the time of Maxentius conuerted many vnto Chriſt. Tortured on a Wheele, and finally beheaded at Alexandria (where two goodly Pillars of Theban Marble (though halfe ſwallowed with ruines) preſerue the memory of the place,) ſhe was conueyed (as they affirme) by an Angell, and buried in this Mountaine. It hath three tops of a maruellous height: that on the Weſt-ſide of old called Mount Horeb, where God appeared to Moſes in a buſh, fruitfull in paſtorage; farre lower, and ſhadowed when the Sunne ariſeth by the middlemoſt, that whereon God gaue the Law vnto Moſes. The Monaſtery ſtands at the foot of the mountaine, reſembling a Caſtle, with an Iron doore; wherein they ſhew the Tombe of the Saint much viſited by Pilgrims, from whence the top by fourteene thouſand ſteps of ſtone is aſcended, where ſtands a ruined Chappell. A plentifull Spring deſcendeth from thence and watering the Valley below, is againe drunke vp by the thirſtie ſand. This ſtrong Monaſterie is to entertayne all Pilgrims, (for there is no other place of entertainment) hauing an annuall Reuenue of ſixtie thouſand Dollars from Chriſtian Princes. Of which foundation ſixe and twentie other depend, diſperſed through diuers Countries. They giue alſo daily Almes to the Arabs, to be the better ſecured from out-rage. Yet will they not ſuffer them to enter, but let it downe from the Battlements. Their Orchard aboundeth with excellent Fruites: amongſt which Apples, rare in theſe Countries, transferred from Damaſco. They are neither ſubiect to Pope, nor Patriarke, but haue a Superintendent of their owne, at this preſent in Cairo. Theſe here made vs a collation, where I could not but obſerue their gulling in of Wine with a deare felicitie, whereof they haue their prouiſion from Candy.

During our abode here, a Caruan went foorth with much ſolemnitiy, to meet and relieue the great Caruan in their returne from Mecha, which conſiſteth of many thouſands of Pilgrims that trauell yeerely thither in deuotion and for Merchandize; euery one with his bandroll in his hand, and their Camels gallantly trickt (the Alcoran carried vpon one, in a precious caſe couered ouer with needle-worke, and laid on a rich pillow, inuironed with a number of their chanting Prieſts) guarded by diuers companies of Souldiers, and certaine field peeces. Forty eaſie dayes Iourney it is diſtant from hence: diuided by a wilderneſſe of ſand, that lyeth in drifts, and dangerouſly mooueth with the wind, through which they are guided in many places by ſtarres, as ſhips in the Ocean.

Egges hatched by art.

Then Cairo, no Citie can be more populous, nor better ſerued with all ſorts of prouiſion. Here hatch they egges by artificiall heat in infinite numbers; the manner as ſeene thus briefly. In a narrow entry on each ſide ſtood two rowes of Ouens, one ouer another. On the floores of the lower they lay the offals of flaxe; ouer thoſe mats, and vpon them their egges, at leaſt ſixe thouſand in an Ouen. The floores of the vpper Ouens were as rooffes to the vnder, grated ouer like Kilnes, onely hauing tunnels in the middle, with couers vnto them. Theſe gratings are couered with Mats, on them three inches thicke lyeth the dry and puluerated dung of Camels, Buffoloes, &c. At the hither and farther ſides of thoſe vpper Ouens are Trenches of Lome; a handfull deepe, and two handfuls broad. In theſe they burne of the foreſaid dung, which giueth a ſmothering heat without viſible fire. Vnder the mouthes of the vpper Ouens are conueyances for ſmoke, hauing round rooſes, and vents at the top to ſhut and to open. Thus lye the Egges in the lower Ouens for the ſpace of eight dayes, turned daily, and carefully lookt to that the heate be but moderate. Then cull they the bad from the good, by that time diſtinguiſhable (holding them betweene a Lampe and the Eye) which are two parts of three for the moſt part. Two dayes after they put out the fire, and conuey by the paſſage in the middle, the one halfe into the vpper Ouens: then ſhutting all cloſe, they let them alone for ten dayes longer, at which time they become diſcloſed in an inſtant. This they practiſe from the beginning of Ianuary vntill the midſt of Iune, the Egges being then moſt fit for that purpoſe; neither are they (as reported) preiudiced by Thunder: yet theſe declare that imitated Nature will neuer be equalled, all of them being in ſome part defectiue or monſtrous.

Moſt of the Inhabitants of Cairo conſiſt of Merchants and Artificers: yet the Merchants frequent no forrein Marts. All of a Trade keepe their ſhops in one place, which they ſhut about the houre of fiue, and ſolace themſelues for the reſt of the day, Cookes excepted, who keepe theirs open till late in the euening. For few, but ſuch as haue great Families dreſſe meate in their houſes, which the men doe buy ready dreſt; the women too fine fingerd to meddle with houſwifry, who ride abroad vpon pleaſure on eaſie-going Aſſes, and tye their Husbands to the beneuolence that is due; which if neglected, they will complaine to the Magiſtrate, and procure a Diuorcement. Many practitioners here are in Phyſick, inuited thereunto by the ſtore of Simples brought hither, and here growing, an Art wherein the Egyptians haue excelled from the beginning.

Rue wholeſome.

Feats by birds and beaſts.

A kind of Rue is here much in requeſt, wherewith they perfume themſelues in the mornings, not onely as a preſeruatiue againſt infection, but eſteeming it preualent againſt hurtfull ſpirits. So the Barbarians of old accuſtomed to doe with the Roots of wild Galingal. There are in this Citie, and haue beene of long, a ſort of people that doe get their liuings by the ſhewing of feats with Birds and Beaſts, exceeding therein all ſuch as haue beene famous amongſt vs. I haue heard a Rauen to ſpeake ſo perfectly, as it hath amazed me. They vſe both their throats and tongues in vttering of ſounds, which other Birds doe not, and therefore more fit for that purpoſe. Scaliger the Father, reports of one that was kept in a Monaſterie heard by him; which, when hungry, would call vpon Conrade, the Cooke, ſo plainly, as often miſtaken for a man. I haue ſeene them make both Dogges and Goats to ſet their foure feet on a little turned Pillar of wood, about a foot high, and no broader at the end then the palme of a hand, climing from one to two, ſet on the top of one another, and ſo to the third and fourth; and there turne about as often as their Maſters would bid them. They carry alſo dancing Camels about, taught when young, by ſetting them on a hot hearth, and playing all the while on an Inſtrument: the poore beaſt through the extremity of heat lifting vp his feet one after another. This practiſe they for certaine moneths together, ſo that at length whenſoeuer he heareth the fiddle, he will fall a dancing. Aſſes they will teach to doe ſuch tricks, as if poſſeſſed with reaſon: to whom Bankes his horſe would haue proued but a Zany.

Matarea.

The time of our departure proroged, we rode to Matarea, fiue miles North-eaſt of the Citie. By the way we ſaw ſand caſt vpon the earth, to moderate the fertility. Here they ſay, that our Sauiour, and the bleſſed Virgin, with Ioſeph, repoſed themſelues, as they fled from the fury of Herod, when ohpreſſed with thirſt, a Fountaine foorthwith burſt forth at their feet to refreſh them. We ſaw a Well enuironed with a poore mud wall, the water drawne vp by * Buffolos into a little Ciſterne; from whence it ran into a lauer of Marble within a ſmall Chappell, by the Moores (in contempt of Chriſtians) ſpitefully defiled. In the wall there is a little concaue lined with ſweet wood (diminiſhed by affectors of relicks) and ſmoked with incenſe: in the ſole, a ſtone of Porphyr, whereon (they ſay) ſhe did ſet our Sauiour. Of ſo many thouſand Wells (a thing moſt miraculous) this onely affordeth guſtable waters, and that ſo excellent, that the Baſſa refuſeth the riuer to drinke thereof, and drinkes of no other; and when they ceaſſe for any time to exhauſt it, it ſendeth foorth of it ſelfe ſo plentifull a ſtreame, as able to turne an ouer-fall Mill. Paſſing through the Chappell, it watereth a pleaſant Orchard; in a corner whereof there ſtandeth an ouer-growne fig-tree, which opened (as they report) to receiue our Sauiour and his mother, then hardly eſcaping the purſuers; cloſing againe till the purſute was paſt; then againe diuiding, as now it remaineth. A large hole there is through one of the ſides of the leaning bulke: this (they ſay) no baſtard can thred, but ſhall ſticke faſt by the middle. The tree is all to be-hackt for the wood thereof, reputed of ſoueraigne vertue. But I abuſe my time, and prouoke my Reader. In an incloſure adioyning, they ſhewed vs a plant of Balme, the whole remainder of that ſtore which this Orchard produced, deſtroyed by the Turkes, or enuy of the Iewes, as by them reported, being tranſported out of Iury, in the dayes of Herod the Great, by the commandement of Antonius, at the ſuite of Cleopatra: but others ſay, brought hither out of Arabia Felix, at the coſt of a Saracen Sultan.

Salaxicus tom: 10 cap. 6. dares to report (as he ſaith, himſelfe ſeeing it) that from Sunday at noone vntill Monday morning they will not labour in the drawing vp of water, though vrged with ſtripes.

§. III.

The Pyramides viewed, SPHYNX and other antiquities.
Iourney from Cairo to Gaza.

Strange, if the dealing be as true as the telling.

A Day or two after, wee croſſed the Nilus. Three miles beyond on the left hand left we the place whereupon Good-friday the armes and legs of a number of men appeare ſtretched foorth of the earth, to the aſtoniſhment of the multitude. This I haue heard confirmed by Chriſtians, Mahometans, and Iewes, as ſeene vpon their ſeuerall faiths. An impoſtury perhaps contriued by the water-men, who fetching them from the Mummes, (whereof there are an vnconſumeable number) and keeping the myſtery in their families, doe ſticke them ouer night in the ſand, obtaining thereby the yeerely Ferrying ouer of many thouſand of paſſengers. Three or foure miles further, on the right hand, and in ſight, athwart the Plaine, there extendeth a cauſſey ſupported with Arches fiue Furlongs long, ten paces high, and fiue in breadth, of ſmooth and figured ſtone; built by the builder of the Pyramides, for a paſſage ouer the ſoft and vnſupporting earth with weighty carriages. Now hauing ridden through a goodly Plaine, ſome twelue miles ouer (in that place the whole breadth of Ægypt) we came to the foot of the Libyan Deſarts.

Mummey.

Pyramides.

Full Weſt of the Citie, cloſe vpon theſe Deſarts, aloft on a Rockie Leuell adioyning to the Valley, ſtands thoſe three Pyramides (the barbarous Monuments of prodigality and vaine-glory) ſo vniuerſally celebrated. The name is deriued from a flame of fire, in regard of their ſhape; broad below, and ſharpe aboue, like a pointed Diamond. By ſuch the ancient did expreſſe the originall of things, and that formeleſſe forme-taking ſubſtance. For as a Pyramis beginning at a point, and the principall height, by little and little dilateth into all parts: ſo Nature proceeding from one vndeuidable Fountaine (euen God the Soueraigne Eſſence) receiueth diuerſitie of formes, effuſed into ſeuerall kinds and multitudes of figures; vniting all in the ſupreame head, from whence all excellencies iſſue.

Moſt manifeſt it is, that theſe, as the reſt, were the Regall Sepulchers of the Egyptians. The greateſt of the three, and chiefe of the Worlds ſeuen wonders, being ſquare at the bottome, is ſuppoſed to take vp eight Acres of ground. Euery ſquare being three hundred ſingle paces in length, the ſquare at the top conſiſting of three ſtones onely, yet large enough for threeſcore to ſtand vpon: aſcended by two hundred and fiftie fiue ſteps, each ſtep aboue three feet high, of a breadth proportionable. No ſtone ſo little throughout the whole, as to be drawne by our Carriages, yet were theſe hewen out of the Troian mountaynes, farre off in Arabia, ſo called of the

The Ægiptian Pyramides, & Coloſſus.

Captiue Troians, brought by Menelaus into Egypt, and there afterward planted. A wonder how conueyed hither: how ſo mounted, a greater. Twentie yeares it was a building, by three hundred threeſcore and ſixe thouſand men continually wrought vpon: who onely in Radiſhes, Garlicke, and Onions, are ſaid to haue conſumed one thouſand and eight hundred Talents. By theſe and the like Inuentions exhauſted they their Treaſure, and employed the people, for feare leſt ſuch infinite wealth ſhould corrupt their Succeſſors, and dangerous idleneſſe beget in the Subiect a deſire of innouation.

North moiſt.

Yet this hath beene too great a morſell for Time to deuoure; hauing ſtood, as may be probably coniectured, about three thouſand and two hundred yeares; and now rather old then ruinous: yet the North-ſide moſt worne, by reaſon of the humiditie of the Northerne wind, which here is the moiſteſt. The top at length we aſcended with many pauſes and much difficultie, from whence with delighted eyes we beheld that ſoueraigne of ſtreames, and moſt excellent of Countries. Southward and neare hand the Mummes: a-farre off diuers huge Pyramides; each of which, were this way, might ſupply the repute of a wonder. During a great part of the day it caſteth no ſhadow on the Earth, but is at once illuminated on all ſides. Deſcending againe, on the Eaſt-ſide, below, from each corner equally diſtant, we approched the entrance, ſeeming heretofore to haue beene cloſed vp, or ſo intended, both by the place it ſelfe, as appeareth by the following Picture, and conueyances within.

Other Pyramides.

Into this our Ianizaries diſcharged their Harquebuſes, leſt ſome ſhould haue ſkulkt within to haue done vs a miſchiefe, and guarded the mouth whilſt wee entred, for feare of the wilde Arabs. To take the better footing we put off our ſhooes, and moſt of our apparell: foretold of the heate within, not inferiour to a Stoue. Our guide (a Moore) went foremoſt: euery one of vs with our lights in our hands. A moſt dreadfull paſſage, and no leſſe cumberſome; not aboue a yard in breadth, and foure feet in height: each ſtone contayning that meaſure. So that alwayes ſtooping, and ſometimes creeping, by reaſon of the rubbidge, we deſcended (not by ſtaires, but as downe the ſteepe of a hill) a hundred feet: where the place for a little circuit enlarged; and the fearefull deſcent continued, which, they ſay, none euer durſt attempt any farther. Saue that a Baſſa of Cairo, curious to ſearch into the ſecrets thereof, cauſed diuers condemned perſons to vndertake the performance; well ſtored with lights and other prouiſion: and that ſome of them aſcended againe wel-nigh thirtie miles off in the Deſerts. A Fable deuiſed onely to beget wonder. But others haue written, that at the bottome there is a ſpacious Pit eightie and ſixe Cubits deepe, filled at the ouer-flow by concealed Conduits: in the middeſt a little Iland, and on that a Tombe contayning the bodie of Cheops, a King of Egypt, and the builder of this Pyramis: which with the truth hath a greater affinitie. For ſince I haue beene told by one out of his owne experience, that in the vttermoſt depth there is a large ſquare place (though without water) into which he was led by another entry opening to the South, knowne but vnto few (that now open being ſhut by ſome order and came vp at this place. A turning on the right hand leadeth into a little roome, which by reaſon of the noyſome ſauour, and vneaſie paſſage wee refuſed to enter. Clambering ouer the mouth of the aforeſaid Dungeon, we aſcended as vpon the bow of an Arch, the way no larger then the former, about a hundred and twentie feet. Here we paſſed through a long entry which led directly forward; ſo low, that it tooke euen from vs that vneaſie benefit of ſtooping. Which brought vs into a little roome with a compaſt roofe, more long then broad, of poliſhed Marble, whoſe grauel-like ſmell, halfe full of rubbidge forced our quicke returne. Climing alſo ouer this entrance, we aſcended as before, about an hundred and twentie feet higher. This entrie being of an exceeding height, yet no broader from ſide to ſide then a man may fathome, benched on each ſide, and cloſed aboue with admirable Architecture, the Marble ſo great, and ſo cunningly ioyned, as had it beene hewen through the liuing Rocke. At the top we entred into a goodly Chamber, twentie foot wide, and fortie in length, the roofe of a maruellous height; and the ſtones ſo great, that eight floores it, eight roofes it, eight flagge the ends, and ſixteene the ſides, all of well wrought Theban Marble. Athwart the roome at the vpper end there ſtandeth a Tombe, vncouered, empty, and all of one ſtone; breſt high, ſeuen feet in length, not foure in breadth, and ſounding like a Bell. In this, no doubt, lay the bodie of the Builder. They erecting ſuch coſtly Monuments, not onely out of a vaine oſtentation: but beeing of opinion, that after the diſſolution of the fleſh the ſoule ſhould ſuruiue; and when thirtie ſixe thouſand yeares were expired, againe bee ioyned vnto the ſelfe-ſame bodie, reſtored vnto his former condition: gathered in their conceits from Aſtronomicall demonſtrations. Againſt one end of the Tombe, and cloſe to the wall, there openeth a Pit with a long and narrow mouth, which leadeth into an vnder Chamber. In the walles on each ſide of the vpper roome, there are two holes, one oppoſite to another; their ends not diſcernable, nor bigge enough to be crept into: ſootie within; and made, as they ſay, by a flame of fire which darted through it. This is all that this huge maſſe contayneth within his darkeſome entrailes: at leaſt to be diſcouered.

The Cheops

Herodotus reports that King Cheops became ſo poore by the building thereof, that hee was compelled to proſtitute his Daughter, charging her to take whatſoeuer ſhee could get: who affecting her particular glorie, of her ſeuerall Cuſtomers demanded ſeuerall ſtones, with which ſhe erected the ſecond Pyramis; farre leſſe then the former, ſmoothe without, and not to be entred. The third which ſtandeth on the higher ground, is very ſmall if compared with the other; yet ſaith both Herodotus and Strabo, greater in beautie, and of no leſſe coſt: beeing all built of Touch-ſtone; diffitult to be wrought, and brought from the fartheſt Æthiopian mountaines: but ſurely not ſo; yet intended they to haue couered it with Theban Marble; whereof a great quantitie lyeth by it. Made by Mycerinus the Sonne of Cheops; ſome ſay, by a Curtizan of Naucretis, called Dorica by Sappho the Poetreſſe, beloued of her Brother Caraxus, who fraught with Wines, oft ſayled hither from Leſbos. Others name Rhodope, another of that Trade; at the firſt fellow ſlaue with Æſope the writer of Fables: who obtayning her libertie dwelt in this Citie: where ſuch in ſome ſort were reputed noble. But that ſhe ſhould get by whoring ſuch a maſſe of Treaſure, is vncredible.

Some tell a Storie, how that one day waſhing her ſelfe, an Eagle ſnatcht away her ſhooe, and bearing it to Memphis, let it fall from on high into the lap of the King. Who aſtoniſhed with the accident, & admiring the forme, forth-with made a ſearch for the owner throughout all his Kingdome. Found in Naucretis, and brought vnto him, he made her his Queene, and after her death encloſed her in this Monument. She liued in the dayes of Amaſis.

The Coloſſus.

Plinie taxed.

Not farre off from theſe the Coloſſus doth ſtand, vnto the mouth conſiſting of the naturall rocke, as if for ſuch a purpoſe aduanced by Nature, the reſt of huge flat ſtones laid thereon, wrought altogether into the forme of an Æthiopian woman, and adored heretofore by the Countrey people as a rurall Diety. Vnder this, they ſay, lieth buried the body of Amoſis. Of ſhape, leſſe monſtrous then is Plinies report: who affirmeth, the head to be an hundred and two feet in compaſſe, when the whole is but ſixtie foot high. the face is ſomething disfigured by Time, or indignation of the Moores, deteſting Images. The fore-ſaid Author (together with others) doe call it a Sphynx. The vpper part of a Sphynx reſembled a Maide, and the lower a Lion; whereby the Egyptians defigured the increaſe of the Riuer, (and conſequently of their riches) then riſing when the Sunne is in Leo and Virgo. This but from the ſhoulders vpward ſurmounteth the ground, though Pliny giue it a belly, which I know not how to reconcile vnto the truth, vnleſſe the ſand doe couer the remainder. By a Sphynx the Egyptians in their Hieroglyphickes preſented an Harlot, hauing an amiable and alluring face; but withall the tyrannie, and rapacitie of a Lion: exerciſed ouer the poore heart-broken, and voluntarily periſhing Louer.

The Images of theſe they alſo erected before the entrances of their Temples; declaring that ſecrets of Philoſophy, and ſacred Myſterie, ſhould be folded in Ænigmaticall expreſſions, ſeparated from the vnderſtanding of the prophane multitude.

Fiue miles South-eaſt of theſe, and two Weſt of the Riuer, towards which inclineth this brow of the mountaine, ſtood the Regall Citie of Memphis: the ſtrength and glory of old Egypt, built by Ogdoo, and called Memphis, by the name of his Daughter, compreſſed (as they faine) by Nilus, in the likeneſſe of a Bull. In this was the Temple of Apis (which is the ſame with Oſiris) as Oſiris with Nilus, Bacchus, Apollo, &c.

But why ſpend I time about that that is not? The very ruines now almoſt ruinated, yet ſome few impreſſions are left, and diuers throwne downe, Statues of monſtrous reſemblances, a ſcarce ſufficient teſtimonie to ſhew to the curious ſeeker, that there it had beene.

This hath made ſome erroniouſly affirme old Memphis to haue beene the ſame with new Cairo: new in reſpect of the other. But thoſe that haue both ſeene and writ of the former, report it to haue ſtood three Schœnes aboue the South Angle of Delta, (each Schœne contayning fiue miles at the leaſt, and ſometimes ſeuen and a halfe, differing according to their ſeuerall cuſtomes) which South-angle is diſtant but barely foure miles from Cairo. Beſides, theſe Pyramides appertaining vnto Memphis, affirmed to haue ſtood fiue miles North-weſt of that Citie, ſtanding directly Weſt, and full twelue from this. But the moſt pregnant proofe hereof are the Mummes, (lying in a place where many generations haue had their Sepultures) not farre aboue Memphis, neere the brow of the Libyan Deſart, and ſtreightning of the Mountaines, from Cairo wel-nigh twenty miles. Nor likely it is that they would ſo farre carry their dead, hauing as conuenient a place adioyning to the Citie.

Theſe we had purpoſed to haue ſeene, but the chargeable guard, and feare of the Arabs, there then ſolemnizing their feſtiual, being beſides to haue laine out al night, made vs content our ſelus with what we had heard; hauing before ſeene diuers of the embalmed bodies, and ſome broken vp, to be bought for Dollars a peece at the Citie. In that place are ſome indifferent great, and a number of little Pyramides, with Tombes of ſeuerall faſhions: many ruinated, as many violated by the Moores and Arabians, who make a profit of the dead, and infringe the priuiledge of Sepulchers. Theſe were the graues of the ancient Ægyptians, from the firſt inhabiting of that Countrey; coueting to be there interred, as the place ſuppoſed to containe the body of Oſiris. Vnder euery one, or whereſoeuer lies ſtones not naturall to the place, by remoouing the ſame, deſcents are diſcouered like the narrow mouths of Wells (hauing holes in each ſide of the walls to deſcend by, yet ſo troubleſome, that many refuſe to goe downe, that come thither of purpoſe) ſome wel-nigh ten fathoms deepe, leading into long vaults (belonging, as ſhould ſeeme, to particular families) hewne out of the Rocke, with Pillars of the ſame. Betweene euery Arch the corſes lie ranckt one by another, ſhrowded in a number of folds of linnen, ſwathled with bands of the ſame: the breſts of diuers being ſtained with Hieroglyphicall Characters. Within their bellies are painted papers, and their Gods incloſed in little Models of ſtone or mettall, ſome of the ſhape of men, in coat-armours, with the heads of Sheepe, Hawkes, Dogs, &c. others of Cats, Beetles, Monkies, and ſuch like. Of theſe I brought away diuers with mee, ſuch in ſimilitude.

The Linnen pulled off (in colour, and like in ſubſtance to the inward filme betweene the Barke and the bole, long dried, and brittle) the body appeareth ſolid, vncorrupt, and perfect in all his dimenſions: whereof the muſculous parts are browne of colour, ſome blacke, hard as ſtone-pitch, and hath in Phyſicke an operation not vnlike), though more Soueraigne. In the preparing of theſe, to keepe them from putrifaction, they drew out the braines at the noſtrils with an inſtrument of iron, repleniſhing the ſame with preſeruatiue ſpices. Then cutting vp the belly with an Æthiopian ſtone, and extracting the bowels, they clenſed the inſide with wine, and ſtuffing the ſame with a compoſition of Caſſia, Myrrhe, and other odours, cloſed it againe. The like the poorer ſort of people effected with Bitumen (as the inſide of their skuls and bellies yet teſtifie) fetcht from the lake of Aſphalites in Iury. So did they with the iuyce of Cedars; which by the extreame bitterneſſe, and ſiccatiue faculty, not onely forthwith ſubdued the cauſe of interior corruption, but hath to this day (a continuance of aboue three thouſand yeeres) preſerued them vncorrupted. Such is the differing nature of that tree, procuring life as it were to the dead, and death to the liuing. This done, they wrapt the body with linnen in multitudes of folds, beſmeared with Gum, in manner of ſeare-cloth. Their ceremonies (which were many) performed, they layd the corps in a boate, to be wafted ouer Acheruſia, a lake on the South of the Citie, by one onely whom they called Charon, which gaue to Orpheus the inuention of his infernall Ferri-man: About this lake ſtood the ſhady Temple of Hecate, with the Ports of Cocytus and Oblivion, ſeparated by barres of braſſe, the originall of like fables. When landed on the other ſide, the body was brought before certaine Iudges, to whom if conuinced of an euill life, they depriued it of buriall; if otherwiſe, they ſuffered it to be interred as aforeſaid. So ſumptuous were they in theſe houſes of death, ſo carefull to preſerue their carkaſſes. Forſomuch as the ſoule, knowing it ſelfe by diuine inſtinct immortall, doth deſire that the body (her beloued companion) might inioy (as farre foorth as may be) the like felicitie: giuing, by erecting ſuch loftie Pyramides, and thoſe dues of funerall, all poſſible eternity. Neither was the loſſe of this leſſe feared, then the obtaining coueted.

Babylon.

Returning by the way that we came, and hauing repaſt the Nilus, we inclined on the right hand to ſee the ruines of the old Citie adioyning to the South of Cairo, called formerly Babylon, of certaine Babylonians then ſuffered to inhabite by the ancient Ægyptian Kings; who built a Caſtle in the ſelfe ſame place where this now ſtandeth, deſcribed before, which was long after the Garriſon Towne of one of the three Legions, ſet to defend this Countrey in the time of the Romanes, and anciently gaue the name of Babylon vnto this Citie below, now called Miſrulbetich by the Arabians, ſaid to haue beene built by Omar the ſucceſſor vnto Mahomet; but ſurely, rather reedified by him then founded, hauing had in it ſuch ſtore of Chriſtian Churches as teſtified by their ruines. We paſt by a mighty Ciſterne cloſed within a Tower, and ſtanding vpon an in-let of the Riuer, built as they heare ſay, at the charge of the Iewes, to appeaſe the anger of the King, incenſed by them againſt the innocent Chriſtians; who by the remouing of a Montaine (the taske impoſed vpon their faith) conuerted him vnto their Religion, and his diſpleaſure vpon their accuſers. This ſerueth the Caſtle with water running along an aquaduct borne vpon three hundred Arches. The ruines of the Citie are great, ſo were the buildings; amongſt which, many of Chriſtian Monaſteries and Temples, one lately (the laſt that ſtood) throwne by this Baſſa (as they ſay) for that it hindred his proſpect: If ſo, he ſurely would not haue giuen leaue vnto the Patriarke, to rebuild it; for which he was ſpitefully ſpoken of by the Moores, as a ſuſpected fauourer of the Chriſtian Religion, who ſubuerted forthwith what he had begun. Whereupon the worthy Cerill made a Voyage vnto Conſtantinople, to procure the Grand Signiors Commandement for the ſupport of his purpoſe, when by the Greeks there, not altogether with his will, he was choſen their Patriarch, but within a ſhort ſpace diſplanted (as the manner is) by the bribery of another, he returned vnto Cairo. Beſides, here is a little Chappell dedicated to our Lady, vnderneath it a grott, in which it is ſaid that ſhe hid her ſelfe, when purſued by Herod. Much frequented it is by the Chriſtians, as is the Tombe of Naſiſſa (here being) by the Mahometans.

See Leo.

The few inhabitants that here be, are Greekes and Armenians: Here we ſaw certaine great Serraglios, exceeding high, and propt vp by buttreſſes. Theſe they call the Granaries of Ioſeph, wherin he hoarded corne in the yeer of plenty againſt the ſucceding famine. In all there be ſeuen, three ſtanding, and imployed to the ſelfe ſame vſe, the other ruined. From thence vp the Riuer for twenty miles ſpace, there is nothing but ruines: thus with the day we ended our Progreſſe.

Vpon the fourth of March we departed from Cairo, in the habites of Pilgrims, foure of vs Engliſh, conſorted with three Italians, of whom one was a Prieſt, and another a Phyſician. For our ſelues we hired three Camels with their keepers; two to carry vs, and the third for our prouiſion. The price we ſhall know at Gaza, vpon the diuiding of the great Caruan, anſwerable to the ſucceſſe of the iourney. We alſo hired a Coptie for halfe a Dollor a day, to be our interpreter, and to attend on vs. Our prouiſion for ſo long a Voyage we bore along with vs, viz. Biſcot, Rice, Raiſins, Figs, Dates, Almonds, Oliues, Oyle, Sherbets, &c. buying Pewter, Braſſe, and ſuch like implements, as if to ſet vp houſe-keeping. Our water we carried in Goat skins. Wee rid in ſhallow Cradles (which we bought alſo) two on a Camell, harboured aboue, and couered with linnen, to vs exceeding vneaſie; not ſo to the people of theſe Countreys, who ſit croſſelegd with a naturall falicity. That night we pitched by Hangia, ſome foureteene miles from the Citie. In the euening came the Captaine, a Turke, well mounted, and attended on. Here we ſtayeſt the next day following, for the gathering together of the Caruan; paying foure Madeins a Camell vnto them of the Village. Theſe as (thoſe elſewhere) doe nightly guard vs, making good whatſoeuer is ſtolne. Euer and anon one crying Waſhed, is anſwered, Elough, by another (ioyntly ſignifying one onely God) which paſſing about the Caruan, doth aſſure them that all is in ſafety. Amongſt vs were diuers Iewiſh women: in the extremity of their age vndertaking ſo weariſome a iourney, onely to die at Ieruſalem, bearing along with them the bones of their Parents, Husbands, Children, and Kinsfolke; as they doe from all other parts where they can conueniently. The Merchants brought with them many Negros; not the worſt of their Merchandizes. Theſe they buy of their Parents, ſome thirty dayes iourney aboue, and on the Weſt ſide of the Riuer. As the wealth of others conſiſts in multitudes of cattell; ſo theirs in the multitude of their children, whom they part from with as little paſſion; neuer after to be ſeene or heard of; regarding more the price then condition of their ſlauery. Theſe are deſcended of Chus, the Sonne of curſed Cham; as are all of that complexion. Not ſo by reaſon of their Seed, nor heat of the Climate; Nor of the Soyle, as ſome haue ſuppoſed; for neither haply, will other Races in that Soyle proue black, nor that Race in other Soyles grow to better complexion: but rather from the Curſe of Noe vpon Cham in the Poſteritie of Chus.

Bilbeſh.

About ten of clocke in the night the Caruan diſlodged, and at ſeuen the next morning pitched at Bilbeſh, which is in the Land of Goſhen. Paying two Madeines for a Camell; at midnight we departed from thence. Our Companions had their Cradles ſtrucke downe through the negligence of the Camellers, which accident caſt vs behind the Caruan. In danger to haue beene ſurprized by the Peaſants, we were by a Spahie that followed, deliuered from that miſchiefe. About nine in the forenoone, we pitched by Catara, where we payed foure Madeines for a Camell.

The tree Alchan.

Here about, but neerer the Nile, there is a certaine Tree, called Alchan, by the Arabs, the leaues thereof being dryed and reduced into powder, doe dye a reddiſh yellow. There is yearely ſpent of this through the Turkiſh Empire, to the value of foureſcore thouſand Sultanies. The women with it doe dye their haire and nayles, ſome of them their hands and feet; and not a few, the moſt of their bodies tempered onely with Gumme, and laid on in the Bannia, that it may penetrate the deeper. The Chriſtians of Boſna, Valachia, and Ruſſia, doe vſe it as well as the Mahometans. Trees alſo here be that doe bring forth Cottens. The next morning before day, we remoued and came by nine of the clocke to Salhia, where we ouer-tooke the reſt of the Caruan: all Chriſtians of thoſe Countries riding vpon Mules, and Aſſes. Who had procured leaue to ſet forward a day before; deſirous to arriue by Palme Sunday at Ieruſalem, (this Caruan ſtaying ten dayes longer then accuſtomed, becauſe of certaine principall Merchants) but they durſt not by themſelues venture ouer the mayne Deſerts: which all this while wee had trented along, and now were to paſſe through.

Salhia.

A little beneath is the Lake Sirbonis, called by the old Egyptians the place of Typhons expiration, now Bayrena, diuiding Egypt from Syria. A place to ſuch as knew it not, in thoſe times full of vnſuſpected danger. Then two hundred furlongs long, being but narrow, and bordered on each ſide with hils of ſand, which borne into the water by the winds ſo thickned the ſame, as not by the eye to bee diſtinguiſhed from the part of the Continent: by meanes whereof whole Armies haue beene deuoured. For the ſands neere hand ſeeming firme, a good way entred ſlid farther off, and left no way of returning, but with a lingring crueltie ſwallowed the ingaged: whereupon it was called Barathrum. Now but a little Lake and waxing leſſe daily: the paſſage long ſince choaked vp which it had into the Sea. Cloſe to this ſtandeth the Mountaine Caſſius (no other then a huge mole of ſand) famous for the Temple of Iupiter, and Sepulchre of Pompey, there obſcurely buried by the pietie of a priuate Souldier; vpon whom hee is made by Lucan, to beſtow this Epitaph:

Here the Great Pompey lyes, ſo Fortune pleas'd
To inſtile this ſtone; whom Cæſars ſelfe would haue
Interr'd, before he ſhould haue miſt a Graue.

Hic ſitus eſt magnus, placet hoc Fortuna ſepulchrum
Dicere Pompei: quo condi maluit illum
Quam terra caruiſſ. Socer———

Who loſt his head not farre from thence by the treacherie and commandement of the vngratefull Ptolomie. His Tombe was ſumptuouſly re-edified by the Emperour Adrian. North hereof lyes Idumea, betweene Arabia, and the Sea extending to Iudea.

The Subaſſee of Sahia inuited himſelfe to our Tent, who feeding on ſuch prouiſion as we had, would in concluſion haue fed vpon vs; had not our commandement (which ſtood vs in foure Shariffes) from the Baſſa of Cairo, and the fauour of the Captaine, by meanes of our Phyſician, protected vs: otherwiſe, right or wrong had bin but a ſilly plea to barbarous couetouſneſſe armed with power. We ſeuen were all the Frankes that were in the company, we heard how hee had ſerued others, and reioyced not a little in being thus fortified againſt him. The whole Caruan being now aſſembled, conſiſts of a thouſand Horſes, Mules and Aſſes; and of fiue hundred Camels. These are the ſhips of Arabia, their Seas are the Deſerts. A Creature created for burthen. Sixe hundred weight is his ordinary load; yet will he carrie a thouſand. When in lading or vnlading he lyes on his belly, and will riſe (as it is ſaid) when laden proportionably to his ſtrength, nor ſuffer more to be laid on him. Foure dayes together hee will well trauell without water, for a neceſſitie fourteene: in his often belchings thruſting vp a Bladder, wherewith hee moyſteneth his mouth and throat, when in a Iourney they cramme them with Barley dough. They are, as ſome ſay, the onely that ingender backward. Their paces ſlow, and intollerable hard, beeing withall vnſure of foot, where neuer ſo little ſlippery or vneuen. They are not made to amend their paces when wearie, with blowes; but are encouraged by Songs, and the going before of their Keepers. A beaſt gentle and tractable, but in the time of his Venery: then, as is remembring his former hard vſage, he will bite his Keeper, throw him downe and kicke him: fortie dayes continuing in that furie, and then returning to his former meekneſſe. About their neckes they hang certaine Charmes included in Leather, and writ by their Derviſes, to defend them from miſchances, and the poyſon of ill eyes. Here we paid fiue Madeines for a Camell.

Arabia petrea.

Hauing with two dayes reſt refreſhed them, now to begin the worſt of their Iourney, on the tenth of March we entred the mayne Deſerts, a part of Arabiapetrea: ſo called of Petrea, the principall Citie, now Rathalalah. On the North and Weſt it borders on Syria and Egypt, Southward on Arabia Fœlix and the Red Sea; and on the Eaſt it hath Arabia the Deſert: a barren and deſolate Countrey, bearing neither Graſſe nor Trees, ſaue onely here and there a few Palmes which will not forſake thoſe forſaken places. That little that growes on the Earth, is wild Hyſope, whereupon they doe paſture their Camels, a Creature content with little, whoſe Milke and fleſh is their principall ſuſtenance. They haue no water that is ſweet, all being a meere Wilderneſſe of ſand. The winds hauing rayſed high Mountaynes, which lye in Drifts, according to the quarters from whence they blow.

Aſſault of wild Arabs.

Oſtridges.

Dromedaries.

About mid-night (the Souldiers beeing in the head of the Caruan) theſe Arabs aſſayled our Rere. The clamour was great, and the Paſſengers, together with their Leaders, fled from their Camels. I and my companion imagining the noiſe to bee onely an encouragement vnto one another, were left alone; yet preſerued from violence. They carryed away with them diuers Mules and Aſſes laden with Drugges, and abandoned by their Owners, not daring to ſtay too long, nor cumber themſelues with too much luggage, for feare of the Souldiers. Theſe are deſcended of Iſmael, called alſo Sarracens of Sarra, which ſignifieth a Deſert, and ſaken, to inhabit. And not onely of the place, but of the manner of their liues, for Sarrack imports as much as a Thiefe, as now, being giuen from the beginning vnto Theft and Rapine. They dwell in Tents, which they remoue like walking Cities, for opportunitie of prey, and benefit of paſturage. They acknowledge no Soueraigne, not worth the conquering, nor can they bee conquered, retyring to places impaſſable for Armies, by reaſon of the rolling ſands and penurie of all things. A Nation from the beginning vnmixed with others, boaſting of their Nobilitie, & at this day hating all Mechanicall Sciences. They hang about the skirts of the habitable Countries; and hauing robbed, retyre with a maruellous celeritie. Thoſe that are not detected perſons, frequent the neighbouring Villages for prouiſion, and trafficke without moleſtation, they not daring to intreat them euilly. They are of meane ſtatures, raw-boned, tawnie, hauing feminine voyces, of a ſwift and noyſeleſſe pace, behind you ere aware of them. Their Religion Mahometaniſme, glorying in that that the Impoſtor was thir Countriman: their Language extending as farre as that Religion extendeth. They ride on ſwift Horſes (not miſſe-ſhapen, though leane) and patient of labour. They feed them twice a day with the milke of Camels, nor are they eſteemed of, if not of ſufficient ſpeed to ouer-take an Oſtridge. Of thoſe there are ſtore in the Deſerts. They keepe in flockes, and oft affrighted the ſtranger Paſſenger with their fearefull ſhreeches, appearing afarre off like a troupe of Horſemen. Their bodies are too heauie to bee ſupported with their wings, which vſeleſſe for flight, doe ſerue them onely to runne the more ſpeedily. They are the ſimpleſt of Fowles, and Symbols of folly. What they find, they ſwallow, without delight, euen ſtones and Iron. When they haue laid their Egges, not leſſe great then the bullet of a Culuerin (whereof there are great numbers to be ſold in Cairo) they leaue them, and vnmindfull where, ſit on thoſe they next meet with. The Arabs catch the young ones, running apace as ſoone as diſcloſed; and when fatted, doe eate them, ſo doe they ſome part of the old, and ſell their skinnes with the feathers vpon them. They ride alſo on Dromedaries, like in ſhape, but leſſe then a Camell, of a iumping gate, and incredible ſpeed. They will carrie a man (yet vnfit for burthen) a hundred miles a day; liuing without water, and with little food ſatiſfied. If one of theſe Arabians vndertake your conduct, he will performe it faithfully, neyther will any of the Nation moleſt you. They will leade you by vnknowne nearer wayes, and farther in foure dayes, then you can trauell by Caruan in fourteene. Their Weapons are Bowes, Darts, Slings, and long Iauelings headed like Partiſans. As the Turkes ſit croſſe-legged, ſo doe they on their heeles, differing little in habit from the Ruſtick Egyptians.

Iewiſh Superſtition.

Fraudes pietatis, rewarded with piæ fraudes.

Catie.

About breake of day we pitched by two Wels of brackiſh water, called the Wels of Duedar. Hither followed the Subaſſee of Salheia, with the Iewes which we left behind, who would not trauell the day before, in that it was their Sabbath. Their Superſtition had put them to much trouble and charge; as of late at Tunis it did to ſome paine. For a ſort of them being to imbarke for Salonica, the wind comming faire on the Saturday, and the Maſter then hoyſing ſayles, loth to infringe their Law, and as loth to loſe the benefit of that paſſage, to coozen their conſciences, they hyred certayne Ianizaries to force them aboord, who tooke their money, made a ieſt of beating them in earneſt. At three of the clocke wee departed from thence, and an houre before mid-night pitched by the Caſtle of Catie, about which there is nothing vegetiue, but a few ſolitary Palmes. The water bad, inſomuch that that which the Captaine drinkes is brought from Tina, a Sea-bordering Towne, and twelue miles diſtant. Threeſcore Souldiers lye here in Garriſon. We paid a piece of Gold for euery Camell, and halfe a Dollar a piece for Horſes, Mules and Aſſes, to the Captaine, beſides, fiue Madeines a Camell to the Arabs. It ſeemeth ſtrange to me, how theſe Merchants can get by their Wares ſo far fetcht, and trauelling through ſuch a number of expences.

The thirteenth ſpent in paying of Caphar, on the fourteenth of March by fiue of the clocke we departed, andreſted about noone by the Wells of Slaues. Hither followed the Gouernour of Catie, accompanied with twenty horſe, and pitched his tent beſides vs. The reaſon why hee came with ſo ſlight a Conduct, through a paſſage ſo dangerous (for there, not long before, a Caruan of three hundred Camels had beene borne away by the Arabs) was for that he was in fee with the chiefe of them, who vpon the payment of a certaine taxe, ſecured both goods and paſſengers. Of theſe there were diuers in the company. Before midnight we diſlodged, and by ſixe the next morning, we pitched by another Well of brackiſh water, called the Wel of the mother of Aſſan. In the afternoone we departed. As we went, one would haue thought the Sea to haue beene hard by, and to haue remooued vpon his approaches, by reaſon of the gliſtering Nitre. And no doubt, but much of theſe Deſarts haue in times paſt beene Sea, manifeſted by the ſaltneſſe of the ſoile, and ſhels that lie on the ſand in infinite numbers. The next morning by fiue of the clocke, we came to Ariſſa, a ſmall Caſtle, enuironed with a few houſes: the Garriſon conſiſting of a hundred Souldiers. This place is ſomething better then Deſart, two miles remoued from the Sea, and bleſt with good water. Here we paid two Madeins for a Camell, and halfe as much for our Aſſes; two of them for the moſt part rated vnto one of the other. On the ſeuenteenth of March, we diſlodged betimes in the morning, reſting about noone by the Wels of Feare; the earth here looking greene, yet waſte, and vnhuſbanded. In the euening we departed. Hauing paſſed in the night by the Caſtle Haniones, by the breake of day they followed vs to gather their Caphar; being three Madeins vpon euery Camell. The Countrey from that place pleaſant, and indifferent fruitfull. By ſeuen of the clocke, we pitched cloſe vnder the Citie of Gaza.

Nitre.

Africa.

Haniones.

And here we will leaue him till our Aſian opportunity doth reinuite vs: returning now to the more Southerly and Weſterly parts of Africa, paſſing from Nilus to Niger. Onely in the way, we will with our Author touch at Malta an African Iland, and with his eyes obſerue the rarities there.

§. IIII.

Arriuall at Malta, and obſeruations there.

NOw out of ſight of Candie, the Winds both ſlacke and contrary, we were forced to beare Northward of our courſe, vntill we came within view of Zant, where our Maſter purpoſed to put in (ſince we could not ſhorten our way) but anon we diſcouered fiue ſailes making towards vs; and imagining them to be men of warre, made all things readie for defence. But to our better comfort, they prooued all Engliſh, and bound for England; with whom we conſorted to furniſh the ſhip with freſh water, and other prouiſions: they hauing ſupplied our neceſſities.

Fiue Engliſh ſhips.

So on the ſecond of Iune being Sunday, we entred the Hauen that lies on the Eaſt ſide of the Citie of Valetta, which we ſaluted with eighteene peeces of Ordnance, but we were not ſuffered to come into the Citie (though euery ſhip had a neat Patent to ſhew, that thoſe places from whence they came were free from the infection) nor ſuffered to depart, when the wind blew faire; which was within a day or two after. For the Gallies of the Religion were then ſetting forth, to make ſome attempt vpon Barbarie. The reaſon thereof, leſt being taken by the Pyrats, or touching vpon occaſion at Tripoli, Tunis, or Argire, their deſignes might be by compulſion, or voluntarily reuealed: nor would they ſuffer any Frigat of their owne, for feare of ſurpriſall, to goe out of the Hauen, vntill many dayes after that the Gallies were departed. But becauſe the Engliſh were ſo ſtrong (a great ſhip of Holland putting alſo in to ſeeke company) and that they intended to make no more Ports: On the ſixt of Iune, they were licenced to ſet ſaile, the Maſters hauing the night before, in their ſeuerall long-boats, attended their returne of the great Maſter (who had beene abroad in his Gallie to view a Fort that then was in building) and welcomed him home with one and twenty peeces of Ordnance.

But no intreaty could get me abroad, chooſing rather to vndergoe all hazards and hardneſſe whatſoeuer, then ſo long a Voyage by ſea, to my nature ſo irkeſome. And ſo was I left alone on a naked promontory right againſt the Citie, remote from the concourſe of people, without prouiſion, and not knowing how to diſpoſe of my ſelfe. At length a little boat made towards me, rowed by an officer appointed to attend on ſtrangers that had not practicke, leſt others by comming into their company, ſhould receiue the infection; who carried me to the hollow hanging of a rocke, where I was for that night to take vp my lodging; and the day following to be conueied by him vnto the Lazaretta, there to remaine for thirty or forty dayes before I could be admitted into the Citie. But behold, an accident, which I rather thought at the firſt to haue been a viſion, then (as I found it) reall. My guardian being departed to fetch me ſome victuals, laid along, and muſing on my preſent condition, a Phalucco arriueth at the place. Out of which there ſlept two olde women; the one made mee doubt whether ſhee were ſo or no, ſhee drew her face into ſo many formes, and with ſuch anticke geſtures ſtared vpon me. Theſe two did ſpread a Turkie Carpet on the rocke, and on that a table-cloth, which they furniſhed with varietie of the choyceſt viands. Anon, another arriued, which ſet a Gallant aſhoare with his two Amaroſaes, attired like Nymphs, with Lutes in their hands, full of diſport and ſorcery. For little would they ſuffer him to eate, but what he receiued with his mouth from their fingers. Sometimes the one would play on the Lute, whilſt the other ſang, and laid his head in her lap; their falſe eyes looking vpon him, as their hearts were troubled with paſſions. The attending Hags had no ſmall part in the Comedie, adminiſtring matter of myrth with their ridiculous moppings. Who indeed (as I after heard) were their mothers borne in Greece, and by them brought hither to trade amongſt the vnmarried fraternitie. At length, the French Captaine (for ſuch he was, and of much regard) came and intreated me to take a part of their banquet; which my ſtomacke perſwaded me to accept of. He willed them to make much of the Foreſtier: but they were not to be taught entertainment, and grew ſo familiar, as was to neither of our likings. But both he and they, in pittie of my hard lodging, did offer to bring me into the Citie by night (an offence, that if knowne, is puniſhed by death) and backe againe in the morning. Whileſt they were vrging me thereunto, my guardian returned; with him a Malteſe, whoſe father was an Engliſh man, he made acquainted therewith, did by all meanes dehort them. At length (the Captaine hauing promiſed to labour by admittance into the Citie) they departed. When a good way from ſhoare, the Curtizans ſtript themſelues, and leapt into the Sea, where they violated all the preſcriptions of modeſtie. But the Captain the next morning was not vnmindfull of his promiſe, ſoliciting the Great Maſter in my behalfe, as he ſate in Counſell; who with the aſſent of the great Croſſes, granted me Pratticke. So I came into the Citie, and was kindly entertained in the houſe of the foreſaid Malteſe, where for three weekes ſpace, with much contentment I remained.

Impudence of Curtizans, no rarity, but as common as themſelues.

Deſcription of Malta.

Malta doth lie in the Lybian Sea, right betweene Tripolis of Barbarie and the South-eaſt angle of Sicilia: diſtant an hundred fourescore and ten miles from the one, and threeſcore from the other; containing alſo threeſcore miles in circuit, called formerly Melita, of the abundance of honey. A Countrey altogether Champion, being no other then a rock couered ouer with earth, but two feet deepe where the deepeſt; hauing few trees, but ſuch as beare fruit; whereof of all ſorts plentifully furniſhed, ſo that their wood they haue from Sicilia, yet there is a kind of great Thiſtle, which together with Cow-dung ſerues the Countrey people for fuell, who need not much in a Clime ſo exceeding hot; hotter by much then any other which is ſeated in the ſame parallell, yet ſometimes temperated by the comfortable winds, to which it lies open. Riuers here are none, but ſundry fountaines. The ſoile produceth no graine but Barley, bread made of it, and Oliues, is the Villagers ordinary diet: and with the ſtraw they ſuſtaine their Cattell. Commin-ſeed, Annis-ſeed, and honey, they haue here in abundance, whereof they make Merchandize, and an indifferent quantity of Cotten-wooll; but that the beſt of all other. The inhabitants die more with age then diſeaſes, and heretofore were reputed fortunate for their excellencie in Arts and curious Weauings. They were at firſt a Colonie of the Phœnicians, who exerciſing Merchandize as farre as the great Ocean, betooke themſelues to this Iland; and by the commoditie of the Hauen, attained too much riches and honour (who yet retaine ſome print of the Punicke Language, yet ſo that they now differ not much from the Moreſco) and built in the middeſt thereof the Citie of Melita (now called old Malta) giuing or taking a name from the Iland. Now whether it came into the hands of Spaine with the Kingdome of Sicilia, or won from the Moores by their ſwords, (probable both by their Language, and that it belongeth to Africa) I am ignorant: but by Charles the fifth it was giuen to the Knights of the Rhodes.

The order of Knights Hoſpitulars.

This order of Knight-hood receiued their denomination from Iohn the charitable Patriarch of Alexandria, though vowed to Saint Iohn Baptiſt as their Patron. Their firſt ſeat was the Hoſpitall of Saint Iohn in Ieruſalem (whereupon they were called Knight-hoſpitallers) built by one Gerrard, at ſuch time as the Holy land became famous by the ſucceſſefull expeditions of the Chriſtians; who drew diuers worthy perſons into that ſocietie, approued by Pope Galaſius the ſecond. They by the allowance of Honorius the ſecond, wore garments of blacke, ſigned with a white croſſe. Raymond, the firſt Maſter of the Order, did amplifie their Canons; inſtiling himſelfe, The poore ſeruant of Chriſt, and Guardian of the Hoſpitall in Ieruſalem. In euery Countrey throughout Chriſtendome they had Hoſpitals, and Reuenues aſſigned them, with contributions procured by Pope Innocent the ſecond. They were tied by their vowes to entertaine all Pilgrims with ſingular humanitie; to ſafeguard their paſſages from theeues and incurſions, and valiantly to ſacrifice their liues in defence of that Countrey. But the Chriſtians being driuen out of Syria, the Knights had the Rhodes aſſigned them by the Greeke Emperour, (others ſay, by Clement the fifth) which they won from the Turke, and loſt againe as aforeſaid; retiring from thence vnto Malta. There are of them here ſeuen Alberges or Seminaries, one of France in generall, one of Auerne, one of Prouince, one of Caſtile, one of Aragon, one of Italie, one of Almany: and an eight there was of England, vntill by Henry the Eighth diſſolued, with what Iuſtice, I know not. Yet is there one that ſupplyeth the place in the Election of the Great Maſter. Of euery one there is a Grand Prior, who liues in great reputation in his Countrey; and orders the affaires of their Order.

Saint Iohns without Smith-field, being in times paſt the Manſion of the Grand Prior of England, an Iriſh-man liuing in Naples, and reciuing a large Penſion from the King of Spaine, now beareth that Title. Thoſe that come for the Order are to bring a teſtimonie of their Gentry for ſixe Deſcents, which is to be examined, and approued by the Knights of their Nation, he being firſt to remaine here a yeare for a probation. Nor are women exempted from that dignitie, admitted by a Statute made in the Maſterſhip of Hugo Reuelus, perhaps, for that one Agnes, a noble Ladie was the Author, as they affirme, of their Order; but that there be any, now of it, is more then I could be informed. The Ceremonies vſed in Knighting, are theſe. Firſt, carrying in his hand a Taper of white Waxe, hee kneeleth before the Altar, clothed in a long looſe Garment, and deſireth the Order of the Ordinarie. Then, in the Name of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, he receiueth a Sword, therewith to defend the Catholike Church, to repulſe and vanquiſh the Enemie, to relieue the oppreſſed, if need ſhould be, to expoſe himſelfe vnto death for the Faith, and all by the power of the Croſſe, which by the Croſſe-hilt is deſigured. Then is he girt with a Belt, and thrice ſtrooke on the ſhoulders with his Sword, to put him in mind that for the honour of Chriſt he is chearefully to ſuffer whatſoeuer is grieuous, who taking it of him, thrice flouriſheth it aloft as a prouokement to the Aduerſary, and ſo ſheathes it againe, hauing wiped it firſt on his arme, to teſtifie that thence-forth hee will liue vndefiledly. Then hee that giues him Knight-hood laying his hand on his ſhoulder, doth exhort him to be vigilant in the Faith, and to aſpire vnto true honour by couragious and laudable actions, &c. Which done, two Knights doe put on his Spurres, guilt; to ſignifie that he ſhould ſpurne Gold as durt, not to doe what were ignoble for reward. And ſo goes hee to Maſſe with the Taper in his hand, the workes of Pietie, Hoſpitalitie, and redemption of Captiues, being commended vnto him, told alſo of what he was to performe in regard of his Order. Being asked if he bee a free man, if not ioyned in Matrimonie, if vnuowed to another Order, or not of any profeſſion; and if he were reſolued to liue amongſt them, to reuenge their iniuries; and quit the authoritie of Secular Magiſtracie. Hauing anſwered thereunto, vpon the receit of the Sacrament, he vowes in this Order, I vow to the Almightie God, to the Virgin Mary his immaculate Mother, and to Saint Iohn Baptiſt, *perpetually, by the helpe of God to bee truly obedient to all my Superiours, appointed by God and this Order, to liue without any thing of my owne, and withall to liue chaſtly. Whereupon he is made a partaker of their Priuiledges and Indulgences, granted vnto them by the Sea of Rome. Beſides, other Prayers, they are commanded to ſay a hundred and fiftie Pater noſters daily, for ſuch as haue beene ſlaine in their Warres. They weare Ribands about their neckes with Brouches of the Croſſe, and Clokes of blacke with large white Croſſes ſet thereinto on the ſhoulders, of fine Linnen, but in time of Warre, they weare Crimſon Mandilions, behind and before ſo croſſed, ouer their Armour.

All Gentlemen.

Women capeable.

Ceremonies of creation.

Their Vow.

* Haſtie lye.

They come hither exceeding young, that they may the ſooner attayne to a commendam at home, (whereof many be of great value) not got by fauour but ſignioritie, and are to liue here for the ſpace of fiue yeares (but not neceſſarily together) and to goe on foure Expeditions. If one of them be conuicted of a capitall crime, hee is firſt publikely diſgraded in the Church of Saint Iohn where he receiued his Knight-hood, then ſtrangled, and throwne after into the Sea in the night time. Euery Nation doe feed by themſelues in their ſeuerall Alberges, and ſit at the Table like Fryers, but ſuch as vpon ſuite doe get leaue to eat apart, haue fiftie Crownes allowed them by the Religion yearely, as all haue fiue and twentie a piece for apparell.

Degradation and death.

There are here reſident about fiue hundred, not to depart without leaue, and as many more diſperſed through Chriſtendome, who hither repaire vpon euery ſummons, or notice of inuaſion. The Religion is their generall Heire whereſoeuer they dye, onely each Knight may diſpoſe of a fifth part of his ſubſtance. There be ſixteene of them Counſellors of State, and of principall authoritie, called Great Croſſes, who weare Tippets, and Coates alſo vnder their Cloakes, that be ſigned therewith. Of theſe are the Martiall, the Maſter of the Hoſpitall, the Admirall, the Chancelor, &c. When one doth dye another is elected by the Great Maſter and his Knights, who giue their voyces (if I forget not) by Bullets, as doe the Venetians, whereby both enuie and faction is auoyded. Now, if the Great Maſter fall ſicke, they will ſuffer no Veſſell to goe out of the Hauen, vntill hee bee either recouered, or dead, and another elected, leſt the Pope ſhould intrude into the Election, which they challenge to be theirs, and is in this manner performed.

Their number and gouernment.

The Great Maſter and his Election.

The ſeuerall Nations elect two Knights a piece of their owne, and two are elected for the Engliſh, from amongſt themſelues theſe ſixteene chooſe eight, and thoſe eight doe nominate a Knight, a Prieſt, and a Fryer-ſeruant (who alſo weares Armes) and they three chooſe the Great Maſter, out of the ſixteen Great Croſſes. This man is a Pickard borne, about the age of ſixtie, and hath gouerned eight yeare. His Name and Title, The Illuſtrious and moſt Reuerent Prince my Lord

Fryer Aloſius of Wignian-court, Great Maſter of the Hoſpitall of Saint Iohns of Ieruſalem, Prince of Malta, and Goza. For albeit a Fryer, (as the reſt of the Knights) yet is he an abſolute Soueraigne, and is brauely attended on by a number of gallant yong Gentlemen. The Clergie doe weare the Cognizance of the Order, who are ſubiect to like Lawes except in military matters.

The Villages and Cities.

Serpents not hurtfull.

Their glorious withſtanding the Turke.

There are ſixtie Villages in the Iland, vnder the command of ten Captaines, and foure Cities. Old Malta is ſeated (as hath beene ſaid before) in the midſt of the Iland, vpon a hill, and formed like a Scutchion: held of no great importance, yet kept by a Garriſon. In it there is a Grot, where they ſay Saint Paul lay when he ſuffered ſhipwracke; of great deuotion amongſt them. The refined ſtone thereof they caſt into little Medals, with the Effigies of Saint Paul on the one ſide, and a Viper on the other, Agnus Dei, and the like: of which they vent ſtore to the Forreiner. They ſay, that being drunke in wine it doth cure the venome of Serpents, and withall, though there be many Serpents in the Iland, that they haue not the power of hurting although handled, and angred; bereft of their venome euer ſince the being here of the Apoſtle. The other three Cities (if they may all be ſo termed) are about eight miles diſtant, and not much without a Muſket ſhot each of other, neere the Eaſt-end, and on the North-ſide of the Iland; where there is a double Hauen diuided by a tongue of rocke, which extendeth no further then the conueniently large entrance. The Eaſt Hauen reſembleth the horne of a Stag, the firſt branch (as the Palme) affoording an excellent harbour for the greateſt ſhippes, and the ſecond for Gallies; the reſt are ſhallow. Cloſe to the vppermoſt toppe there is a Fountayne of freſh water, which plentifully furniſheth all Veſſels that doe enter. On the tip of the foreſaid tongue ſtood the ſtrong Caſtle of Saint Hermes, the firſt that the Turke beſieged, which after many furious aſſaults, twentie thouſand Canon ſhot (whoſe horrible roarings were heard to Meſſina) and the loſſe of ten thouſand liues, they tooke in the yeare 1565. in the moneth of Iune, but to the greater glory of the vanquiſhed, that loſſe rather inraging then diſ-heartning the remaynder.

Pietie of a Mahometan.

Now vpon the point of the Promontory which lyes betweene theſe two branches of that Hauen, where the Ships and Gallies haue their ſtations, on a ſteepe rocke ſtands the Caſtle of Saint Angelo, whoſe ſtrength appeared in fruſtrating thoſe violent batteries (being next beſieged by the Turke) whereof it yet beareth the skarres. At the foot of the Rocke are certaine Canons planted, that front the mouth of the Hauen. This Caſtle is onely diuided by a Trench cut through the Rocke, from the Burgo, a little Citie which poſſeſſeth the reſt of that Promontory, being all a Rock, hewen hollow within, for their better defence; diſioyned by a great deep Ditch from the Land. South of this, and on the next Promontory, ſtands another Towne, which is called, La Iſula, on the point thereof a platforme, and at the other end the ſtrong Fort of Saint Michael, yet inferiour in ſtrength to that of Saint Angelo. Here remember we the pietie of a Mahometan, deſcended, no doubt of Chriſtian Parentage, and fauouring our Religion, who in the time of the ſtricteſt ſiege, and ſmalleſt comfort to the beſieged, leapt into the Sea, and maugre all the ſhot that was made at him, ſwamme to this Caſtle: where firſt requiring and receiuing Baptiſme, hee made knowne vnto them the ſecrets of the Enemie, aduiſed how to fruſtrate their purpoſes, and brauely thruſt himſelfe forward in euery extremitie. But the Knights of the Order aſſiſting one another by their proper valour, ſo nobly behaued themſelues, that the Turke began to deſpaire of ſucceſſe, and vpon the rumoured approach of the Chriſtian ſuccours (which in the beſt conſtruction by the ouer-circumſpect Vice-Roy of Sicilia had beene dangerouſly protracted) imbarqued themſelues, and departed. But all, ſauing Burgo and Saint Angelo, reduced into powder, and the returne of the Turke diſtruſted, it was propounded amongſt the Knights, to abandon the Iland, rather then vainly to repaire, and endeuour to defend thoſe lamentable ruines, the Aduerſaries vnequall power, and backward ayde of the Chriſtian Princes conſidered. But it too much concerned the ſtate of Chriſtendome, (eſpecially of the Countries confining) it being as it were both the Key and Bulwarke thereof, inſomuch that the Pope, the Florentine, and the reſt of the Princes of Italy, encouraged them to ſtay, aſſiſting them with money, and all neceſſary prouiſion; but eſpecially the King of Spaine, who ouer and aboue did ſend them three thouſand Pioners, leuyed in the Kingdome of Naples and Sicilia, to repaire their old Fortreſſes, and begin a new Citie vpon that tongue of Land which diuideth the two Hauens, now almoſt abſolutely finiſhed.

Valetta.

Saint Hermes.

This is called the Citie of Valetta, in the honour of Iohn de Valetta, who then was Great Maſter. Not great, but faire, exactly contriued, and ſtrong aboue all others, mounted aloft, and no where aſſailable by Land, but at the South end. The walls of the reſt doe ioyne to the vpright Rocke, as if of one piece, and beaten vpon by the Sea. That towards the Land, is but a narrow Iſthmos, where the Rocke doth naturally riſe, the Ditch without, hewen downe exceeding broad, and of an incredible profunditie, ſtrongly flankt, and not wanting what fortification can doe. This way openeth the onely gate of the Citie, (the other two, whereof one leadeth to Saint Hermes, and the other to the Hauen, being but ſmall Poſternes) and hard within are two great Bulwarks, planted on the top with Ordnance. At the other end (but without the wall) ſtands the Caſtle of Saint Hermes, now ſtronger then euer, whereof (as of that Saint Angelo) no French man can be Gouernour. Almoſt euery where there are platformes on the walls, well ſtored with Ordnance. The walls on the inſide not aboue ſixe foot high, vnimbattald, and ſheluing on the outſide, the buildings throughout a good diſtance off both to leaue roome for the Souldiers, and to ſecure them from batterie. Neere the South end, and on the Weſt ſide, there is a great pit hewne into the rocke, out of which a Port cut vnder the wall into the Weſt Hauen, intended (for yet vnfiniſhed) to haue beene made an Arſenall for their Gallies, (that harbour being too ſhallow for ſhips) a worke of great difficulty. The market place is ſpacious, out of which the ſtreets doe point on the round. The buildings for the moſt part vniforme, all of free ſtone, two ſtories high, and flat at the top; the vpper roomes of moſt hauing out tarraſſes. The Great Maſters Palace is a Princely ſtructure, hauing a Tower which ouerlooketh the whole Iland. The chamber where they ſit in Counſell, is curiouſly painted with their fights by Sea and by Land, both forraine and defenſiue. The ſeuen Alberges of the Knights, be of no meane building; amongſt whom the Citie is quartered. Magnificent is the Church of S, Paul, and that of Saint Iohns: the one the ſeat of a Biſhop, and the other of a Prior. And Saint Iohns Hoſpitall doth merite regard, not onely for the building, but for the entertainment there giuen. For all that fall ſicke are admitted thereunto, the Knights themſelues there lodge when hurt or diſeaſed, where they haue Phyſicke for the bodie, and for the ſoule alſo (ſuch as they giue.) The attendants many, the beds ouer-ſpread with faire Canopies; euery fortnight hauing change of Linnen. Serued by the Iunior Knights in ſiluer, and euery Friday by the Great Maſter, accompanied with the great Croſſes. A ſeruice obliged vnto from their firſt inſtitution; and thereupon called Knight-hoſpitallers. The Ieſuits haue of late crept into the Citie, who now haue a Colledge a building. Heere bee alſo three Nunneries; the one for Virgins, another for penitent Whores, (of impenitent here are ſtore) and the third for their baſtards.

The Palace,

The ſeuen Alberge.

Saint Iohns Hoſpitall.

The barrenneſſe of this Ile is ſupplied with the fertilitie of Sicilia, from whence they haue their prouiſion. The Citie is victualed for three yeeres, kept vnder the ground, and ſupplied with new as they ſpend of the old. They haue ſome freſh water Fountaines, and the raine that falleth, they reſerue in Ciſternes. Beſides the Knights and their dependants, the Citizens and Ilanders be within the muſter of their forces; in which there are not of liuing ſoules aboue twentie thouſand. They keepe a Court of guard nightly, and almoſt euery minute of the night, the watch of one Fort giues two or three tolls with a bell, which is anſwered by the other in order. The Religion hath onely fiue Gallies, and ſtinted they are, as I haue heard, to that number, (if more, they belong vnto priuate men) and but one ſhip. The cuſtome is, or hath beene, hauing hung out a flagge, to lend money to all commers that would dice it, if they win, to repay it with aduantage; if loſe, to ſerue vntill their entertainment amounted to that ſumme. Now the expeditions that they make, are little better then for bootie; ſometimes landing in the night time on the maine of Africa, and ſurpriſing ſome village, or ſcouring along the coaſts, take certaine ſmall Barks, which diſburdened of their lading and people, they ſuffer to hull with the weather. For they made good profit of their ſlaues, either imploying them in their drudgeries, (they hauing at this inſtant aboue fifteene hundred of them) or by putting them to ranſome. For euer and anon you ſhall haue a little boat with a flag of treaty, come hither from Tripoli, Tunis, or Algeirs, to agree for the redemption of captiues, as doe the Malteſes to thoſe places who are ſerued with the ſame meaſure. During my abode here, there arriued a Barke, brought in by eight Engliſh men, who had for a long time ſerued the Turkiſh Pirats of Tunis, they bound for Algeirs, tooke weapons in hand, and droue the diſtruſtleſſe Turkes (being twice as many) into the ſterne, kept there by two, whilſt the other dreſſed the ſailes for Malta. Amongſt them there was one, who ſaying he would neuer be ſlaue to a Chriſtian, ſtript himſelfe ſecretly, propping vp his gowne, and laying his Turbant vpon it, as if ſtill there, and dropt it into the Sea. But the deceiuer was deceiued by the high land which ſeemed neerer then it was, and ſo wearied with ſwimming, ſunke in their ſights. The Inquiſition would haue ſeized both on their perſons and purchaſe, becauſe they had ſerued the Infidell: but they were protected by the Great Maſter (being deſirous to ſerue him) who will not ſuffer their cruell authoritie to enter into the new City, ſo that they are faine to reſide in Burgo.

Their Gallies.

Their expeditions.

The Matelſes are little leſſe Tawnie then the Moores, eſpecially thoſe of the Countrey, who goe halfe clad, are indeed a miſerable people; but the Citizens are altogether Frenchified; the Great Maſter, and maior part of the Knights being French men. The women weare long blacke ſtoles, wherewith they couer their faces (for it is a great reproach to be ſeene otherwiſe) who conuerſe not with men, and are guarded according to the manner of Italy. But the iealous are better ſecured, by the number of allowed Curtizans (for the moſt part Grecians) who ſit playing in their doores on inſtruments; and with the arte of their eyes inueagled theſe continent by vow, but contrary in practiſe, as if chaſtitie were onely violated by marriage. They here ſtirre early and late, in regard of the immoderate heat, and ſleepe at noone-day. Their markets they keepe on Sundayes.

The people.

Now were the Gallies returned with indifferent ſucceſſe, and yet my ſtay was proroged by the approaching feſtiuall of their Patron; for vntill that was paſt, no boat would ſtirre out of Pompous ſolemnitie.

the Harbour. The Palace, Temples, Alberges, and other principall houſes, were ſtucke round on the outſide with lampes, the euening before: and amongſt other ſolemnities, they honoured the day with the diſcharge of all their Artilery. The Forts put forth their Banners, and euery Alberge the Enſigne of his Nation, at night hauing Bone-fires before them; fiue great ones being made in the Court of the Palace; whereof, the firſt was kindled by the Great Maſter, the ſecond by the Biſhop, the third by the Prior, the fourth and fifth by the Marſhall and Admirall. On the foure and twentieth of Iune, I departed from Malta in a Phalucco of Naples, rowed by fiue, and not twice ſo big as a Wherry, yet will for a ſpace keepe way with a Gally. They vſe to ſet foorth in ſuch boats as theſe, two houres before Sun-ſet, and if they diſcouer a ſuſpected ſaile betweene that and night (for the Turkes continually lie there in waite) doe returne againe: if not, they proceed; and by the next morning (as now did we) reach the Coaſt of Sicilia.

CHAP. I.

A true Relation of Maſter RICHARD IOBSONS Voyage, employed by Sir WILLIAM Saint IOHN, Knight, and others; for the Diſcouerie of Gambra, in the Sion, a ſhip of two hundred tuns, Admirall; and the Saint Iohn fiftie, Vice-Admirall. In which they paſſed nine hundred and ſixtie miles vp the Riuer into the Continent. Extracted out of his large Iournall.

WE ſet ſayle from Graueſend, on Saturday the fift of October, 1620. From Graueſend. On the fiue and twentieth, we departed from Dartmouth, we ſayled from Dartmouth to the Canaries.

The fourteenth of February, we came to an anchor in Trauiſco Road, where we found three Frenchmen, and one Flemming. Franciſco a Portugal here dwelling was buſie to enquire if we went to Gambra, hauing a letter as he ſaid from M. Cramp, who had lately departed thence for Sierra Liona, ſet forth by the Company. This Portugall fearing iuſt reuenge for the ſhip taken and men betrayed and murthered by them in Gambra, had procured a Letter in behalfe of ſome of his friends. In the Riuer of Borſall we entred, where we tooke a ſmall Boat belonging in part to Hector Numez, the principall in that Treachery and Murther aforeſaid and detayned ſome of his goods therein for ſatisfaction, taking thereof a publike Inuentorie, that if any other could lay iuſt clayme they might be reſtored. This was done by puniſhing Numez, and to terrifie others from like trecherous attempts, not without effect. The Portugals were glad they ſo eſcaped, knowing and curſing Numez his villanie. The Portugalls which trade here, and inhabit the Riuer are baniſhed men, Renegadoes and baſer people, and behaue themſelues accordingly.

Portugals which trade, Gambra.

We built a Shallop, and lanched it the two and twentieth. The next day we ſet ſayle vp the Riuer, and the tyde ſpent, anchored againſt a litle Iland on the South-ſide ſome foure leagues vp. From October till May, the winds are generally Eaſterly, and downe the Riuer which much hindred our courſe vp the ſame. We paſt vp by tydes, intending to ſtay at a Towne called Taukorouulle, but ouer-ſhot it in the night, and the next morning were againſt another Towne foure leagues higher, called Tindobauge. Our ſhip with her Ordnance might here come both ſides the Riuer.

Here dwelt Emanuel Corſeen a Portugall, which told vs that Maſter Tomſon was killed by one of his Company, and that the reſt were in health. It was intended the Sion ſhould ſtay here, and therefore the Kings Cuſtomers were paid, who dwelt ſome ſixe miles from the Riuer, but had his drunken Officers to receiue them.

The Voyage vp the Riuer.

Leauing her with fiue and twentie men and boyes. On Wedneſday, the nine and twentieth, the Saint Iohn and two ſhallops, we ſet ſayle vp the Riuer twelue men in the bigger, with Henry Lowe, and thirteene in the leſſer with my ſelfe, which with the Boat towed her vp in calmes.

Pudding Iland. Maugegar.

On the firſt of December, we came to Pudding Iland, ſixteene leagues from the ſhip. The ſecond, we anchored againſt a little Creeke which leads into a Towne Maugegar. We went to this Towne, meeting by the way a Portugall, called Baſtian Roderigo, who gaue mee an Ounces skinne. On Munday the fourth, the King with his Alcade came aboord, and drunke himſelfe with his Conſorts ſo drunke, that the Cuſtomes were deferred till next day. Henry Lowe agreed for a houſe, and left there Humfrey Dauis, Iohn Blithe, and one Nicholas a prettie youth, which two laſt dyed there. On the ſeuenth, we paſſed thence by a Towne on the North-ſide, called Wolley, Wolley, bigger then any wee had yet ſeene, and in the after-noone came to an anchor at Caſſan (where the Katharine was betrayed) where no Portugall would now be ſeene. This King is vnder the great King of Burſall. The Alcade ſhewed vs friendſhip, and told vs that the Portugals had hired men of that Towne to kill vs as we went vp, in ſome narrower Streights of the Riuer, for feare whereof we could not get any Blackman to goe with vs to be our Pilot and Linguiſt. This Towne is populous and after their manner warlike. We here had intelligence, that Salt is a good Commoditie aboue in the Riuer, and that within eight dayes there would come a Carauan from Tynda for Salt before this place.

Wolley, Wolley. Caſſan. Portugals perfidie.

Pometon. Ieraconde.

On the fourtteenth, we came to a Towne on the South-ſide, called Pompeton, aboue which dwels no Portugall in this Riuer. Next morning we came to the Port of Ieraconde, two miles from which dwelt Farran a perpetuall Drunkard, but which held his Countrey in greateſt awe. Hence Henry Lowe ſent a ſlaue with a Letter to Oranto ſixteene miles off, where the Engliſh dwelt. On the ſeuenteenth, Matthew Broad and Henry Bridges came to vs by Land, which were exceeding glad after ſo long ſpace to ſee their Countrimen, as we alſo to heare them report their ſecuritie amongſt thoſe wild people. Broad ſaid, much good might bee done vp the Riuer, but that it muſt be done without delay, the Riuer falling daily. Comming within ſixe miles of Oranto we landed and went thither, where Brewer which had beene at Tinda with Tomſon, filled vs with golden hopes. But the neglect of bringing Salt thorough ignorance or emulation was a hinderance. The King of Oranto abode on the other ſide of the Riuer; his name Summa Tumba, a blind man and ſubiect to the great King of Cantore. We went to him and had a ſpeech made to him of thankfulneſſe, for our Countreymens kind vſage; His anſwere was repeated by the mouth of another, after the faſhion of the Countrey: which Ceremonie done, he made haſt to drowne his wits in the Aquauita and good liquor we brought him. His Cuſtome paid, we departed.

Engliſh at Oranto.

Oranto.

The one and twentieth, I ſent away my Boat, & the next day came abundance of people; ſome to ſell; all to begge; the King ſometimes by his Wife, ſometimes by his Daughter, but euery day his Sonnes were there, and likewiſe diuers others of the better ſort, but Count, from many great perſons: which word they vſe for commendations. You muſt returne ſomething againe, or it will be ill taken.

Ferambras faith.

On Chriſtmas day, Ferambra ſent vs as much Elephants fleſh as one could well carrie, new killed. This Ferambra went foure miles off, and was a friend of our people, and when the Portugals had dealt with the King of Naoy, to kill them all, who ſent his forces to performe it, he put himſelfe and his people in Armes for their defence, and conueyed them ouer the Riuer to his Brother, called Bo Iohn, and ſaued their goods. On the one and thirtieth, came the Shallop backe.

Batto.

We being ten white men, went the ſecond of Ianuary from Oranto for Tinda: the firſt tyde we went to Batto, Bo Iohns Towne, and there agreed with a young Marybucke to goe with vs. Lowes emulation hindred vs with delayes, both now and before. On the ſixth, Sumaway, King of Bereck vnder the great King of Cantore, came aboord with his Wife, and begged our curteſie. We tooke in Sangully, a blacke Boy, who had liued with Maſter Tomſon, and ſpake prettie Engliſh. On the ninth, we anchored in a vaſt place both at noone and night, where was a world of Sea-horſes, whoſe pathes where they went on ſhore to feed, were beaten with tracts as great as London high-way. Next morning we anchored at Maſſamacoadum, fifteene leagues from Pereck. On the eleuenth, at Benanko. The twelfth, after rockie paſſages to Baraconda. The tyde went no further. Beyond were no Townes, neere the Riuer, nor Boates nor people to be ſeene.

Sea-horſes, high-wayes.

On the fourteenth, Bacay Tombo, the chiefe man of the Towne, came a board with his wife, and brought vs a Beefe. We hired another Marybuck, becauſe they are people which may trauell freely: & now were ten white and foure blacke. Hauing now the ſtreame againſt vs, we durſt not for feare of Rockes in the night, nor could for immoderate heat in the Suns height proceed, but were forced to chuſe our houres in the morning till nine, and after three in the afternoone. We paſt by Wolley a ſmall Riuer, and found aboue ſhallow waters, wherein were many Sea Horſes curuetting and ſnorting hard by vs, one came ſwimming by vs dead and ſtinking, yet the Negros were diſpleaſed they might not eate him.

Marybuckes ſacred perſons, by the ſuperſtition of thoſe parts, and are their Prieſts and Merchants.

On the ſeuenteenth, on both ſides the Riuer we ſaw thouſands of Baboones and Monkies. A Sea Horſe gaue the Boat a ſhrewd blow, but did no harme. We had ſtill our Canoe before vs to ſound the depth.

On the eighteeneth, we were forced to enter the Riuer naked, very fearefull of the Bumbos, (ſo they call the Crocodiles) and carry the Boat againſt the current, and ouer or thorow the ſand, heauing and ſhouing till we come in deepe water.

The nineteenth, we met with a violent current, that all the ſtrength of ſixe Oares could preuaile, but a mile in an houre. The twentieth, on the Star-board ſide, we had Cantore Riuer, which hath a faire entrance, where Ferran Cabo is the great King. On the one and twentieth, we ſent a ſhoare to the Mountaine tops, whence might be perceiued onely Deſarts, repleniſhed with terrible wild Beaſts, whoſe roaring we heard euery night. The Blackes are ſo afraid of the Bumbos, that they dare not put their hands into the water, diuers of them being by them deuoured. Yet did they auoid from vs, whether it were our noiſe or multitude which cauſed it. Some we ſaw thirty foot long, yet would not come neere vs. On the two and twentieth, walking on the banke, I eſpied ſixteene great Elephants together hard by me. A Blacke with me fell a trembling. The ſedge in the place was almoſt as high againe as our heads; ſo that we could not be ſeene till we were within Piſtoll ſhot of them. We ſaw diuers little ones by their ſides. We made an offer to ſhoot, but the Peece would not off, which they perceiuing began to run, in a miles ſpace not ſo much as turning nor looking behind them; making ſpeed to the Mountaines, like a Deare in the Forreſt. The Moores wondred at our aduenture. On the three & twentieth, we were faine to enter the water, & by ſtrength of hand, to carry the boat a mile & a halfe into deeper water. On the foure and twentieth, we towed her, ſometimes adding haling by the Boats ſide, as ſholds and trees permitted: and met with one vehement current, ouerthwart broken rockes, ſo that we were forced to hold her by force, till one taking the Anchor on his neck, waded aboue that quicke fall, and letting it fall, we haled by our haſor, and eſcaped that gut.

Sea Horſes abounding in the freſh water, both in the water and on ſhoare. They are like a horſe, but with clawes on their feet, and ſhort legs, tuskes, manes, &c. Monkies and Baboones. Crocodiles thirty foot long. Elephants.

The fiue and twenty, troubled with ſholds, we heard as we paſſed, a guſh of water, hidden by the greene trees, with which water we ſtored our ſelues; that of the Riuer being ſo ranke with a muskie ſent of the Crocodiles, as we ſuppoſed that it was diſtatefull; whereas this was pleaſant. One of our Moores was taken, and like to be loſt in a Whirlepoole; notwithſtanding, he could ſwimme well, had not one of our men laid hold on him as he roſe the third time, almoſt ſpent, from vnder water. On the ſixe and twentie, we were comforted with the ſight of the hill of Tinda, being high rockie land. We ſent three Moores thither with a preſent to the King, and to Buckor Sano, a Merchant of Tinda, intreating him to come downe to vs with prouiſion, for we had no fleſh. Deare and Fowle were plentifull on both ſides the Riuer, had we beene prouided of a good Peece. And the Riuer fiſh did ſo taſte of Muske, that (like the water) we could not endure the ſhoare. I went aſhaore to view the Riuer, & might ſee ſometimes twentie Crocodiles one by another: and in the night, ſpecially towards breake of day, they would call one to another, much reſembling the ſound of a deepe Well, and might be eaſily heard a League. We paſt the ſholds, and againſt Tinda Riuer, recouered ſteepe water, and ſaw many Sea Horſes, which loue deepe waters. On the thirtieth, we killed an Anthelope bigger then any Windſore Stagge, the blood of him drew a world of Eagles, and other Fowle; amongſt which came one Stalker, a Fowle higher then a man, which we likewiſe killed. Preſently after, came our men backe with Buckor Sanos brother, and a ſeruant of the Kings, with Hens. Our Deare was killed in good ſeaſon for their entertainment: the report paſſing among them current, that with our thunder (ſo they called our Guns) we could kill whatſoeuer we would. They much fearing the ſame, as hauing neuer ſeene or heard it, whereof we made good vſe.

Gun-thunder.

On Thurſday, the firſt of February, came Buckor Sano with a troupe of forty people, amongſt which his wife and daughter. Hauing taſted of our ſtrong Waters, hee lay drunke aboard that night (he was neuer ſo after) and was ſicke the next day. He gaue vs a Beafe, and many of the people brought Goats, Cocks, and Hens, which we bought eaſily. On Saturday, we began to trade our Salt, which is the chiefe thing they deſired; other things they asked for, which we had not prouided: ſlaues (he told vs) were the things they held deareſt; for any thing elſe we ſhould haue, if we would maintaine our comming thither, he would prouide it. We had ſome Elephants teeth, Negros Clothes, Cotten Yearne, and ſome gold of them. We refuſed to buy Hides, becauſe we would not lade our Boat downe the Riuer, the water falling euery day, which wee kept note of by the ſhoare. The people came daily more and more to vs, and vpon the ſhoare they built houſes, we alſo had a houſe open to trade vnder, ſo as it ſeemed like a pretty Towne. Our Blackes went ouer the Riuer, and three dayes after brought other people, which built a Siege

Salt, chiefe trade.

Towne on the other ſide the Riuer. And within three dayes there were fiue hundred, which were a more Sauage people; hauing breeches of beaſts skins, neither had they euer ſeene any white people before. The women would run and hide themſelues when we came neere them at their firſt comming; but after grew bold to buy and ſell with vs. Theſe people likewiſe were all for Salt, and had Teeth and Hides ſtore. Our Salt was almoſt gone before they came; for we had but forty buſhels at firſt.

Baiay Dinko vſko was the chiefe man, & called by the name of his Countrey, vnder the great King of Cantor.

Baiay Dinko the chiefe was aboard, very deſirous we ſhould come againe. On that ſide wee ſaw likewiſe there was Gold, and thoſe people had familiarity with each other, whereby it ſeemed they had trade and commerce, by ſome higher part of the Riuer.

Iuddies or Fidlers.

On the ſeuenth, the King of Ielicot on Tinda ſide, vnder the great King of Wolley, came downe with his Iuddies or Fidlers, which plaid before him and his wiues, ſuch being the faſhion of the great ones. Theſe Iuddies are as the Iriſh Rimers: all the time he eats, they play and ſing ſongs in his prayſe, and his anceſtors: When they die, they are put in an hollow tree vpright, and not buried, we gaue him a Preſent, and he a Beefe to vs.

He bought and ſold &c. for vs.

On the eighth, Buckor Sano would needs be ſtiled the white mans Alcaid; I tooke it kindly, and put about his necke a ſtring of Chriſtall, and a double ſtring of Currall. Broad gaue him a ſiluer chaine, and with drinking a cup of Roſa-ſolis, and ſhooting off fiue Muskets, a ſolemne cry, Alcaide, Alcaide, was proclaimed: he adding his fidlers muſicke, the people alſo ready with their bowes and arrowes, his wife with matts on ſhoare to attend the ſolemnity. So ſoone as he came on ſhoare, he frankely gaue his nuts to the people, reioycing in this new honor. Theſe nuts are of great account through all the Riuer, and are a great fauour from the King: fiue hundred of them will buy a wife of a great houſe. Their taſte is very bitter, but cauſeth the water preſently after, to taſte very pleaſant. This done, he went to the Kings houſe, who ſate without doores, their faſhion being aſſoone as it is darke, to make a fire of Reed without doores, and the beſt ſort to haue matts, on which to ſit downe, and vſe their Ceremonies. He placed me by the King, and went himſelfe ſixe paces off, right before him, and made a ſpeech, which one repeats after him as he ſpeakes, to intreat his kind vſage to the white men. The King anſwered with a like ſpeech, giuing vs liberty to ſhoot any thing on the land, and none ſhould offend vs. Buckor Sano kneeled downe, and gaue him thankes, and ſent vnto him in our behalfe the Currall and Chriſtall. Whereupon the King made a long ſpeech, concluding, that he would giue him that land whereon we were, for vs, for euer. Vpon which words, Buckor Sano pulled off his ſhirt in token of thankefulneſſe, and kneeled downe naked, vntill diuers Marybucks with their hands raked vp a heape off the ground, vpon which he lay flat with his belly, and couered him with the earth lightly from head to heele. Then with his hands he threw the earth round about amongſt vs all: after which, the Marybuckes gathered a round heape againe together, and compaſſing it with a round ring of the ſame earth, wrote with his finger as much as the round would containe: which done, Bucker Sano tooke of that earth into his mouth, and put it forth againe, and then taking both his hands full of the earth, and our two Marybuckes following him vpon their hands and knees, they came to me where I ſate, and threw it into my lap. This done, he roſe vp, and two women were ready with clothes to wipe him, and a third woman with a cloth to fan him, and ſtepping a little off, he had his beſt clothes brought him, which he put on, and his ſheafe of arrowes about his necke, a bow and an arrow in his hand. He came in againe, and twenty more, with bow and arrowes, after he had gone twice or thrice about, preſenting himſelfe by drawing his arrow vp to the head, as if he were to ſhoot, he deliuered them, and ſate downe by me. The reſt with their bowes and arrowes came one after another, and kneeling at his foot with their faces, from him preſented their bowes, as hee did. Then began others to dance after their faſhion, at the end whereof they began to make ſeuerall ſpeeches, (for euery one of the better ſort will haue his ſpeech) wherewith we were weary, and left them for that night. Our manner was to ſet our watch with a Pſalme, which they hearing, would be ſtill, and after a ſhot would leaue vs quiet till morning.

Nuts of precious eſteeme. He ſeemeth to be the Cola.

The Countrey giuen to the Engliſh.

In this manner the Kings take poſſeſſion of the lands they came to.

Iron preferred before Gold.

Much Gold.

I ſhewed this Bucker Sano a ſmall Globe, and our Compaſſe, whereupon he told vs that he had ſeene with his eyes a Countrey Southward, whoſe houſes were all couered with gold, the people wearing iron in rings through their lips and eares, and other places, to which place hee told vs it was foure moones trauell. Hee told vs likewiſe of a people which hee called Arabecke, who came vnto this Countrey, and would be at a Towne, called Mombarr, but ſixe dayes iourney from Tinda, the ſecond moone after, which was in March. And there was a Town called Iaye, from whence much gold came, but three dayes iourney from Mombarr, whither theſe Arabeckes went not. More I might haue knowne, had not the emulations of my companie hindred, who would not ſuffer the blacke boy to let me know what he ſpeake.

Combaconda. Tombuto.

Some people which came to vs, were of Combaconda, a Towne foure dayes iourney thence, which we thinke is Tombuto. A Marybucke was here of Maſter Tomſons acquaintance, borne in Iaye, which would not company with the people of Tinda, but came to vs, and told vs that many people were comming, but were ſent backe by ſome that returned, and reported our Salt was gone. He offered, if we were paſt theſe people, he would vndertake to bring vs to Mombarr and Gago, We made haſte to be gone: for by our marke the water was ſunke aboue ſixe inches, promiſing to returne in May, when the water increaſed. We called this place Saints Iohns Mart.

On Saturday the tenth of February, we came away, the wind and ſtreame ſerued, but wee durſt not ſayle for the ſholds, nor row by night. On Wedneſday at night, hauing but three miles to Baraconde, by the Moores intreatie wee went thither ouer Land, and paſſed eaſily in ſixe dayes downe, what had coſt vs twelue dayes labour and trouble. We had a great chaſe at an Elephant, wounded and made him flie, but loſt him in the high ſedge, and after found him in the Riuer, where being ſhot in the eare he turned head on vs, and made vs row off, and leaue him thrice wounded, our Peece failing in the diſcharge.

Barracondi.

Munday the nineteenth, we came to Butto, Bo Iohns Towne, wee had our firſt Marybucke and the blacke Boy which ſpake Engliſh, whoſe age of ſixteene yeares was now ripe for their Circumciſion. Hither we came in ſeaſon for that Solemnitie, hearing before we came, ſhoutes, Drummes and Countrey Muſicke. The Boy knew the meaning, and told vs it was for cutting of prickes, a world of people being gathered for that purpoſe, like an Engliſh Faire. Vnder euerie great tree, and among all their houſes at night were fires without doores, and in eſpeciall places dancing, the Muſicall Inſtruments made with Keyes like vnto Virginals, whereupon one playes with two ſtickes which haue round Balls of leather at the end, about their wriſts Iron Bracelets, They are called Ballardes, and contayne ſome ſeuenteene Keyes. The women for the moſt part dance with ſtrange bending of their bodies, and cringing of their knees, their legges crooked, the ſtanders by keeping a time in clapping their hands together to grace the dance. If the men dance, it is one alone with ſuch Swords as they weare, naked in his hand, with which he acteth.

Circumciſion.

Daunces.

About two furlongs from their houſes vnder a great tree were many fires, and much drumming with great noyſe: here they ſaid were thoſe which were cut, but would not ſuffer mee to goe ſee. Some diſtance beyond we might heare a great roaring noyſe, which they fearefully ſaid was the voyce of Hore, that is, after their impoſture a Spirit, which approacheth at great Feaſts, for whom they prouide ſtore of Rice, Corne, Beefe, and other fleſh readie dreſt, which is inſtantly deuoured. And if he be not ſatisfied, he carries ſome of their Sonnes (the vncircumciſed Females he regards not) and keepes nine dayes or more in his belly, then to bee redeemed with a Beefe, or other belly-timber: and ſo many dayes after muſt they be mute, and cannot be enforced to ſpeake. This ſeemes an illuſion of their Prieſts to exact Circumciſion, and the hoarſeneſſe of ſome ſhewed, they had loſt their throats in that roaring. This roaring, ſhouting and dancing continued all night. We ſaw our blacke Boy circumciſed, not by a Marybucke, but an ordinary fellow hackling off with a Knife at three cuts his prepuce, holding his member in his hand, the Boy neyther holden nor bound the while. He was carryed to the reſt, nor would they ſuffer our Surgeon to heale him. The people in twentie miles ſpace came in to this Feaſt with their prouiſion.

Hore.

I made haſte backe to Setico, to meete the Tinda Merchants, and on the ſixe and twentieth, being within two miles of the place, I receiued a great and dangerous blow by a Sea-horſe which indangered our ſinking, but we made ſhift to ſtop it with ſome loſſe. We came to Setico foure miles from the water ſide, the greateſt Towne we ſaw in the Countrey, higher then which the Portugall Trade not, and from hence carry much Gold; the moſt of the Inhabitants Marybuckes, and the Towne gouerned by one of them, called Fodaa Brani. They are ſtored with Aſſes and Slaues, their Merchandize Salt. The chiefe Marybucke dying, there came multitudes of people to his Funerall. Of the Graue-Earth digged for him euery principall Marybucke, made a Ball mingled with water out of one pot, which they eſteemed as a Relike. They lay all ſweet ſmels they can get into the ground with him, and tooke it kindly that I beſtowed ſome. Much Gold is buried with them, or before by themſelues in a priuate place, for their vſe in another World. Much ſinging, or howling, and crying is vſed many dayes about the Graue. This recourſe was alſo to eſtabliſh his eldeſt Sonne in his dignitie, to which many Preſents are ſent. I ſaw among other beaſts one Ramme of a hayrie Wooll like Goats. Sonnes ſucceed their Fathers, but the Kings Brethren take place before the Sonnes. The ſickneſſe of our men in the Saint Iohn, haſtened my departure.

Setico.

Blow by a Sea-horſe.

Marybucks Funerall.

Sunday the eleuenth of March, I returned, and on Wedneſday came to the Saint Iohn. The next day, I ſet forward to the Sion, and on Saturday came to Pompetan, where the Portugall made vs good cheere. Hee told vs of the Deuils giuing notice of our beeing in the Riuer, and comming vp, which the circumſtances made probable. On Munday, we came to Caſſan, a hill where the Sion did ride: the Maſter and many others dead, and not aboue foure able men in the Company.

Deuils oracles.

Here we lay from the nineteenth of March, to the eighteenth of Aprill, wee weighed and came the next morning to anchor againſt Wolley, Wolley, vnder the King of Caſſan. Whiles wee were there, came a new King from the King of Barſall to take poſſeſſion of the Countrey, the old King being eiected as the Sonne of a Captiue woman, whereas this was right Heire by both Parents, and now comne of age, who now tranſported himſelfe and his ouer the Riuer, to giue place to this new King, which promiſed vs all kindneſſe.

The twentieth, we came to Mangegar, within a mile of which, euery Munday is a great concourſe and market, but miſerable Merchandize. The laſt of Aprill, the Saint Iohn came to vs, and the fourth of May we ſayled downe the Riuer together. From May to October, it blowes vp the Riuer except in the Ternado, which comes for the moſt part South-eaſt. On the eighteenth, we prepared our Shallop. On the nineteenth, we ſet vp Tents on the ſhoare. The King of the Countrey called Cumbo, came to vs, and was very kind and familiar, promiſing all fauour, labours of calking and other buſineſſe, watching and Musketos, which here exceedingly abounded, did much moleſt vs. On the ninth, wee turned out of the Riuer. Next morning before day, we had a violent ſtorme, or Ternado, with Thunder, Lightning, and exceeding ſtore of raine. This weather is frequent from May to September. Wee put in at Traniſco for Workmen, our Carpenters being dead. Thence we haſted home.

§. I.

What courſe the ſhips hold which ſeeke to goe to the Gold Coaſt of Guinea. Of Cape Verde, and the courſe from thence.

Such ſhips as paſſe by the Ilands of Canadai, muſt thence (if they will haue traffique at Cape Verde) hold their courſe South and by Eaſt, and South South-eaſt, till they be vnder fifteene degrees, and then ſeeing no Land, they muſt hold their courſe Eaſt, till they find Land, and not South, becauſe of ſtormes, which alwayes come from the Eaſt; and hauing done at Cape Verde, they muſt hold their courſe ſomewhat South and by Weſt, vntill they be a good way from the Land, or at leaſt without it, for that commonly they ſhall hardly get from the Land, by reaſon of the ſtormes, and the wind that comes out of the Sea, which alwayes driueth them to the Land, whereby commonly men are neerer to the Land, then oftentimes they thinke they are. And thoſe that meane alſo to traffique on the Coaſt of Manigette, when they are aboue the Baſſis of Rio grande, then they muſt ſeeke to get to the Land, that they may enter into Sierra Leona, and other Riuers, there to make their profit, and ſo along the Coaſt in other Riuers and Townes, vntill they come to Cape de las Palmas, and then they muſt take their courſe along by the Cape de tres punctas. But they that deſire not to goe neere to Cape Verde, or the Graine * Coaſt, but onely ſeeke to goe right forth, to the Gold Coaſt of Myna, hold their courſe by the Ilands of Canaria, and ſayle Southward, vntill they haue paſt by the Ilands of Cape Verde, leauing them commonly on Bagh-boord, or as the wind ſerueth them, being vnder ten, nine, or eight degrees, then they begin to make towards the Land, and to hold their courſe South and by Eaſt, and by the ſame courſe to ſeeke to get aboue all Baſſis and ſhallowes, without altering their courſe; for they that fall vpon Saint Annes ſhallowes, lying vnder ſixe degrees, haue much labour and paine before they can get off from them againe, and on the other ſide they loſe a great deale of time, oftentimes thinking that they are off from the ſhallowes, when their ſhip is ſtill vpon them, which is becauſe it is no continuall ſhallow, but full of deepe pits: for in one place you ſhall haue three fathome deepe, and then againe ten fathome, and then againe, the ſtreame driues you ſtill to Land, ſo that many men by meanes of their negligence know not what to do, and are put to much trouble before they can bring their Voyage to an end. Now, ſayling further, and comming vnder ſeuen and ſixe degrees, there commonly you find calmes, ſpecially, when it it is not a time of Trauadoes, which is in Aprill, May, and Iune, whereof men are in great feare. It fell out ſo with vs, that beeing vnder thoſe highthes, we were twentie dayes driuing in a calme, without winning any great highth, and that which we wonne with the Current, the next day we loſt it againe with a contrary wind; ſo that you muſt beware of the Land in any hand, ſpecially, thoſe that goe to Braſilia, for they muſt take heed, not to goe too neere the Land, leſt the calme taketh them: I once found a ſhip thereabouts, which thought to ſayle to the Bay, de Todos los Santtos, and thinking that the ſtreame draue him vpon the Coaſt of Weſt India, fell there vpon the Graine Coaſt, ſo that hee was forced to goe backe againe, and beeing not able to fall into his right courſe, hee was conſtrayned to leaue it, and in ſtead of ſayling to Braſilia, he was forced to goe to Saint Thomas, ſo that vnder thoſe highthes, you can doe nothing with the wind, but onely by the current, which alwaies runnes Eaſt with the bough.

Baixas de S. Annas.

All Saints Bay.

They that ſayle to Eaſt India, alſo ſhunne this calme as much as poſſible they may, to get aboue the ſand, or riſe of Braſilia, for otherwiſe they muſt whether they will or not, goe to Cape Taxes Gonſalues, and then ſayle along vnder the Equinoctiall Line, at leaſt three or foure hundred miles, before they can get againe into their right courſe, as it happened not long ſince to ſome of our ſhips, which was a great hinderance vnto their Voyage, further hauing paſt this calme, and towards the Land about Cape de Lus Palmas, or to ſome other places, which you know, then you muſt hold your courſe along by the Land, but no neerer to the Land then eight and twentie fathomes deepe, till you come to Cape de tres punctus, where the Golden Coaſt begins, and where the Hollanders traffique with the Negroes.

See what happened to the Dragon and Hector in Captaine Keelings Voyage. *Lib.*3.

Deſcription of Cape Verde.

Firſt, paſſing the Riuer of Senega, you begin to draw neere to Cape Verde, which is a piece of Land eaſily to be knowne, for the firſt point ſheweth it ſelfe with two hillockes or houels, and lyeth farre into the Sea, and on both the North and South-ſide thereof loſeth the Land, but Southward from the point, about halfe a mile from the Land, there is an Iland ſeene, whereon many Fowles breed, and great numbers of Egges are found therein, behind this Iland there lyeth a great Rocke, a little ſeparated from the Land. This Iland is very vnfit to rayſe ſhallops on, you may ſayle betweene the Land and this Iland, with a ſhip of three hundred and twentie tuns, but not without great feare, for that there are many Rockes lying vnder the water, but for the beſt ſecuritie of ſhip and goods, it is better to ſayle on the Weſt ſide of the Iland to the other Iland, where ſhallops may be ſet together, which you may ſee being right againſt the firſt Iland, lying about three miles Southeaſt from the other: theſe Ilands are not inhabited, and there is nothing to be had in them but great ſtore of ballaſt and wood to burne, but for that there is a conuenient Valley to make ſhallops in, therefore thoſe places are much vſed, and are the cauſe that many ſhips ſayle to them, but on the firme Land there are great ſtore of Negroes inhabiting, which traffique with all Nations.

The people & their apparell.

The Countrey people goe naked, only that they hang a piece of Linnen cloth before their priuie members, but their Gouernours (as Captaines and Gentlemen) are better apparelled then the common ſort of people, and are well knowne by their Garments to be ſuch. They go in a long Cotton Garment cloſe about them like a womans ſmocke, full of blue ſtripes, like feather bed tikes, on their armes they weare many foure-cornerd leather bagges, all cloſe ioyned together, and the like vpon their legges, but what is within them, I know not, becauſe they will not let vs ſee. About their neckes they weare Beads made of Sea-horſe Teeth, and ſome Corals, or Beades which wee bring them, on their heads they weare Caps of the ſame ſtuffe that their clothes are, they are people that are very induſtrious and carefull to get their liuings, their chiefeſt Trade is Husbandry, to ſowe Rice and Corne: their great riches is in Cowes, which there are very ſcant and deare, but further into the Countrey there are great ſtore, for that men lade whole ſhips full of Salt hides at Porta dallia, which they take in exchange or barter for Iron, which place lyeth but ſeuen or eight miles from Cape Verde. They make very faire Iron worke, and in that Countrey, there is great ſtore of Iron ſpent, ſpecially faire long barres, whereof they are as curious as any man in the World can be, thoſe they vſe to make Inſtruments of, wherewith to fiſh, and to labour vpon the Land, as alſo to make weapons, as Bowes, Arrowes, Aponers; and * Aſſagayen they haue no knowledge of God, thoſe that traffique and are conuerſant among ſtrange Countrey people, are ciuiller then the common ſort of people, they are very greedie eaters, and no leſſe drinkers, and very lecherous, and theeuiſh, and much addicted to vncleanneſſe: one man hath as many wiues as hee is able to keepe and maintaine.

Kind of Darts made Iauelin-faſhion at both ends.

Their women.

The women alſo are much addicted to leacherie, ſpecially, with ſtrange Countrey people, of whom they are not iealous, as of their owne Countrey people and Neighbours; their Religion is after the manner of Mahomets law, for circumciſion and ſuch like toyes. They are alſo great Lyers, and not to be credited, the principall Commodities that men traffique for there, are Hides, Amber-greece, Gumme of Arabia, Salt, and other wares of ſmall importance, as Rice, Graine, Teeth, and ſome Ciuet. The Portugals alſo dwell there, with other Nations, wherewith they may freely traffique, becauſe they are not ſubiects to the King of Spaine; and beſides, that they are not Maſters of the Countrey, and haue no command but ouer their ſlaues. The Negroes are vnder the command of their owne Gouernours, which are called Algaier in their Language, which is a Captain of a Village, for euery Village hath his ſeuerall Algaier, and when any ſhip come to anchor there, then the Captaine comes preſently aboard with a Canoe, to aske Anchoridge money, which is commonly three barres of Iron, but of ſuch as know not their cuſtome, they take as much as they can; their bodies are very blacke, and of a good proportion. When they ſpeake, they put out their neckes, like Turkie Cockes, and ſpeake very faſt. They haue a ſpeech by themſelues.

The courſe from Cape Verde. Miles are to be vnderſtood Dutch, or as the Latin hath leagues leacæ ſeu mil. gallica.

Leauing Cape Verde, to ſaile to the Golden Coaſt of Myna, the courſe is beſt (if the wind will ſerue) along by the land, to the place where you will Trafique, and deale with the Negros: from Cape Verde to Rio de Gambra, it is fiue and twenty miles, from Rio Gambra to the Baixos of Rio Grande thirty miles, from thence to Sierra Liona, threeſcore miles; there is a good place to lie in the Winter time, for in the entrie of the Riuer, you haue fiue fathome deepe at the leaſt, and ſo for the ſpace of fourteene miles going South-eaſt towards the Roade, you haue ſixteene, fourteene, twelue, ten, and eight fathome water: from the Riuer of Sierra Liona, to Rio de Galinas, (that is, the Riuer of Hens, becauſe there arne many Hens, and very good cheape, at a Meſken a peece) fourty miles, from Rio de Galinas to Cape de Monte eighteene miles, the land of Cape de Monte reacheth South-eaſt, and by South, it is a low land, but the Cape is high land, like a hill, or like a horſe necke, with a falling in: from Cape de Monte, to Cape dos Baixos, fiftie miles; from Cape de Baſſis to Cape de das Palmas, fiftie miles. Theſe are the three principalleſt Capes of all the gold Coaſt; this Cape lieth vnder foure Degrees, and is the furtheſt land of all the Coaſt, which reacheth towards the Equinoctiall line, all the land for the moſt part lieth South-eaſt, and North-weſt, low ground, ſometimes riſing, but no high hils to be ſeene inward to the land; from Cape das Palmas, to Cape de Apollonia, and ſo to Cape de tres Punctus ſixtie miles, from Cape de Monte, to Cape de Miſerade,*ſixteene miles (this Cape is a high land) from Cape de Miſerade to Rio de Ceſte, foure and twentie miles, all along hither to you, haue good Anchor ground at twelue fathome, the Weſt point is riſing land, like to a hill that riſeth and ſheweth it ſelfe within the Countrey, when you are North) from it you are then right againſt Rio de Ceſtes, before in the mouth of the Riuer, there lieth a ſmall Iland, and the Village where you Traffique, lieth a mile vpwards within the Riuer. From Rio de Ceſtes to Cape das Baixos fiue miles, this Cape ſheweth like a ſaile, and it is a white Rocke which lieth out into the Sea, being two miles from the Cape you ſaw, foure and thirty, and fiue and thirty fathome water, good Anchor ground, you may hold your courſe along by the land at two and thirty, three & thirty, and foure & thirty fathome deepe; but go no neere if you deſire not to go to the gold Coaſt, becauſe of ſtormes, with a wind out of the Sea, as alſo becauſe of Rockes, and foule ground, that are, and is found to be there, which will rather hurt, then doe you good. From Cape de Baſſis to Sanguin three miles, there is much Graine to be bought, and good Traffique to be made. From Sanguin to Boſoe a mile and a halfe, there alſo is Traffique; from Boſoe to Sertres two miles, there alſo you may Traffique, and it is a good place: from Sertres to Botowa two miles, it is alſo a good place to Traffique in: from Bottowa to Synno, fiue miles. There alſo is Traffique; from Synno to Sonweroboe three miles, from Sonweroboe to Baddoe two miles, from Baddoe to Crou two miles; from Crou to Wappa foure miles; from Wappa to Granchetre two miles: This the French men call Paris (from Granchetre to Goyaua, foure miles, thither there commeth great ſtore of Graine to ſell, and it is a good place to Traffique in with the Negros, from Goyaua to Cape de das Palmas three miles, all this from Cape Verde to Cape de das Palmas is called the Graine or golden Coaſt (otherwiſe Mellegette) wherein the Kingdome of Mellie is contained, which by vs that are the Netherlanders is called the Graine Coaſt: but by others it is called the Coaſt of Mellegette: This Kingdome of Mellie hath an other Kingdome vnder it, called Bitonni, which lieth not farre from Rio Ceſtes.

Note.

Melli.

The Kingdome of Mellie is rich of Corne, Graine, Rice, Cotten, and Fleſh, and ſome Elephants, where by they ſell many of their teeth vnto ſtrangers. The inhabitants are miſchieuous and cruell, (yet better in one place then in another) alwayes ſeeking to ſpoile and intrap ſtrangers, that come thither, and cruelly to murther them; but ſome Countri-men are better welcome vnto them then others, and thoſe are Frenchmen, becauſe of their long Traffique into thoſe Countreys. The Portugalls come very little thither, one Countrey men are better entertained in one place then in another, & that by reaſon they haue ſometimes ſwaggred there abouts, and for that cauſe the Negros ſeeke to be reuenged. The greateſt Traffique here is Graine, Teeth, and ſome Rice; other Wares that are there to be had cannot be bartered for in any great quantity, as gold and Teeth, for there is little to be had, but other neceſſaries for ſuſtenance of man, are there reaſonably to be had, and wine of Palme, which they draw out of the trees, is there very delicate, exceeding ſweet, and as excellent as any can be found in thoſe Coaſts. The Inhabitants are ſubiects to their Captain, whom they call Taba, and are very ſubmiſſiue and ready to obey his commandement. The Kings or Captaines of their Villages, are very graue, and rule with great ſeueritie, holding their ſubiects in great ſubiection. Their Language differereth in the one place from the other: but moſt of them ſpeake a little French, by reaſon, that they are vſed to deale much with the French men, and ſo get ſome part of their ſpeech, as they on the gold Coaſt alſo doe, who likewiſe ſpeake a little Portugall, by reaſon alſo that the Portugalls in times paſt vſed to Traffique much there. They are very expert in husbandry, as to ſome Graine, wherewith they haue a great Traffique, they are alſo very cunning, and fine workmen to make many fine things; ſpecially, very faire Canoes or ſmall Scutes, wherewith they alſo rowe into Sea, which they cut out of a whole tree (like to a Venetian Goudel) which are very ſwift to goe; the men haue as many wiues as they can maintaine, but they keepe them very ſhort, and looke neere vnto them. They are likewiſe very Iealous of their wiues: for if they perceiue that any of their wiues haue plaid falſe with them, they will ſeeke great reuenge againſt the partie that hath done them the wrong, and will make warre vpon him, and for that cauſe, raiſe all their Countrey, ſo that the women are not here ſo common, as on the golden Coaſt of Mina, and elſe where. Paſſing further from Cape das Palmas, you find many Riuers, where you may barter for great ſtore of Teeth, to Cape de Tres Punctas, and for that cauſe it is called the tooth Coaſt.

Paſſing Cape de Apolonia, (which lieth betweene Cape las Palmas, and Cape de Tres Punctas) fiue miles further: there lieth a ſmall Caſtle, but not ſtrong, which is held by the Portugalls, the Village is called Achombeue, and the Caſtle Ariem, there many Negros dwell, but come ſeldome aboord our ſhips that lie there at Anchor, which the Portugalls forbid them to doe. Thus you haue read the Deſcription of the Graine or gold Coaſt, as alſo the Tooth Coaſt, and now you ſhall read of the Coaſt of Mina. * And firſt of the Iron people in this golden Coaſt.

§. II.

How they marrie each with other, and what goods their Fathers giue with their Children; their Houſe-keeping together; the womans lying in; education of their Children: Their proportions, induſtrie and conditions.

WHen their children begin to attaine to yeeres of diſcretion, and are able to be married to a wife, Then the father ſeeketh out a wife for his Son, which he thinks wil like his Son well, and yet he neuer ſaw, nor knew her before, & without wooing each other. Who being thus brought together, the Father giueth nothing at all with his ſon towards houſhold: but if he hath gotten any thing himſelfe, by fiſhing or carrying Merchants aboord the ſhip, that is his owne to begin houſhold withall. But the Brides friends, giue the value of fourteene Gulderns in gold with their daughter, for their marriage good; which is to be vnderſtood, that if they be any thing worth, then the Father giueth his daughter a Peſo and a halfe of gold, and the mother halfe a Peſo of gold: which after our reckoning altogether, is halfe an ounce of gold Troy weight, which they giue them to buy wine de Palme, to keepe their Bridall withall: for ſhe hath nothing elſe, but that which her Father and Mother giueth her, for ſhe getteth nothing in her youth, as her husband did. And if it be a Kings ſonne or daughter, they alſo giue no more with them to their marriage; for it is a common cuſtome with them to giue no more with their daughters in marriage, then they giue them as a liberalitie, but when they goe to keepe houſe, they giue them a ſlaue to ſerue them. Beſides this, the Bride in the preſence of her friends which come to the Banquet, maketh a promiſe, and ſweareth, to be true to her husband, and not to vſe the bodily company of any other man; but the man taketh no ſuch oath, but is free thereof.

Prouiſion of a wife.

Portion.

Rites of marriage.

Now, if ſhe chanceth to commit whoredome with an other man, either willingly or againſt her will, and that her husband heareth thereof, then he muſt put her away for it; and the man that hath committed the act, ſhall forfeit to the King foure and twenty Peſos (which after our account is nine ounces) of gold. But if it be a Dutch man, he payeth no fine, becauſe he is a ſtranger, and knew not whether the woman was married or not, which excuſeth him: yet the fault is laid vpon the woman that hath done ſuch an offence, and ſhe muſt pay to her husband foure Peſos, or halfe an ounce of gold, becauſe ſhe committed adultery with another man. If ſhe hath gotten any thing; but if ſhe hath nothing, and cannot pay the fine to her husband, it excuſeth her not: for if he hath no great fantaſie to his wife, or that they haue little affection one vnto the other; if he will, he may put her away from him, and as then the band of Matrimonie is broken betweene them, and he may take an other wife when he will.

Diuorce and forfeiture.

But if he cannot learne that his wife hath committed ſuch a fact, by information of other men, but preſumeth it of himſelfe, or ſuſpecteth that his wife hath laine with any other man, he chargeth her with it, and making her eate certaine Salt, vſeth other Ceremonies of their Idolatrous Fetiſſos, wherewith the woman knowing her ſelfe to be cleere, and not to haue committed adultery with an other man, willingly taketh her oath. But knowing her ſelfe to bee faulty, ſhe dare not take her oath fearing, that if ſhe ſhould forſweare her ſelfe, her Fetiſſo would make her die, whereby oftentimes the wife diſcouers her owne offence, and procureth the meanes to mooue her husband to be deuorced from her, which chiefely hapneth, by meanes of the Ielouſie; which the man hath of his firſt wife, for it cauſeth a great hatred and contention betweene them, becauſe it is a great ſcandall vnto him, and oftentimes there groweth ſo great ſtrife about it, that he ſeeketh to murther the man that doth the fault, and although he hath paid the fine impoſed vpon him, the married man hath the Priuiledge to driue him out of the Towne.

Polygamy.

Further, when they keepe houſe together, if the man beginneth to thriue, and hath meanes to buy an other wife, he may not buy her without the conſent of his firſt wife, vnleſſe he were at controuerſie with her, and put her away, for ſome thing that he could charge her withall; but with her good will he may buy another. He giueth his firſt wife ſixe Engliſhen of gold, or two, three, foure or fiue, as much as he can get, or hath need of, keeping his other wife for his ſlaue, or to ſerue him, or for his Etigufou, or in our Language, his Whore or Concubine, to whom he beareth not ſo great affection, nor is not ſo iealous of her, as of, and to his wife, and thoſe ſerue for euery man, for he may complaine of no man for her, nor cauſe him to pay any fine for her. His firſt wife waxing old, and her mind being not ſo much addicted vnto luſt, if he perceiueth it, then he cleaueth to his yonger wife, to haue his pleaſure with her, and euer after eſteeming moſt of her, maketh his old wife doe the houſhold worke, giuing her meat and drinke as long as ſhe liueth, and putteth her not away, but ſhe is forced to ſerue the yong wife, and ſhall neuer trouble her ſelfe with any thing, but onely to eate and drinke well, to haue a care to pleaſe her husband, and to doe whatſoeuer he commandeth.

Their meats.

Beds.

The Iriſh doe the like.

Although a man hath as many wiues as he is able to keepe, yet all are not of one, but of ſeuerall ages, the one yonger then the other, that they may be the better ſerued by their wiues. For when the eldeſt can doe no more for age, (that he may not want worke) and that the yongeſt wiues might doe him more pleaſure, they make moſt of the yongeſt: and euery wife dwelleth in a houſe by her ſelfe, although he had ten wiues, as many of them haue. The wife keepes her husbands money, and when he needeth any, he fetcheth ſome of her. They eate not one with the other, but either of them alone by themſelues; the husband eateth with one of his companions that he dealeth with, or with whom he goeth to Sea: his wiues alſo eate with their friends or neighbours, euery one bringing their meat with them, and ſo make good cheare together, and at euening, the women goe home to their houſes againe, and are together but in the day time. The man and wife lie each of them in a ſeuerall roome, at night, ſpreading a mat vpon the ground, and lay a wooden ſtoole vnder their heads, in ſtead of a pillow, and then making a little fire of wood, when it burneth they lie downe, with the ſoles of their feet before it, that the heat thereof might draw out the cold, which they by day haue drawne vp into them from the earth (by going bare-footed, eſteeming it to be very good for them, which we muſt alſo acknowledge. Now, when he hath a deſire to vſe any of his wiues, either he calleth or fetcheth her, and that night he lieth with her, & the next day, ſhe goeth to her houſe againe, where ſhe dwelleth, not once making any of the reſt acquainted, what ſhe did that night, or that her husband lay with her; for then they would be too iealous.

Child-birth.

Being with child, when their time of deliuerance, and bringing foorth of their child into the world commeth, when ſhe is in labour, both men, women, maids, yong men & children, run vnto her, and ſhe in moſt ſhameleſſe manner, is deliuered before them all. I would ſay much more hereof, but in reſpect of the credit of women, I will leaue it. When the child is borne, ſhe goes to the water to waſh & make cleane her ſelfe, not once dreaming of a moneths lying in, nor of making Caudles of Ipocras, and other wines, as women here with vs vſe to doe: they vſe no Nurſes to helpe them when they lie in child-bed, neither ſeeke to lie dainty and ſoft; but they preſently take a ſpoonefull of Oyle, and a handfull of Manigette or Graine, whereof they make a drinke, and drinke it vp.

Names.

Vſage of children.

The next day after, they goe abroad in the ſtreets, to doe their buſineſſe, as other women doe. They giue their child ſuch a name, as they thinke good to themſelues, and bleſſe the ſame with their Fetiſſos, and other witchcrafts, and when time ſerueth, circumciſe both boyes and girles: at which time they make a great feaſt, whereof they make great account. But where the women are moſt ſhameleſſe at the time of the birth of their children, the men in three moneths after, lie not with that wife, nor once haue the vſe of her body, which neuertheleſſe, I thinke they doe not, for any ſhame or regard that they haue, to deale with that woman, but onely becauſe they haue other wiues enough. They take the yong child as ſoone as it is borne, and wrapping a cleane cloth about the middle thereof, lay it downe on a mat vpon the ground, and not in a cradle, and there let it turne and ſprawle about, and doe what it will, and when it is two or three moneths old, the mother ties the child with a peece of cloth at her backe, and ſo lets it hang there, as the high Dutches wiues vſe to follow their husbands in the warres. When the child crieth to ſucke, the mother caſteth one of her dugs backeward ouer her ſhoulder, and ſo the child ſuckes it as it hangs. The women goe vp and downe from place to place, and ſtill carry their children in that ſort, as lightly, as if they had nothing at their backes, the childs head lies iuſt vpon her ſhoulder, and ſo ſhe goes ſhaking of the child moſt pitifully to behold, whereby we wondered that they brake not the childs ioynts, by bearing them in that ſort, being ſo young, and yet you find very few or no lame perſons in thoſe Countreys. They teach their children to goe very young, for they make no reckoning thereof, and ſuffer them to creepe and runne abroad when they are very little, and teach them to ſpeake very ſoone, whereby you find many children there among them that can both goe and ſpeake ere they bee a yeare old; and ſome of them ſpeake ſo plainly, that you may vnderſtand what they ſay in their Language, for they ſpeake and goe farre ſooner then our children doe, which we wondred at, beſides this, they are ſtrong, fat and well diſpoſed, whereof we will ſpeake hereafter in another place.

Deuilliſh preſeruatiues againſt the Deuill.

Fetiſſos.

The children being a moneth or two old, then they hang a Net about the bodie thereof, like a little ſhirt, which is made of the barke of a tree, which they hang full of their Fetiſſos, as golden Croſſes, ſtrings with Corall about their hands, feet, and neckes, and their haire is filled full of ſhels, whereof they make great account, for they ſay, that as long as the young childe hath that Net about him, the Deuill cannot take nor beare the child away, and leauing it off, the Deuill would carrie it away, for they ſay, the childe being ſo little, it would not bee ſtrong enough to reſiſt the Deuill, but hauing that Net vpon the bodie, it is armed, and then the Deuill hath no power ouer it; the Corals which they hang about the child, which they call a Fetiſſo, they eſteeme much, for that hanging ſuch a Fetiſſo about the childes necke, they ſay, it is good againſt vomiting; the ſecond Fetiſſo, which they hang about his necke, they ſay, it is good againſt falling the third, they ſay, is good againſt bleeding; the fourth, is very good to procure ſleepe, which; they hang about the necke thereof, in the night-time, that it may ſleepe well; the fift, is good againſt wild beaſts, and the vnwholſomeneſſe of the Aire, with diuers other ſuch like Fetiſſos, each hauing a name a-part, to ſhew what vertue it hath, and what they are good for, and they credibly beleeue them to be good againſt vomiting, falling, bleeding, (which they preſently helpe) and for ſleeping, they feed their young children with all kind of groſſe meates, almoſt from the firſt, for when they leaue ſuckling (they ſuffer them not to ſuck long) then they beginne to learne the childe to eate of their groſſe meates, and to drinke water; when they be vſed thereunto, then they take little heed to them, but beate the children lying downe in their houſe, like Dogges, rooting in the ground like Hogges, whereby it falleth out that the young children ſoone learne to goe.

Colour.

Euery woman bringeth vp her owne children, and each child knoweth the Mother, and remayneth with her, vntill the Father either buyeth it of her, or that it goeth away from the Mother, it oftentimes falleth out, that the Husband taketh the child from the Mother, & ſelleth it to other men for a ſlaue. When they begin to goe, they preſently learne to ſwimme, and to runne into the water, and when they are firſt borne they are not blacke, but reddiſh, as the Braſilians are; and then by little and little begin to be blacke; and at laſt, to bee as blacke as Pitch, and growing bigger, run vp and downe like Sauage men, Boyes and Girles together, fighting one with another, taking each others meate from them, and from their child-hood vpwards, begin to be enuious one againſt the other, and ſo grow bigger and exerciſe all kind of villanie and knauerie, their Parents not once teaching them any ciuilitie, nor ſhewing them what they ſhould doe, ſuffering both Boyes and Girles to goe ſtarke naked as they were borne, with their priuie members all open, without any ſhame or ciuilitie.

Correction.

Arts.

Firſt, apparell.

Wiuing.

They vſe to beate and chaſten their children moſt cruelly, ſtriking them with great ſtaues, in ſuch ſort that we wondred that they did not breake their bones, which they doe not, but for ſome great cauſe (whereby their children reſpect them much) and for that they beate them cruelly, ſo that they doe not eaſily forget it. Other good Diſcipline they teach them not, but they grow vp like wild trees: hauing ſpent their time thus vnciuilly, and beginning to be eight, ten, or twelue yeares old, then their Parents begin to inſtruct and teach them to do ſome thing, and to labour with their hands, the Fathers teach their Sonnes to ſpinne Thred made of barkes of Trees, and to knit Nets, which hauing learned they goe to Sea with their Fathers to fiſh, and when they know how to rowe, and to guide a Boat, then two or three Boyes will goe out together in a Canoe or Almadia to fiſh, and that which they take they carrie to their Parents for food, but when they are eighteene or twentie yeares old, then their Sonnes beginne to deale for themſelues, and leaue their Fathers, and go and dwell two or three of them together in a houſe, buying or hyring a Canoe, (which is one of their Boats) and therewith goe to Sea together, and what fiſh they get they ſell for Gold, firſt, keeping as much as ſerueth for food for themſelues, with that they ſell, they buy a fathome of Linnen cloth, which they hang about their bodies, and betweene their legges, wherewith they couer their priuie members, for then they begin to be ſhame-faced; whence they proceed further and beginne to deale and traffique with Merchandize, and to carrie it aboord the ſhip in their Canoes, and ſerue Merchants to carry them to and from their ſhips, and ſo learne to deale with Gold, and to get ſome thing. After that, beginning to be amorous, and to looke after young Wenches, then they are eſteemed to bee men, which when their Fathers perceiue, they looke them out Wiues, and then they marrie, which they doe very young, ſo that in thoſe Countries, Children get Children. Touching the Girles, they alſo begin to worke, and that ſome-what ſooner then the Boyes, they learne to make Baskets, Mats and ſtraw Hats of greene Ruſhes, which they fold with their hands, they alſo learne to make Caps, Purſes, and apparell made of barkes of Trees, dyed with all kinds of colours, moſt cunningly done, as if they were faſtened together with cords, much to bee wondred at, they alſo learne to grind their Corne or Millia, and thereof make Bread, which they goe and ſell for their Mothers, and bring them the money to buy other meate withall, and whatſoeuer they get, they giue it to their Mothers, who for that (when they marrie) giue them ſome gift, as I haue ſaid before. In this ſort the Girles begin to labour, and to learne to doe houſhold worke, wherein according to their manner of houſe keeping, they are very curious, and exceed the men in cunning workmanſhip.

Their limbes and members.

Long nailes, a ſigne of idle Gentrie.

The men in thoſe Countries are of a very good proportion, with faire members, ſtrong legs, and well-ſhaped bodies, which is eaſily to be ſeene, for that they goe almoſt naked of their bodies, they haue round faces, and no great lips, nor wide mouthes, as the Barbarian Moores haue, but their Noſes are flat, which they make flat when they are young, for they eſteeme a flat Noſe to be a great ornament vnto them, and to ſay truth, it doth not amiſſe in them, for that according to the proportion of bodie, it beautifieth their faces: their eares are ſmall, their eyes white, their eye browes very great, white teeth in their mouthes, (for they keepe their teeth very cleane, ſcouring them with ſmall ſtickes, and thereby make them very ſmooth, and ſhining like Iuorie) they haue little beard, and are at leaſt thirtie yeares of age, before they haue any. They haue broad ſholders, thicke armes, great hands, and long fingers, and let their nailes grow very long, which they keepe very cleane with ſcraping, for ſome of them let them grow as long as the ioynt of a mans finger, which they eſteeme for a great ornament, for that cauſe thinking themſelues to be Gentlemen. The Merchants alſo that dwell within the Land, vſe thoſe long nailes for a great ſhew, for they keepe them as white as Iuorie, by ſcraping them, and againe they haue good vſe for them, for that ſometimes when they haue not a Spoone by them, and that they vntie their Purſes to weigh Gold, and wanting a Spoone to take it out, for haſte they vſe their long nailes, and therewith put the Gold into the Scales, and I haue ſeene ſome of them at one time, take at leaſt halfe an ounce of ſmall Gold like ſand out of their Purſes. They haue ſmall bellies, long legs, broad feet, and long toes, little haire vpon their bodies, curled haire vpon their heads, but not ſo much curled as the Tawnie Moores, for theirs is almoſt like briſtels, and not like Wooll. In the palmes of their hands, vnder their feet, and vnder their lips, they are very white, their skins are as ſoft as Veluet, and ſmooth, which they raze not, they likewiſe haue a great priuie member, whereof they make great account, therein they much ſurpaſſe our Countrimen.

As they grow in yeares, they become blacker and blacker, at thirtie yeares of age beeing in their beſt time, but when they are ſeuentie or eightie yeares old, then their blackneſſe beginnes to decay, and their bodies become yellowiſh, and their skins begin to be rugged, and to wrinkle like Spaniſh Leather; they exceed all other Moores in Africa, for proportion and ſtature of bodie.

Their wits are ſubtletie.

Stomackes.

Stomacks and reuenge.

The men are induſtrious and ſubtill perſons as can be, good Workmen or Labourers, ſtrong of bodie, ſtrait, and very vpright, ingenious to learne any thing, and readie to conceiue it: for any thing whatſoeuer they ſee done before them, they will ſoone imitate and counterfeit; they are of a very ſharpe ſight, and ſee further then our Netherlanders, for if there be any ſhips at the Sea, they will ſee them ſooner then we, they are ſubtill Merchants to traffique with all, and euerie day more and more learne of the Netherlanders, ſo that in time they will ſurpaſſe them, for they haue good skill and knowledge in the Merchandizes which we ſell them, they are hard of complexion, and haue very hot ſtomackes, for they are able to diſgeſt raw and moſt ſtrange meates (whereat we wondred) for if they had an Oſtridge maw, they could not better diſgeſt ſuch raw meate as they many times eate, as I will further declare, when I ſpeake more of their manner of feeding. They are very enuious and ſpitefull one againſt the other, and will beare malice againſt a man ten yeares together, and when they haue the meanes to be reuenged, then they will make their malice knowne, and vntill then keepe it ſecret.

Superſtition.
Nicetie.

Eaſements.

Couetiſe and begging.

They are Idolatrous, and very ſuperſtitious in their Religion. They haue a ſtrong complexion or ſauour of their bodies, much like Oyle of Palme, wherewith they often anoint themſelues. They are very curious to keepe their bodies cleane, and often waſh and ſcoure them. They are much troubled with Lice and Fleas. They are not aſhamed to ſhew their naked bodies, but they are very carefull not to let a Fart, if any bodie be by them; they wonder at our Netherlanders, that vſe it ſo commonly, for they cannot abide that a man ſhould Fart before them, eſteeming it to be a great ſhame and contempt done vnto them; when they eaſe themſelues, they commonly goe in the morning to the Townes end (where there is a place purpoſely made for them) that they may not bee ſeene, as alſo becauſe men paſſing by ſhould not bee moleſted with the ſmell thereof, they alſo eſteeme it a bad thing that men ſhould eaſe themſelues vpon the ground, and therefore they make houſes which are borne vp aboue the ground, wherein they eaſe themſelues, and euery time they doe it, they wipe; or elſe they goe to the water ſide, to eaſe themſelues in the ſand, and when theſe Priuie-houſes are full, they ſet fire in them, and let them burne to aſhes; they piſſe by Iobs as Hogs doe, and not all at one time; they are very couetous, and much addicted thereunto, and they can begge ſo well, and are ſo expert therein, that they ſurpaſſe all the beggers in our Countrey, who although they had ſet ten or twelue yeeres ordinarily at the Church doores, in Holland or Zeland; or gone from doore to doore to begge an almes: yet they cannot haue their leſſons ſo perfectly as theſe. And although they are very hard and nigardly, and will giue but little, yet when they haue gotten any thing by their begging, then they will be ſomewhat liberall thereof, when it coſts them nothing.

They are very lecherous, and much addicted to vncleanneſſe; eſpecially with yong women, whereby they are much ſubiect to the Poxe, and other vncleane diſeaſes, that are gotten thereby; which they make ſmall account of, and are nothing aſhamed of them. They are no leſſe giuen to drinking; for they are great drunkards, and dainty mouthed, and can eate and drinke of the beſt. In their feeding, they are very greedy. They cannot endure that any raine ſhould fall vpon their bodies, and therefore they ſhun it. They are very great liers, and not to be credited. They are likewiſe much inclined to theft, for they will ſteale like dogs, for their Kings and Captaines practiſe it, and they are ſo well vſed thereunto, that they cannot leaue ſtealing. They are very expert and cunning to fiſh, and to till the land, and in their apparell, and going very proud, they are very ſtout, proud and curious in all their actions. They are not to be truſted nor credited, for they are no good pay-maſters, you were as good giue it, as truſt them with any thing. They are of a very good memorie, and will remember a thing long. They are by nature warme and hott, and therefore cannot endure cold, they are not frugall, for whatſoeuer they get, they ſpend it preſently: for it grieues them to keepe it, ſo that therein they are like to little children, that can keepe nothing. They are excellent Swimmers and Diuers in the water, and are ſo expert therein, that they much ſurpaſſe our Countrey men.

§. III.

Of their Apparell, Cuſtomes within doores, Manner of diet, Merchandiſing, the vſe of Dache; Wares carried thither.

ALthough their apparell and manner of dreſſing is not variable, yet they take a great pride therein; as firſt, in cutting their haire, euery one of a ſeueral faſhion, and as finely as he can deuiſe it: ſome with a halfe moone, ſome croſſe wiſe, others with three or foure hornes vpon their heads, and euery one a ſeuerall way, ſo that among fiftie men, you ſhall ſcarce find two or three that are cut alike. On their armes they hang Iron rings, three or foure vpon one arme cut, ſome round, others flat, which are raced, and markt as we make fairings for children. About their neckes they were a ſtring of Beades, of diuers colours, which our Netherlanders bring them; but the Gentlemen weare Rings of gold about their necks, on their feet, they weare many ſtrange wreathes, which they call Fetiſſos, (which name they deriue from their Idolatry) for when they eate or drinke, then they power meat and drinke vpon them: and firſt giue them to eate and drinke. At their knees alſo they weare a ſtring of Venice beades, with ſome gold among them, of diuers faſhions, much after the manner that our yong maids weare their Corall bracelets about their armes. They weare caps made of Barkes of trees, with a long ſtring hanging at them, which they bind about their heads, after the Turkiſh manner, in ſtead of a hat-band, painted and dyed of diuers colours. They alſo make caps of Reeds, they likewiſe haue hats of Straw, as we haue, and ſome of greene Ruſhes, they alſo make caps of Dogs and Goats skins; which they ſpread vpon a blocke of wood, all finely made, they weare at leaſt two fathome of Linnen about the middle of their bodies, and betweene their legs, and round about them like a girdle, and let it hang downe beneath their knees, like the Portugals Breeches; and when they goe out of doores, they take a fathome of Linnen cloth, Sey, or Stuffe, and weare it about their neckes, and croſſe vnder their armes like a Cloake, and in their hands they weare an Aſſagaie or two, and when they goe in this manner in the ſtreets, they haue a Boy or a Slaue following them, which carrieth a ſtoole after them, and where they ſtay, there their ſlaues ſets downe their ſtooles for them to ſit and prate; they are very proud in their going, for they goe very ſlowly, and vſe a long pace as they goe along through the ſtreets, they looke forward, and neuer caſt vp their eyes, vntill ſome body that is better then themſelues, ſpeaketh vnto them, and with them they will ſtand and talke, and make them an anſwere; but if they be ſuch as are of meaner qualitie then themſelues, to them they will make no anſwere: but with an angry countenance, and diſpitefully, ſaying, hold your peace, ſpeake not to me, eſteeming themſelues embaſed, by ſpeaking to a meaner perſon then themſelues in the ſtreets; for there are very great men among them, very proud in ſpeech, and doe much honour and reuerence to ſtrangers, to the end you ſhould doe the like to them.

Cutting their haire.

Rings.

Fetiſſos.

Caps.

Pride.

When they goe to Sea, then they put off their clothes, and taking a little peece of Linnen or cloth, about a handfull broad, tie that about their bodies, and betweene their legs, before their priuy members, and when they goe on land againe, then they put it off, and waſh themſelues from head to feet, and anoint their bodies with Oyle of Palme, or fat of beaſts, to make them ſhine; and betweene their toes put Soape, to keepe them cleane: they alſo vſe to anoint their bodies to keepe them from the biting of Flies.

Salutations.

In the morning, when they goe out and meet with any of their friends or acquaintance, they ſalute each other very ſolemnly, bidding them good morrow, embracing each other in their armes, & putting forth the two fore-fingers of their right hands, one to the other, they hold each other faſt by them, and kinckling them twice or thrice together, at euery time bowing their heads, they ſay, Auzy, Auzy, which in their Language is good morrow.

Their luſt.

The Portugals in Mina marry Mullato women, halfe white, halfe blacke, becauſe white women cannot liue there. Theſe weare their haire ſhort, as the men, weare many Corals, and are brauely apparelled. But of the Natiue women of theſe parts. Firſt, I will tell you of their Natures, Complexions, and Conditions: from their youths vpwards, they are giuen to Luſt and vncleanneſſe, for a great while they goe with their priuie members vncouered, as I ſaid before; and as they had no ſhame at all, ſo when they begin to weare ſome thing vpon their bodies, they begin to expreſſe ſhamefac'tneſſe, but then begin to be lecherous, which they naturally learne from their youth vpwards: and before the Netherlanders and Portugals dwelt among them, and Traffique in that Countrey, the women were not ſo proud nor curious, as they are now; but that they haue learned much of vs, by ſeeing that we rather deſire a handſome, then an euill fauoured wench; and for that cauſe, they giue themſelues thereunto, that they might be beloued of vs; for they eſteeme it to be good fortune for them to haue carnall copulation with a Netherlander, and among themſelues, brag and boaſt thereof.

Thrugh you is my name blaſphemed amongſt the Gentiles. Rom. 2.2. Let Chriſtians read this with ſhame, eſpecially trauelers. Let not Heathens be made worſe by Chriſtians which, alas, is now common in all remote parts. And this is one chiefe cauſe of the death of ſo many there.

In former time, they vſe to goe ſtarke naked vntill they were very great, as yet they doe among thoſe that dwell within the land, as the Negros themſelues haue told vs; but on the Sea ſide they are growne more ſhamefac't, by meanes of ſuch as comes out of Europe to Traffique with them. They are alſo theeuiſh, but thereof they haue not ſo much need as the men. They are very proud in their gate and apparell, they curle and fold the haire of their heads, making a hill in the middle of their heads like a Hat, ſuch as the Dutch Gentlewomen vſe to weare, and round about the ſame, they make round ſtrikes as bigge as a Dollor, which they dreſſe and trim ſo long, till it be as they would haue it; and then they anoint it with Palme Oyle, which makes it very much frizled, They haue long Combes with two teeth onely, each tooth being a finger long, which they thruſt into their haire, and combe it therewith; for they are troubled with Lice: they vſe their combes alſo for a kind of ſalutation or reuerence, which they doe vnto men; for when they bid one good morrow, and kincke fingers together, they put their combes out of their haire, and put them in againe, which they vſe for a kind of reuerence, in ſtead of bowing their heads.

Combes for courteſie.

Racing.

Vpon their foreheads they cut three or foure ſlaſhes in the fleſh, about the length of the ioint of a mans finger, and alſo on their cheekes not farre from their eares, which they ſuffer to ſwell, and riſe vp, about the breadth of a knife, which they couer ouer with painting, and vnder their eye browes, they alſo make white ſtrikes, and on their faces they ſet white ſpots, which a farre off ſhew like Pearles.

Rings.

They alſo race their armes and their breaſts with diuers kinds of cuts, euery morning putting diuers colours vpon them, whereby they ſhew like blacke ſilke doublets cut and pinckt, or like a womans Sattin ſtomacher, they weare eare rings of Copper or Tin, and Copper bracelets about their armes, and ſome of Iuorie, and vpon their legs alſo they weare many red and yellow Copper Rings. But a yong maid that is vnmarried, weareth many Iron Rings about her armes, ſometimes thirty or forty vpon one arme: a Whore (by them called Etigafou) oftentimes weare Copper Rings vpon her legs, with Bels hanging at them, which ſhe goes ringing through the ſtreets. They are well proportioned and membred, much ſurpaſſing our women, in ſtrength and agility of body, both when they are deliuered of their children, and otherwiſe, as I haue ſaid before. They are very wiſe and diligent in houſe keeping, good Houſe-wiues and Cookes, but not very skilfull to make cleane & ſcoure their Copper Kettles & Diſhes, to make them ſhine. They keepe no more Houſhold-ſtuffe then they haue need of, you find the women more at home in their houſes, then the men commonly are; for they vſe not to goe abroad to prate with their neighbours, they are not ouer fruitfull: for commonly it is two or three yeers before they are with child, which I thinke proceeds from their hot natures, and the aire of the Countrey, and ſecondly, becauſe their husbands haue ſo many wiues, two, three, foure, fiue, and ſixe, and ſome more, each one as he hath power and abilitie to keepe them; and with them, he lieth according to their manner, euery one her turne, and vſeth not one onely, but hath ſo much to doe with them all, that it is long before ſome of them are gotten with child.

Signe of riches

Their men are diligenter therein then we are, & the firſt thing they will tell you, is of their wifes and children, for he that among them hath many wiues and children, hee is a rich man. The women teach their daughters from their youths vpwards, to bake bread, and to grind Millia, with other Houſewiuery; whereby it commeth to paſſe, that they haue good skill in houſe-keeping, becauſe they are brought vp therein from their youths. They are alwaies rubbing their teeth with a certaine kind of wood, where with they make them ſo ſmooth that they ſhine, as is before ſaid, as white as Iuory: and in truth thoſe white teeth make a faire ſhew in their blacke faces. They

Apparell and ornaments.

weare a fadome and ſome a fadome and a halfe of linnen cloth about their bodies, which hangeth from beneath their breſts or their nauels down to their knees, then they take a piece of red, blue, or yellow cloth, whereof they make a Girdle, and put it about them, and on it they hang their Kniues, Purſes with monie, and ſome Keies, and although they haue but few Cheſts or Cubboords, yet they hang Keies at their Girdles, becauſe it makes a faire ſhew. They alſo hang diuers Wiſpes of ſtraw about their Girdles, which they tie full of Beanes, and other Venice Beades, eſteeming them to be their Fetiſſos, or Saints, ſome of them take a piece of cloth, others a Mat made of barkes of Trees, others a piece of a Carpet, and weare it about their bodies, and ſo euery one weares ſomething, and this they doe within the houſe, but when they goe to Market to buy ſomething, then they put off thoſe things, and goe and waſh themſelues in a Kettle of water from the head to the feet, and then they take another piece of Linnen to put about their bodies, and another Girdle, and another fathome or two of Linnen Cloth, and hang it about their bodie, from their breſts downe to their feet like a Gowne, and vpon it weares another thing of Sey or of ſtriped linnen, and that ſhe carries vpon her ſhoulders, and vnder her arme like a Cloake, and carries a woodden Platter in her hand which ſhe beares vp a high, and ſo goes to Market, and when ſhe comes home againe from the Market or other places where ſhe hath beene, ſhe puts off thoſe cloathes, and put on worſe, for they are more ſparing then the men, and therefore they carrie the Purſe, and when their Husbands will haue any monie, they muſt come to them for it.

Their houſe-wiferie.

Making of bread.

Raw food.

Filthy food.

The women haue the gouernment of their Houſes, and the men take care as much as lyes in them, to earne ſomething, but the women prouide the meate to ſerue for their daily food, although they eate a part, they buy no more meate euery day, then ſerueth them for that day, or they can eate at a meale. In the euening they goe to their houſes that ſtand without the Towne, and are full of Millia (which is their kind of Corne) where they take a certaine quantitie, as much as they need for their Houſe, and with a ſtaffe ſtampe it, as wee vſe to ſtampe Spice in a Grocers ſhop, and that is their manner of threſhing, then they fanne it in a woodden diſh, till it be cleane, but ſuch as haue ſlaues make them doe it. This Millia is a faire white Seed, when it is broken, as hereafter I will ſhew, ouer night they ſteepe this Millia with a little Mais in faire water, and in the morning after they haue waſht, and made themſelues readie, they take the Millia and lay it vpon a ſtone, as Painters doe when they grind their colours, then they take another ſtone about a foot long, and with their hands grind the Millia as ſmall as they can, till in a manner it be dough, and then it ſheweth like baked Buckway Cakes, they temper their dough with freſh water and Salt, and then make Rowles thereof as bigge as two fiſts, and that they lay vpon a warme harth, whereon it baketh a little, and this is the bread which they vſe. The Negroes of the Caſtle Damina, bake faire bread of Mais, which is almoſt like our wheaten bread, and that they cut in Rowles: they can alſo bake it ſo hard, that it will keepe two or three monethes ſweet and hard, for they furniſh their ſhips and Iacts with ſuch bread, when they ſend them to the Ilands of Saint Thomas, or to Angola, others that haue not the meanes to haue ſuch bread, they goe to Market to buy it, and call it Kangues, when the Fiſher-men come out of the Sea with their fiſh, then the women carrie it to the Market, where euerie one comes to buy that and fleſh, fruite, and other things. They vſe altogether raw and ſtrange kind of meates, as handfuls of Graine or Manigette, (and will drinke vp whole Romers full of Aquauite at a draught) Dogs, Cats, and filthy ſtinking Elephants, and Buffolds fleſh, wherein there is a thouſand Maggets, and many times ſtinkes like carrion, in ſuch ſort that you cannot indure the ſmel thereof; there are likewiſe little Birds as bigge as a Bul-finch, of a grey colour, with red bills, which very cunningly make their Neſts vpon the ſmalleſt ends of the branches of trees, thereby to preſerue themſelues from Snakes or other venomous beaſts. Thoſe they eate aliue, feathers and all.

A greedie Boy.

I haue beene told by ſome of the Moores, that the Countrie people dwelling within the Land, eate dried Snakes, and the Boores or Slaues, as alſo the common people which dwell vpon the Sea-ſide, although they haue better prouiſion of meate then thoſe that dwell further into the Land, yet they are of ſo hot a nature, that they eat raw Dogs guts, and neuer ſeethe nor roaſt them, which we our ſelues ſaw: And there was one of their Boyes left aboord a Netherlanders ſhip for a pawne for debt, which Boy was ſo greedie to eate raw meate, that although he had ſufficient meate with them in the ſhip, yet hee would eate the Hens meate out of their Troughes. This Boy made a ſticke, and at the end thereof hee draue a naile with the point vpwards, and went and lay by the Hens Cage, and when any of them put out their heads to eate meate, he ſtrooke them in the heads, and killed them, and then hee went and ſhewed the Sailers, that ſome of the Hens were dead, which he did to the end he might eate their raw guts, and would not ſtay ſo long vntill the guts were made cleane, but tooke them and eate them raw as they came out of the Hens bellies. They eate alſo great ſtore of old ſtinking fiſh, which is dried in the Sunne, but to ſay, that they eate ſuch kind of raw meates for neceſſitie and no other, were vntruth; for they alſo are very daintie, and can eate good meate when they haue it. There are women

Their Trees.

Palme-oile.

women that dwell in the Caſtle among the Portugals that can dreſſe meate well, they eate alſo many Hens, Goats, Oxen, and Hartes, but ſuch meate is not eaten by the common people, but thoſe that eate them are Gentlemen, or ſuch as are rich, and are able to buy them; they alſo eate Iugnamis, Bannanas, and Patates. They haue three kind of trees, as the Palme-trees, whereof ſome are Females which yeeld no wine, but beare Grapes as bigge as Plummes, of an Orange colour, at the one end being ſome-what blackiſh: thoſe Grapes they peele to the ſtones, and thereof they make Oile, which they call Palme Oile, which is verie delicate and good, which they vſe to dreſſe their meate withall, and make good ſawce thereof for their fiſh, the thickeſt of this Oile they vſe to anoint their bodies withall, to make them cleane, and the women vſe it to frizell their haire, the veines are as great as Acornes, and as hard as a ſtone, at the end thereof hauing three round holes, they beate them in pieces, and within them find certaine Nuts, like little earthen pellets, much like hazell-nuts, but when you eate them, they taſte of the wood, and are verie drie.

Drinking.

Vnciuill feeding.

Strange hunger in ſo hot a Climate.

Good fellowſhip, or prodigalitie.

They likewiſe haue many Beanes and Peaſe, whereof ſome are like Turkie Beanes of a purple colour, thoſe Beanes are good and fat, which they dreſſe with Oile of Palme, and it is a very excellent meate and nouriſheth well, but the other kind of Beanes and Peaſe, they vſe not to eate, for they haue no great quantitie of them, growing thereabouts. The Iugnamis alſo they vſe in many places in ſtead of bread. Their drinke commonly is nothing but water, but yet in ſome places they brew a little Mais in water, which beeing ſodden together, is almoſt like a kind of beere, which they alſo vſe much to drinke and call it Poitou, others buy a pot of Palme-wine, and becauſe that will not continue long, therefore foure or fiue of them goe together, and buy a pot or two: a pot of theirs is ten pots of ours, and that they pay for together, which they powre into a great Cabas, which growes vpon Trees, whereof ſome are halfe as big as a Kilderkin, and will hold at leaſt twelue Kans, and then ſit downe round about it to drinke, whereof euerie man ſendeth his louingeſt and trueſt wife a little pot full home to drinke, and the firſt draught that they drinke, they take it out of the Cabas with a ſmaller Cabas, and when the firſt man drinkes, the reſt ſtand vp, and taking his Cap or Hat off, lay their hands vpon his head, and with a loud voice cries, Tautoſi, Tautoſi; at the firſt draught, they drinke not the Cabas full out, but leaue a little in it, which they throw vpon the ground, ſaying, I. O V, as giuing their Fetiſſos that to drinke, and if they haue other Fetiſſos on their armes or feete, they ſpit drinke out of their mouthes vpon them, as if they gaue them drinke alſo; for they are of opinion, that if they doe it not, or forget to doe it, they ſhould not drinke their wine quietly together, but that their Fetiſſos would let them. Naturally they are great Drinkers, and vſe no leſſe vnſeemelineſſe in their feeding, but eate as vnmannerly and greedily, as if they were a companie of Hogs: for ſitting down vpon the ground to eate, they ſtay not till they haue eaten one morſell vp, but ſtill cramme in, and they put not their meate into their mouthes, but pull their meate in pieces, and take it vp with their three middlemoſt fingers, and gaping, caſt it ſo right into their mouthes, that they neuer faile nor caſt it beſide their mouthes, whereat we wondred much. They are alwayes hungrie, and would willingly eate all day long, which ſhewes that they haue very hot mawes, and although the Countrey is very hot, whereby the heate of the Aire commonly ſhould fill mens ſtomakes, yet they are hungrie, and wee Netherlanders are not weake ſtomaked there, but alwaies haue good appetites, whereby I am of opinion, that heate in thoſe Countries makes men hungrie: but becauſe I am no Doctor of Phyſicke, I will not intreate thereof. And becauſe they make great account of that drinking together, they are verie earneſt and induſtrious to get ſomething, and to make prouiſion of Gold, which hauing gotten, they cannot be frugall or ſparing, but preſently goe and drinke it with their companions, now one, and then another, euerie one his turne, and if one gets more then his fellowes, then hee muſt be liberaller then his fellowes, that is, when they begin to deale with the Merchants, and to goe aboord the ſhips, and he that is poore or hath not much, can hardly beare companie to drinke, becauſe they are not ſparing, when they haue gotten any thing.

Their trading.

Firſt ſimplicity

As I haue vnderſtood by the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries, before the Portugals came thither to deale with them, they had very little or no kind of Merchandize to traffique withall, or to liue by, but liue vpon that which they got from others by force, which was not much, ſpecially to get any thing to apparell themſelues; for before that time they went all naked, as I ſaid before, much leſſe had they any cattle or victuals for their maintenance, but only ſuch as the Portugals brought thither, and by that meanes the Countrie was filled and repleniſhed with diuers kinds of beaſts and Corne, whereby at this day, there is almoſt all kind of things that are neceſſarie and needfull for mans ſuſtenance, and otherwiſe to bee had in thoſe Countries. And within a while after, the Portugals began to traffique and deale with the Sauage Inhabitants, they likewiſe began to know their Merchandize.

Firſt trading.

At the firſt, in former time they came and brought their Gold vnto the Portugals, and bought of them ſuch things as they wanted, as Linnen Cloth, &c. but the people dwelling further within Land, durſt not venture to come to the Portugals to deale with them, as wondring at them, it being a fearefull thing vnto them to ſee white men apparelled, and they themſelues blacke and vnapparelled, (as the like happened vnto our men; for at the firſt they were afraid to ſee Blacke Moores) and therefore they brought their monie to thoſe that dwelt on the Sea ſide, where the Portugals traffique, and told them what wares they would haue, and they went to the Caſtle, and bought ſuch things as they deſired, as Iron, Tinne, Copper Baſons, Kniues, Cloth, Linnen, Kettles, Corals, and ſuch like wares, and the Merchants that ſent them to the Portugals, paid them for their paines, vpon euery Peſo of Gold by them diſburſed, ſo that if they beſtowed many Peſoes, they receiued a good deale of monie for their Factoridge, and by that meanes they got their liuings.

First Dutch Trade.

But after that, when we began to traffique thither, (the firſt that went from hence thither out of Holland, to deale with the Negroes, beeing called Barent Erickſon of Medenblicke) and found what profit the Portugals did there, we increaſed our Trade thither, and ſent more ſhips with the ſaid Baront, as a fit man for it, becauſe he knew the Coaſt, as hauing beene there with the Portugals. But hauing no place vpon the Land (as the Portugals had) to carrie our wares aſhoare, and to lay it in Ware-houſes to traffique with them as time ſerued, and durſt not, or elſe might not goe on Land, we were conſtrained to ſtay with our ſhippes at anchor before their Townes, attending for the Merchants, that came aboord our ſhips with their Canoes, at which time the Negroes ſeeing that wee had Merchandize aboord, imboldened themſelues to traffique with vs, and brought their Gold aboord our ſhips, and for that at this preſent they deale but little with the Portugals, but only with our Countrimen, therefore I will ſhew in what manner they deale with vs.

Wind in the morning from land & calme.

In the morning betimes, they come aboord our ſhips with their Canoes, or Scutes to traffique with vs: and the cauſe why their Merchants came ſo early aboord, is, for that in the morning the wind, which they call Boſone, blowes off from the Land, and then it is calme ſmooth water, for about noone the wind which they call Agom Brettou, begins to blow out of the Sea, and then they row to Land againe: for the people that dwell within the Land, can hardly brooke the Seas, for when they are aboord the ſhip, they can ſcarce goe or ſtand, but lie downe and ſpue like Dogges, and are verie Sea-ſicke; but their Rowers and Pilots that bring them aboord, are hardie enough, and neuer are ſicke, by reaſon of their daily vſing to the Seas. But ſome of their Merchants when they come aboord our ſhips, are ſo ſicke, that they caſt out all they haue within their bodies; and by reaſon of their beeing ſo ſicke in faire weather, they are ſo afraid of the wind (when the waues goe any thing high) that they make as much haſte home as they can, and ſome of them dare not venture vpon the Seas to goe aboord the ſhips, but deliuer their monie to the Pilots or Factors, telling them what Merchandize they deſire to buy, and thoſe Tolken come with the Gold aboord the ſhips, hauing a Purſe which hangeth about their middles, wherein they put their Gold, and euery ſeuerall mans Gold is in a piece of Cloth or Paper by it ſelfe, and they can tell which is euerie mans, and what wares hee deſireth to haue for it, and ſometimes they haue twelue or ten mens Gold to beſtow, which is called an Engliſh of Gold, and of ſome two, three, or foure, and when any of their monies is not waight, then they put it into their Purſe, and carrie it to the man againe, for if they ſhould put any thing to it, to make it full waight, the Merchant would not giue it them againe, for they weigh their Gold firſt vpon the Land, and know how much it is before they ſend it aboord the ſhip, for they credit not one the other, and when they haue beſtowed their monie, then we muſt giue them ſome-what to boot, which they call Dache.

Dache.

Vndermining and defrauding Merchants.

When we began to traffique here in the Countrie with two or three ſhips, as one of Middleburgh, one of Amſterdam, and one of Schiedam, and that all our ſhips met and lay at anchor together to ſell our wares, the one ſhip ſeeing that the other traffiqued more, and vented more wares then his fellowes, to find the meanes to get the Merchants aboord their ſhips, they willed the Pilots (with whom they muſt hold friendſhip, for they carrie the Merchants aboord) to bring them aboord their ſhips, and they would giue them ſomething for their labours, and the Pilots accordingly to get ſomething, brought them aboord that ſhip, which had made them that offer, for they are verie couetous, which the other ſhips perceiuing, willed the Pilots to bring the Merchants aboord their ſhippes, and they would likewiſe giue them ſomething: and they made them anſwere, that if they would giue them as much as the other did, they would come aboord their ſhips, which they promiſed to doe, and gaue them more Dache then the other, and by that meanes driue the Merchants, Pilots, and Tolken aboord their ſhips, which the other ſhips ſeeing, and thinking that their Merchants wares coſt them no more then the others, gaue them more Dache then the others, and by that meanes ſtriuing one with the other, they deminiſhed one and the others gaine, and in fine, their gifts grew to ſuch a rate, that at this day, their Dache amounteth vnto ſixe or ſeuen per cento.

And now it is come to paſſe, that whereas the Countrie people and Merchants were wont to pay the litridge and brokeridge to the Pilots and Tolken, to carrie them aboord the ſhips, they ſought to the Merchants and Countrie Moores to get them into their Canoes, for greedineſſe of Dache, which they got of the Factors for their labours, to bring the Merchants aboord, and thereby in ſtead of paying them for going aboard, they giue the Merchants much Dache, in regard of the great profit they get therby.

Many Merchants comming to the Sea ſide to buy wares, ſome of them a hundred or two hundred miles from within the land, bring great ſtore of gold, & haue diuers ſlaues with them, which they lade with the wares which they buy in the ſhips, wherof ſome haue twenty, others thirtie, and ſome more, as they haue meanes, and according to the trade that they vſe: which Merchants or Mooriſh countrey people, know the houſes or lodgings, where they vſe to lie, and waigh their money to their Tolke or Hoſte, and tell them what goods or wares they will haue; who comming aboard, commonly bring one of the Merchants with them, for they truſt not one the other, and leaue the reſt with their ſlaues vpon the land, which tell them what wares they deſire to haue; and if it be a Merchant that can ſpeake no Portugall ſpeech, they will preſently tell you, and will the Factor not to ſpeake Moriſh ſpeech vnto them, becauſe their Merchant is one that dwels farre within the land; thereby giuing you to vnderſtand, that they meane to deceiue him, and to beguile him of much money. The poore Merchant being ſicke, and lying in the ſhip ſpuing like a dogge, in the meane time the Brokers make the match for them, telling the Factors how much ware they deſire to haue for ſo much gold; for that the wares are commonly ſold all at one price: The Tolken makes not many words with the Factors, but ſet certaine wares before the Merchant, as little as they can to content him for his money, and the price being made with him, he weighes their gold, and takes the wares, and goes on land againe; and the Merchant being gone home, then the Pilots and Tolken come aboard the ſhips againe, to fetch that which they haue coozoned the Merchant off: ſo that oftentimes the Merchants are deceiued of a third part of their goods by ſuch practiſes: others, while he lookes about, or turnes to ſpue, ſteale a peece of the Merchants gold, and put it into their Mouthes, Eares, or Noſtrels, making the Merchant beleeue that his money is too light: the Merchant for his part, ſeeing that by meanes of their theeuery his money will not reach out; becauſe it is too light, that it may weigh more then it is, blowes in the Ballance, which the Factors oftentimes perceiuing not, and thinking that they haue their full waight, are by that meanes deceiued, and come ſhort of their reckoning; ſo that they haue a thouſand deuices to ſteale, and to beguile the Merchants. At firſt they were woont to be very ſimple in their dealing, and truſted the Netherlanders very much, whereat we wondred: for they were of opinion, that white men were Gods, and would not deceiue them, and then tooke the wares vpon their words, without reckoning it after them, whereby they were deceiued: for, that if they bought ten fathome of Linnen cloth, they found but eight, and by that meanes, loſt two fathome, and other things after the rate, which the Factors did ſo groſſely, that the Merchants in the end perceiued it, and began to looke better to themſelues, and grew ſo ſubtill in their reckoning, that if they bought one hundred fathome of Linnen, they could reckon it to a fathome, and tell whether they had their meaſure or not; ſo that now if you doe them any wrong, by meaſuring or reckoning, they will not come aboard your ſhip any more; and which is more, for any bad looke, or haſtie word that you ſhall giue them, they will neuer be friends with you againe.

Aske my fellow if I be a Thiefe.

Coozening Knaues.

Wares for theſe parts of Guinea, and for what vſe.

Troubles and warres in the Netherlands, conſtrained vs to ſeek Traffique here alſo, and to vndertake this voyage, by that meanes to put the Portugalls from it, which in the end we did, for that ſince the Netherlanders came hither to Traffiek with the Negroes, Moores, the Portugalls haue beſt trading, and are wholly decayed. Firſt, we bring them great ſtore of ſlight Linnen cloth, whereof there is very much ſpent in thoſe Countries, for they apparell themſelues therewith, and it is the chiefeſt thing they vſe for that purpoſe: beſides this, we carry them great ſtore of Baſons, as little Baſons, Barbers Baſons, Baſons to drinke in, Platters of Copper, flat Baſons, great broad Copper pans, at the leaſt two fathome about, and ſmall Poſnets without edges: The ſmall Baſons they vſe to put Oile in, wherwith they anoint themſelues, and the greater ſort of them they ſet in the graues of the dead, & vſe them to carry diuers things in. The Barbers Baſons they vſe to waſh themſelues in, & when they cut their haire, platters they vſe to lay ouer others to couer them withall, to keepe duſt and filth from falling into their things. The great broad Pans, are by them vſed to kill a Goat or a Hogge in, and to make it cleane therein, in ſtead of a Tub. The Poſſenets they vſe to dreſſe their meat in, which ſerueth them to very good purpoſe, they will not haue them with ſteales, as we vſe them here with vs, and many other ſuch like Baſons of Copper, which our ſhips bring thither in great quantities, and therewith fill the Countrie ſo full; and by meanes thereof, they are ſold as good cheape there vnto the Negros, as they are bought in Amſterdam and although there are ſo many of thoſe Baſons brought thither, and no ware that weareth ſo much, as Linnen, yet you ſee but few old Copper things there, and therefore you muſt thinke, that there is great ſtore of people inhabiting further within the land, which vſe ſo great quantitie of ſuch things.

We carrie thither great ſtore of Kettles, which they vſe to fetch water in, out of their pits and Valleyes, and ſome red Copper pots Tinned within, wherein they vſe to put water, in ſtead of a barrell of beare to drinke, earthen pots they vſe alſo to drinke out of. Iron is vſed by them to make their weapons, as Aſſagaie, cutting Kniues, Poniards, &c. The Aſſagaies & Poniards they vſe for the warres. The cutting Kniues, to Till and cut vp the ground, in ſtead of Spades, and ſome to cut wood withall, and to vſe about their Building, for they haue no other Tooles: They alſo buy great ſtore of Red, Blew, Yellow, and Greene Rupinſh cloth, which they vſe for Girdles about their middles, to hang their Kniues, Purſes, Poniards, and ſuch like things at. They vſe white Spaniſh Serges to weare vpon their bodies, in ſtead of Clokes, Rings of Copper and Braſſe, which they weare about their armes and feet for a great pride. They alſo vſe Tin things, as Rings for their armes, but not many. They vſe many Kniues which wee make with vs in Holland, and call them Docke Meſſen. They alſo vſe great ſtore of Venice Beads, of all kinds of colours, but they deſire ſome colours more then others, which they breake in foure or fiue peeces, and then grind them vpon a ſtone, as our children grind Cherrie ſtones; and then put them vpon ſtrings, made of Barke of trees, ten or twelue together, and therewith Traffique much: Thoſe ground Corals they weare about their neckes, hands and feet. They alſo vſe round Beads, and ſpecially great round Counters, which they hang and plait among their haire, and let them hang ouer their eares. Pins they vſe to make Fiſh-hookes, Horſe tailes they vſe when they daunce, & alſo when they ſit ſtill, to keep the flies from their bodies; Looking-glaſſes, and ſmall Copper milke Kans, with many ſuch like things. But the chiefeſt wares that are vttered there, and moſt vſed among them, is, Linnen, Cloth, Braſſe, and Copper things, Baſons, Kettles, Kniues, and Corals.

Their knowledge in our warres, and triall thereof.

At firſt we vſed many times to deceiue them, not onely in meaſuring of Linnen, but in deliuering them broken and patcht Baſons, and peeced Kettles for their money; rotten Cloth, through the which they might haue ſifted Beanes; Kniues that were ſo ruſtie, that they could hardly without breaking pull them out of their ſheathes, with ſuch like wares. But now by vſe and experience, they haue attained to ſuch skill in our wares, that they are almoſt able to ſurpaſſe vs therein. For, firſt, when they buy any Linnen cloth, they looke if it be not to ſlight and thin, and whether it be white and broad; for they are very curious to buy white and broad Linnen, and reſpect not the ſtrength ſo much as the breadth of the Linnen: for they vſe to hang it about their bodies, ſpecially the women, which deſire to haue it hang downe from vnderneath their breaſts, to their knees. Secondly, they take Woollen cloth, and hold it vp againſt the light, to ſee if it be thin. They draw the Kniues ont of the ſheathes, to ſee if they be not ruſtie. They looke vpon the Baſons one by one, to ſee if they haue no holes in them: or whether they be broken, and the leaſt hole that they ſpie in them, they lay them away, and deſire to haue others for them; and alſo if they be but a little foule or greaſie, they will none of them: And for quantitie and qualitie make triall of all other wares, as curiouſly as in Europe is done.

§. IIII.

What Cuſtome the Merchants pay to their Kings. Their Meaſures, Weights, Scales, Markets: Alſo their Sabbath, Fetiſſos and ſuperſtitions.

Cuſtomes.

THe Kings haue their Cuſtomes dwelling vpon the Sea Coaſt, where the ſhips lie to Traffique with the Countrey people, and they are placed there, to ſee that the Kings loſe not their Rents and Impoſts, and that it may be the better paid them, and no deceit vſed, they appoint one of their Sons or ſome one of their neereſt friends to be preſent with them. Thoſe Cuſtomers receiue the Cuſtome of the fiſh, which is taken in his precinct, or before his Hauen, and to that end he hath a meaſure to meaſure it withall, and if the meaſure be not full (of any fiſh whatſoeuer) then it payeth no Cuſtome, but if their fiſh bee more then filleth that meaſure, then he taketh the fifth fiſh thereof, or as much as he thinketh good to take for his Cuſtome, and that is preſently ſent to the King of that quarter by his ſlaues, which euery morning come thither to fetch the fiſh.

Toll.

Such Merchants as come thither a great way out of the Countrey, pay to the King of the Hauen where they goe to Traffique, the weight of ſixe pence in gold, for their paſſage through his Countrey, and whether they intend to buy much or little, the paſſage money is all one, and when they haue Traffique with the Factors in the ſhips, and come to land, the Cuſtomer taketh a part of their goods from them, which is commonly a fourth part of that which they haue bought, and carrieth it away with him, then the Merchant takes the reſt and carrieth it to his lodging, which done, he goeth backe againe to the Cuſtomer (whom they call la guarda, within Portugall is the watch) and agree with him, and pay him as little as they can, and ſo haue their goods againe, and if they haue beſtowed leſſe then two ounces of gold vpon wares, then there is no ſet Cuſtome to bee paid for it, but they giue as much as they can agree vpon for it, with the Cuſtomer, and that is the Cuſtomers owne profit, in ſtead of his wages, but whatſoeuer they buy aboue the value of two ounces of Gold, then they muſt pay an Engliſh of Gold for cuſtome thereof, thoſe two ounces of Gold they call Benda.

Fines.

Alſo if they haue ſtolne any thing from any of their Countrie people, they alſo pay monie for it, as the caſe requireth. And alſo when they haue laien with another mans Wife, then the King hath a forfeit paid vnto him for it. And when the Countrie people come to Market with their weapons, they muſt leaue their Weapons in ſome place, or elſe they muſt pay a forfeit, which is ſixe penie weight in Gold, if they come with any Armes or Weapons to their Sea-townes. And they alſo that counterfeit falſe Gold, with diuers other forfeitures, which are all paid to the King, whereof the Cuſtomer euerie three monethes maketh his account, and payeth it vnto the King.

Weights and Scales.

They make Weights of Copper of diuers ſorts, and haue little Copper Scales which are round, and hollow like an Orange peele. A Benda is their greateſt weight, which with vs is two ounces; Benda-aſſa, is halfe a Benda, which is an ounce. Aſſuwa, is two Peſos and a halfe. Eggeba, is two Peſos, or halfe an ounce. Seron, is a Peſo and a halfe. Euſanno is a Peſo or a Loot. Quienta, is three quarters of a Peſo, each Peſo is a Loot. Media taba, is a quarter of a Peſo, or a ſmall parcell. Agiraque, is halfe a Peſo, or halfe a Loot, each Peſo is a Loot; ſo that their weights are all one with ours for the names, but differ in the pound a Peſo and a halfe, which is a Loot and a halfe, ſo that their weights are ſo much lighter then ours.

Meaſures.

They meaſue their Cloth by two fathome together, which they cut one from the other, and call it Iectam, and ſell their Linnen in that ſort among themſelues, and thoſe two fathome after our meaſure is a ſtorke and three quarters, and they are verie ſubtill in meaſuring of their Linnen, and can reckon that ſo many of our ſtorkes make ſo many of their fadomes. They cut their Woollen-cloth in pieces not aboue a handfull broad, which they vſe in ſtead of Girdles about their middles, and ſell the Cloth in this ſort among themſelues in this manner, and vſe no other kind of meaſure thereunto. They are not verie ſubtill nor expert in telling, ſpecially to reckon, for when they haue paſt the number of ten, they rehearſe ſo many words one after the other for one number, that they are ſo cumbred, that they cannot tell how to get out of it, and ſo ſit buzzing ſo long, till at laſt they haue forgotten their number, and are forced to begin to tell againe, but ſince they began to deale with the Netherlanders, and were to reckon aboue the number of ten, for they vſe no more among them, they tell till they come to ten, and then take one of their fingers into their hands, and then tell to ten againe, and then take another finger into their hand, and ſo proceed till they haue both their hands full, which in all maketh an hundred, then they marke that vp, and then begin againe to tell to ten, and vſe the ſame order as before.

Telling or numbring.

Markets how they are kept. No Market on their Sabbath.

Euerie Towne hath Market daies ſpecially appointed, vpon the which you find more to bee bought then vpon other daies, and euerie Towne hath his Market vpon ſuch a day, as the others haue it not, and ſo euerie one differeth vpon their daies, and when their Market daies come, they haue two daies Market one after the other, wherein the principall Boores or Countrie people, come from diuers places to traffique with the ſhips. They haue their Sunday alſo, but on that day they doe nothing.

Wares.

In the morning betimes, aſſoone as it is day, the Countrie people come with their Sugar Canes to the Market, carrying two or three bundles together vpon their heads, which are bound vp like faggots, and being in the Market they vnbind them, and ſo lay them downe vpon the ground, which done, the Inhabitants of that place come to buy them, ſome two, others three, and ſome more as they haue need of them, whereby they haue ſoone ſold their Sugar Canes, for they vſe many of them to eate, and aſſoone as they haue ſold their Sugar Canes, then the women come to the Market with their wares, who bring Oranges, Limons, Bannanas, Backouens, Potatoes, Indianias, Millia, Mais, Rice, Manigette, Hens, Egges, Bread, and ſuch like neceſſaries, which thoſe that dwell on the Sea-ſide haue need of, and are ſold both vnto the Inhabitants, and to the Netherlanders in the ſhips, which come thither to buy it. The Inhabitants of the Sea-ſide, come alſo to the Market with their wares, which they buy of the Netherlanders, as Linnen Cloth, Kniues, ground Corals, Looking-glaſſes, Pinnes, arme Rings, and Fiſh, which their Husbands haue gotten in the Sea, whereof the women buy much, and carrie them to other Townes within the Land, to get ſome profit by them, ſo that the fiſh which is taken in the Sea, is carried at leaſt an hundred or two hundred miles vp into the Land, for a great Preſent, although many times it ſtinkes like carrion, and hath a thouſand Maggots creeping in it. Thoſe women are verie nimble about their buſineſſe, and ſo earneſt therein, that they goe at leaſt fiue or ſixe miles euery day to the places where they haue to doe, and are laden like Aſſes: for at their backes they carrie their children, and on their heads they haue a heauie burthen of fruit, or Millia, and ſo goe laden to the Market, and there ſhe buyeth fiſh, to carrie home with her, ſo that oftentimes they come as heauily laden from the Market, as they went thither. Theſe pay no cuſtome to the King, but if they find any Fetiſſos in the way as they goe (which are their Idolatrous gods) they giue them ſome of their fruit or Millia to eate, which is as much as if they gaue them the tenth part thereof.

Superſtition.

Tithes.

Thoſe women goe ſeuen or eight together, and as they paſſe along the way they are verie merrie and pleaſant, for commonly they ſing and make a noiſe; about noone the Countrie people begin to come to the Market with their Palme-wine, which they carrie in pots, ſome bringing one ſome two pots, as they are able, they come armed to the Market, hauing a hewing Knife at their Girdles, and two or three Aſſagayes in their hands, but when they enter into the Market, then they ſet their armes in a certain place appointed thereunto, and when they haue ſold and goe home againe, euery man takes his weapons and goes his way, not once changing one with the other, but euerie man takes his owne, and when the Netherlanders and the Negroes haue done traffiquing: when the Countrie people come to the Market with their wine, looke what the Pilots or Rowers (that carried the Merchants aboord the ſhips) haue gotten, or that was giuen them for Dache, by the Factors, therewith they buy Palme-wine, and drinke it vp together, they pay for their Wine either with Gold, or Linnen; but for the moſt part, they pay for it with Gold, which they weigh verie narrowly, one vnto the other, and when there are many Merchants, and that the Wine is much deſired, then it is oftentimes deerer then Spaniſh Wine is with vs.

Beſides this, the Market folke know euerie one their place, and where to ſit to ſell their wares, as thoſe with fruit ſtand in one place, they with Sugar Canes in another place, they with Wood, Water, and Bread by themſelues; and thoſe that ſell Wine in a place by themſelues, but the Palme-wine which is brought thither by Sea, from other places, that is neuer brought to the Market, for many times when it comes in the Canoes in the euening, when the people haue need thereof, aſſoone as it is brought on Land, the Negroes ſtand readie vpon the ſhoare watching for it, and going to the Merchants, euerie one takes a Pot, and carries it away, ſo that they haue preſently ſold it, & the Merchant needs not feare that his Wine will ſowre for want of vtterance, for they are ſo greedie of it, ſpecially for to drinke, that oftentimes they fight and fall together by the eares for it.

They vſe no monie nor any kind of Mint, wherewith they pay each other, but when they buy any thing they pay for it with Gold, and that by weight, and it is a verie ſmall parcell that hath not ſome kind of weight to weigh it withall, and they pay each other with foure ſquare pieces of Gold, weighing a graine or halfe a graine. The cauſe why they pay in this ſort, and haue this cuſtome, is by meanes of the Portugals, of the Caſtle of Myna, which ſhewed them this way, for before the Portugals came thither, the Negroes knew no ſuch thing, but when they bought any thing, they exchanged ware for ware, but the Portugals comming thither had no monie to pay them, when they bought fruits or other victuals to eate, an therefore they deſired to pay with Kacrawen, in ſtead of monie, & ſo it is the cuſtome about the Caſtle of Myna, that they haue great ſtore of Kacrawen, which they vſe for paymēt more then in other places. In places where the Portugals are not known, the Negros vſe not that kind of Mint, but ſel their Gold as it commeth out of the Earth, for they know not how to melt or vſe their Gold as the Negros do, that deale with the Portugals, and in ſtead of monie paid one the other in ſmall ſtones: they vſe alſo ſmall pieces of Iron of a finger length, with a halfe Moone thereon, which they vſe in ſtead of monie, and haue no other kind of monie in the Golden Coaſt of Guinea, then ſuch as I ſaid before, wherewith they pay each other.

Although they are altogether wild, rough, and vnciuill, hauing neither Scripture nor Bookes, nor any notable Lawes that might be ſet downe, or declared to ſhew the manner of their policie and liuing, yet when they haue paſt the ſix daies of the weeke in labour and paines taking, to get their liuings, the ſeuenth day they leaue working, and reckon that to bee their day of eaſe, and abſtinence from worke, or their Sunday, which they call Dio Fetiſſos, which in our ſpeech ſhould ſignifie Sunday, but they obſerue it not vpon our Sunday, nor vpon the Iewes Sabbath Day, but hold it vpon Tueſday, the ſecond working day in the weeke; what law or opinion they haue to mooue them thereunto, I know not, but they hold Tueſday for their Sunday, and that day the Fiſhermen goe not to the Sea for fiſh: The women and Countrie people that day bring no Wine to the Market, but all the Wine which that day they draw out of the trees, they deliuer it vnto the King, which in the euening hee giueth vnto his Gentlemen, and they drinke it among them. That day they doe no kind of worke, nor traffique with other but ſuch as dwell on the Sea-ſide, refraine not for all that to goe aboord the ſhippes, and to buy wares of the Netherlanders. In their Markets they haue a ſquare place foure foot euery way, ſupported with foure Pillars, and about two cubits high from the ground, flat on the top, and couered cloſe with Reedes, and hanged round about Wiſpes or Fetiſſos of ſtraw, whereon they lay Millia with Palme-oile or water, and giue their god that to eate and drinke to ſuſtaine him withall, that he ſhould not die for hunger or thirſt, thinking that he eateth and drinketh it and liues by it, but the Birds of the Aire eate the graine, and drinkes the water, and when it is eaten they anoint the Altar with Oile, and ſet more meate and drinke vpon it, thinking thereby to doe their god great ſacrifice and ſeruice.

Fetiſſos day. An Ethnicke Sabbath.

Fetiſſos meate.

They haue alſo a Prieſt, who in their ſpeech they call a Fetiſſero, hee vpon their Sabbath day ſits vpon a ſtoole, in the middle of the Market before the Altar or place whereupon they ſacrifice vnto their Fetiſſo, then all the men, women and children come and ſit round about him, and there he ſpeaketh vnto them, & they ſit ſtil to heare him: but what it is, or what it meaneth that cannot I learne, nor perceiue, neither can you get it from them, for I haue oftentimes asked them about it, but they will not tell, but are aſhamed to declare it. But I haue ſeene this Fetiſſero, haue a pot with a certaine drink, (wherein there was a Snake) ſtanding by him, and a Wiſpe, and ſome women with their little children went to him, which children hee ſtroaked with colour, or with ſome of that drinke, and ſo they went away, which I gheſſe to be a kind of Salue againſt their Fetiſſo, for they eſteeme their Fetiſſos to be both good and euill. And when their Fetiſſero hath made an Oration vnto them, then he ſtands vp and ſmeareth the Altar with his Wiſpe, and drinke out of his pot, and then the people vſing certaine words and making a great noiſe among them, clapping their hands together, cry I. ou, I. ou, and therewith their preaching is done, and ſo euerie one goes home to his houſe.

Their Mattins.

Appeaſing their Fetiſſo.

They hang many ſtraw Wiſpes vpon their heads, and thinke thereby to bee free and ſafe as long as they weare them, and that their Fetiſſos can doe them no harme. In the morning betimes when they haue waſht their bodies cleane, they ſtroake their faces with white ſtripes, made of earth like chalke, which they do in honour of their Fetiſſo, and vſe it in ſtead of praiers in a morning; when they eat any thing they preſent their Fetiſſo (the ſtraw Wiſpes which they weare about their legges) the firſt bit, and alſo the firſt draught that they drinke, giuing him to drinke, which if they doe not, they thinke they ſhall haue no good lucke that day, for they perſwade themſelues that their Fetiſſo would not otherwiſe ſuffer them to be quiet. When the Fiſhermen take but ſmall ſtore of fiſh, then they thinke that their Fetiſſo is angrie, and therefore will giue them no fiſh, then they make a great crie among them, and goe to their Fetiſſero, and giue him Gold to coniure their Fetiſſo, to ſend them ſtore of fiſh. This Coniurer preſently, goes, and makes all his Wiues (two, three or foure, or as many as he hath) put on their beſt apparell and ornaments, and with them goes howling and crying round about the Towne, ſtriking themſelues vpon their breſts, and clapping their hands flat together, and ſo making a great ſtirre and noiſe, goe to the Sea-ſide, and taking boughes from the trees, hang them about their neckes: thoſe trees they eſteeme to be their Fetiſſos Dyſianam, who they thinke ſend them fiſh. Then, the Coniurer or he that ſhould bewitch the Fetiſſos, comes with a Drumme, and plaies or ſounds before the trees, which they eſteeme to be good for that purpoſe, which done hee goes to his Wiues vpon the ſtrand, and when they haue ſpoken one vnto the other a good while, he caſteth Millia into the Sea for his meate, with other colours, thinking that thereby their god is appeaſed, and will let them take fiſh enough.

Conſultation with their Oracles.

Cap.3. Cap.1.

When the King receiueth not cuſtome enough, to maintaine himſelfe withall, then he goeth to a tree which he eſteemeth to be his Fetiſſo, and ſacrificeth vnto it, carrying it meat and drink; then the Coniurers come and coniures the tree, to tell them whether there will any Merchants come or not, which to doe they make a heape of aſhes, in forme like a Sugar-loafe, and cutting a bough from the tree ſticke that in it, then they take a Baſon of water and drinke out of it, and therewith ſprinkle the bough of the tree, which done they ſpeake each to other, and then againe they ſprinkle more vpon it, after that they take ſome of the aſhes, and be-dawbe their faces therewith, end in that manner vſe many fooliſh and vaine Ceremonies, and not long after they ſhall heare a voice which is the Deuill, that ſaith ſomething vnto them, and therewith they goe home againe, and bring word what their Fetiſſo hath ſaid. They hang many of thoſe things about their children for diſeaſes, as is ſaid before, as alſo of their drinke of iealouſie.

Funerall Rites.

When any man dieth, they alſo make a Fetiſſo, and deſire it to bring the bodie into the othe world, and not to trouble it in the way as it goeth, then the next our neereſt kinſman killeth a Hen, and dreſſeth it ready to be ſodden, which done, they goe and ſit in a corner of their houſe: and with him take all his Fetiſſos, and place them in order, as their greateſt god in the middle, and the reſt of meaner ſort by it, then he takes certaine beades, ſome made of ſhels, ſome of Beanes and great Peaſe, and others of feathers, mixed with Buttons made of barkes of trees, and hangs them vpon the Fetiſſos. After that they take the bloud of the dead Hen, and therewith ſpinkle their Fetiſſo (for a dead man muſt offer bloud vnto his god) then hee fetcheth certaine Herbs out of the fields, and hangs them about his necke like a chaine. In the meane time, while the man is in this ſort made readie. The Hen is ſodden, and being ſodden then he brings it, and putting it in a Platter, ſets it in the middle of the Fetiſſos, which done, hee beginneth to coniure, vſing many words, and caſteth water or wine of Palme vpon his Fetiſſo, then he takes two or three of the greene leaues, which he hath about his necke, and rolleth them betweene his hands, making a little bowle or bale thereof, which he takes in the two fore-fingers of both his hands, and thruſts it betweene his legges, twice or thrice one after the other, ſaying, to his Fetiſſo, Aucie, which is as much as if he ſhould ſay, All haile. After this he wringeth the ſap out of that ball, and lets it drop vpon his Fetiſſo; which done he laies the ball vpon the ground, and takes two or three leaues more of the Herbs he hath about his necke, and rolles them in his hands, and hauing made them in a Ball, thruſts them betweene his legges, ſpeaking certaine words as aforeſaid, and then lets the ſap drop vpon his Fetiſſo, and this he doth vntill ſuch time as he hath rolled and wrung all the greene Herbs in that ſort, which he had about his neck; then he takes all the balls or leaues together in his hand, and thereof maketh a ball as bigge as a mans fiſt, wherewith he wipeth his face, and that alſo is a Fetiſſo, which being done the dead bodie ſhall reſt in peace, and therewith he packeth vp all his trinkets, and laieth them aſide vntill another time, that ſome other bodie ſetteth him a worke. This kind of Superſtition they eſteeme for a great holineſſe for their bodies; for when they goe to warre they hang ſuch beades about their neckes, armes and legges, thinking that their Fetiſſo will defend them thereby, and preſerue them from killing, and thinke that they need not feare any thing. They eſteeme the Pittoir alſo for a god; for when they goe from one Towne to another, and heare it call, they are exceeding ioyfull and glad, for they ſay that it is a Fetiſſo, which ſpeaketh vnto them, ſaying, that all thoſe that then trauell in the way, ſhall haue no hurt, nor need feare any danger, for he will defend them from all men that ſeeke to moleſt them, and whereſoeuer they heare it crie, there they ſet Millia for him to eate, and pots full of water to drinke, and dare not paſſe that place without giuing it ſomething, whereby in ſome corners of ſtreets, and in the Woods you ſhall ſee a number of pots, and other meates as Millia, Mais, &c. which they ſet there to honour the Fetiſſo the Petoir, whereby it appeareth that they make great account of Birds and alſo of ſome fiſhes, as of the Tonny, which they by no meanes will take, but eſteeme it to be their Fetiſſo or Sea-god. They take many Sword-fiſhes, and cutting of the Swords they drie them, which they alſo eſteeme for a great Fetiſſo. Others put their truſt in ſome trees, and when they deſire to know any thing they goe to thoſe trees, where the Deuill oftentimes appeares in forme of a blacke Dogge, or of ſuch like things, and many times inuiſibly, and maketh anſwere vno ſuch things as they aske him. So that if you aske them any thing touching their beliefe, and they giue you no anſwere, which maketh any ſhew of truth, then they ſay that their Fetiſſo ſaid ſo, and willed them to doe it, for they eſteeme him for their god, and vſe many fooliſh toyes and vaine ſhewes when they pray to him, and ſerue him, thinking that it doth them good, and that they merit much thereby, yet it helpeth them not. But they rather find themſelues deceiued, and as they deale with the Deuill, and put their truſt in him, ſo he rewardeth them, and yet they deſire not to heare of him, but feare him much.

Amulets.

Pitoir a Fetiſſo.

Bird and fiſh gods.

Tree gods, they killed a Dutchman for cutting theſe trees againſt their will.

There are ſome hils in thoſe Countries, whereon oftentimes it thundereth and lighteneth, and thereby manie times ſome Fiſhermen, or other Moores, are caſt away or receiue ſome great hurt, which causeth them to thinke that their god is angry, and would haue ſome meate and drinke, or wanteth ſome other thing, and by that meanes they hold manie hils to be their gods, and ſet meate and drinke vpon them to pacifie them withall, and they dare not paſſe along by them, without going vp and giuing them ſomething, fearing that if they did it not, they would doe them ſome hurt, and make each other beleeue ſuch things, and whatſoeuer they beleeue, and once conceiue in their heads, it will neuer be extirped, but haue as firme an opinion of their Fetiſſos as poſſible may be. But when the Netherlanders ſaw them vſe ſuch vaine toyes, which were ſo fooliſh, and laught and ieſted at them, they were aſhamed, and durſt make no more Fetiſſos in our preſence, but were aſhamed of their owne apiſhneſſe.

Hil-gods.

We asked them of their Beliefe, and what opinion they had of diuers things; as firſt, when they died what became of their bodies and ſoules. They made vs anſwere, that the bodie is dead, but they knew not what any reſurrection at the latter day meant, as wee doe: but when they die they know that they goe into another World, but they know not whither, and that therein they differ from brute beaſts, but they cannot tell you to what place they goe, whither vnder the Earth or vp into Heauen, but when they die, they vſe to giue the dead bodie ſomething to carrie with him, whereby it is to be marked that they beleeue that there is another life after this, and that there they haue need of ſuch things as they haue here on Earth; for when they loſe any thing, or when any of their friends die, then they thinke that thoſe that are dead came and fetcht it away, and that they had need of it, but they know not what the Soule nor the Reſurrection is.

Opinions of the ſoules departed.

Secondly, asking them of their god, they made anſwere, that hee is blacke like themſelues, and that he was not good, but did them much hurt. Whereunto we ſaid, that our God is white as we are, that he is good, that he doth vs much good, that he deſcended downe vpon Earth to ſaue vs, and how he was put to death by the Iewes for our ſakes, that when wee die wee goe to dwell with him in Heauen, and that there we neither need meat nor drink, whereat they wondred, and willingly heard vs ſpeake of thoſe things, and ſaid that we were Gods children, and that he told vs all things, but yet they murmured, ſaying, why doth not your God tell and giue vs all things (as well as he doth to you) and why doth he not alſo giue vs Linnen, Cloth, Iron, Baſons, and other kinds of wares; whereunto we made anſwere, that our God ſent vs all thoſe things, and yet that he forgot not them, (although they knew him not) and ſent them Gold, Palme-wine, Millia, Mais, Hennes, Oxen, Goats, Bannanas, Iuiamas, and other fruits, to ſuſtaine them withall, but that they denied, or elſe they could not conceiue that ſuch things came from God; but to the contrarie ſaid that God gaue them no Gold, but that the Earth gaue it them, wherein they digge to find it: that hee gaue them no Millia nor Corne, but that they

Of God.

Miſerable and ridiculous blindneſſe.

ſowed it, and reapt it themſelues, and that the Earth gaue it them; that the trees which they had planted gaue them their fruits, and were firſt brought thither by the Portugals; that yong beaſts came of the old, that the Sea gaue them fiſh, which they tooke themſelues, with many other ſuch like things, which they would not acknowledge came from God, but from the Earth and the Sea, each according to their natures, but they acknowledge that Raine came from our Sauionr Chriſt, and that by meanes of our God they had much Gold, for that by meanes of the Raine they found their Gold, and their Fruits and Plants grew, and waxed ripe by meanes of the moyſture, and for that we brought them euerie thing readie made to their hands, therefore they thinke that wee find all ſuch things, and need but goe into the fields to fetch them, as they doe their Fruits.

Feare of Thunder.

And when it happened that ſome of our Hollanders being in their Houſes, when it beganne to Raine, Blow, Thunder and Lighten (whereof they are in great feare) went forth through the ſtreets, not once ſhunning the Thunder and Lightning, neither did it once hurt them, they wondred thereat, for they were afraid that if they ſhould come out of their Houſes at that time, that it would not be good for them, for that many times, (when it Thundreth and Lightneth there) it hapneth that ſome of them that are trauelling abroad, are carried away by the Deuill, and throwne dead vpon the ground, whereby they are as much afraid thereof, as any man poſſible can be. And for that they know that our God dwels aboue in Heauen, when it Thunders and Lightens they point vpwards, and call him Iuan Goemain. And once wee had a Negro aboord our ſhip, whom we kept priſoner becauſe he brought falſe Gold, and gaue it out for good, which Negro euerie morning tooke a Tub with water in it, and waſht his face therein, which done, he tooke his hands full of water, and caſt it ouer his head, ſpeaking diuers words vnto himſelfe, and after that ſpit in the water, and vſed many other Apiſh toyes, which wee ſeeing, asked him why hee did it, and hee made anſwere, that hee prayed his Fetiſſo that it might raine, that ſo his friends might find much Gold to releaſe him, that hee might goe home againe.

Circumciſion.

They circumciſe their young children, therein following the Mahometicall Law, with diuers other opinions which they hold thereof, as thinking it euill to ſpit vpon the Earth, beſides many other Superſtitions which they vſe, but affirme, that they altogether vſe thoſe toyes, and only truſt in their Fetiſſos, were an vntruth, for many of them that can ſpeake Portugall (as hauing dealt with them and alſo daily traffique with vs) beginne to leaue thoſe fooliſh toyes, and to haue ſome vnderſtanding of Gods Word, which they doe by reaſon that wee mocke and ieſt at their fooliſh Ceremonies, and for that they ſay that wee are Gods Children, therefore they beleeue much of that which we ſay vnto them, and begin to know God, but it is without any ground, for they grounded in their owne Superſtitions, becauſe they are not otherwiſe inſtructed.

Some haue ſome ſmacke of Chriſtianitie.

But the Negros which dwell among the Portugals, know much of God, and can ſpeake of his Commandements, as I haue found ſome among them, that could tell of the birth of Chriſt, of the Lords Supper, of his bitter Paſſion, and death of his Reſurrection, and diuers other ſuch like points, concerning our Chriſtian faith; ſpecially, one whom I knew well, and that was my good friend: for he could write and read Portugall, and was indifferent well learned in the Scriptures. And which is more, when we ſpake vnto him, and argued vpon ſome points againſt the Romiſh faith, or againſt the Religion which the Portugals had taught him (for he had dwelt with a Monk in the Caſtle of Mina) he would diſpute the contrary with vs, and ſhew that it was otherwiſe ſet downe in ſuch a Goſpel, and in ſuch an Epiſtle of the Apoſtles, & that it muſt ſo be vnderſtood: whereby we may perceiue, that thoſe among them that haue any vnderſtanding of the Chriſtian faith, are ſharpe witted, and will ſoone comprehend any thing: but it ſeemeth, that it hath not pleaſed God to call them to the vnderſtanding of the Chriſtian faith, and therefore we are much bound to prayſe and thanke God, that it hath pleaſed him to vouchſafe vs the knowledge of his holy Word, and to vnderſtand and know what belongeth vnto our ſaluation.

§. V.

Of their Houſes, Townes, Countrey wayes, Warres, Armes, State of their Kings, Iudgements, Lawes, Iuſtice, Thefts, Promiſes, Oathes, and other Rites.

Their houſes.

THeir Houſes are not very curiouſly made, but altogether ſlight, much like to a number of Hog-ſties, and I am of opinion, that in many Countreys, there are better Hog-ſties then their Houſes are; I cannot liken them better to any other thing, then to Souldiers Cabins in Sconces and Bulwarkes: for a man might ſay, that they haue taken a paterne by them. To build them firſt, they take foure Poſts or Trees, which they thruſt deepe into the ground, which ſtand foure ſquare; that done, they lay other Beames or Trees vpon them, and bind them faſt together; then they take a number of thin ſmall ſtickes, and incloſe their Houſes round about, and thoſe they bind very cloſe together, ſo that you can hardly thruſt your hand in betweene them: then they make Morter of a certaine kind of yellow earth, which they find in the fields, and that they beat very ſmall and thin, ſo long till it be like vnto Pot-earth; which they take in their hands, and dawbe it vpon the ſmal ſtickes round about their Houſes, from the foot to the top, where they deſire to haue it cloſe, and with their hands thruſt it in betweene the chinckes of the ſtickes, that it may hold faſt, as if it were betweene Lathes, and when they haue made their Houſes cloſe in this manner, which is almoſt halfe a foot thick in the walles; then they let it ſtand and drie, ſo hard that it is like vnto ſtone, and being well dried, then they make an other kind of Morter of Red earth, which is as thin as water, and take a wiſpe of ſtraw in their hands, and therewith waſh all their houſe round about within; which ſerueth them in ſtead of Painting, whereof they make great account, and take a great pride to paint their houſes in ſuch ſort, ſome with white, ſome with red, and others with blacke, as beſt liketh them; for the firſt thing they ſhew you when you come into the Countrey is their houſes. To couer them, they take two foure ſquare Couerings of Palme tree leaues: they tie faſt together, and ſo cloſe, that they are able to hold out the Raine, which they lay vpon their houſes for the Roofe thereof, and bind them faſt together, and when it is faire cleare Sunne-ſhine weather, then they open the Roofe of their houſe, like two wings, vnder-propping it with ſtickes, and ſo let the Sunne ſhine into their houſes, and when it raineth, they let them fall downe againe cloſe together. Before their houſe they make a foureſquare hole, like a doore, and make a doore of Reeds, which they open and ſhut, and bind it too with Withes. The floores are flat and very euen, couered with Red earth, as if they were paued, and in the middle thereof commonly they make a round hole to ſet their pot with Palme wine in, when they drinke together: in this ſort they make two or three houſes cloſe together, which are placed foure ſquare; and in the middle of them, there is a place wherein the women dreſſe their meat, in which houſes they dwell together, as the women in the one, the man in the other, for they are aſunder one from the other, and make as many as they haue need of, and thoſe houſes they incloſe round about with a pale of Reeds, or ſtraw of Mais, a mans height, or as high as the walles of their houſes, which are alſo but a mans height: ſo that if it were not for the couering of the houſe, which ſtandeth paint-houſe wiſe, a man could not goe vpright in their houſes. Their houſes ſtand altogether in a heape; but becauſe they ſeparate them one from the other by thoſe pales of Straw, by that meanes they ſhew like ſtreets, and are ſomewhat ſeparated one from the other. Their ſtreets are ſo little and narrow, that but one man alone can goe in them, and when it raineth it is very ſlipperie to goe in their Townes, becauſe the earth is ſo fattie, but when the Sunne ſhines, it drieth vp againe, and becomes as hard as a ſtone.

When you will goe into one of their houſes, you muſt goe ſo long through the ſtreets, till you find a doore open, wherein being entred, you muſt paſſe through all the Roomes, till you find the place where you would be. Their houſes are not very full of Houſe-hold ſtuffe, but commonly they haue woodden Cheſts, which they buy of the Netherlanders, wherein they locke vp their things, ſo that you ſee but little of their Houſe-hold ſtuffe abroad.

Kings Houſes.

The Kings or Gouernors houſes are commonly in the Market places, which are paled alone by themſelues, and ſeparated from all the reſt, hauing no other neighbours dwelling by him, but onely his wiues and children (for he is commonly better furniſhed thereof, then the meaner ſort of men.) His houſe is greater and higher then the reſt, and hath many roomes which paſſe one into the other, couered ouer with Reeds, each chamber by it ſelfe, wherein his men dwell, and his watch ſtayeth all the day long. In the middle of his houſe he hath a foure ſquare place all open, but couered ouer for the Sunne, where in the day time he ſitteth, with his Gentlemen that come to ſpeake with him and to paſſe the time away; at the Kings doore there are alwaies two pots ſet deepe into the ground, which are full of freſh water, and euery day are fild with new water, which I thinke are ſet there for their Fetiſſos to drinke.

Townes.

Their Townes that ſtand vpon the Sea-ſide are not very faire, but rather filthie places, and ſtinke like carrions, by reaſon of the filth which they carry and lay without, not farre from them; and many times, when the wind blowes from the Land, you may ſmell the ſtinke of them, aboue a mile and an halfe into the Sea. The Townes that lie inward to the Land, are richer of Goods and Gold, then the Sea-townes, and fuller of Houſes and Men; beſides that, they haue more Merchants dwelling in them: for, thoſe on the Sea-ſide are not ſo rich, nor of ſo great power, as being for the moſt part Interpreters, Rowers, Pilots, Seruants, Fiſher-men, and Slaues to the Inhabitants of the Townes. The King keeps his Court in the neereſt Towne, that ſtandeth within the Land whereof he is King, and placeth a Captaine in the Sea-townes which are vnder his command. The Land-townes are very great, but they haue no Gates, Walls, nor Forts, nor any ſtrength to reſiſt the force of Enemies. I haue heard ſome of the Negroes that dwell within the Land, ſay, that there are many great Townes within the Land, much and farre exceeding the Hauen or Sea-townes.

Aziem.

They vſe to reckon the Gold Coaſt to begin from Cape De tres punctas, to Rio de Volta. This Cape De tres punctas lieth vnder foure degrees and an halfe; and becauſe it hath three Points or Heads, which reach into the Sea, therefore it is called the Cape De tres punctas; but, for that the Portugals haue a Caſtle there, called Aziem, the Negroos are not ſuffered to deale with the Hollanders.

Anta.

Rio S. Georgio.

Cama.

Agitaky.

Comando.

Terra pequina.

Mina.

Eaſtward fiue miles lower there lieth a place, called Anta, and there the ſhips commonly caſt foorth their Anchors; for there the Negroes buy much Iron, and are very expert to make Ironworke. Thoſe People traffique much with Palme-wine, whereof they haue great ſtore, as of Hens, Goats; and diuers Fruits, Iugnamas, and Annanaſos; and when the time commeth that they draw their Wine out of the Trees, then the Canoes come thither with their Negroes and Merchants, at the leaſt, ten or twentie miles from within the Land to buy Wine, ſo that it is carried almoſt all the Coaſt along, and great traffique made therewith. This Wine they eſteeme very good for their men to drinke, becauſe it is not ſo ſweet as the Wine which is farther within the Countrie, which is not mixed with Water, as this Wine is. The other Wine they eſteeme to be good to be drunke by their women becauſe it is not mixed, but is exceeding ſweet, and ſoone makes the women merrie. A mile lower lieth Rio de St. Georgio, and a place, called Iabbe, and Cama, where the Portugals alſo haue a Houſe: and becauſe this Quarter is very fruitfull, there dwells three or foure Portugals there, which receiue the Cuſtome of the Fiſh, which is taken by the Negroes in the Riuer, and buy great ſtore of other victuals, which they ſend continually to the Caſtles of Aziem and Mina, to victuall them withall. Before this Riuer there is a great Sand, which ſtretcheth farre into the Sea, whereby you cannot enter into it with any ſhips, but onely with great Canoes. And a mile lower there lieth a Village, by the Negroes, called Agitaky: by the Portugals, Aldea de Torto; and by the Netherlanders, Comando: but yet it is not Comando, although we call it ſo; for Comando lieth vpon the Hill, where the Kings dwell. They of Edom, Waſſa, Comando, and other Townes, come to this Hauen to buy their Wares: there we ſell many Venetian Madrigetten, and Corals (for the common people traffque much therewith by grinding and ſelling them one vnto the other) ſmall Copper Baſons, and blue Cloth: broad Linnen is well ſold there. In this place men ſell not any Wares in great quantities, but all in ſmall parcels; & for that there are ſo many ſmall parcels ſold there, therefore it is the worſt place of all that Coaſt for giuing of Dachios: and for that their Gold, for the moſt part, is molten, and cut in ſmal pieces, therefore there is much deceit therein, for they mixe much yellow Copper among it, and many times bring Copper in ſtead of Gold; and for thoſe two Points it is the worſt place to deale in throughout all the Coaſt. They haue the greateſt number of Canoes in all the Countrie beſides; for many times they goe to Sea early in the morning, with ſeuentie or eightie Canoes, and enter as farre into the Sea as you can well diſcerne them, and about noone-time they come home againe with their Fiſh, for there they are very expert in fiſhing. It is likewiſe no leſſe prouided of Fruits, for there is no place in all the Land, where a man may haue greater ſtore, nor better cheape Fruit, then there, eſpecially a kind of Fruit, called, Bannana; and for that cauſe it is by vs called, the Fruit Market. When you ſaile ſomewhat lower, and are North North-eaſt from the high Hill of Comando, there is a place called, Terra pekina. Neere to that is the Caſtle of Mina, with a Portugall Garriſon to prohibite Trade.

Cape Croſſo.

Infantin.

Cormantin.

Biamba.

Berqu.

Sailing a long mile lower, you come to a place called, Cape Croſſo; this Cape or Point is a great place of traffique, where the French men in time paſt vſed much to lie with their ſhips, and to traffique in the Countrie, and in the yeare 1590. or 1591. there was a ſhip of Deepe ſet vpon, by them of the Caſtle of Mina, whereof moſt of the men were ſlaine, and the reſt made Slaues; and when we began firſt to traffique there, in the yeare 1592. there were ſome of our Hollanders ſlaine in a Boat at the ſame place; but now the ſhips begin to traffique there againe, becauſe of the great quantitie of Gold which is brought thither from Foetu, Abrenbon, and Mandinga, and other Townes, which lie aboue two hundred miles within the Countrie. Sailing a mile lower, you come to the chiefe place of Traffique in all the Countrie, called Mourre. A mile lower there lieth a place called, Infantin, and two miles farther there lieth a towne called Cormantin, vnder the King of Foetui. There the Hollanders fetch their hoops, to bind their water veſſels withall; for there are the beſt. Sayling foure miles lower, you come to the high hill of Mango, whereon the Negros offer ſacrifice to the Deuill, but there is no Traffique. A mile lower there is a Village called, Biamba, where they keepe good ſtore of Cowes, for it is good Paſture ground. The Inhabitants vſe great Traffique along the Coaſt, by ſelling their Cattle; and becauſe that there, there are many proper women; diuers of the Negroes come from other places of the Countrey thither to buy women, and to fetch ſlaues to ſerue their turnes withall; The Countrey people thereabouts are good husbandmen, and ſow much Millie, preſſe good ſtore of Palme wine, and bring great number of yong Cattle vp. Three miles lower, there lieth a place called, Berqu, the Village lieth vpon a hill, there the French men vſed much to Anchor with their ſhips. Thoſe people ſpeake another Language, and to that place all the people forwards ſpeake one Language. The people are very Ingenious to make all kind of things, ſpecially ly of gold, for they can make faire Chaines of gold, with other faire things, as Rings, &c. There they brew a kind of drinke called Pitouw, which is much like ſmall Beere. They haue great ſtore of Hens, and better cheape then in other places: there alſo they take the greene Birds, called Parrots. The Inhabitants in their time vſed to buy great ſtore of Iron, for they haue many Smithes, whereby they make faire Armes, but now there comes no more ſhips thither, they goe with their Canoes to Ackra, which lieth foure miles lower; which is a low land vpon the Strand, hauing a halfe tree made in forme of a Gibet, which they eſteeme to be their Fetiſſo. The Portugalls were wont to haue a Caſtle there; but for ſome miſchiefe that they had done to the Inhabitants, the Negroes tooke their Caſtle by force, ſlew all the Portugalls, and brake downe the Caſtle. There againe they vſe another Language, they are a craftie and ſubtle people, and the ſubtilleſt of all that Coaſt, both for Traffique and otherwiſe. They haue very few Canoes to fiſh or goe to Sea withall; but thoſe they haue are very great, for I haue ſeene one that was cut out of a tree, which was fiue and thirty foot long, and fiue foot broad, and three foot high, which was as bigge as a Shallop; ſo that it would haue held thirty men at the leaſt. They come not often to buy wares, but obſerue certaine dayes in the weeke to that purpoſe, and then they come with great ſtore of money, bringing the gold as it is found in the hilles. Two miles below that, there lieth a place, called Neugo. A mile lower, lieth Temin; And a mile lower then that, another place, called Chinka, where the Hollanders begin to place boats to traffique with the Negroes, which from the yeere one thouſand ſixe hundred, was firſt begun to be known vnto vs.

Their warres and Martiall Cuſtomes.

They make warre for a ſmall matter, for the Kings are ſo enuious and angry one againſt the other, and ſo proud, that they cannot endure their equalls; whereupon they challenge one the other to the Battell, and to fight together in the field. The King giues warning to the Townes vnder his command, to will the Captaines with their men to come to him, to fight againſt the enemies: their enemies likewiſe doe the like, and ſo make preparation to fight one againſt the other. The Kings of thoſe Townes haue certaine men, that are their Souldiers or ſlaues (which are as much as Souldiers) who euery day watch in the Kings houſe, and are as it were his guard. They are very proud of their offices, and in the ſtreets they goe ſtately, looking vpon themſelues, ſome times ſtriking with their armes ouer their heads, and ſometimes leaping backeward and forwards, and round about; looking fiercely, as if they would deuoure all the world. They goe to the warres with the King, and if not then, they ſtay continually with him, to guard his perſon: and when the time commeth that they muſt fight, euery one prepareth himſelfe thereunto, in the beſt manner that hee can. Firſt, they paint their faces with colours, ſome Red, others White, and others Yellow; and alſo their breſts and the whole bodies with Croſſes, Strikes, and Snakes, and many ſuch like things; They alſo take their Beads with them, wherewith they make their Fetiſſos, and hang them about them, and thinke when they haue them about them, that their Fetiſſoes will defend them, and that they ſhall not be ſlaine. They make and wreath a Ring of boughes of trees, as thicke as a mans arme, which they put about their neckes, to beare off the blowes of their Kniues, in ſtead of Gorgets; on their heads they weare Caps made of Libards or Crocodiles skins: on their bodies they weare a Cloth Girdle which they thruſt betweene their legges with a peece of Cloth of a handfull broad, to couer their priuities withall; for then they weare as few clothes on their backes as they can, that they may not be cumbred therewith when they fight, in their Girdles they ſticke a hewing Knife or a Poniard; in their left hands bearing their ſhields, which are almoſt as long and as broad as themſelues, in their right hands they hold their Aſſagaies, wherewith they fling each at other, ſome of them haue two, ſome three, foure, or more as they are able, and ſuch as are not able, to haue ſhields and Aſſagaies, they carrie Bowos and ſheaues of Arrowes, made of skins, full of ſmal Arrowes with Iron heads at the ends, wherewith they wil ſhoot moſt cruelly.

Aſſagay a kind of Dart.

The Boyes or Seruants carrie the Drums into the warres, whereon they play, others haue hornes of Elephants Teeth, wherewith they blow. When all is prepared, and euerie Morinni or Gentleman with his men are readie, they all meet at the Kings Court, and ſo goe with their Wiues, Children, and all their Houſhold together to the Warres, where the battaile ſhould bee fought, and if it be a Warre which concerneth them much, and wherewith they are much moued, and prouoked to ouercome their Enemies, then they burne their owne Houſes, and all their Townes, that their Enemies may haue no ſuch aduantage againſt them, as alſo becauſe their minds ſhould not be moued to looke and harken home-ward, but rather to giue them the better courages to ſet vpon their Enemies. But if it be a Warre of no great importance, and that will be ſoone ended, then they burne not their Houſes nor take not their wiues and children with them, but they leaue their Townes, and ſend their wiues and children to the next place, with whom they haue no enmitie, which take all their houſhold-ſtuffe with them, leauing their Houſes emptie, without any kind of thing in them, as if they had wholly abandoned their Townes, and when their Warre is ended, then their wiues and children returne againe to their owne Townes withall their ſtuffe.

The Souldiers on both ſides meeting together in the fields, doe the beſt they can to deſtroy their enemies, both by caſting at each other with their Aſſagaies, and by blowes. They can caſt ſo e xceeding ſtraite, right and ſure with their Aſſagaies, that they will not faile to hit a Stiuer or piece of monie as bigge as a Groat, the reſt ſhoot with poiſoned Arrowes. The Drummes and Hornes are heard to make a great noiſe when they fight together, and in this Warre whoſoeuer is taken Priſoner they make him a ſlaue all his life long, and ſuch as are ſlaine, their bodies are dreſt and eaten as good meate. Their Warres are not ſo cruell as they ſeeme, nor according to the noiſe and preparation by them made, and their Warre continueth not long, but is ſoone ouer-paſt and ended. They alſo burne each others Houſes and Townes, and driue the Inhabitants out of them.

Securitie.

It hapneth oftentimes, that although they haue no great controuerſie with each other, they make peace together, promiſing not to warre one againſt the other, and to aſſure and confirme their promiſes, they beleeue no words, but they ſend each other a man for a ſuretie, whom they keepe by them, and this man whom they deliuer in this ſort for a ſuretie, is one of the chiefe of their Towne, who being brought to the place where he muſt remaine by the Kings ſlaues, he himſelfe being brauely dreſt, and ſitteth vpon a ſlaues ſholder, and in that ſort is carried to the King, and to him they ſhew much honour, and yet they watch him narrowly.

They alſo buy many Peeces, and begin to learne to ſhoot in them, and haue the vnderſtanding to know that a long Peece carrieth further then a ſhort, which both the Portugals and wee alſo teach them. They are very expert in making of Armes, for they make Poniards of an ell long without hilts and foure fingers broad, with two edges, the handle being of wood, with a pummell at the end, they couer the handle ouer with a plate of Gold, or with the ſkinne of a certaine kind of fiſh which they take, which with them is eſteemed as much as Gold is with vs, they make ſheathes of Dogs or Goates ſkinnes, and aboue at the end of the ſheathe, in ſtead of a chape they put a great red ſhell, as broad as a mans hand, which is in great eſtimation with them, others that haue not the abilitie to buy ſuch ſhels, make or buy hewing Kniues in faſhion like a Gammon of Bacon, broad at the end and narrow before, which cut but on the one ſide, and in ſtead of a red ſhell, they trimme them with an Apes or a Tygres head, and thoſe they ſticke in their Girdles, on the one ſide, and weare them as they goe along in the ſtreets, and carrie their Aſſagaies in their hands, and if they haue a ſeruant or a ſlaue, they make him beare their Aſſagay and Shield before them, and they follow them with a ſtaffe in their hands. The Merchants trauell in the Countrie with their Armes, and their ſeruants or ſlaues likewiſe carrie Armes with them, who commonly haue Bowes and Arrowes, becauſe they are Weapons which are leaſt cumberſome to bee carried, for they can carrie them about their neckes.

Their Armes

Their Aſſagaies are made of diuers faſhions and of many ſorts, but for the moſt part of Iron, at leaſt two foot at both ends, and that part which they hold in their hands is of wood, both the ends are as heauie of Iron one as the other, becauſe they ſhould weigh an euen weight, and for that one ſhould not be heauier then the other, for if it ſhould they could not ſtrike nor caſt right with them. They are very curious of their Armes, for they will alwaies haue ſixe or ſeuen of thoſe Aſſagaies in their Houſes, which ſtand in the ground one by the other, with their Shields hanging by them; thoſe Shields they make of woodden hoopes, which they fold one within the other, and ſo make them foure ſquare, but ſome-what bowing like a Buckler, and they are commonly ſix foot long, and foure foot broad, in the middle they make a croſſe of wood, and bind it vpon the reſt of the hoopes, to hold them the faſter together, thereof alſo they make their handles whereon they beare their Shields: ſome of them of the better ſort couer their Shields ouer with an Oxe-hide, aud put a plate of Iron vpon it two foot long, and a foot broad. They make great account of their Shields, thinking that vnder them they haue a great ſafeguard for their bodies. They make their Bowes of very hard wood, the ſtringes are made of the barkes of trees, their Arrowes are of thinne and tuffe wood, the Feathers are made of the haire of a Dogges ſkinne, wherewith they couer almoſt halfe their Arrowes, and on the ends they put ſmall Iron heads, which heads when they goe to warre one againſt the other, they anoint with poiſon, which is the iuyce of certaine greene Herbs, but they muſt not carrie ſuch poiſoned Arrowes but in time of warre, and that vpon paine of a great forfeit, or ſome other puniſhment to be inflicted vpon them that beare ſuch Arrowes about them, their ſheafes they make of Goats ſkinnes, which they hang about their neckes, and put their Arrowes into it. Their Drums are made of hollow trees, which are couered ouer with Buckes ſkinnes, with woodden pinnes, and ſtrike vpon them with woodden ſtickes made like Spoones or Ladels. Thoſe Drums commonly lie before the Kings Captaines and Guards Houſes, and are ſometimes twentie foot long, whereon they play when the King makes a Feaſt. They alſo make ſmaller Drums of hollow trees, which they hang about their neckes, and goe about the Towne, playing on them, thoſe Drums are round aboue, and vnder very narrow like a funnell, no man may vſe them but Gentlemen. They make Hornes of Elephants Teeth, and race them finely with manie ſtickes in them, and in the middle of the Horne they make a ſmall hole which is foure ſquare, and blow at that, but no man may vſe them but only the King or the Captaine.

Choice of the King.

They chooſe their Kings by the moſt voices and conſents of the common people, for their Kingdomes are not ſucceſsiue to any of their children or Kinſmen, but when their King is dead, they chooſe another to gouerne them, and to poſſeſſe the Kingdome, and hee dwelleth in the deceaſed Kings Court, and poſſeſſeth all that he findeth therein, at his firſt entrie into the Kingdome, he muſt buy good ſtore of Cowes, and Palme-wine, and beſtow a Banket vpon his ſubiects, for they make great account of a King that is liberall, and feaſteth them, but if their King be couetous, and ſeeketh to heape vp good ſtore of Gold, they hate him, ſeeking all the meanes they can to find ſome cauſe to driue him out of his Kingdome, and to chooſe a better according to their minds. As it hapned in my time to the King of Saba, (who had beene King of Infantin) and was made King of Saba, whom they draue out of his Kingdome, and taking all his goods from him, made him goe to Infantin againe, from whence he came, and choſe another in his place that pleaſed them better. And for that cauſe, the King that will bee well beloued of his ſubiects, euerie three monethes when his Guard or Cuſtomers come to pay him that which they haue receiued at the Sea-ſide, and of the Countrie people for cuſtome, he muſt make a Banquet, and ſpend more then he receiueth at that time, and then he biddeth his Morrinnis (which is as much to ſay as a Gentleman or one of his Counſell) and buyeth many Cowes or Oxen, and alſo all the Palme-wine in the Countrie, that he can get which is giuen by him to the common people, who at that time are very merrie and ioyfull, ſinging and playing vpon their Drums. The heads of the Cowes are made cleane and fairely painted and hanged full of Fetiſſoes, which done, they are hang'd very orderly in the Kings chamber one vnder the other, in ſtead of Pictures, and for a great honour vnto the King, whereby ſuch ſtrangers as come to the Kings Court, may perceiue that he is a good King, and for that cauſe is much eſteemed and beloued of his people. Beſides this, they hold another Feaſt day euerie yeare, as being the day of their Coronation or their Fetiſſoes day, then the King inuiteth his Neighbour Kings and Captaines, with all his Gentlemen to a Banquet, and makes a great Feaſt, and that day he prayeth to his Fetiſſo, and he himſelfe ſacrificeth vnto him, which he doth but once a yeare. This Fetiſſo is the higheſt tree in the Towne, which is the Kings Fetiſſo, vpon this Feſtiuall day they vſe manie Apiſh Toyes, as Fencing, Drumming, ſinging and leaping, the women alſo are verie merrie and dance, and euerie King holdeth his Feaſt day apart, and they doe it one ſoone after the other, which they doe in their Summer time.

The Kings Feaſt.

On their Sunday at night the King makes a Feaſt, and buyes vp all the Palme-wine which is drawne out of the Trees that day, and biddeth his wiues and children to Supper, and his chiefeſt Gentlemen, at which time they are verie merrie, for hee eates but one day in a weeke with his wiues and children, and that is vpon their Sunday. Theſe women are verie ſeruiceable to the King their Husband, and euerie one of them feaſteth him to winne his loue, ſo that he wanteth no ſeruice at their hands: euerie one of his wiues hath his goods and riches apart by her ſelfe, and keepeth and feedeth her owne children, and ſhee that is in fauour with the King, wanteth nothing.

His wiues.

When the Kings wiues go abroad, they leane vpon the ſhoulders of other women that ſerue them, and are their ſlaues, and their children are alſo carried vpon the ſhoulders of other of the Kings ſlaues, hee himſelfe commeth little abroad, but ſtayeth alwayes in his Houſe, ſometime he ſitteth at his doore but not often, his Houſe is watcht both day and night by his ſlaues, which watch armed in his Court, and in his Chamber, and when he goeth out they attend on him and goe round about him. In the morning betimes and late in the euening, his ſlaues blow thoſe Hornes of Elephants Teeth, which make a prettie ſound, for they haue the ſlight to draw their breath in and out as they liſt, and can anſwere one the other when they blow, when the King comes out of his Chamber, his wiues ſtand readie to attend on him, to waſh his bodie all ouer, and then to anoint it with Palme-oile, after that hee eateth ſome-what, and ſo ſets himſelfe downe vpon a ſtoole, and in his hand hee holdeth a Horſe or an Elephants tayle to keepe the Flies from his naked bodie, he is brauely dreſt after this manner; his Beard is knotted with golden Corals, and other coſtly things, on his armes and legges hee hath Rings of Gold and other faire Beades of Corall, and the like alſo about his necke, and ſo hee ſitteth all the day talking with one or other, for he wanteth no company to paſſe the time away, they haue one attending on them, whom they call Viador (which word they haue learned of the Portugals), hee is the Kings Treaſurer, and keepeth his Gold and other Riches, receiueth and payeth all, and doth all other buſineſſes for the King. This man is next vnto the King, and he commonly hath more golden Rings about his necke, armes and feet, then the King himſelfe. When the Kings children are of ſome yeares, if they will haue any thing they muſt looke to get it, for the King may giue them nothing to liue idly vpon, for the common people would murmurre at it, if the King ſhould giue ſomewhat vnto them, he might doe wrong to his Gentlemen, but hee giueth them their Patrimoniall goods when they marrie as their cuſtome is; and beſides, that he giueth them euery one a ſlaue to ſerue their turnes with all, and they haue nothing elſe of their Fathers, whereby it falleth out, that when they waxe old, and ſeeke not to doe any thing, they are no more reſpected then another man is. The King keepes them with him to ſerue him, and when he maketh peace with any other Towne or King, then he imploreth his children, and ſends his ſonnes ſonnes for hoſtages, that they may begin to be honored, and thereby attaine to great eſtate: the reuenues of the Fruits, Fiſh, Wine, and Palme-oile, which the King hath, are ſufficient to maintaine the King, and his Wiues, and Children. His Millie, whereof he maketh Bread, is ſowed and reaped for him, at other mens charges; whereby he hath a good life (but yet miſerable in reſpect of ours.) When the King dies he is honourably buried after their manner, and then preſently they chooſe another, one that is not of the laſt Kings kindred; but they chooſe a ſtrange man, whom they thinke good; and by no meanes they will chooſe any that in any point held with, or fauoured the laſt King. Hauing made him King, they bring him to the Palace, and he taketh the gouernment vpon him, and hath all the treaſure and goods of the dead King, which he got during the time of his Raigne; and that he holdeth, ſo that the dead Kings Children enioy not a penie: but that which he had when he was choſen King, that they take and part among them, as their cuſtome is.

Lawyers.

Combats.

They vſe no Counſellors nor Attorneyes, but euery man muſt tell his owne tale to the Iudge, who ſends for the accuſed partie; after whoſe anſwere, the Plaintiffe ſpeaketh againe: and in this ſort they are each of them heard to ſpeake foure or fiue times, and when the one ſpeaketh the other muſt hold his peace till he hath done, for they muſt not interrupt one the other when they ſpeake, vpon paine of corporall puniſhment, ſo that although they bee wild men, and without any ciuilitie or good behauiour; yet therein they vſe a very good and laudible cuſtome. When the Iudge hath heard them ſay what they can, according to his owne mind, hee giueth Iudgement, which they muſt ſtand vnto without appeale. If it bee any thing concerning the King, whereby he is to haue any forefeiture or otherwiſe, the Iudge receiueth it, and demandeth it of him that is to pay it, in the Kings name, which he muſt pay preſently without delay, and if he be not able to doe it, he muſt preſently depart from thence to another Towne, or ſome other Kings Iuriſdiction, and there ſtay till he hath contented his King, & payed his Fine. If it be a controuerſie which is to be determined among them, and they cannot agree thereon, then they will ſeeke to kill each other, or challenge their aduerſe parties to fight with them, appointing a day and place when they will meet with their Armes to end or determine their controuerſie. In the meane time they make their cauſe knowne to ſome of their friends, and deſire their helpe, (for each of them may haue three or foure men to helpe them) and commonly they are of their neereſt friends and kindred; and when their appointed day is come, each of them goeth with his companions to the ſame place, and when they meet together with their Shields and Aſſagaies to defend themſelues withall, they place themſelues orderly in the field one right ouer againſt the other, the Plaintiffe and the Defendant ſtanding in the middle, and ſo begin to caſt and ſhoot at each other with their Aſſagaies, and ſhoot in that ſort ſo long vntill that ſome of them on both ſides are hurt, and fall to the ground. Then they ceaſe their Fight, and ſo their quarrell endeth. But his ſide on whom the dead man is found to be ſlaine, or that hath loſt the victorie, come to the other partie and deſire to haue the man out of their companie, that was the cauſe of that Combat, in ſtead of the dead man that is ſlaine. And if he runneth away, and getteth to another Towne, they will follow him, and will neuer leaue before they haue gotten him into their hands, and none of their Kings may giue ſuch a man freedome, nor keepe him ſecretly in his Towne, but if he can find him in his Towne, he muſt deliuer him to thoſe that ſeeke after him, and if he doth it not, then they make complaint to their King, and ſo, many times one King makes warre vpon another for that cauſe; when they haue found him, he is deliuered to the wife the dead man, and ſhee keepeth him for her Slaue, or elſe ſhee ſells him to another: but if hee hath any meanes to pacifie the woman, or the friends of that man, and to redeeme himſelfe out of bondage, he may doe it, and goe freely abroad. They are very great controuerſies that are ended in this manner, for they are no common men that end their quarrels in ſuch ſort.

Their Lawes and execution of Iuſtice.

The Plaintiffe certifies the Captaine, who cauſeth a Drum to be ſounded by one of his Slaues, and he goeth round about the Towne with the Drum about his necke, and with him there goeth two boyes more, each with a Cow-bell in their hands, without Clappers, and they ſtrike vpon them with ſtickes made of wood, and when they haue gone in this ſort round about the Towne (which is a ſigne vnto the people that Iuſtice is to be executed) then the Captaine with his Gentlemen comes and ſit round together in the Market-place, each man with his Armes, wherewith all the people aſſemble together, knowing not what the matter is, and goe to the Market-place, where their common aſſemblies are made, the women ſtanding in one place, the men in another, to heare what the Captaine will ſay; and he that is accuſed is preſently taken, and kept priſoner in the Captaines houſe, and if it be a weightie matter, he is bound; if otherwiſe, he is onely kept by the Executioner, and he muſt not depart from thence before his cauſe be tried, in the meane time, the Captaine with his Gentlemen ſit ſtill in the Market-place, to heare the complaints made againſt the Priſoner, and ſend him word by his Slaues what accuſations are laid againſt him, whereunto he muſt preſently, without delay, make anſwere; otherwiſe, if he cannot excuſe himſelfe, he muſt pay the penaltie which he hath incurred; and if he cannot pay it, he muſt in the Kings behalfe be ſold as a Slaue, towards the payment of his Fine, and euer after, while he liueth, he muſt be a Slaue: but if he hath done any offence that deſerueth death, he may redeeme his life with money, if hee can agree with the King, and content him; which money is diuided among the Morinni, which haue the one halfe, and the King the other halfe, without giuing any to the friends of the dead man. And if it be one that hath incurred the danger of paying a Fine for lying with another mans wife, being accuſed to haue won her thereunto by falſe promiſes or by force, and hath not kept his promiſe with her; then the King firſt taketh all his goods from him, as forfeit vnto him; and the woman muſt pay two or three ounces of gold for a Fine vnto her husband, or as he fauoreth her, and ſhe can agree with him; otherwiſe he may put her away, and take another wife, and the womans friends goe and burne, or pull downe the mans houſe that hath done the fact, and doe him all the miſchiefe they can, to make him to leaue the Towne, that they may heare no more of him. In my time, while I lay there, it hapned that a man came from one Towne to another, to gather vp his debts, which man a yeere before had layne with another mans wife, and the ſame woman was then by chance come to the ſame Market, and ſeeing him, went ſtraight and complained to the Æne, (which is the Captaine) who preſently cauſed him to be taken; and their Counſell being aſſembled, there before them the woman complained that he had forced her, and had not paid her according to his promiſe: he made anſwere, that he did it with her good-will, and although neither of them both were of that Towne, yet their cauſe was heard, and as good Iuſtice vſed towards them, as if they had beene Inhabitants of that place, and after long diſputation by them made, the Fetiſſero (which is the Prieſt that coniureth their Fetiſſos or gods) came thither with a certaine Drinke in a pot, and ſet it downe before the Captaine, the woman tooke the pot and drunke thereof, to iuſtifie that he had not contented her for the loſſe of her honour; and if hee would haue drunke thereof before the woman drunke, to iuſtifie that he had paid her, and owed her nothing, then he had beene quit from paying any thing; but knowing himſelfe to be guiltie, he durſt not drinke, but was found guiltie, and was iudged to pay a Fine of three Bendaes, which is ſixe ounces of gold.

Enchionkenou.

This Drinke among them is as much as an Oath, and is called Enchionkenou; which they make of the ſame greene herbs whereof they make their Fetiſſos; and as they ſay, it hath ſuch a force, that if a man drinketh it falſely, their Fetiſſo cauſeth him preſently to die; but if they drinke it innocently, then their Fetiſſo ſuffereth them to liue. By reaſon of the great hatred and enuie which they beare one vnto the other, they accuſe each other, although it bee for a thing that hath beene done ten yeeres before, ſo that there is no quarrell but it is called in queſtion. And if a man hath married or bought the ſiſter of that man that is to pay a Fine vnto the King, and is not able to doe it, then his ſiſters husband muſt ioyne with him to doe it, and helpe him to pay his Fine, ſo they dwell both vnder one Iuriſdiction, and for that they muſt agree together; for before all things the King muſt be paid his Fines, by one meanes or other, or elſe they muſt goe out of his Countrey, and dwell in another place; and ſo if he be not able to pay his Fine, then he taketh all his Wiues and Children, and goeth to another Towne, and which is more, all the friends they haue dwelling in that Towne muſt alſo goe with him, and dwell all in that place, vntill they haue agreed with, and paid the King his Fine: and when they come againe, then they goe to all their acquaintance and aske them forgiueneſſe, and ſeeke and make peace and friendſhip with them, as they had before; the man going to his friends, and the woman to hers. The cauſe why their friends alſo depart and leaue the Towne, is, becauſe they ſhould not bee moleſted nor troubled by the King for the ſame. The Fine which they pay for Theft, is ſixe ounces of gold, or three Bendaes of their weight; for in that Countrie they are not put to death for it. But if they ſteale any thing from the Netherlanders, they pay no Fine, but onely when they ſteale one from another. If any man hath falſified Gold, and carried it to the Netherlanders, and that they complaine thereof vnto the King; he muſt pay a Fine for it, as the caſe requireth. If much Gold bee falſified, many times they are ſold for Slaues. And all theſe Fines are the Kings, to maintaine his expences. If it be a caſe wherein any man hath deſerued death, and that he cannot pay the King but with his life, then he is iudged to die, and without any more delay, the Executioner, or hee that is appointed to doe it, taketh him, and bindeth his hands behind him, and then couering his eies, leadeth him into a Field, or a Wood, or where he thinketh beſt, (hauing no place purpoſely appointed to doe it in) and being there, maketh him kneele downe, and ſtoope with his head, and taking an Aſſagaie, ſteppeth backe, and ſtrikes him into the bodie, wherewith he falleth downe, then he takes his cutting Knife, and cuts off his head, and then hee is dead; for they beleeue not that a man is dead before his head is cut off, and therefore when they put any man to death, they cut off his head; which done, hee cuts his bodie in foure quarters, and caſts them into the field, to bee deuoured by Beaſts and Birds. But their friends come and fetch the head, and keepe it for a great Preſent, ſeething it in a Kettle, and then eate the broth thereof; which done, they take the bare Scull, and hang it by their Fetiſſo. The women at that time make a great noiſe with crying and howling, and take the quarters, and carrie them into the fields: when the execution is done, there are no Officers by, but onely the Executioner and the Partie that is to be executed; but when it is done, then they come about him, and lament the dead man, as aforeſaid.

Lacedemonian Theeues.

For ſtealing, I am of opinion, that of all the Nations in the World, they haue not their Maſters. They eſteeme it a ſhame to ſteale one from another, but when they haue ſtolne any thing from the Netherlanders, they eſteeme it to be a credit vnto them and bragge thereof, for they eſteeme vs to be craftie and ſubtill men, and when they haue ſtolne any thing from vs, they thinke themſelues to be the ſubtiller and craftier, and ſeeke to bee honoured for doing ſo braue an action.

Lacedemonians.

Lead, that is nayled without vpon the ſhips, to keepe them from being eaten by Wormes, ruſtie Nayles, Greaſe, Weights (which they hide in their Haire, Mouthes, or Eares) any other ſmall matters are exerciſe of their Theft; yea, although they be neuer ſo great Merchants, and beſtow two or three pound of Gold with you for Merchandize, and haue no need to ſteale, but if any thing bee taken from them, they make ſo many words and ſuch a noyſe, as if it were a matter worthy of death.

They ſay that they may ſteale, and we not: I askt them the cauſe why; they made anſwere, that we are rich and had great ſtore of wares, and brought ſhips full vnto them, and tooke great paines and labour to ſell it, and were ſo long before we ſold it, that they thought it fit to helpe vs therein, that we might the ſooner be rid thereof, that we might fetch others, and that wee were clothed, and they went naked, and had nothing vpon their bodies, and that therefore it was freer for them then for vs to ſteale. When they haue taken any thing and that you miſſe it, you muſt preſently ſearch them all, for they ſteale very cunningly, and giue it one vnto the other, and when they come together they part it among them; when you haue found it, and know who ſtole it, then you muſt beat him well, be he neuer ſo great a Merchant, and the reſt of the Negroes will laugh at him and mocke him, becauſe hee did his buſineſſe no better: but when they perceiue that their Theft is diſcouered, then they leape ouer-boord and get away, fearing to be beaten, and if you let them goe and beate them not at that time when you take them, then they feare a greater matter and expect more blowes, and that you will intrap them, and therefore they will commonly euer after ſhunne that ſhip and goe aboord another: but if you beate them for their labours when they doe it, they will not hate you for it, nor ſhunne the Ship, but will come the next day againe to deale and traffique with you.

Promiſes.

In their Promiſes or Oathes which they make vnto vs, they are vnconſtant and full of vntruth, but ſuch promiſes as they make among themſelues, they keepe and obſerue them well, and will not breake them: when they make any Oathes or Promiſes, ſpecially, when they will ſhew it to our Netherlanders. Firſt, they wipe their faces vpon the ſole of your foot, and then doe the like vpon their ſhoulders and breſts, and vpon all their bodies, ſpeaking thrice each to other, ſaying, Iau, Iau, Iau, euerie time clapping hands together, and ſtamping with their feet vpon the ground, which done, they kiſſe their Fetiſſo, which they haue vpon their legges and armes: ſome for the more aſſurance of their Promiſes and Oathes, will drinke certaine drinke, as I haue ſaid before: but he that ſhould repoſe much truſt therein, ſhould ſooneſt find himſelfe deceiued, becauſe they are not to be credited further then you ſee them.

Oathes.

§. VI.

Of their Summer and Winter; And of their manner of Tilling and Sowing the Land; Their Corne, Rents, Raines; Beaſts and Hunting: Fowles, Trees, and Fruits.

Barren Summer and fertile Winter.

Although it is alwayes warme in thoſe Countries, yet they haue a difference in the time of the yeare, and ſo they account ſome monethes for their Summer, and ſome for their Winter. The difference which they haue therein is the weather; for both in Summer and Winter the trees are greene, and ſome of them haue leaues twice a yeare. In Summer their fields are bare, and in Winter they are full of Corne, and are very greene, ſo that they haue their Harueſt in Winter. The Dayes and Nights are of one length, or elſe there is little difference: for the Sunne riſeth and goeth downe there, commonly at ſixe of the clocke, but it is riſen at leaſt halfe an houre aboue the Horizon, before it ſheweth it ſelfe, ſo that you ſhall ſeldome ſee it cleerely riſe and goe downe. The Fruits are there as plentifull and abundant in Winter, as in Summer. When the weather is warmeſt, and that the Sunne is aboue their heads. They eſteeme that time to be their Winter, which beginnes in the monethes of April, May, and Iune; becauſe as then it raineth and is very foule weather there with Thunder and Lightning, (which the Portugals call, Trauados, and they Agombretou) which foule weather and raine followeth the Sunne, and riſeth vp with his highth, at that time they are moſt cumbred with raine: but in their Summer they are not ſo much troubled with it, but then the Earth dryeth and is hard and vnfruitfull, and therefore they ſhunne that time to ſow their Millie and Mais in, but when that time is gone, to beginne their Husbandrie, they goe into the Woods or Fields, and there ſeeke out a good place, which they thinke fit for their purpoſe to ſow their Corne in, to ſerue to maintaine their Wiues and Children.

Myſts.

Their Husbandrie.

No man hath any Land to himſelfe which he can or may keepe to his owne vſe, for the King hath all the Woods, Fields, and Land in his hands; ſo that they may neither ſow nor plant therein but by his conſent and licence, which, when they haue obtained, and haue a place permitted them to ſow their Corne in, then they goe with their ſlaues and burne the Woods, trees, roots and ſhrubs with all the rubbiſh downe to the ground: then they goe with their long chopping-kniues which they call, Coddon, and ſcrape and raze vp the ground with Colen (and all that ſerueth them to fatten their grouud) about a foot deepe, and let it lye eight or ten dayes, and when all of them haue tilled their ground, euery man makes readie his ſeed to ſow it withall, vpon their Sunday, and then they go to their Kings or Gouernors Houſe, of that quarter: for, firſt, they helpe to till his ground, and to ſow his Corne, and go all together to his field, and take all the rubbiſh out of the Earth and caſt it into the middle of the field, and then once againe rake the Earth and ſow their Corne in the field. They begin vpon a Sunday, and firſt ſerue their Gouernour or King, and when they haue done his worke, the Captaine ſendeth into the field a great number of Pots with Palme-wine, and a ſod Goat, with good ſtore of other meat, according to the number of Workmen, and there they ſit downe together and make good cheare, and at that time they burne the roots, and ſit and ſing and make a great noiſe about them, all in the honour of their Fetiſſo, to the end that he ſhould let their Corne grow well and proſperouſly vp. When their Captaines or Kings Land is tilled and ſowed, the next day they goe to another mans ground, and doe with it as they did with the Kings ground, and there alſo make good cheere as they did before, and are merrie together, and ſo forth with the reſt whome they helpe. The Corne ſoone groweth vp, and lyeth not long in the ground: when it is as high as a mans head, and beginnes to ſprout, then they make a woodden Houſe in the middle of the field, couered ouer with Reeds, and therein put their Children to watch the Corne, and to driue away the Birds, wherewith they are much cumbred. They weed not their Corne, but let it grow vp weeds and all.

Millet.

The Millie hath long eares, and is a ſeed of colour like Hempe-ſeed, and long like Canarie-ſeed, it hath no ſhels, but groweth in a little huske, and is very white within. This kind of graine they alwayes had, and ſerue their turnes therewith before the Portugals came thither. It groweth and is ripe in three months, and when it is cut down, it lyeth a month after in the fields to dry, and then the eares are cut off and bound in ſheaſes, and ſo carryed home to their Houſes. They vſe the ſtraw to couer their Houſes withall. This Millie is a verie excellent graine, hath a good taſte and is wholſome to eate, it is ſweet in your mouth, but gnaſheth in your teeth, which commeth of the ſtone wherewith they grind it. When they haue vſed the Land, and their Harueſt done, then they ſell part of their Corne to other men, which are not able to ſow it, and by that meanes get a good quantitie of Gold; they giue ſome to their King for the rent of his Land, and carrie it home to his Houſe, euery one as much as he thinketh good. For there is no certaine ſumme appointed for them to pay, but euery one giueth according to his abilitie, and the quantitie of ground that he hath vſed, and bringeth it vnto the King, ſo that hee hath at leaſt fiue or ſixe Bendas of Gold of them at one time, which they carrie altogether to their King, who welcommeth them, and thanketh them for their Dache or Gift, and for their labours giueth them their bellies full of meate and drinke, and that they pay to the King for the farme of his Land, and no more.

Their Mais.

The Corne by the Indians called Mais, by the Portugals or Spaniards, Indian-wheat, and by the Italians, Turkiſh-corne, is a Graine almoſt knowne throughout all the World, and was brought out of Weſt India into Saint Thomas Iland, and they of Saint Thomas (after they had built their Caſtle) brought it thither for to ſerue their neceſſitie withall, and ſowed it there, for before the Portugals came into thoſe Countries, the Indians knew it not, but they ſowed it firſt in that Countrey, and diſperſed it abroad among the wild Indians, ſo that now the Countrey is full thereof, and at this preſent there is great abundance in Guinea. They vſe to mixe it with their Millie, and ſometimes take halfe Millie and halfe Mais. The Negroes that dwell among the Portugals, grind it alone without any Millie, and make excellent bread thereof, wherewith they ſuſtaine themſelues, and ſell it to the Portugals: they know how to bake it in ſuch ſort, that it will endure good three or foure monethes. The Children alſo eate it in ſtead of bread, which they ſet awhile vpon the fire, and then cruſh the Corne out of the huskes, ſuch as eate much thereof and are not vſed vnto it, vſe to bee Scuruie and Itchie, or elſe to bee troubled with great bloud Veines, for it increaſeth bloud: it is no leſſe nouriſhing then Corne in the Netherlands, and in a manner taſteth like our Corne.

The people of the Weſt Indies can make Wine of Mais, which they call, Chicka, wherewith they will make themſelues drunke, as if it were of Wine made of Grapes, and for that they know, that Corne ſodden or ſteept in water maketh a kind of drinke, wherewith a man may make himſelfe drunke. Therefore they lay this kind of Graine to ſoake in the water till it is ſoft, and then they brew thereof, as ſome of the Negroes in Guinea, which deale with the Portugals, alſo doe, and call it Poitou.

This Mais will grow in a moyſt fatty and hot ground, and beares twice a yeere: it is not ſowed like other Corne, but it is thruſt into the ground, as we vſe to doe Beanes in our Countrey: it lieth not long in the ground, but ſoone ſpringeth vp, and groweth higher then a mans length aboue the ground, like to great Reeds that grow in the water, or in drowned land, wherewith husbandmen vſe to couer their ſhades: euery Reed hath his eares whereon the Corne groweth, and notwithſtanding, that they are heauy eares, as big as yong Cucumbers, and ſharpe aboue like the top of a Steeple, yet euery Reed hath ſeuen or eight eares vpon it. I haue told fiue hundred and fiftie Graines vpon one Reed, which came of one Graine alone. They are of diuers colours, as White, Blacke, Yellow, Purple, &c. and ſometimes you ſhall haue three or foure colours thereof in one eare. There are two ſorts thereof, great and ſmall, the great Graine is ſtronger then the ſmall. They vſe the Reed to couer their houſes.

Raine hurtfull.

Tempeſts.

They ſhun the Raine, and eſteeme it to be very ill and vnwholeſome to fall vpon their naked bodies, which they doe not without great reaſon, for wee find our ſelues to bee much troubled therewith, when we trauell, ſpecially when it raineth much, and maketh great Trauados, as it doth once a yeere. In thoſe Countries, which is in Aprill, May, and Iune; at which time there are ſuch Tempeſts of Thunder, Lightning, wind, and Raine, that it is incredible, ſpecially the Raine vnder the Equinoctiall Line, is ſo vnwholeſome and rotten, that if a man hath beene in the Raine, and is thorow wet, and ſo lieth downe to ſleepe in his Cabin, in his wet clothes, without putting them off, he is in danger to get ſome ſickneſſe; for it breedeth Feuers: and againe, if you drie not your wet clothes preſently in the Sun, but forgetting them, chance to let them lie, they will rot with the force of the water, in ſuch ſort, that you may plucke them in peeces with your fingers. And they find no leſſe vnwholeſomeneſſe therein; for when it begins to Raine, they get them out of the way, and if any drops of water fall vpon their naked bodies, they ſhiuer and ſhake, as if they had a Feuer, and caſt their armes ouer their ſhoulders to keepe the Raine from them: which they doe not, becauſe the water is cold, for often times it is as warme as if it were ſodden: but becauſe of the vnwholeſomeneſſe for their bodies, which they find thereby. And when they haue troden in the day time in the water with their feet, at night they make a fire, and lie with their ſoles of their feet againſt it, which they doe, to draw the moyſture of the water, which is gotten into their bodies, out againe at their feet: then they anoint their bodies with Palme Oyle, which they vſe alſo for a beautifying to make their bodies ſhine, and that they doe to ſhunne the Raine water within thoſe Countreys (as many men write) is very vnwholeſome, and thereof many and dangerous diſeaſes are ingendred.

Palme Oyle.

I haue omitted the fiſh and fiſhing: their beaſts, &c.

They haue Elephants, Leopards, Tigers, Cats of the Mountaine, Monkies, Foxes, Harts and Hinds; it is ſaid, that in this Countrie there are white Elephants: but I could neuer vnderſtand it from the Negros themſelues.

Great Snakes.

There are the greateſt and moſt venimous Snakes that euer was ſeene, there was one in my time taken there (as the Negroes told me) which was thirty foot long, and as much as ſixe men could carrie; There is alſo a beaſt like a Crocodile, but it neuer goeth into the water, as the Crocodile doth; which is called Languad.

Spiders.

There are Spiders as big as the palme of a mans hand, and great ſtore of them. Camelions and Agtiſſen a great number, but they eſteeme not them to be venimous, for they drie many of them & eat them. There are many Dogs & Cats, ſuch as we haue, but their Dogs haue ſharper ſnowts then ours, and their chaps full of wooll, they cannot barke nor make a noiſe, they are very faire beaſts for colour, as blacke, red, white, and yellow Spaniels, &c. They are alſo a little ſmaller footed then ours, ſo that they are not much vnlike the Dogs in our Countrey, but they are vnlike to ours in one thing, for when you ſtrike them, they run away, and make no noiſe, nor once offer to bite you; but when you run away from them, and are afraid of them, they will leape at you, and bite you by the legges: thoſe Dogs they vſe for their neceſſitie, and eate them, and in many places of the Countrey they are brought and driuen to the Market like ſheepe or hogges, being tied one to the other with ſtrings, they are called Ekia, or Cabra de matto, which is a wild ſheepe, it is the firſt gift which a man of that Countrie giueth when he buyeth his Gentilitie, they make much of our Dogs in theſe Countries, for when they barke, they thinke they ſpeake; and for that cauſe eſteeme greatly of them.

Dogges.

Cats.

Cats alſo are there much eſteemed, becauſe they take Mice, wherewith the Inhabitans of the Townes are much troubled, they are called Ambaio, they haue very faire skins, and are very good Mouſers, they vſe alſo to eate them, they were firſt carried hither out of Europe.

Elephants.

If they know where any Elephants are, they vſe all the meanes they can to take them, for they eate them alſo, although they ſhould ſtinke like a Carrion, and that a thouſand Maggots crept out of them. Where they know that they vſe often times to come, they make great pits, which they couer ouer with ſtraw and foule leaues of trees, which the Elephant knowing nothing of, goeth that way as he was wont to doe, and falles into the pit, and cannot get out againe.

Leopards.

The Negroes hearing that hee is fallen into the pit, run thither with their weapons and ſmite him into the body with Aſſagaies, and ſo kill him; which done, they leape into the pit, and cut him in quarters, and euery one may go and fetch his part thereof when he will; of the hide they make ſtooles to ſit on: the taile is giuen to the King to beat the Flies from his naked body, and are much eſteemed off there; with no leſſe ſubtiltie they take the Leopards, for they doe them more hurt then other beaſts: and becauſe it is a cruell beaſt to ſpoyle and deſtroy men, keeping in the way where men ſhould paſſe along. In euery foure cornered way, or at the end of the ſtreet, they make houſes with woodden pales, which are like to Rat traps, wherein they put Hens, Sheepe, and other things which he deſireth to eate, where the Leopard comming to eate his prey, is taken with the fall of the trap, and kild with an Aſſagaie; they eſteeme much of the skin, whereof they vſe to cut Girdles, and to make Caps. There are no Horſes in that Countrey, and when there were ſome brought vnto them for a great Preſent; they kild them, and eate them: becauſe their fleſh ſeemed ſweet vnto them.

Oxen.

The Oxen and Cowes that are found in that Countrey are not very great; but of bigneſſe like great Calues: their hornes ſtand backeward on their heads, they are not milkt, for they giue none; they can hardly bring vp their yong Calues, by reaſon of the ſmall moyſture that the Cowes giue their Calues, by meanes of the drie Countrey wherein they are, and by reaſon of the heat of the land.

Hennes.

Doues.

The Hens and Goats, (which with them are ſheepe) that they haue there, were brought them thither by the Portugalls of S. Thomas, the Hens proſper and encreaſe well there, and are ſo fat with the Millie that groweth there, as if they were Capons; but they are commonly ſmaller then ours, the Egges which they lay are no greater then Pidgeons Egges. The Doues which they haue there, were alſo brought them thither by the Portugals, and are called Abranama, which is as much to ſay, as Birds brought thither vnto them by white men. They are very like to our Pidgeons, but their heads are leſſe, like Sea-mewes, there is no great ſtore off, them in the Countrey.

Hogges.

The Hogs alſo were brought them by the Portugals, and are called Ebbio; they are very little, but very ſweet and pleaſant to eate, but not ſo good as the Hogs in Moſambique, where the Hogs fleſh is as daintie as Hens fleſh: and becauſe it is a very vnwholeſome place, they giue their ſicke men Hogs fleſh to eate, in ſtead of Hens fleſh: they haue alſo not long ſince gotten ſome Geeſe out of a ſhip of Holland, which they call Apatta, which are there much eſteemed off, becauſe they are but few.

Monkies.

How taken.

Musk-cats.

The Countrey is full of Monkies, of diuers formes, for ſome of them haue white beards, and blacke Muſtachoes, with ſpeckled skins, their bellies white, and vpon their backes they haue a broad Tawnie ſtroke, with blacke Pawes and a black Tayle, and by vs are called Board-men. There are ſome called white Noſes, becauſe no part of them is white but onely their Noſe, there is a third ſort, called Boortkens, thoſe ſhun men very much, and ſtinke filthily, by nature they are very crafty: the fourth, are very like to the Iacken, which are found in the Graine Coaſt; there are alſo many Monkies of diuers other faſhions, they take the Apes and Monkies with ſpringes which hang vpon the trees, where into the Apes and Monkies leape, and are taken by the Negros. Muske Cats are there in great abundance, the Portugals call them Cato degalia, which is Agalia Cats; the Negroes call them Kankan, thoſe kind of Cats are alſo found in Eaſt India, and in Iaua, but they are not ſo good as thoſe in Guinea; or of the golden Coaſt, they are there called Caſtory, thoſe Cats are much eſteemed of by the Portugals, whereby they reape great profit, ſpecially by their Agaly or Muske, which they take from them, and make them cleane, and then it is put into glaſſes, and carried into Liſbon, it is a kind of beaſt much giuen to bite, and to eate fleſh; becauſe they giue them fleſh (as Hens, Pidgeons, Goats, and other coſtly meats) to eate. They eaſe themſelues in a place apart, and leaue it, and neuer lie in it; it is almoſt like a Foxe, but their tayles are like other Cats, their skins are ſpeckled like a Leopards skin: the Negroes take many of them in the woods when they are yong, and ſo bring them vp: but becauſe they haue no skill there how to vſe them, they ſell them to ſtrangers. The Male Cats are the beſt, and yeeld the moſt Agalia, by reaſon that the Females piſſe in the cod wherein the Muske groweth, and piſſe it out with their water; when you perceiue that they teare their bagge, you muſt take their Agalia from them, for they doe it to be rid of it: the wilder and worſe they are to rule, ſo much the coſtlier and better their Agalia is.

Hares.

Harts.

There are Hares alſo in this Countrey, ſpecially in a place called Akra, in forme like ours, and becauſe that Countrey is low Sandy Ground, therefore they are found more there then in any other part of that Coaſt: when the Negroes will take them, they goe a great number of them together, to the place where the Hares are, euery one taking with him two or three cudgels of wood, as long as a mans arme, and there they compaſſe the field round about, and ſtanding about their holes, make ſuch a noyſe and crying, and clapping their ſtickes one vpon the other, that the Hares are ſo feared therewith, that they leape out of their holes, and are by them kild with thoſe Cudgels, which they caſt at them, and by that meanes get many of them. Harts and Hinds are ſometimes found there alſo, but in ſome places more then others, they are of the ſame faſhion that ours are in the Low-countreyes, but they haue another kind of hornes then ours, they haue no expreſſe kind of Inſtruments to take them withall: but when they ſee them goe to the water to drinke, they ſtrike them into the bodie with an Aſſagaie and kill them. Hunting to take wild beaſts is lawfull for any man to vſe in thoſe Countreys, if they can take them, without puniſhment for doing it: There are many other kinds of beaſts of ſuch ſeueral ſorts, that a man cannot tell what to make them; but for that the Netherlanders that vſe to Guinea, dare not goe farre into the Countrey to take wild beaſts, leaſt they ſhould be taken and intrapped by the Portugals or their adherents, and made ſlaues all their liues long: therefore there are many wild beaſts that are not knowne by vs, and which the Inhabitants themſelues know not, nor can not tell by what names to call them.

Parrots.

Parokitos.

The Birds that are found there, are of diuers ſorts, and are little birds like vnto ours; firſt, there are blew Parrots, whereof there are great ſtore, which being yong, are taken out of their neſts, and made tame, hauing not flowne abroad, they are better to teach, and to learne to ſpeake; but they will not prate ſo much as the greene Braſilian Parrots doe. They haue alſo an other kind of greene Birds, as big as Sparrowes, like the Catalinkins of Weſt India, but they cannot ſpeake. Thoſe Birds are called Aſiwont, and by our Netherlanders, called Parokites. They are taken with Nets, as you vſe to take Sparrowes. They keepe much in low Land, where much Corne or Millie groweth; for they eate much thereof. Thoſe Birds are very kind one to the other; for when you put a male and a female in a Cage, they will alwaies ſit together without making any noyſe. The female is of ſuch a nature, that when ſhe is coupled with the male, ſhe reſpecteth him much, and letteth him ſit on the right hand, ſetting her ſelfe on the left hand; and when he goes to eate, ſhee followeth him; and ſo they liue together quietly, being almoſt of the nature of the Turtle-doues. They are of a very faire greene colour, with a ſpot of orange-tawnie vpon their Noſes.

There are another kind of Parokitan, which are much like them, being of the ſame nature and condition, but are of colour as red as bloud, with a ſpot of blacke vpon their Noſes, and a black Taile, being ſomewhat greater then the Parokites. There are other Birds not much vnlike to Gold-finches, all their bodies being yellow, thoſe Birds make not their Neſts in the field, for feare of Snakes, and other venimous beaſts; but make their neſts very craftily vpon the branches of high trees, and there lay their egges to keepe themſelues from venimous beaſts. They haue other ſmall Birds, not much vnlike to hedge Sparrowes; but they keepe in the Fields among Corne, thoſe Birds they thruſt into their mouthes aliue, and eate them Feathers Bones and all: they haue ſtore of Muſchen, with many other kind of ſmall Birds.

Fierce Birds.

Pheaſans.

Pea-cockes.

Pittairs.

Specled Crowes.

Burning Flies.

The haue a kind of Birds like Eagles, which haue heads like Turkle-cocks, thoſe Birds are hurtfull, and very fierce, and doe much harme to the Negroes, whereby they are much troubled, and therefore they carry them meat vp to the hilles, and call them Paſtre de Diago: which is the Birds of their god, and therefore they doe them no hurt, knowing well that they would reuenge themſelues well enough: they lie alwayes in myre and durt, and ſtinke as ill as a priuie, and you may ſmell them afarre off. They haue ſome water Snites, but not many. And Turtle-Doues, which haue a blacke ſtroke about their neckes like a crowne. There are many Pheſants, not much vnlike ours for faſhion, but haue not ſuch feathers, for they are ſpeckled blacke and white, and without long tayles as ours haue; they are not of ſo good a taſte as other common Hens are. Peake-cockes alſo I haue ſeene there, not much vnlike our Peake-cockes; but there is ſome difference in the Feathers, for ſome of them are of other colours. Pittoirs I haue ſeene there, as I ſaid before, which they eſteeme for a great Fetiſſo, and a South-ſayer. Cranes alſo there are many, and Kites alſo of the ſame faſhion that our Holland Kites are. There is a kind of Birds alſo there, which are like Storkes, but they haue not ſo long red Bils, and make not ſuch a noiſe. Speckled Crowes, and gray Sea-mewes are there in great abundance, with diuers other kinds of Birds, not much vnlike ours, but if you marke them well, there is difference betweene them, as ſome in their feathers, others in their Bils, the third in their feet, and the fourth in their heads, ſo that there is ſome difference, although they reſemble much; and becauſe Birds are litle taken and ſhot in thoſe Countreyes, for that they haue no kind of Inſtruments to doe it withall, there are great ſtore in the Countrey, and by that meanes, both the beaſts and the Birds waxe very bold. There are many Owles and Bats which flie by night, and ſtore of great greene Frogs, and gray Graſhoppers, and many great land Crabs, which keepe in the earth, and are of a purple colour, which they eſteeme for a great preſent. When I went by night to walke in the fields, I ſaw things in the graſſe that ſhine like firie coales, which I tooke vp and tied them in my handkercher, which made it ſhow with the light of the beaſt as if it had burnt: and when I went into the Towne to the Negroes, and ſhewed it them, they wondered thereat, and the next day when I lookt on them, they were ſmall blacke Flies, like Spaniſh Flies, but were as blacke as Pitch: Flies, Mothes, and Bees are there alſo to be ſeene. The Bees make their Hiues vpon trees. There are great ſtore of blacke Ants, which make holes in the earth, like field Mice, thoſe Ants doe much hurt to the Bees, and eate vp there Hony and Waxe.

Bannanas, or Indian Figges.

Bannana, in Braſilia, Pacona; and the tree Paguouer, in Malabar, Patan, &c. is the fruite whereof Iohn Huyghen writeth, and calleth it Indian Figs, this tree hath no branches, the fruit groweth out of the tree, and hath leaues at leaſt a fathome long, and three ſpannes broad. Thoſe leaues among the Turkes are vſed for Paper, and in other places the Houſes are couered therewith, there is no wood vpon the tree, the out-ſide (wherewith the tree is couered when it beginneth to waxe old) is like the middle part of a Siue, but opening it within, there is nothing but the leaues, which are rolled vp round and cloſe together, it is as high as a man, on the top the leaues begin to ſpring out, and riſe vp an end, and as the young leaues come forth the old wither away, and begin to drie vntill the tree comes to his growth, and the fruit to perfection: the leaues in the middle haue a very thicke veine, which diuideth it in two, and in the middle of the leaues, out of the heart of the tree, there groweth a flowre as bigge as an Eſtridge Egge, of a ruſſet colour, which in time waxeth long like the ſtalke of a Colewoort, whereon the Figges grow cloſe one by the other, when they are ſtill in their huskes, they are not much vnlike great Beanes, & ſo grow more and more vntill they be a ſpan long, and foure thumbes broad like a Cucumber, they are cut off before they are ripe, and are in that ſort hanged vp in bunches, which oftentimes are as much as a man can carrie. It alſo yeeldeth good Tremmelis like Milke (when the tree is cut downe) which commeth out of the bodie thereof, hauing hanged three or foure dayes, they are through ripe, the tree beares but one bunch at a time, whereon there is at leaſt one hundred Figges and more, and when they cut off the bunch of Figges, the tree alſo is cut downe to the ground, the root ſtaying ſtill in the Earth, which preſently ſpringeth vp againe, and within a moneth hath his full growth, and all the yeare long no time excepted. The tree beareth fruit, the fruit is very delicate to eate, you muſt pull off the huske wherein the fruit lyeth, very delightfull to behold, the colour thereof is whitiſh and ſome-what yellow, when you bite it, it is ſoft, as if it were Meale and Butter mixed together, it is mellow in byting, it cooleth the maw, much thereof eaten maketh a man very looſe and raw in the throate, it maketh women lecherous if they eate much thereof. Some are of opinion, becauſe it is ſo delicate a fruit, that it was the ſame tree that ſtood in Paradiſe, whereof God forbad Adam and Eue to eate. It ſmels like Roſes, and hath a very good ſmell, but the taſte is better. The Portugals will not cut it through with a Knife, but breake it, by reaſon of a ſpeciall obſeruation which they haue in the cutting thereof, which is, that then it ſheweth like a croſſe in the middle of the fruit, and therefore they thinke it not good to cut it.

Bachouens, or Bannanas de Congo.

The Bachouens (by vs ſo called) are very like the Bannanas, for the condition and forme is all one, only that the fruit is ſmaller, ſhorter, white of colour within and ſweeter of taſte, and is eſteemed to be wholſomer to be eaten then the Bannanas, but there is no ſuch great quantitie of them, and for that they were firſt brought out of the Kingdome of Congo, into other Countries, they haue gotten the name thereof.

Annanas.

The Annanas is alſo a delicate and pleaſant fruit for ſmell, and of the beſt taſte that any fruit can be, it hath alſo diuers ſeuerall names, there are two ſorts, the Male and the Female, the Canarians call it, Ananaſa; the Braſilians, Nana; thoſe of Hiſpaniola, Iaiama, and the Spaniards in Braſilia, Pinas, becauſe one of them found that and the Pinas firſt in Braſilia, it is as great as a Mellon, faire of colour, ſome-what yellow, greene and carnation, when it begins to bee ripe, the greeneneſſe thereof turneth into an Orange colour, it is of a pleaſant taſte, and hath a fine ſmell like an Apricocke, ſo that it is to be ſmelt farre off, when you ſee the fruit afarre off, being greene, it ſhewes like Artichokes, and is eaten with Wine, it is light of diſgeſture, but eating much thereof it inflameth a mans bodie. In Braſilia there is three ſorts thereof, each hauing a ſeuerall name: firſt, Iaiama; the ſecond, Boniama; the third, Iaiagma: but in Guinea there is but one ſort. The time when they are in their flowre is in Lent, for then they are beſt, it growes halfe a fathome aboue the ground, the leaues thereof are not much vnlike Semper Viuum, when they are eaten, they are cut in round ſlices, and ſopt in Spaniſh wine; you cannot eate enough thereof, it is verie hot of nature, and will grow in moiſt ground, the ſops that you take out of the Wine taſtes like ſweet Muske, and if you doe not preſently wipe the Knife wherewith you cut the fruit, but forgetting it let it lye halfe an houre, it will bee eaten in, as if there had beene ſtrong water laid vpon it, being eaten in abundance and without knowledge, it cauſeth great ſickneſſe.

Iniamus.

There are great ſtore of Iniamus growing in Guinea, in great fields, which are ſowed and planted like Turnips, the root is the Iniamus, and groweth in the Earth like Earth-nuts, thoſe Iniamus are as great as a yellow root, but thicker and fuller of knots, they are of a Mouſe-colour, and within as white as a Turnip, but not ſo ſweet, being put in a Kettle and ſodden with fleſh, and then peeled and eaten with Oyle and Pepper, they are a very delicate meate, in many places it is vſed for bread, and is the greateſt meate that the Negroes eate.

Battatas.

The Battatas are ſomewhat redder of colour, and in forme almoſt like Iniamus, and taſte like Earth-nuts, thoſe two kinds of fruit are very abundant in Guinea, they are commonly roſted, or elſe eaten with a hodge-pot in ſtead of Parſenips or Turnips.

Palme-wine tree.

The Palme-wine tree is almoſt like the Cocos tree, or ❧ Lantor, with diuers others, and are of three or foure ſorts, moſt of them haue all one kind of leafe, but in manner of wood they are vnlike, for this tree is ſhorter of wood then the reſt, the Wine is drawne out of thoſe trees by boring them, from whence there iſſueth a ſap like Milke, which is very coole and freſh to drinke, at the firſt when it is drawne, it is pleaſant and ſweet, hauing ſtood a while, it is as ſowre as Vineger, ſo that you may vſe it in a Sallet, but being drunke ſweet and freſh, it cauſeth a man to void vrine well, whereby in thoſe Countries, there are very few found, that haue the diſeaſe of the Stone; drinking much thereof a mans head will ſoone be light, the lightneſſe which a man hath in his head thereby, cauſeth it not to ake. When it commeth firſt out of the tree it is ſweeter of taſte, then when it hath ſtood awhile, but yet it is eſteemed to bee better when it hath ſtood awhile, and is ſome-what ſetled, then preſently to bee drunke, for it ſtandeth ſeething and bubling, as if it hung ouer the fire and ſod, ſo that if it were put into a Glaſſe and ſtopt vp, without letting any ayre come into it, the force thereof would breake the Glaſſe in pieces, but being a meale tyde olde, it is nothing worth, becauſe it is ſo ſowre, and then it is of another colour verie wateriſh, therefore it is much mixed with water, and ſeldome comes pure to the Market, as it is taken out of the tree, which is done partly to increaſe their Wine, as alſo that then it is the ſweeter to drinke, and hath the taſte of Syder, and the colour of Muſt, when the tree is old, and will yeeld no more Wine at the top, it is cut downe at the foot, and a fire made at the root thereof, where they ſet a pot, whereinto the Wine (by meanes of the heate) runneth, the tree beeing changed, and yeelding no more profit, there groweth another tree out of the roote thereof, but it is halfe a yeare old before it giueth any Wine. In the morning betimes an houre before day, the Wine is drawne out and brought to the Market at noone-time.

Palmitas tree.

The Palmitas tree is not much to be ſeene in Guinea, but for that a Negro in that Countrey ſhewed me ſome of the fruit thereof, I thought good to ſay ſomething of it in this place, it is a tree without branches, on the top of the tree the fruit groweth, and it is almoſt like the Ananas when it is ripe. It is outwardly of a faire gold colour, and within it hath graines like Pomegranates, they are of a very ſweet taſte, the other is hard and vnfit to eate.

§. VII.

Of their Gentlemen, and how they are made; Their Dancings, Sports, Diſeaſes, Cures, Viſitations, Mournings, Funerals: and of their Gold.

Ambition of Gentrie.

THere are many Gentlemen in that Countrey, but of ſmall meanes, for aſſoone as they haue bought their Gentilitie, they are then poorer, and in miſerable eſtate then they were before, and for that they thinke to be men of great account when they are Gentlemen, they ſeeke much after it, and begin to gather ſome wealth from their youths vpwards to obtayne the place of a Gentleman. Firſt, they giue three gifts to be made a Gentleman, the firſt gift is a Dogge, which they call Cabro de Matto, which is as much to ſay, as a Field-ſheepe. The ſecond Gift, is a Sheepe or a Goat. The third Gift, is a Cow, with many other things, and then he is made a Gentleman. Theſe Gifts are giuen among thoſe that are Gentlemen, and are giuen the one now, the other at another time, as the man that is made a Gentleman can beſt doe it, and hath the meanes to performe it, and then hee makes the Captaine acquainted with it, which done, he buyeth a Cow, which is carryed and tyed in the Market place, and then it is made knowne to the people, that ſuch a man ſhall bee made a Gentleman at ſuch a time, in the meane time all thoſe that are Gentlemen make themſelues as fine as they can to goe with him, and to fight and ſhew many Apiſh Toyes. The man that is to bee made a Gentleman, makes all things readie, as meate and drinke to entertayne his Gueſts, and to bid them welcome in good ſort, he buyeth Hens and many pots of Palme-wine, and ſendeth euery Gentleman a Hen and a pot of Palme-wine home to his Houſe, to make merrie withall.

Gifts for it.

Creation.

When the Feaſt day comes, the Inhabitants aſſemble together vpon the Market place, the men (as he maſters) goe and ſit on the one ſide, hauing many Inſtruments, as Drums, Hornes, Bels, and other things with them. The Captaine armeth himſelfe, and with him hath many young Batchelors with Shields and Aſſagaies, their faces being coloured and their bodies painted with red and yellow Earth, which makes them looke like a company of yong Deuils. The man that is made a Gentleman is accompanied with a number of other Gentlemen, hauing a Boy behind him which carryeth his ſtoole to ſit vpon when hee goes to ſpeake with any man, and his fellow Gentlemen come to ſalute him, and wiſh him good fortune in his new eſtate, at which time they take a great deale of ſtraw in the one hand, and lay it vnder his feet, which he treadeth vpon (the like alſo they vſe when their owne friends come to viſit them, and bring them any Preſents, which they vſe for a great honour.) The wiues of the Gentlemen goe to her, to doe all the honour they can to the wife of the Gentleman that maketh the Feaſt, and dreſſe her finely, folding her haire with many golden Fetiſſos, and Croſſes, putting about her necke a Ring of gold, and in the one hand ſhee carrieth a Horſe-taile, and on her right arme ſhee hath a Ring of gold, at each end thereof hauing a round thing like the Lid of a Pot, all made of gold; and being readie, they are placed in order, as their manner is, one after the other; then the Cow is led forth, and then all the Gentlemen in the Towne come and follow them, as it were on Proceſſion, dancing and leaping round about the Towne, and when they come againe into the Market-place, the Cow is bound to a ſtake, and there they make a great noiſe with Drummes and Pipes, and the young Bachelors with fencing and leaping, with their Shields and Aſſagaies, now in one place, then in another, making, as they thinke, great ioy about the Gentleman; euery man ſeeking to excell each other, and to get moſt praiſe and commendation.

The women alſo make no leſſe adoe with ſinging and dancing, ſometimes carrying both the Gentleman and his wife, vpon a ſtoole, round about the Towne, caſting white Meale in their faces, and in that ſort make great paſtime three dayes together, and euery night they are led home to their houſes, and watcht by the other Gentlemen. The next day he is fetcht by a great number of people, and great honour done vnto him as before; at which time hee hangs a white Flag out of his houſe, which doth ſignifie ioy, or open houſe. The third day, the Cow is killed by the Executioner, and quartered, and euery man hath a piece of the fleſh thereof, that they alſo may be participants of the Feaſt: but the man and the woman that maketh the Feaſt, may not eate of the Cow; for they make them beleeue, that if they eate any thereof, they ſhall die within a yeere after. The Feaſt day being ended, the head of the Cow is carried home to his houſe, which he hangeth vp, and painteth it with diuers colours, hanging many ſtraw Fetiſſoes vpon it, which is a ſigne of his Gentilitie, and a warrant to proue him to be made a Gentleman.

Priuiledges.

Then he hath great priuiledge, for he may buy Slaues, and doe other things which before he might not haue done. When he is made a Gentleman he is very proud thereof; for, the firſt thing that they will tell vnto a Stranger, is, that they are Gentlemen, and that they haue many Slaues, eſteeming themſelues to be great Maſters; but it falleth out oftentimes, that after their feaſting is done, and he made a Gentleman, that then hee is poorer then he was before, becauſe he diſburſed all his money to get it, and then he muſt goe out to fiſh againe and doe other things, if he will get his liuing. This kind of Gentilitie coſts him about eight Bendas, which is a pound of gold; but deducting that which is giuen for Preſents of other men which bring them to him, each man according to his meanes and abilitie, it ſtandeth him not in aboue halfe a pound of gold. Thoſe Gentlemen haue a Fellowſhip among them, and euery yeere make a Feaſt, and then bid their Friends to be merrie with them, and make good cheere; at which time they hang their Cowes or Sheepes heads, with Millie ſtrawes, and paint them with white colour, ſignifying thereby the remembrance of their Feaſt. Beſides this, the Gentlemen haue an other Feaſt amongſt them, vpon the ſixth day of Iuly, at which time they paint their bodies with white and red ſtripes, and hang a Garland made of greene boughs and ſtraw about their necks, which they weare all that day, that you may know the Gentlemen from the reſt, and then alſo they hang their Cowes and Goats heads full of Fetiſſoes, as before; in the euening they meet together at a Banket, in the houſe of the Captaine, where they are very merrie together, eating and drinking their heads and bellies full, till they are drunke.

Annuall Feaſt.

Their dancings.

They make themſelues very fine, eſpecially the women, when they goe to dance, wherein they take a great pride. They hang many Copper, Tin, and Iuorie Rings about their armes, and on their legs they put Rings with many Bells, that they may ſound when they dance. Their heads are frizled, and dreſſed with a tuft of haire. They waſh their bodies faire with water, and then anoint them with Palme-oile, to make them ſhine. Their teeth alſo they rub with a hard ſticke: then they put a piece of white linnen about their bodies, which hangs from vnderneath their breaſts, downe below their knees; and commonly about euening they aſſemble together, and goe to the Market-place to dance there. Others haue inſtruments whereon they play, as ſome Copper Baſons, whereon they ſtrike with woodden Stickes. Others haue woodden Drums, cut out of an hollow Tree, couered ouer with a Goats Skin, and play vpon them. Others haue round Blockes, cut very handſomly and euenly, whereon alſo they ſtrike with woodden Stickes. Others haue Cow-bells. Some haue ſmall Luits, made out of a piece of wood like a Harpe with ſixe ſtrings of Reeds, whereon they play with both their hands, euery one hauing their ſeuerall Inſtruments, and each keeping good correſpondence with their fellowes Inſtruments. Others ſing, and begin to dance two and two together, leaping and ſtamping with one of their feet vpon the ground, knocking with their fingers, and bowing downe their heads, and ſpeaking each to other; in their hands carrying Horſe-tailes, which they caſt ſometimes on the one ſhoulder, then vpon the other, vſing certaine order in their ſports, one following the other, and each doing as the other doth. Other women take ſtraw, which they let fall to the ground, and then dancing vpon it, caſt it vp againe into the aire with their feet, and catch it as it falleth with their hands, ſo that they play many apiſh and childrens ſports, thinking that they doe excellent well; but they deſire not to be ſeene by ſtrangers, becauſe they laugh and ieſt at them, and then they are aſhamed.

The yonkers.

This continuing an houre or an houre and an halfe, euery one goes home againe, as hauing ended their ſports. There are houſes alſo among them, wherein young men and maids vſe to dance and play. The young Bachelors vſe to drinke themſelues drunke, and by night runne through the ſtreets with their Armes and Aſſagaies, making a great noiſe with crying and ſhowting, as if a companie of young Deuils ran about the ſtreets; and meeting with other companies, with whom hauing ſome words, they fight together; wherein they are ſo earneſt one againſt the other, that they are almoſt readie to kill each other, and many times cannot leaue off. They will not lightly beginne to quarrell, for they are not ſo haſtie, but will indure much, ſpecially of ſtrangers, before they will quarrell; but if they once beginne, they are not eaſily pacified, but are very earneſt and haſtie to ſet vpon their aduerſe Parties, and to be reuenged, though it ſhould coſt them their liues, and they haue very quicke hands to thruſt and to ſtrike.

Their wounds and maladies.

Their bodies are ſubiect to many ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, which they eſteeme but little, and make no account of wounds or hurts. The ſickneſſes wherewith they are moſt troubled, are Poxe, Clap-dollars, Botches, Wormes, paine in the head, and burning Feuers. Theſe diſeaſes they get from foule and filthie women, whereunto they are much addicted, and although they haue any diſeaſes by ſuch meanes, which are not without much danger, yet they eſteeme not much of them, but paſſe them away as if they ayled nothing, and are not faint-hearted, but of a hard complexion, ſuffering their wounds to ſwell and putrifie, without any meanes of remedie applied thereunto; for they neither haue nor vſe any Phyſicke among them, to eaſe them in their ſickneſſe, nor Surgeons or Phyſicians to heale their wounds, but ſuffer their wounds and diſeaſes to haue their courſe, vnleſſe any of our Surgeons giue them any Phyſicke or Surgerie. For the Pox and Clap-dollers they vſe much Salſaparillia, which the Hollanders ſhips bring them; which Salue they ſeethe with ſalt water, and drinke the water for drinke againſt the Pox, and ſuch like diſeaſes, and alſo againſt the Wormes that are in their legs, (as I will declare more at large) wherewith alſo we are much troubled, whereunto they vſe no remedie at all, but ſuffer their legs to continue ſo, vntill they heale and waxe better of themſelues. For the paine of the head they vſe certaine Pap, which they make of greene leaues, and therewith anoint the place where their paine is; and if they haue any ſwelling about their bodies, which breaketh not out, then they take a knife and cut two or three long ſlaſhes therein, and ſo giue the wound a meanes to worke, and to heale vp, and grow together againe; which is the cauſe that they haue ſo much knobd fleſh, and ſo many ſlaſhes in their bodies: but is well to be diſcerned, whether they be cut and made in their fleſh to beautifie and ſet out themſelues, or wounds and ſores that are healed vp againe. They alſo vſe no letting of bloud, but onely make a hole in their bodies with a knife to let their bloud come out: when they haue any other naturall ſickneſſes, they will not helpe nor comfort one the other; but if any of them be ſicke, they will ſhun him as it were the plague, and ſpurne the ſicke man like a Dog, and not once helpe him with a drop of Oyle or Water, although they haue neuer ſo much need; no, not the Father to the Sonne, but let them lie like Beaſts, and die with hunger and ſickneſſe; ſo that they are not skilfull to helpe ſicke perſons.

Wormes in the legs.

Barbarous Inhumanitie.

Quarrels.

They make difference betweene the word Morian and Negro, for they will not bee called Morians, but Negroes or Prettoes, (which is as much to ſay) as Blacke men; for they ſay that Morian is as much to ſay, as Slaue or Captiue, and alſo a man that knowes nothing, or that is halfe a Foole; and therefore they will not be called Morians, but Negroes or Prettoes; for if you call them Morians, they will hardly ſpeake vnto you, nor make you any anſwere. They make one the other Slaues, but in other ſort then in Congo or Angola, for there you can lade no ſhips full of Slaues; but to the contrarie, they deſire much to haue them, and buy them: yet there are both Slaues and Captiues; and for that in thoſe Countries they take no great paines, nor need any great number of Slaues, therefore there is no great quantitie of them to be had, to ſell them as they doe in other Countries, but onely among them of the Land, that haue need of them. Againe, no man may buy or ſell them, but ſuch as are of great account and Gentlemen. They are marked with an Iron in their bodies, that if they chance to runne away, they may be knowne againe by their markes.

Such as are blind, or haue any other imperfections in their bodies, as being lame or Criples, and by reaſon thereof cannot get their liuings, the King placeth them with Smiths, to blowe their Bellows; others with thoſe that preſſe Palme-oyle, or grind Colours, whereunto ſuch deformed perſons are fit; or to ſuch Occupations and labours wherewith they can helpe themſelues, and get their victuals; ſo that there you ſee none ſuch as begge their victuals, but they are put in ſome place or other to earne their meate; ſo that the Inhabitants giue no meate one to the other. The Kings of the Townes haue many Slaues, which they buy and ſell, and get much by them; and to be briefe, in thoſe Countries there are no men to be hired to worke or goe of any errand for money, but ſuch as are Slaues and Captiues, which are to ſpend their dayes in ſlauerie.

Hatred and enuy is much vſed in thoſe Countries, and to whomſoeuer they once beare hatred and enuie, they will hate them cruelly, and doe them all the hurt and villany that they can; on the other ſide, they beare a villany long in their minds, and will keepe malice in their hearts ſeuen or eight yeeres, and when time ſerueth them, then ſhow it openly; no leſſe hatred and enuy is borne by one Towne vnto an other, ſpeaking all the villany they can, and extolling themſelues as much as they may, to haue the honour of Traffique, and to the end that the ſhip ſhould come and Anchor before their Townes, and by that meanes to bring the Countrie Merchants to Traffique there, wherein they are very diligent: and although one Towne lyeth but three or foure miles one from the other; yet they are as enuious one againſt the other as poſſible they can be, and report as hardly of their neighbours as they can imagine; that ſo they may get the Netherlanders to Traffique with them: and to that end, they ſtriue to ſhew more friendſhip to the Netherlanders, one then the other, to draw vs to affect them, and bring the trade of Merchandize vnto them.

Old age and the effects.

The men commonly liue there till they be old, as it ſeemeth by their faces and outward apparance, and as we conceaue; but they cannot reckon their owne ages, nor tell how many yeeres they haue liued. When they begin to be old, then they are not well proportioned nor ſeemely; but looke euill fauouredly, with gray beards, yellow wrinckled skins, like Spaniſh Leather, which proceedeth of the anointing of their bodies with PalmeO-yle. They are likewiſe leane of Legs and Armes, and wholly miſhapen, ſpecially olde women, with their long breaſts, which then ſhew and hang vpon their bodies like old Hogs bladders, they would not willingly be old; becauſe as then they are not eſteemed of, but much deſpiſed, and not reſpected, and as from their youths vpwards, to the beſt time of their liues, they ſtill waxe of a fairer blacke colour, ſo when they are paſt that time, they begin to decay, and to loſe their perfect blackneſſe.

Lamentable lamentings.

In their winter time, they are very ſickly, & then commonly there is a great mortalitie among them, by meanes of the vnwholeſomeneſſe of the aire, which they then endure: and when they die, their friends come to the dead mans houſe, and weepe and ſorrow grieuouſly for him, ſpeaking vnto him, & asking him why he died, with many ſuch like fooliſh Ceremonies, They take the dead body and lay it on a mat vpon the ground, & wind it in in a woollen, purpoſely made in that Countrey, of colour red, blew, blacke and white. Vnder his head they lay a woodden ſtoole, and couer or dreſſe his head with a Goats skin, and ſtrew all the body ouer with aſhes, and duſt of Barkes of trees; they cloſe not his eyes together, they lay his armes downe by his ſides, and ſo let him lie halfe a day in the aire. If it be a man, his beſt beloued wife goes and ſits downe by the body, and if it be a woman, the man goes and ſits downe by her, crying and weeping, hauing in their hands a wiſpe of ſtraw, or of Barkes of trees, wherewith crying and howling ouer the dead body, he or ſhe wipeth his face, ſometimes ſaying vnto it, Auzy, and making a great noyſe; in the meane time, the friends or neighbours come to viſite the dead, and to mone him for his misfortune, others (as the neereſt friends) being women, goe round about the houſe, ſinging and beating vpon Baſons, ſometimes comming to the dead body, and goe round about him ſinging and leaping, and kincking of hands, making a great noyſe, and then againe goe round about the houſe ſinging and playing vpon Baſons, which they doe twice or thrice one after the other.

Funerall.

In the meane time, preparation is made for the buriall, and to make good cheere together, after it is ended; to the which end, they dreſſe certaine Hens, and a Sheepe, and other meats which they are accuſtomed to eate, and while the dead bodie is aboue the ground, the eldeſt Morinni of that quarter, goes about from houſe to houſe with a Baſon, whereon euery one muſt put the value of twelue pence in gold, with the which money they buy a Cow, which Cow is giuen to a Fetiſſero that vſeth to coniure their gods, to will him to coniure the Fetiſſo, to ſuffer the dead body to remaine and reſt in peace, and to bring him into the other world, and not to moleſt him in the way, with this Cowes blood hee coniureth his Fetiſſo; (for a dead man muſt ſmeare his Fetiſſo with blood) then they bind the dead body vpon a planke, and carry him to the graue ſinging and leaping: the bodie is carried by men, and the women follow after one by one, about their heads hauing a Crowne or Garland of ſtraw, and a ſtaffe in their hands: the man, if it be a woman, goes next to the dead body crying to the graue, elſe there goes no man after it, vnleſſe the dead body chanceth to be borne to another place to be buried; as ſometimes it hapneth that they carry the dead body twenty miles off, from the place where he died, to be buried there: and then many men go armed with the body, to conuey it to the buriall: the body is carried to the earth, & the graue-maker maketh a graue about foure foot deepe, and therein he is laid; ouer the graue there are many ſtickes of wood aid, cloſe one by the other: the women creepe to and fro ouer the graue, making a great noyſe, with howling and crying, and ouer that, they lay the earth, and place it, and bind it about the ſame, as if it were a Cheſt: all his goods, as Apparell, Weapons, Pots, Baſons, Tooles, Spades, and ſuch Houſhold-ſtuffe, wherewith he earned his

his liuing, are carried to the graue, and buried with him, which are ſet round about the graue, to ſerue his turne withall in the other world, as they did when he liued vpon the earth; other of the dead mans friends, bring ſome thing alſo to ſet in the graue for a memory, which is put into the graue with the reſt of his goods. If he were one that delighted much in drinking, & loued Palme well when he liued: they will ſet a pot of Palme-wine by him in his graue, becauſe hee ſhould not die for thirſt, and what in his life he vſed, that is giuen him, and buried in his graue with him. If it be a woman that died in trauell of her child, the child is laid in the mothers right arme, and buried with her; aboue vpon the graue, there is a ſtraw houſe made like a Sepulchre, wherein all the houſhold-ſtuffe and other things are ſet. The graue-makers fee, is to haue halfe the goods that are ſet into the graue, but the friends of the dead content him, and he is paid for it; becauſe they ſhould let the goods ſtand ſtill vntoucht: for it is a great credit to the friends of the dead to leaue good ſtore of goods vpon the graue with the dead body; which they let ſtand there ſo long, till it be cleane conſumed, and none of them will euer offer to take any of it away by any meanes whatſoeuer. The body being buried, they goe altogether to the Sea-ſide, or to ſome other Riuer, where the women goe in, & ſtand vp to their middles in waters, and taking vp water in their hands, caſt it in their owne faces, and vpon their bodies, and waſh their breaſts, and all their bodies. Other women in the meane time play vpon Baſons, and ſuch like inſtruments, one of thoſe women take the man or woman, whoſe husband or wife is dead, and leading them into the water, laid them therein flat vpon their backes, and take them vp againe; which they doe diuers times, ſpeaking one vnto the other, and making great complaints. When he or ſhe is well and cleane waſht from the head to the foot, ſhe leadeth them out of the water againe, and puts their clothes vpon their bodies again, & then they go together to the dead mans houſe to make good cheere, and to drink themſelues drunk. If it be a man that died that had children, the women muſt not retaine nor keepe any of his goods for the behoofe of the children: but muſt giue all the mans goods (both that which he had to his marriage, and which he got by his labour while he liued) vnto his Brethren, if he hath any liuing, and muſt not keepe any thing from them. If he hath no brethren, then the father if he be liuing, taketh all his ſonnes goods, and inioyeth it. If it be a woman that dieth, then the husband muſt deliuer her marriage goods to her brethren, as aforeſaid, without keeping any thing thereof for his children, ſo that no children in thoſe Countreyes inherite their Fathers good, neither are they their Fathers heires: No more, may the wife inherite any of her husbands goods, but it is all diuided among his brethren; but while their wiues liue, they giue her what they thinke good of that which they gaine, ſo yong maids and men muſt endeuour themſelues to get ſome thing in their youths, that they may haue ſome thing when they marry and keepe houſes.

Kings Funerals.

For the Kings death, more ſorrow is made by ſome of the Gentlemen, who in the Kings life ſerued him: when he is dead, giue him a ſlaue to ſerue him, & other men one of their wiues to wait on him, and to dreſſe his meat: others bring one of their ſonnes to goe with the King into the other world; ſo that there are a number of people that are appointed to goe with the King to the other world: which are killed, and their heads cut off, but they know nothing thereof, for ſuch men and women as giue them to the King when he is dead; tell not them that they ſhall be put to death, to goe into the other world with the King; but when the time comes, that the buriall is to be ſolemniſed, they ſend them on ſome meſſage, or to fetch water, and ſo following them, ſtrike them through the body with an Aſſagaie, and kill them in the way: which done, they carry the dead body to the Kings houſe, whereby they ſhew what faithfull ſeruants they were vnto their King while he liued: others alſo doe the like, and thoſe dead bodies are ſmeared with blood, and buried with the King in his graue, that they may trauell together. If any of his wiues loued him intirely, they ſuffer themſelues to be kild with the reſt, and are buried with him, that they may raigne together in the other world. The heads of the dead men and women, are ſet round about the Sepulchre and graue of the King, for a great brauerie and honour vnto him. Vpon the graue they ſet all kinds of meat and drinke, that they may eate ſome thing, and verily beleeue that they eate and drinke it, and that they liue thereby, and for that cauſe the pots of Palme-wine, and of water, are continually fild vp: all his ſtuffe, as Armes and Clothes are buried with him, and all his Gentlemen that ſerued him, haue euery one of them their Pictures made of Clay, after the life, and fairely painted, which are ſet and placed orderly round about his graue, one by the other: ſo that their Kings Sepulchers are like houſes, and as well ſtuft as if they ſtill liued: which Sepulchres are ſo much eſteemed off, that they are watcht both by night and by day, by armed men: to the end, that if he deſireth to haue any thing, they ſhould ſtraight bring it him.

Gold how eſteemed and found.

Gold at this day is as much eſteemed off by them, as it is with vs, (of whom they ſay, Gold, is our God) and more too, for they are greedier and earneſter to haue it then we are, becauſe they marke and ſee that the Hollanders take ſo much paines for it, and giue more Merchandiſe for it in Exchange, then euer the Portugals did.

For I am of an opinion, that there are few Negroes that dwell on the Sea ſide, that know where the Mines are, or that euer ſaw them, alſo there was neuer any Portugall or Netherlan- der at them, or neere them, but the Mines are well kept, and lookt vnto by the owners thereof; ſo I haue heard by ſome Negroes, that each King hath his Mines, and cauſeth the gold to be digged by his men, and ſelleth it to other Merchants, and ſo it paſſeth from one to another.

In what manner the gold is found in Guinea, I know not, but as ſome Negroes haue told me, they finde gold in deepe pits, which they digge vp, and that with the water it is driuen downe like Sand, at which waters and running ſprings, many people ſit with ſpoones in their hands, and take vp the gold, ſand and all, and put it into a Baſon.

Some peeces are couered ouer with Chalke, and Earth, wherein they are found, the ſmall gold, which is found in the Sand, they purge and make cleane in cleare running water, but yet they let ſome Sand and Grauell remaine among it, it is found in no great quantities, (as they themſelues ſay) but with great paine and labour, for it coſts many men their liues, which are ſmothered in the Mines; and a man that can find two or three Engliſhen of gold in a day, hath done well, and hath earned a good dayes hire. The halfe which is found is the labourers, and the other halfe is for the King, or for him that oweth the Mine; This I haue beene told by ſome of the Negroes. Gold by them is called Chika, and ſome great Merchants that dwell about the Maine, bring the gold aboord the ſhips to buy wares, as it comes out of the Mine, and that is eſteemed to be the beſt gold, wherein there is leſt deceit, but the receiuer muſt looke well to it, to blow the ſand cleane out of it, and to beat the yeallow earth with the ſtones out of it, with a hammer, and ſo he cannot loſe by it: neuertheleſſe, the gold that is brought rough out of the Mine, is eſteemed to be better and richer, and more worth in euery Marke then the other.

It falleth out oftentimes, that ſome gold is more worth then others, which hapneth by meanes of the receiuers negligence, and many times as the Mines of gold fall out; for ſome of them are finer gold then others: and alſo the deeper that the Mines are digged, the gold falls out to be worſe, and is more mixed with ſiluer, euen in the earth it ſelfe, then the gold that lieth higher in the earth.

Falſe gold.

Beſides this, meane Merchants bring much molten gold, as Crakawen, arme Rings, Iewels, and other things, wherein there is moſt falſhood vſed: for ſuch Negroes as haue but ſmall meanes to Traffique with vs, are more vſed and addicted to the falſifying of gold, then others are, wherein they vſe great ſubtiltie, but we our ſelues are oftentimes the cauſe thereof; for we bring and ſell them the matter, and the Inſtruments which they vſe therein; and ſo deceiue our ſelues, and make a rod for our owne breeches: but they were wont to falſifie it more then now. For the Portugals hanged vp ſome for it. They haue good knowledge in Gold, and can ſoone perceiue whether it be good or falſified; but of other Iewels, as Pearles, Diamonds, Rubies, Emralds, and ſuch like precious ſtones, they haue no knowledge, but they know fine red Corals wel, which are much eſteemed off by them.

Siluer alſo is well, and too much knowne among them; becauſe they vſe it to falſifie Gold withall, and to make it of leſſe value then it is. They learned of the Portugals to melt gold. They alſo haue found the meanes to put an edge of gold round about ſiluer, and Red Copper mixed together, letting the falſe mettle remaine in the middle of the peece, and ſo when hee that receiueth it, is in haſte, and toucheth it but on the edge thereof, (where it is not falſified) with his Touch-ſtone, it paſſeth for good: but ſuch muſt bee cut in ſunder with a hammer, and then the falſifying is perceiued, and when they could find no meanes to falſifie the ſmall fine Chika Foetu Gold, ſo that the receiuers had no ſuſpition thereof, and tooke the leſſe heed there vnto, wee our ſelues brought them tooles to doe it withall: for wee brought them Files, and Sawes to ſell, ſo that they filed the yellow Copper, and mingled it among the ſmal gold, that it could hardly be perceiued: becauſe it was no ſmal, which was the ſubtilleſt falſifying of gold by them vſed, but when we blew the ſand & duſt out of it, then the Copper ſhewed it ſelfe, whereby it appeareth that the Negroes haue many wayes and deuiſes to falſifie gold, but ſuch as looke narrowly vnto them, will not be deceiued: but to trie their falſifyings, the beſt way is to touch their gold, and to be warie of deceit, and of receiuing bad gold. An other way is to looke ſpeedily vnto the Negroes themſelues; To ſee if they haue bad gold or not, for when they bring bad gold, they will be in great feare, with your handling thereof, and when you offer to trie their gold, they will refuſe it, and alter their colours, and ſhake and quiuer withall.

Troubleſome long-wormes.

The wormes in the legges and bodies, trouble not euery one that goeth to thoſe Countreyes, but ſome are troubled with them, and ſome not, and they are found in ſome men ſooner then in others, ſome haue a worme before the Voyage is done, and while they are ſtill vpon the Coaſt, ſome get them while they are vpon the way, others haue them after their Voyage is full ended, ſome foure moneths after, ſome nine moneths after, and ſome a yeere after they haue made a Voyage thither: others haue made two or three Voyages thither, and neuer were troubled with thoſe wormes.

The Negroes themſelues are much troubled with them, ſpecially thoſe that dwel about the caſtle of Mina, and it is a thing to be wondered at, for the Negroes that dwel but 25. miles lower Eaſtward, are not troubled with wormes as their neighbors are. And another* (whereof Iohn Huyghen ſpeaketh in his Itinerario) are troubled therewith, for the Ilands of Eaſt India, Weſt India, China, Braſilia, and other ſtrange Countries are not troubled therwith, nor know not thereof, and which is more; They of the Iland of Saint Thomas, which men eſteeme to be the vnwholeſomeſt place in the world; and wherein ſo many men are ſicke, and loſe their liues, know not what thoſe wormes meane, but wondred much thereat, when it was ſhewed them of ſuch as had beene with the Hollanders in Guinea. The Negroes themſelues knew not whereof they are ingendred, but the greateſt preſumption is, that they proceed and breed of the water which men buy of the Negroes, which they take out of Wels or Pits, and it is very likely (as we find by the experience) that they breed of the water; for in Ormus, or in thoſe parts, the freſh water is fetcht vp in pots by diuers, eighteene fathome deepe vnder the ſalt water, which thoſe people drinke, becauſe they are there alſo troubled with wormes, and as ſome men write: the Indians themſelues ſay, that they come of the water. Such as haue them are in great paine, for ſome of them can neither goe nor ſtand; ſome neither ſit nor lie, others lie wholy in diſpaire, as if they were ſenceleſſe, and ſomtimes are faine to be bound; ſome haue them with a feuer, or ſhaking, as if they had a feuer; ſome get them on a ſudden, others haue them before they know it, and haue little paine therewith; ſo that the wormes ſhew themſelues diuers wayes: they appeare with a litle Blain, others with a ſpot like a Flea-biting, others with a litle ſwelling; ſo that you may often ſee the worme betweene the skin and the fleſh, others ſhew themſelues with bloody vains, &c. It muſt ſhew it ſelfe before men vſe any remedie for it: neuertheleſſe, it ſheweth it ſelfe many times too much, and too ſoon, for it were better that it came not ſo ſoon, nor appeared at all, but ſuffered men to be at eaſe, it will ſeeke to helpe itſelfe, and thruſt out his noſe, which a man muſt then take hold on, leaſt he creepe in againe: he ſheweth himſelfe in diuers places, as in a mans legges, in the ſole of the foot, in the armes, knees, buttocks, and commonly in places of a mans bodie, where there is much fleſh; and ſome men haue them in their priuie members, and which is more, in their cods, with great griefe and paine: for thoſe that haue them there, indure extreme paine. But it is true, that one man hath leſſe paine with them then another, and ſhal alſo be ſooner healed of them then another: which commeth by the handling or dealing with them, for it is very good, when a man findeth himſelfe to be troubled with them, to be quiet, ſpecially being in his legs, and not go much, and to keepe the place warme where they begin to appeare; for thereby they ſhall indure leſſe paine, for they come better out of a mans fleſh with warmth, then with cold and diſeaſe. For ſome men haue little reſpected themſelues when they haue had the wormes, ſo that they appeared with a great ſwelling, whereby they indured much paine, and were in hazard to looſe their legges or their armes. When it comes foorth ſo farre, that a man may lay hold on it, then they muſt draw him out till hee ſtayeth, and then hee muſt let it reſt till hee beginneth to come forward againe; and as much thereof as is come out of the bodie, muſt bee woond vpon a ſticke, or bound cloſe to the hoole, with a thrid that hee creepeth not in againe. When hee commeth out euery time, he bringeth good ſtore of matter with him, and a man muſt euery day looke vnto it, and draw him ſo long, till he be out, but you muſt not draw him too hard, leaſt he ſhould breake, ſo that by reaſon of the poyſon that is in him, the wound will feſter: It hapneth oftentimes, that after there is one worme drawne out of a mans body, that there commeth another in the ſame place, & hath his iſſue out at the ſame hole. Some men are ſoner rid of them then another, for ſome are eaſed in three weeks and leſſe time, and ſome are three months in healing of them, ſome men haue more wormes then others, for ſome haue but one worme, and others ten or twelue, as I my ſelf knew one that had ten wormes, hanging out at his body all at one time; and I haue known men that had wormes that began to open themſelues, and crept in againe, and conſumed away, ſo that they had no more trouble therewith but the next Voyage after. They are of diuers lengths, and greatneſſe, ſome are of a fathome long, ſome ſhorter, as it fals out; in thickneſſe they differ much, ſome are as thicke as great Lute-ſtrings, and like common peare wormes, others like ſmall Lute-ſtrings, and ſome as ſmall as ſilke or fine thred, ſome ſay that they are not liuing, and that they are but bad ſinowes and no wormes. I haue not long ſince ſeene a man that had certaine wormes which ſhewed themſelues, and the Surgeon drew a worme out with one pull, and the worme being drawne out, and held vp on high, wrung and writhed it ſelfe, as if it had beene an Eele, and was about fiue quarters long, and as thicke as a Lute-ſtring, if it were but a ſinow, it would haue no life in it, and therefore they are naturall wormes. The Negroes vſe no kind of Surgerie for them, but ſuffer them to haue their courſe, and waſh the ſore with Salt-water, which they ſay is very good for it.

* Ormus. At Boghar in Bactria, there are the like, ſuppoſed to come by drinking bad water in that place, as M. Ant. Ienkinſon obſerued.

Note that our returne backe from Moure, we vſe to put off from that place, from whence you muſt ſet ſayle with a wind from the land, and hold your courſe as neere by as you can, loſing no wind, and yet you ſhall hardly get aboue S. Thomas, or Rio de Gabom, becauſe of the ſtreame which driueth you Eaſt & by North, & Eaſt North-eaſt towards the land. To the Bouthes of Fernando Poo, which you muſt beware off, for he that falleth into that Bombe, will hardly get out, becauſe of the ſtreame, and is in danger to be caſt away in that place, or elſe he muſt haue ſome ſtormes or winds out of the North, and ſo come out Southward, otherwiſe it is hardly to be done; for there are ſome, who hauing had the wind a little contrary, were ſixe or ſeuen weekes before they could get to Cape Lope Gonſelues. Heere you muſt note, that the neerer you come to the Equinoctiall line, the wind bloweth the more Southerly, ſo that as you paſſe vnder the line, the wind bloweth South, and South and by Eaſt, and ſomewhat higher, you muſt alſo note, when you ſee great flying Fiſhes, that you are not farre from Saint Thomas, or about Ile De Principe.

§. VIII.

The paſſage from the golden Coaſt to the Kingdome of Benni, or Rio de Benni, and Rio Floreado: The Citie, Court, Gentry, Apparell: alſo other places adioyning, deſcribed.

This was taken out of D. Ri

FOR that the gold Coaſt reacheth no further then from Cape De tres Punctas, to Rio de Volta, therfore thoſe that will goe from the golden Coaſt, to the Kingdome of Benni, hold their courſe along by the land, and along by the Riuers of Rio de Valto, Rio de Ardra, and Rio de Lago. Theſe Riuers were neuer entred into, becauſe there is nothing to be had in them, but a little quantitie of Elephants Teeth; ſo that the labour to fetch it, is not worth the paines, by meanes of the dangers that a man incurreth by entring into the Riuers, by reaſon of Sands. Before at the mouth of the Riuer of Focrado, there lieth an Iland, and the Riuer is ſo indifferent great, that a man may well know it. The land reacheth moſt (being about forty miles) to Rio de Ardra. This Riuer is much vſed to be entred into by the Portugals, and is well knowne, not becauſe of any great commoditie that is therein to be had; but becauſe of the great number of ſlaues which are bought there, to carry to other places, as to Saint Thomas, and to Braſilia, to labour there, and to refine Sugar: for they are very ſtrong men, and can labour ſtoutly, and commonly are better ſlaues then thoſe of Gaboni, but thoſe that are ſold in Angola are much better. In this Riuer there is no ſpeciall thing found, which is of any value, but ſome Blew, Greene, and Blacke ſtones, wherewith they grind colours, and for their faireneſſe are deſired of other Negroes, ſpecially in the golden Coaſt of Guinea, where they are much eſteemed of by them. There both the men and women are ſtarke naked, vntill they be ſold for ſlaues, ſo that they are not aſhamed to ſhew themſelues one to the other, as they themſelues affirme, and by reaſon proue, ſaying, that a man more coueteth and deſireth a thing that he ſeeth not, or may not haue, then that he ſeeth or may borrow or haue, and for that cauſe they hide not their priuie members. There the Portugals Traffique much with Barkes to buy ſlaues, and the Inhabitants are better friends with them, then with any other Nation; becauſe they come much there, and for that no other Nations come to buy ſlaues there, but the Portugals onely. And there are ſome Portugals dwelling there, which buy much wares and Merchandizes, ſuch as there to bee had. From Rio de Ardra, to Rio de Lago, is ten miles, and in that Riuer there is nothing elſe to buy, and therefore it is not much vſed, ſo that Rio de Ardra, is more vſed then Rio de Volta, and Rio de Lago; from Rio de Lago to Rio de Benni, is about twenty miles,, ſo that Benni is eſteemed to be part of the golden Coaſt, that is about one hundred miles from Mourre, ſo that in two dayes with helpe of the ſtreame, a man may get thither, where as men are wont to be ſixe weekes: before they could turne backe againe from whence they came.

The Citie of Benni.

The Towne ſeemeth to be very great, when you enter into it, you goe into a great broad ſtreet, not paued, which ſeemeth to be ſeuen or eight times broader then the Warmoes ſtreet in Amſterdam; which goeth right out, and neuer crooketh, and where I was lodged with Mattheus Cornelison, it was at leaſt a quarter of an houres going from the gate, and yet I could not ſee to the end of the ſtreet, but I ſaw a great high tree, as farre as I could diſcerne, and I was told the ſtreet was as much longer. There I ſpake with a Netherlander, who told me that he had beene as farre as that tree, but ſaw no end of the ſtreet; but perceiued that the houſes thereabouts bee much leſſe, and ſome houſes that were falling downe: ſo that it was to be thought, that the end thereof was there abouts, that tree was a good halfe mile from the houſe where I was lodged, ſo that it is thought that that ſtreet is a mile long beſides the Suburbs. At the gate where I entred on horſe-backe, I ſaw a very high Bulwarke, very thicke of earth, with a very deepe broad ditch, but it was drie, and full of high trees; I ſpake with one that had gone along by the ditch, a good way, but ſaw no other then that I ſaw, and knew not well whither it went round about the Towne or not, that Gate is a reaſonable good Gate, made of wood after their manner, which is to be ſhut, and there alwayes there is watch holden. Without this Gate, there is a great Suburbe: when you are in the great Street aforeſaid, you ſee many great Streets on the ſides thereof, which alſo goe right forth, but you cannot ſee to the end of them, by reaſon of their great length, a man might write more of the ſituation of this Towne, if he might ſee it, as you may the Townes in Holland, which is not permitted there, by one that alwaies goes with you, ſome men ſay, that he goeth with you, becauſe you ſhould haue no harme done vnto you, but yet you muſt goe no farther then he will let you.

These are Dutch miles.

Their Houſes.

The Houſes in this Towne ſtand in good order, one cloſe and euen with the other, as the Houſes in Holland ſtand, ſuch Houſes as Men of qualitie (which are Gentlemen) or others dwell in, haue two or three ſteps to goe vp, and before, there is, as it were, a Gallerie, where a man may ſit drie; which Gallerie euery morning is made cleane by their Slaues, and in it there is a Mat ſpred for men to ſit on, their Roomes within are foure-ſquare, ouer them hauing a Roofe that is [illegible] cloſe in the middle, at the which place, the raine, wind, and light commeth in, and therein [illegible] lie and eate their meate; but they haue other places beſides, as Kitchins and other roomes. [illegible] Houſes are not ſuch, for they haue but one Wall before, wherein there is a wooden Doore, [illegible] not how to make Windowes, but ſuch light and aire as they haue, comes [illegible] the Houſe.

[illegible] is very great, within it hauing many great foure-ſquare Plaines, which [illegible] Galleries, wherein there is alwaies watch kept; I was ſo farre within [illegible] ouer foure ſuch great Plaines, and whereſoeuer I looked, ſtill I ſaw Gates [illegible] other places, and in that ſort I went as farre as euer any Netherlander [illegible] Stable where his beſt Horſes ſtood, alwaies paſſing a great long way: [illegible] hath many Souldiers, he alſo hath many Gentlemen, who when they [illegible] vpon Horſes, and ſit vpon their Horſes as the women in our Countrie [illegible] one man, on whom they hold faſt; and the greater their eſtate is, the [illegible] after them. Some of their men haue great Shields, wherewith they [illegible] from the Sunne; they goe next to him, except thoſe on whom hee lea[illegible] him, playing ſome on Drums, others vpon Hornes and Fluits, ſome [illegible] they ſtrike. The Horſe alſo is led by a man, and ſo they ride play[illegible] as are very great Gentlemen haue another kind of Muſicke, when they [illegible] is like the ſmall Nets wherewith men in our Countries goe to the [illegible] is filled full of a certaine kind of thing, which they ſtrike vpon with [illegible], in like ſort as if their Nets were filled full of great Nuts, and ſo [illegible] thoſe great Gentlemen haue many Seruants, that goe after them [illegible] The King hath very many Slaues, both men and women, whereof [illegible] ſeene, carrying of Water, Iniamus, and Palme-wine, which they [illegible] There are alſo many men Slaues ſeene in the Towne, that carrie [illegible], which they ſay is for the King; and many carrie Graſſe, [illegible] is carried to the Court. The King oftentimes ſendeth out [illegible] orderly through the ſtreets, and as the other things afore[illegible] goe one after the other, and by them, there goeth one [illegible] man muſt ſtep aſide and giue them place, although hee [illegible]

Sixe hundred Wiues.

[illegible] euery yeere goes twice out of his Court, and viſiteth the [illegible] his Power and Magnificence, and all the Brauerie he can, [illegible] by all his Wiues, which are aboue ſixe hundred in num[illegible] Wiues. The Gentlemen alſo haue many Wiues, as ſome [illegible] and there is not the meaneſt Man among them but hath [illegible] in that place you find more Women then Men.

Gentlemen their making.

They a[illegible] Towne, where they keepe their Markets; in one place they h[illegible] [illegible] de Ferro; and in another place, they hold their little Market, [illegible] bring all things to ſell, as quicke Dogs, whereof they eate [illegible] Parots, Hens, Iniamus, Manigette in bonches, dried A[illegible] ſorts of Kankrens, with many other kinds of Fruits, and [illegible] Wood to burne, Cups to eate and drinke in, and other [illegible] ſame purpoſe, great ſtore of Cotton, whereof they make [illegible] Their Apparell is of the ſame faſhion as theirs of the Gold[illegible] but to ſhew you the manner thereof it would be [illegible] of Iron-worke to ſell there, and Inſtruments to fiſh withall, [illegible] and many Weapons, as Aſagaies, and Kniues alſo for [illegible] is there very orderly holden, and euery one that commeth [illegible] the Market, knowes his place where to ſtand, to ſell his [illegible] Wares as they doe in the Golden Coaſt.

The

Their faſhions.

The Gentlemen goe with great Maieſtie to the Court, hauing diuers kinds of Muſicke with them, and are waited on by diuers other Negroes, one hauing a Drum whereon he playes, others with other Inſtruments; vpon the Horſe there is a little woodden Stoole ſet, and on the Horſe necke they hang a Cow-bell, which rings when the Horſe goes; there goes two Negroes by him, on either ſide one, on whom he leaneth. Thoſe Negroes that attend on him, come euery morning to the Gentlemans doore, and ſtay there till he comes out, to wait on him. Their Horſes are very little, not much greater then Calues in our Countrie, which is the cauſe that our Horſes are ſo much eſteemed of in that Coaſt. The King hath many Souldiers which are ſubiect vnto him, and they haue a Generall to command ouer them, as if he were their Captaine: This Captaine hath ſome Souldiers vnder him, and goes alwaies in the middle of them, and they goe round about him, ſinging and leaping, and making great noiſe, and ioy. Thoſe Captaines are very proud of their Office, and are very ſtately, and goe exceeding proudly in the ſtreets. Their Swords are broad, which hang about their necke in a leather Girdle which reacheth vnder their armes: they alſo vſe Shields and Aſſagaies, as they in the Golden Coaſt doe.

Warres.

Apparell.

They cut their Haire diuerſly, each after the beſt manner that they can. Their apparell alſo is the like, and vſe ſtrange cuſtomes, not one like vnto another, all finely made of Cotton, ouer the which they commonly weare Holland Cloth. The young Maides and Boyes goe ſtarke naked, vntill they marrie, or that the King giueth them licence to put on ſome Apparell; then they make great ioy, becauſe of the friendſhip the King therein ſheweth vnto them, and then they make their bodies very cleane, and ſtrike it ouer with white Earth, and are very ſtately, ſitting in great glorie and magnificence. Their friends come vnto them, to congratulate them, as if ſhee were a Bride. They are circumciſed, both Boyes and Girles. They cut three great ſtreakes in their bodies on either ſide, each ſtreake being three fingers broad, which they doe from their ſhoulders downe to their waſtes, which they thinke to be a great good deed tending to their ſaluation. They are very conſcionable, and will doe no wrong one to the other, neither will take any thing from ſtrangers, for if they doe, they ſhould afterward be put to death, for they lightly iudge a man to die for doing any wrong to a ſtranger, wherein they vſe ſtrange Iuſtice: they bind the Offenders armes behind at his backe, and blind his eyes, then one of the Iudges comes and lifts him vp with his armes, in ſuch manner, that his head lieth almoſt vpon the ground, then comes the Executioner and cuts off his head; which done, his bodie is quartered, and the quarters caſt into the fields to bee deuoured by certaine Birds, which Birds they feare much, and no man dares doe them any hurt, nor chaſe them, for there are men purpoſely appointed to giue them meat and drinke, which they carrie with great magnificence, but no man may ſee it carried, nor bee preſent, but thoſe that are appointed to doe it; for euery man runnes out of the way when they ſee thoſe men come to carrie the Birds meate, and they haue a place where the Birds come purpoſely for it. They reſpect ſtrangers very much, for when any man meeteth them, they will ſhun the way for him and ſtep aſide, and dare not bee ſo bold to goe by, vnleſſe they be expreſſely bidden by the partie, and prayed to goe forward, and although they were neuer ſo ſore laden, yet they durſt not doe it; for if they did, they ſhould be puniſhed for it: They are alſo very couetous of honour, and willingly deſire to be praiſed and rewarded for any friendſhip they doe.

Rio de Angra.
Coriſco.

Vpon the Iland of Coriſco, or about Rio de Angra, in the mouth whereof the Iland of Coriſco lieth. The Iland of Coriſco is a bad place to dwell in, for no man dwelleth in it, for there is nothing to be had in it but freſh Water and Wood, ſo that the ſhips that come from the Golden Coaſt, and fall vpon it, prouided themſelues there, of Water and Wood. Within the Riuer there lieth three other ſmall Ilands, which alſo are worth nothing, becauſe they yeeld no profit, and there is nothing abounding in them but Wood. Thoſe Ilands at this day are called (for before they had no names) the Ile De Moucheron, becauſe one Balthaſar de Moucheron had by his Factors found them, wherein he cauſed a Fort to be made, in the yeere 1600. thinking to dwell there, and to bring great Traffique from other places thither. But they of Rio de Gabom, vnderſtanding that there were Strangers inhabiting in them, ſought all the meanes they could to murther them, and to take both the Fort and their Goods from them, which they did, before they had dwelt foure moneths there, (vnder a Captaine called Edward Heſius) and tooke the Sconce from them by force, murthering all the men that were in it, and called it the Iland of Coriſco, which name it had of the Portugals, becauſe vpon that Iland there are many Tempeſts of thunder and lightning, and great ſtore of Raine, and therefore it is not good to inhabite in, and there will nothing grow therein but Cucumbers. It is well prouided of freſh Water, excellent faire red Beanes, and Braſill wood, ſo exceeding faire and gliſtering, when it is ſhauen, as any Glaſſe can be, which is ſo hard, that without great paine and labour it cannot be cut downe. The Iland is almoſt a great mile in compaſſe, but it is a bad anchoring place, when the Trauadoes come.

Moucheron.

From Rio de Angra, to Rio de Gabom, is fifteene miles. The Inhabitants of Rio de Gabom, are not friends with them of Rio de Angra, for they oftentimes make warre one againſt the other, and then great Suburbe: when you are in the great Street aforeſaid, you ſee many great Streets on the ſides thereof, which alſo goe right forth, but you cannot ſee to the end of them, by reaſon of their great length, a man might write more of the ſituation of this Towne, if he might ſee it, as you may the Townes in Holland, which is not permitted there, by one that alwaies goes with you, ſome men ſay, that he goeth with you, becauſe you ſhould haue no harme done vnto you, but yet you muſt goe no farther then he will let you.

Their Houſes.

The Houſes in this Towne ſtand in good order, one cloſe and euen with the other, as the Houſes in Holland ſtand, ſuch Houſes as Men of qualitie (which are Gentlemen) or others dwell in, haue two or three ſteps to goe vp, and before, there is, as it were, a Gallerie, where a man may ſit drie; which Gallerie euery morning is made cleane by their Slaues, and in it there is a Mat ſpred for men to ſit on, their Roomes within are foure-ſquare, ouer them hauing a Roofe that is not cloſe in the middle, at the which place, the raine, wind, and light commeth in, and therein they lie and eate their meate; but they haue other places beſides, as Kitchins and other roomes. The common Houſes are not ſuch, for they haue but one Wall before, wherein there is a wooden Doore, they know not how to make Windowes, but ſuch light and aire as they haue, comes in at the roofe of the Houſe.

The Court.

The Kings Court is very great, within it hauing many great foure-ſquare Plaines, which round about them haue Galleries, wherein there is alwaies watch kept; I was ſo farre within that Court, that I paſſed ouer foure ſuch great Plaines, and whereſoeuer I looked, ſtill I ſaw Gates vpon Gates, to goe into other places, and in that ſort I went as farre as euer any Netherlander was, which was to the Stable where his beſt Horſes ſtood, alwaies paſſing a great long way: it ſeemeth that the King hath many Souldiers, he alſo hath many Gentlemen, who when they come to the Court ride vpon Horſes, and ſit vpon their Horſes as the women in our Countrie doe, on each ſide hauing one man, on whom they hold faſt; and the greater their eſtate is, the more men they haue going after them. Some of their men haue great Shields, wherewith they keepe the Gentleman from the Sunne; they goe next to him, except thoſe on whom hee leaneth, the reſt come after him, playing ſome on Drums, others vpon Hornes and Fluits, ſome haue a hollow Iron whereon they ſtrike. The Horſe alſo is led by a man, and ſo they ride playing to the Court. Such as are very great Gentlemen haue another kind of Muſicke, when they ride to the Court, which is like the ſmall Nets wherewith men in our Countries goe to the Fiſh-market, which Net is filled full of a certaine kind of thing, which they ſtrike vpon with their hands, and make it rattle, in like ſort as if their Nets were filled full of great Nuts, and ſo a man ſhould ſtrike vpon it: thoſe great Gentlemen haue many Seruants, that goe after them ſtriking vpon ſuch Nets. The King hath very many Slaues, both men and women, whereof there are many women Slaues ſeene, carrying of Water, Iniamus, and Palme-wine, which they ſay is for the Kings wiues. There are alſo many men Slaues ſeene in the Towne, that carrie Water, Iniamus, and Palme-wine, which they ſay is for the King; and many carrie Graſſe, which is for their Horſes; and all this is carried to the Court. The King oftentimes ſendeth out Preſents of Spices, which are carried orderly through the ſtreets, and as the other things aforeſaid are carried, ſo they that carrie them goe one after the other, and by them, there goeth one or two with white Rods, ſo that euery man muſt ſtep aſide and giue them place, although hee were a Gentleman.

Sixe hundred Wiues.

The King hath many Wiues, and euery yeere goes twice out of his Court, and viſiteth the Towne, at which time he ſheweth all his Power and Magnificence, and all the Brauerie he can, then he is conuoyed and accompanied by all his Wiues, which are aboue ſixe hundred in number, but they are not all his wedded Wiues. The Gentlemen alſo haue many Wiues, as ſome haue eightie, ſome ninetie and more, and there is not the meaneſt Man among them but hath ten or twelue Wiues at the leaſt, whereby in that place you find more Women then Men.

Gentlemen their making.

They alſo haue ſeuerall places in the Towne, where they keepe their Markets; in one place they haue their great Market day, called Dia de Ferro; and in another place, they hold their little Market, called Ferro: to thoſe places they bring all things to ſell, as quicke Dogs, whereof they eate many, roaſted Apes, and Monkies, Rats, Parots, Hens, Iniamus, Manigette in bonches, dried Agediſſen, Palme-oyle, great Beanes, diuers ſorts of Kankrens, with many other kinds of Fruits, and Beaſts, all to eate. They alſo bring much Wood to burne, Cups to eate and drinke in, and other ſorts of wooden Diſhes and Cups for the ſame purpoſe, great ſtore of Cotton, whereof they make Clothes to weare vpon their bodies. Their Apparell is of the ſame faſhion as theirs of the Golden Coaſt is, but it is fairer and finelier made; but to ſhew you the manner thereof it would be ouer-long. They alſo bring great ſtore of Iron-worke to ſell there, and Inſtruments to fiſh withall, others to plow and to till the land withall; and many Weapons, as Aſſagaies, and Kniues alſo for the Warre. This Market and Traffique is there very orderly holden, and euery one that commeth with ſuch Wares or Merchandiſes to the Market, knowes his place where to ſtand, to ſell his Wares in the ſame, they alſo ſell their Wiues as they doe in the Golden Coaſt.

The

Their faſhions.

The Gentlemen goe with great Maieſtie to the Court, hauing diuers kinds of Muſicke with them, and are waited on by diuers other Negroes, one hauing a Drum whereon he playes, others with other Inſtruments; vpon the Horſe there is a little woodden Stoole ſet, and on the Horſe necke they hang a Cow-bell, which rings when the Horſe goes; there goes two Negroes by him, on either ſide one, on whom he leaneth. Thoſe Negroes that attend on him, come euery morning to the Gentlemans doore, and ſtay there till he comes out, to wait on him. Their Horſes are very little, not much greater then Calues in our Countrie, which is the cauſe that our Horſes are ſo much eſteemed of in that Coaſt. The King hath many Souldiers which are ſubiect vnto him, and they haue a Generall to command ouer them, as if he were their Captaine: This Captaine hath ſome Souldiers vnder him, and goes alwaies in the middle of them, and they goe round about him, ſinging and leaping, and making great noiſe, and ioy. Thoſe Captaines are very proud of their Office, and are very ſtately, and goe exceeding proudly in the ſtreets. Their Swords are broad, which hang about their necke in a leather Girdle which reacheth vnder their armes: they alſo vſe Shields and Aſſagaies, as they in the Golden Coaſt doe.

Warres.

Apparell.

They cut their Haire diuerſly, each after the beſt manner that they can. Their apparell alſo is the like, and vſe ſtrange cuſtomes, not one like vnto another, all finely made of Cotton, ouer the which they commonly weare Holland Cloth. The young Maides and Boyes goe ſtarke naked, vntill they marrie, or that the King giueth them licence to put on ſome Apparell; then they make great ioy, becauſe of the friendſhip the King therein ſheweth vnto them, and then they make their bodies very cleane, and ſtrike it ouer with white Earth, and are very ſtately, ſitting in great glorie and magnificence. Their friends come vnto them, to congratulate them, as if ſhee were a Bride. They are circumciſed, both Boyes and Girles. They cut three great ſtreakes in their bodies on either ſide, each ſtreake being three fingers broad, which they doe from their ſhoulders downe to their waſtes, which they thinke to be a great good deed tending to their ſaluation. They are very conſcionable, and will doe no wrong one to the other, neither will take any thing from ſtrangers, for if they doe, they ſhould afterward be put to death, for they lightly iudge a man to die for doing any wrong to a ſtranger, wherein they vſe ſtrange Iuſtice: they bind the Offenders armes behind at his backe, and blind his eyes, then one of the Iudges comes and lifts him vp with his armes, in ſuch manner, that his head lieth almoſt vpon the ground, then comes the Executioner and cuts off his head; which done, his bodie is quartered, and the quarters caſt into the fields to bee deuoured by certaine Birds, which Birds they feare much, and no man dares doe them any hurt, nor chaſe them, for there are men purpoſely appointed to giue them meat and drinke, which they carrie with great magnificence, but no man may ſee it carried, nor bee preſent, but thoſe that are appointed to doe it; for euery man runnes out of the way when they ſee thoſe men come to carrie the Birds meate, and they haue a place where the Birds come purpoſely for it. They reſpect ſtrangers very much, for when any man meeteth them, they will ſhun the way for him and ſtep aſide, and dare not bee ſo bold to goe by, vnleſſe they be expreſſely bidden by the partie, and prayed to goe forward, and although they were neuer ſo ſore laden, yet they durſt not doe it; for if they did, they ſhould be puniſhed for it: They are alſo very couetous of honour, and willingly deſire to be praiſed and rewarded for any friendſhip they doe.

Moucheron.

From Rio de Angra, to Rio de Gabom, is fifteene miles. The Inhabitants of Rio de Gabom, are not friends with them of Rio de Angra, for they oftentimes make warre one againſt the other, and then againe make peace, ſo that the friendſhip betweene them is very ſmall, they haue a King among them, but they are not ſo mightie as thoſe of Rio de Gabom, but better people to deale withall then thoſe of Gabom, for ſince the time that they of Gabom, tooke the Skonce and the goods of Moncherom, and kild the men, they of Rio de Angra would haue nothing to doe with them, but were grieued that it was done, but becauſe they feared them of Rio de Gabom, and of Pongo; they durſt not withſtand them: with thoſe Negroes there is much Traffique to be had, and there are many Teeth to buy, but not ſo many as in Rio de Gabom, but when you Traffique there you muſt not ſtay long with your ſhallop or boate there, for if you deale not with them for their Teeth in two or three dayes, you ſhall not deale with them at all, for by reaſon that few Pinnaſſes or ſhallops come thither to Traffique, therefore the Negros bring all their Teeth thither at the firſt, to barter for other Wares. Their ſpeech is not like theirs of Gabom, but for opinion and religion they are almoſt one, and agree therein.

R. Gabom.

Pongo.

Three Kings.

The Riuer of Gabom, lyeth about fifteene miles Southward from Rio de Angra, and eight miles North-ward from Cape De Lopo Gonſalues, and is right vnder the Equinoctiall Line, about fifteene miles from Saint Thomas, and is a great Land well and eaſily to bee knowne. At the mouth of the Riuer there lyeth a Sand three or foure fathome deepe, whereon it beateth mightily, with the ſtreame which runneth out of the Riuer into the Sea. This Riuer in the mouth thereof is at leaſt foure miles broad, but when you are about the Iland called Pongo, it is not aboue two miles broad, on both ſides the Riuer there ſtandeth many trees. The Iland lyeth neere to the North, then the South, and a little further there is an Iland wherein there is good prouiſion to be had, as of Bannanas, Iniamus, and Oranges; about two miles within the Riuer you haue eight fathome deepe, good anchor ground. This Coaſt reacheth North and South, the depth a good way from the Land about a mile or a mile and an halfe; is, twelue and thirteene fathome, and halfe a mile from the Land, it is foure, fiue, ſixe, and ſeuen fathome, you may goe neere about it, becauſe all along that Coaſt it is good anchor ground, by night you haue the wind off from the Land, and by day from the Sea. This Riuer hath three mightie Kings in it, which raigne therein, as one King on the North point, called Caiombo, and one vpon the South point, called Gabom, and one in the Iland, called Pongo, which hath a monſtrous high hill; hee of Pongo is ſtrongeſt of men, and oftentimes makes warre vpon him of Gabom, he of Caiombo, is a great friend to him of Pongo, and the Inhabitants of the South point of the Riuer, are great friends with thoſe of Cape De Lopo Gonſalues.

Cape Gonſalues.

The twelfth of December, we got to Cape Lopo Gonſalues, where we found three ſhips lying at anchor, two of Zeland, and one of Schiedam. Touching their Religion, they neither know God nor his Commandements, ſome of them pray to the Sunne, others to the Moone, others to certaine trees or to the Earth, becauſe they receiue food from thence, ſo that they eſteeme it a great fault to ſpit vpon the Earth, they goe little abroad in the ſtreets, but when they goe abroad, they carrie a great broad Knife in their hands: both the men and the women haue their bodies pinkt in diuers ſorts, ſtrange to behold, wherein they put certaine Greaſe, mixt with colour, they will not drinke before they firſt put ſome of it out of the Pot or Kan, and when they eate they vſe not to drinke, but when they haue dined, then they drinke a great draught of water, or of Palme-wine, or elſe of Malaſſo, which is mixed or made of Honey water. In the morning as ſoone as it is day, they goe to ſalute their Commander, or Chaueponſo, and to bid him good morrow, and when they come to him they fall downe vpon their knees, and clapping both their hands together, ſay, Fino, Fino, Fino, whereby they wiſh peace, quietneſſe, and all good vnto him.

Inceſtuous cuſtomes.

Apparell and ornaments.

They are much addicted to Theeuerie, and to ſteale ſome-thing, ſpecially from Strangers, whereof they make no conſcience, but thinke they doe well, but they will not ſteale one from another. The women alſo are much addicted to Leacherie and Vncleanneſſe; ſpecially, with ſtrange Nations, whereby they thinke they get great credit, and which is more, the men offer their wiues vnto ſtrangers that come thither, and the King himſelfe preſenteth and honoureth Strangers with ſome of his Wiues, whereof he hath a great number. They haue a filthy cuſtome among them, which is, that the King when any of his Daughters waxe great, hee taketh and keepeth them for his Wiues, and the vſe of their bodies. The like is done by the Queenes his Wiues, when their Sonnes beginne to be great, for they lie with them, as well as the King doth with his Daughters. Their apparell is fairer then theirs on the Golden Coaſt, for they trimme their bodies more; about their middles to hide their Priuities. They weare a Mat made of barkes of trees, which is coloured red, with a kind of red wood wherewith they dye it, vpon thoſe Mats, they hang ſome Apes and Monkeyes ſkinnes, or of other wild beaſts, with a Bell in the middle, ſuch as Cowes and Sheepe haue about their neckes. They paint their bodies red, with a colour made of red wood, which is verie good, but much lighter then Braſil-wood, oftentimes they make one of their eyes white, the other red or yellow, with a ſtreake or two in their faces, ſome weare round Beades about their neckes made of barkes, ſome ſmall, ſome great, not much vnlike the Boxes, which men in Hamborough hang vp to put money in for the poore, but they will not ſuffer you to looke what is in them. The men and women alſo for the moſt part goe bare-headed, with their haire ſhoared and pleated diuerſly, ſome of them weare Caps made of the barkes of Cocos or Indian Nut-trees, others weare bunches of feathers made faſt to their haire with little Irons, ſome of them haue holes in their vpper lips, and through their Noſes, wherein they put pieces of Elxen bones, as thicke as a Doller with a ſtalke, which ſhutteth the hole, which being thruſt in comes out at the Noſe, and ouer their mouthes, which ſerueth their turnes well and to good purpoſe, when they are ſicke and fall into a ſwound, and that men cannot open their hands by force, then they take that bone and cruſh the ſap of ſome greene herbe through it, wherwith they come to themſelues again, ſo that they ſerue them for two purpoſes. Some weare Rings in their lips and in the middle part of their Noſes, ſome thruſt ſmall Hornes or Teeth through them, and weare them ſo, which they thinke to bee a great ornament vnto them, others boare a hole in their neather lips, and play with their Tongues in the hole; many of their men and women weare Rings in their eares, whereof ſome weigh at leaſt a pound weight, ſome haue ſtickes thruſt through them, of fiue or ſixe fingers long, moſt of them, ſpecially the men weare a Girdle about their middles made of Buffols skin, with the haire ſtill on it, which meeteth not together before by almoſt a hand breadth, with a piece thereof ſticking out at each end, which is tyed together with a ſmall cord of Threed, vpon their bellies they carrie a broad Iron Knife, the ſheath thereof alſo being of Iron: ſome of thoſe Girdles are a hand broad, and ſome two or three-handfuls broad. Beſides thoſe, they vſe another ſort of Kniues, with two or three points, which are very fearefull to behold, wherewith they caſt at a man, and whereſoeuer they hit they take hold.

Armes.

They are better armed for weapons then they of Myna, or the Golden Coaſt, their Armes are Pikes, or Aſſagaies, Bowes, and Arrowes, long Targets made of barkes of Trees. Their Drummes are narrow below and broad aboue, their Pikes are very cunningly made, for they are very curious Workmen in Iron; the women carrie their Husbands Armes for him, and when they will vſe them, their Wiues giue them: they are cruell and fierce againſt their Enemies, and fight one againſt the other by Land and by Water in Canoes, and when they take any of their Enemies (they were wont in times paſt to eate them, but now they doe it not) they put them to great torture.

Dyet.

The women alſo ſet themſelues out verie faire (as they thinke) and weare many red Copper and Tinne Rings vpon their armes and legges, ſome one, others two; which many times weigh three or foure pound weight, which are ſo faſt and cloſe about their armes, that men can hardly imagine how they get them on; thoſe Rings alſo are worne by ſome men, but more by women. The women weare Aprons made of Ruſhes, which I haue ſeene them make. Touching their clothes and ſetting forth of their bodies, it is beaſtly and vnſeemely. They haue no leſſe vnſeemelineſſe in their eating and houſe-keeping, for they liue like beaſts, and ſleepe vpon Mats laid vpon the ground, which they make very cunningly. The chiefe meate they eate is Iniamus, Batates, and Bannanas. The Bannanas they vſe in ſtead of bread, when it is well dryed, they alſo eate fiſh and fleſh, with Roots and Sugar-canes: they lay all their meate in one diſh, and ſit round about it, and eate like a company of beaſts. Their King called, Mani, eateth his meate out of a Tinne Platter, but the reſt in woodden Platters, ſitting vpon a Mat ſpread vpon the ground.

The King.

Oyſters on Trees.

The greateſt labour the women doe, is to fetch water, to gather fruit, and to dreſſe their meate: their Houſes are finely made of Reeds, and couered ouer with Bannanas leaues, and better and cleaner then the Houſes in the Golden Coaſt. The King hath a faire Houſe greater then any in all the Towne, he is called Golipatta, hee is brauely ſet out with many Beads made of beanes and ſhels, which are dyed red, and hanged about his necke, and vpon his armes and legs, they ſtrike their faces with a kind of white colour, they are very much ſubiect to their Kings, and doe him great honour when they are in his preſence: before his Houſe there lyeth an Iron Peece, with certaine Baſes which he bought in former time of the Frenchmen. They are verie ſubtill to learne how to vſe all kind of Armes; ſpecially, our ſmall Gunnes. Their Winter is from April to Auguſt, at which time it is exceeding hot, and few cleere daies, and then it raineth mightily with great drops, which fall ſo hot vpon the ſtones that they preſently dry vp, by which meanes alſo the waters are thicke and ſlimie, in the Riuers and alſo vpon the ſhoare. There is good fiſhing, Oyſters grow on the branches of the Trees, which hang downe into the water. They draw their ſpeech long, ſo that it is better to learne then theirs in the Golden Coaſt. The Cape is low Land, and is well to be knowne, for there is no Land thereabouts, that reacheth ſo farre Weſterly into the Sea as that doth, it lyeth about a degree Southward from the Equinoctiall Line. When you are at the Cape, there is a Riuer which lyeth South-eaſt from it, about three miles, whereinto the ſhallops commonly ſaile, to barter for ſome Teeth, which are there to bee had in the Village, which lyeth about foure miles vpwards within the Riuer: In this Riuer: there are many Sea-horſes, and Crocodiles, ſo that it is thought that hee Riuer of Nilus ioyneth thereunto, and hath an iſſue there into the Sea: In this Countrey there are many cruell and ſtrange beaſts, as Elephants, Buffols, Dragons, Snakes, Apes, Monkeyes, which are very fearefull to behold, and very hurtfull.

Cruelty of Gabom.

Of diuers parts of Guinea and eſpecially of Cape Sierra Leona, &c. See Keelings and Finches Iournals bef[illegible]

Thoſe people are better to be dealt withall, then they of Gabom, and we find not, that they beare any ſpight or malice to the Netherlanders, (as they of Gabom haue done) in Anno 1601. to a ſhip called the Palme-tree, and to another, called the Moorein of Delft, as alſo to a Spaniſh Barke, who in ſhort time, one after the other they fell vpon, and taking them, kild all the men and eate them, with diuers other ſuch trickes more by them done: but for that it is good for the ſhips in that place to lie and refreſh themſelues, to fetch water, and to Calke them: therefore all the ſhips lie moſt at this place, to make themſelues ready, and fit to returne backe againe. About this Cape there lie many Sands, whereon a ſhip might ſoone ſmite, but behind the bankes there is no feare, the Lead will giue a man meanes to find his way well enough.

The ſtrange aduentures of ANDREW BATTELL of Leigh in Eſſex, ſent by the Portugals priſoner to Angola, who liued there, and in the adioyning Regions, neere eighteene yeeres.

ANDREW BATTELL, his Voyage to the Riuer of Plate, who being taken on the Coaſt of Braſill, was ſent to Angola.

Abraham Cocks Voyage.

Santa Cruz.

Calmes on the Coaſt of Guinea.

IN the yeere 1589, Abraham Cocke of Lime-houſe, began his Voyage toward the Riuer of Plate, with two Pinnaſſes of fiftie Tuns a peece: The one was called, the May-morning; the other, the Dolphine. We ſailed from the Riuer of Thames, the twentieth of Aprill; and the ſixe and twentieth of the ſame moneth, we put into Plimmoth, where we tooke in ſome prouiſion for the Voyage. The ſeuenth of May we put to Sea, and with foule weather were beaten backe againe into Plimmoth, where we remained certaine dayes, and then proceeded on our Voyage: and running along the Coaſt of Spaine, and Barbarie, we put into the Roade of Sancta Cruz, and there ſet our Light-horſe-man together, which we carried in two pieces; Abraham Cocke made great account hereof, thinking that this Boat ſhould haue made his Voyage. This done, we put to Sea, and running along the Coaſt of Guinea, wee were becalmed; becauſe wee wer ſo neere the Coaſt.

The Scorbute.

Cape de las Palmas.

Trecherous people.

San Tome.

Jlhas das Rolas.

They burne a Village.

The Towne of San Tome.

Heere our men fell ſicke of the Scuruie, in ſuch ſort, that there were very few ſound. And being within three or foure Degrees of the Equinoctiall line, we fell with the Cape De las Palmas, where we had ſome refreſhing, wherewith our men recouered. The people of the Cape de las Palmas made much of vs, ſaying, that they would trade with vs: but it was but to betray vs. For they are very trecherous, and were like to haue taken our boat, and hurt ſome of our men. From this Cape we lay South-weſt off, but the Current and the Calmes deceiued vs; ſo that we were driuen downe to the Ile of Saint Thome, thinking that we had beene farther off to the Sea then we were. And being in diſtreſſe for wood and water, we went in on the South end betweene San Tome, and the Ilands Das Rolas: where we rode very ſmooth, and with our Light-horſe-man went on ſhoare, thinking to haue watered: but wee found none in the Iland. Heere we had great ſtore of Plantans and Oranges. We found a Village of Negroes, which are ſent from San Tome, for the Portugals of San Tome do vſe, when their ſlaues be ſicke or weake, to ſend them thither to get their ſtrength againe. For the Ilands are very fruitful; and though there be no freſh water, yet they maintaine themſelues with the wine of the Palme trees. Hauing refreſhed our ſelues with the fruit of this Iland, we burned the Village. And running on the Eaſt ſide of San Tome, we came before the Towne; but we durſt not come neere: for the Caſtle ſhot at vs, which hath very good Ordnance in it.

Cape de lopo Gonſalues.

Some hurt.

Then we lay Eaſt and by South toward the Maine, and in foure and twentie houres, we had ſight of the Cape De lopo Gonſalues: and being within three Leagues of the ſaid Cape, we caſt about and ſtood againe toward the Iland of San Tome, and turned vp on the Weſt ſide of the Iland: and comming to a litle Riuer, which runneth out of the Mountaines, we went on ſhore with our Light-horſe-man, with ſixe or ſeuen Buts to fill with water. But the Gouernour had imbosked one hundred men of the Iland; and when we were on ſhore, they came vpon vs, and killed one of our men, and hurt another: wherefore we retired to our Boat, and gate aboord.

They depart from San Tome.

Then Abraham Cocke determined to fetch the Coaſt of Braſil, and lay Weſt South-weſt into the Sea: and being ſome fiftie Leagues off, we fell into a Scull of Dolphins, which did greatly relieue vs: for they did follow our ſhip all the way, till we fell with the land: which was ſome thirtie dayes. And running along the Coaſt of Braſil, till we came to Illha Grande, which ſtandeth in fiue Degrees Southward of the line: we put in betwixt the Iland and the Maine, and haled our ſhips on ſhoare, and waſhed them, and refreſhed our ſelues, and tooke in freſh water. In this Iland are no Inhabitants, but it is very fruitfull. And being heere ſome twelue dayes, there came in a little Pinnaſſe, which was bound to the Riuer of Plate, which came in to water, and to get ſome refreſhment: and preſently we went aboord, and tooke the Portugall Merchant out of the Pinnaſſe, which told Abraham Cocke, that within two moneths there ſhould two Pinnaſſes come from the Riuer of Plate, from the Towne of Buenos Aieres.

From this Towne there come euery yeere foure or fiue Carauels to Bahia in Braſil, and to Angola in Africa: which bring great ſtore of Treaſure, which is tranſported ouer land out of Peru, into the Riuer of Plate. Then Abraham Cocke deſirous to make his Voyage, tooke ſome of the Dolphins men into his ſhip, and ſent the Dolphin home againe, which had not as yet made auy Voyage. This Portugall Merchant carried vs to a place in this Iland, where there was a baniſhed man, which had planted great ſtore of Plantans; and told vs, that we might with this fruit goe to the Riuer of Plate: for our bread and victuals were almoſt all ſpent.

With this hard allowance we departed from this Iland, and were ſixe and thirty dayes before we came to the Ile of Labos Marinos, which is in the mouth of the Riuer of Plate. This Iland is halfe a mile long, and hath no freſh water; but doth abound with Seales and Sea-morſſes: in ſuch ſort, that our Light-horſe-man could not get on ſhoare for them, without we did beat them with our Oares; and the Iland is couered with them. Vpon theſe Seales we liued ſome thirty dayes, lying vp and downe in the Riuer, and were in great diſtreſſe of victuals. Then we determined to run vp to Buenos Aires, and with our Light-horſe-man to take one of the Pinnaſſes that rid at the Towne. And being ſo high vp the Riuer as the Towne, wee had a mightie ſtorme at South-weſt, which draue vs backe againe, and we were faine to ride vnder Iſla Verde, that is, the Greene Iland, which is in the mouth of the Riuer on the North ſide.

Here we were all diſcomfoted for lacke of victuals, and gaue ouer the Voyage, & came to the Northward again, to the Ile of Sant Sebaſtian, lying iuſt vnder the Tropicke of Capricorne. There we went on ſhoare to catch fiſh, & ſome went vp into the woods to gather fruit: for we weare all in a manner famiſhed. There was at that time a Canoe fraught with Indians, that came from the Towne of Spiritu Sancto. Theſe Indians landed on the Weſt ſide of the Iland, and came through the woods, and tooke fiue of vs, and carried vs to the Riuer of Ianeiro. After this miſchance, our Captaine Abraham Cocke went to Sea, and was neuer heard of more.

When wee that were taken had remained foure moneths in the Riuer of Ianeiro, I and one Torner were ſent to Angola in Africa to the Citie of Saint Paul, which ſtandeth in nine Degrees to the Southward of the Equinoctiall line. Heere I was preſently taken out of the ſhip, and put into priſon, and ſent vp the Riuer Quanſa to a Towne of Garriſon, which is one hundred and thirtie miles vp the Riuer. And being there two moneths, the Pilot of the Gouernors Pinnaſſe died: then I was commanded to carrie her downe to the Citie, where I preſently fell ſicke, and lay eight moneths in a poore eſtate: for they hated me becauſe I was an Engliſh-man. But being recouered of my ſickeneſſe, Don Iohn Hurtado de Mendoça, who then was Gouernor, commanded me to goe to the Riuer of Congo, called Zaire, in a Pinnaſſe, is to trade for Elephants teeth, Wheate, and Oyle of the Palme-tree. The Riuer Zaire is fiftie Leagues from the Citie to the Northward, and is the greateſt Riuer in all that Coaſt. In the mouth of this Riuer is an Iland, called the Ile De Calabes, which had at that time a Towne in it. Heere we laded our Pinnaſſe with Elephants teeth, Wheate, and Oyle of the Palme, and ſo returned to the Citie againe.

His trading on the Coaſt, offer to eſcape, impriſonment, exile; eſcape, and new impriſonment: his ſending to Elambo, and Bahia Das Vaccas; Many ſtrange occurrents.

THen I was ſent to Longo, which is fifteene Leagues to the North-ward of the Riuer Zaire: and carried all Commodities fit for that Countrey; as long Glaſſe-beads, and round Blew beads, and Seed beads, and Looking-glaſſes, Blew and Red courſe cloth, and Iriſh Rugs, which were very rich Commodities. Heere wee ſold our cloth at a great rate, for we had for one yard of cloth, three Elephants teeth, that weighed one hundred and twenty pound: and we bought great ſtore of Palme-cloth, and Elephants tayles. So in little time, we laded our Pinnaſſe. For this Voyage I was very welcome to the Gouernour; who promiſed me my liberty, if I would ſerue him. So I went in his Pinnaſſe two yeeres and a halfe vpon the Coaſt.

Then there came a ſhip of Holland to the Citie, the Merchant of which ſhip promiſed to carrie me away. And when they were readie to depart, I went ſecretly aboord; but I was bewrayed by Portugals, which ſailed in the ſhip, and was fetched on ſhoare by the Sergeants of the Citie, and put in Priſon, and lay with great bolts of Iron two moneths, thinking that the Gouernour would haue put me to death: but at laſt, I was baniſhed for euer, to the Fort of Maſſangano, to ſerue in the Conqueſt of thoſe Parts. Here I liued a moſt miſerable life for the ſpace of ſixe yeeres, without any hope to ſee the Sea againe.

He fleeth from Maſſangano. The Riuer Coanza. Elamba.

In this Fort there were Egyptians and Moriſcoes, that were baniſhed as my ſelfe. To one of theſe Egyptians I brake my mind, and told him, that it were better for vs to venture our liues for our libertie, then to liue in that miſerable place. This Egyptian was as willing as my ſelfe, and told me, he would procure ten of his conſorts to goe with vs. So we got three Egyptians, and ſeuen Portugals. That night, we got the beſt Canoe that we could find, and went downe the Riuer Coanza: and being as farre downe as Mani Cabech, which is a little Lord in the Prouince of Elamba, we went on ſhoare with our twelue Muskets, Powder, and Shot. Heere we ſunke our Canoe, becauſe they ſhould not know where we went on ſhoare. We made a little fire in the Wood, and ſcorched Gmie Wheat, which we brought from Maſſangano to relieue vs, for we had none other food.

Mani Cabech. Lake of Caſanſa. The Towne of Mani Caſanſa, is twelue leagues from the Citie of San Paulo.

Aſſoone as it was night, wee tooke our iourney all that night, and the next day without any water at all. The ſecond night, we were not able to goe, and were faine to digge and ſcrape vp rootes of Trees, and ſucke them to maintaine life. The third day, wee met with an old Negro, which was trauailing to Mani Cabech, we bound his hands behind him, and made him leade vs the way to the Lake of Caſanſa. And trauailing all the day in this extreme hot Countrie, we came to the Banſa, or Towne of Mani Caſanſa, which lieth within the Land twelue leagues from the Citie of San Paulo. Here we were forced to aske water: but they would giue vs none. Then we determined to make them flee their houſes with our ſhot: but ſeeing that we were deſperately bent, they called their Lord Mani Caſanſa, who gaue vs water and faire ſpeeches, deſiring vs to ſtay all night, onely to betray vs: but we departed preſently, and reſted that night in the Lake of Caſanſa.

The Riuer Bengo. Abundance of dangerous Crocodiles. The Riuer Dande. Manibangono.

The fourth day at night, we came to the Riuer which is toward the North, and paſſed it with great danger. For there are ſuch abundance of Crocodiles in this Riuer, that no man dare come neere the Riuer ſide, where it is deepe. The fift day at night, wee came to the Riuer Dande, and trauailed ſo farre to the Eaſtward, that we were right againſt the Serras, or Mountaines of Manibangono, which is a Lord that warreth againſt the King of Congo, whither wee intended to goe. Here we paſſed the Riuer, and reſted halfe the night. And being two leagues from the Riuer, we met with Negroes, which asked vs, whither we trauailed. Wee told them, that we were going to Congo. Theſe Negroes ſaid, that we were in the wrong way, and that they were Maſicongos, and would carrie vs to Bambe, where the Duke of Bambe lay.

Bamba.

So wee went ſome three miles Eaſt vp into the Land, till wee perceiued that we were the wrong way: for we trauailed by the Sunne, and would goe no farther that way: and turned backe againe to the Weſtward, they ſtood before vs with their Bowes, Arrowes and Darts, readie to ſhoot at vs. But we determining to goe through them, diſcharged ſixe Muskets together, and killed foure; which did amaze them, and made them to retire. But they followed vs foure or fiue miles, and hurt two of our companie with their Arrowes. The next day, we came into the borders of Bamba, and trauailed all that day. At night, we heard the ſurge of the Sea. The ſeuenth day in the morning, we ſaw the Captain of the Citie come after vs with Horſmen, and great ſtore of Negroes. Hereupon our companie being diſmayed, ſeuen of our faint-hearted Portugals hid themſelues in the Thickes. I and the foure Egyptians thought to haue eſcaped: but they followed vs ſo faſt, that we were faine to goe into a little Wood. Aſſoone as the Captaine had ouertaken vs, he diſcharged a volley of ſhot into the Wood, which made vs loſe one another.

A.B. left alone. His reſolution.

Thus being all alone, I bethought my ſelfe, that if the Negroes did take me in the Woods, they would kill me: wherefore, thinking to make a better end among the Portugals and Mulatos, I came preſently out of the Wood with my Musket readie charged, making none account of my life. But the Captaine, thinking that we had beene all twelue together, called to me, and ſaid, Fellow Souldier, I haue the Gouernours pardon, if you will yeeld your ſelues, you ſhall haue no hurt. I hauing my Musket readie, anſwered the Captaine, that I was an Engliſhman, and had ſerued ſixe yeeres at Maſſangono, in great miſerie; and came in companie with eleuen Portugals and Egyptians, and here am left all alone; and rather then I will be hanged, I will die amongſt you. Then the Captaine came neere vnto me, and ſaid; Deliuer thy Musket to one of the Souldiers, and I proteſt, as I am a Gentleman, and a Souldier, to ſaue thy life, for thy reſolute mind. Whereupon I yeelded vp my Musket and my ſelfe.

He yeeldeth. They were taken priſoners, and ſent againe to the Citie of San Paulo.

Then the Captaine commanded all the Souldiers and Negroes to ſearch the Woods, and to bring them out aliue or dead; which was preſently done. Then they carried vs to the Citie of San Paulo: where I, and the three Egyptians lay in Priſon three moneths, with Collars of Iron, and great Bolts vpon our legs, and hardly eſcaped.

At that time the Gouernour ſent foure hundred men, that were baniſhed out of Portugall, vp into the Countrey of Elambe. Then I was with Proclamation through the Citie baniſhed for euer to the Warres, and marched with them to Sowonſo, which is a Lord, that obeyeth the Duke of Bambe: from thence to Samanibanſa, and then to Namba Calamba, which is a great Lord, who did reſiſt vs: but we burned his Towne, and then he obeyed vs, and brought three thouſand warlike Negroes to vs. From thence to Sollancango a little Lord, that fought very deſperately with vs, but was forced to obey: and then to Combrecaianga, where we remayned two yeares. From this place wee gaue many aſſaults, and brought many Lords to ſubiection. Wee were fifteene thouſand ſtrong, and marched to the Outeiro, or Mountaine of Ingombe. But firſt we burned all Ingaſia, which was his Countrey, and then we came to the chiefe Towne of Ingombe, which is halfe a dayes iourney to goe vp.

This Lord came vpon vs with more then twentie thouſand Bowes, and ſpoyled many of our men. But with our ſhot we made a great ſpoyle among them, whereupon he retyred vp into the Mountaine, and ſent one of his Captaines to our Generall; ſignifying, that the next day hee would obey him. The next day he entred our Campe in great pompe with Drums, Petes, and Pongoes, or Waytes, and was royally receiued: and he gaue great Preſents, and greatly inriched the Generall, and them which marched vp. Vpon the toppe of the Mountaine is a great Plaine, where he hath his chiefe Towne; verie freſh, full of Palme-trees, Sugar-canes, Potatos, and other roots, and great ſtore of Oranges and Limons. Here is a Tree that is called Engeriay, that beareth a fruit as big as a Pome-water, and hath a ſtone in it, preſent remedie for the Wind Cholicke, which was ſtrange to the Portugals. Here is a Riuer of freſh water, that ſpringeth out of the Mountaine, and runneth all along the Towne. Wee were here fiue dayes, and then we marched vp into the Countrey, and burned and ſpoyled for the ſpace of ſixe weekes; and then returned to Engombe againe with great ſtore of ſlaues, ſheepe and Goates, and great ſtore of Margarite ſtones, which are currant money in that Land. Here we pitched our Campe a league from this pleaſant Mountaine, which remayned twelue monethes: but I was ſhot in my right legge, and many Portugals and Mullatos, were carryed to the Citie to be cured.

A fruit good for the Collick

Then the Gouernonr ſent a Frigat to the South-ward with ſixtie Souldiers, my ſelfe beeing one of the company, and all kind of Commodities. We turned vp to the South-ward till wee came into twelue degrees. Here we found a faire ſandie Bay. The people of this place brought vs Cowes and Sheepe, Wheate and Beanes; but we ſtayed not there, but came to Bahia das Vaccas, that is, the Bay of Cowes, which the Portugals call, Bahia de Torre, becauſe it hath a rocke like a Towre. Here wee roade on the North-ſide of the Rocke in a ſandie Bay; and bought great ſtore of Cowes, and Sheepe bigger then our Engliſh Sheepe, and very fine Copper. Alſo we bought a kind of ſweet wood, called Cacongo, which the Portugals eſteeme much, and great ſtore of Wheate and Beanes. And hauing laded our Barke wee ſent her home: but fiftie of vs ſtayed on ſhoare, and made a little Fort with rafters of wood, becauſe the people of this place are treacherous, and not to to bee truſted. So in ſeuenteene dayes wee had fiue hundred head of Cattell: and within tenne dayes the Gouernour ſent three ſhippes and ſo wee departed to the Citie.

In this Bay may any ſhip ride without danger, for it is a ſmooth Coaſt. Here may any ſhippe that commeth out of the Eaſt Indies refreſh themſelues. For the Portugals Carracks now of late come along that Coaſt, to the Citie to water and refreſh themſelues. Theſe people are called, Endallanbondos, and haue no gouernment among themſelues: and therefore they are verie trecherous, and thoſe that trade with theſe people muſt ſtand vpon their owne guard. They are very ſimple and of no courage, for thirtie or fortie men may goe boldly vp into the Countrey, and fetch downe whole Heards of Cattell. We bought the Cattell for blue glaſſe-beads of an inch long, which are called, Mopindes; and payd fifteene beads for one Cow.

Here is great ſtore of fine Copper, if they would worke in their Mines: but they take no more, then they weare for a brauerie. The men of this place weare skinnes about their middles, and beads about their neckes. They carrie Darts of Iron, and Bow and Arrowes in their hands. Diſcouerie of the Gagas; Their Warres, Man-eating; Ouer-running Countries: His Trade with them, betraying, eſcape to them, and liuing with them, with many ſtrange Aduentures. And alſo the Rites and manner of life obſerued by the Iagges or Gagas, which no Chriſtian could euer know well but this Authour.

Benguele.

IN our ſecond Voyage turning vp along the Coaſt, we came to the Morro, or Cliffe of Benguele, which ſtandeth in twelue degrees of Southerly latitude. Here we ſaw a mighty Cãpe of men on the Southſide of the riuer Coua. And being deſirous to know what they were, we went on ſhore with our Boat; & preſently there came a troop of fiue hundred men to the water ſide. We asked them, Who they were? then they told vs, that they were the Gagas, or Gindes; that cames from * Serra de Lion, and paſſed through the Citie of Congo; and ſo trauelled to the Eaſt-ward of the great Citie of Angola, which is called Dongo. The great Gaga, which was their Generall, came downe to the waters ſide to ſee vs. For hee had neuer ſeene white men before. He asked, wherefore we came? we told him, that wee came to trade vpon the Coaſt: then he bade vs welcome, and called vs on ſhoare with our Commodities: we laded our ſhip with ſlaues in ſeuen dayes, and bought them ſo good cheape, that many did not coſt one Riall a piece, which were worth in the Citie twelue Millie-reys.

* Lopes was deceiued in their originall. The Gagas, a moſt warlike people. He in diſcourſe with me, called them Iagges, & their Chiefe the Great Iagge. I thinke he writ them Gagas for Giagas by falſe ſpelling. The Iagges Campe. Their manner of remoue. Their vaine-glorie.

Being readie to depart the great Giaga ſtayed vs, and deſired our Boat to paſſe his men ouer the Riuer Coua: for he determined to ouer-runne the Realme of Benguele, which was on the North-ſide of the Riuer Coua. So we went with him to his Campe, which was very orderly intrenched with piles of wood. We had Houſes prouided for vs that night, and many burthens of Palme-wine, Cowes, Goats, and Flowre.

In the morning before day the Generall did ſtrike his Gongo, which is an Inſtrument of War that ſoundeth like a Bell; and preſently made an Oration with a loud voice, that all the Campe might heare, that he would deſtroy the Benguelas, with ſuch couragious and vehement ſpeeches, as were not to be looked for among the Heathen people: and preſently they were all in armes, and marched to the Riuers ſide, where he had prouided Gingados. And beeing readie with our Boat and Gingados, the Generall was faine to beate them backe, becauſe of the credit who ſhould be firſt. We carried ouer eightie men at once; and with our Muskets we beat the enemie off, and landed, but many of them were ſlaine. By twelue of the clocke all the Gagas were ouer.

The Benguelas ſlaughter.

Then the Generall commanded all his Drums, Tauales, Petes, Pongos, and all his Inſtruments of warlike Muſicke to ſtrike vp, and gaue the on-ſet, which was a bloudie day to the Benguelas. Theſe Benguelas preſently broke and turned their backes, and a very great number of them were ſlaine, and were taken Captiues, man, woman and child. The Prince Hombiangymbe was ſlaine, which was Ruler of this Countrey, and more then one hundred of his chiefe Lords, and their heads preſented, and throwne at the feet of the great Gaga. The men, women, and children, that were brought in captiue aliue, and the dead Corpſes that were brought to bee eaten, were ſtrange to behold. For theſe Gagas are the greateſt Canibals and Man-eaters that bee in the World, for they fed chiefly vpon mans fleſh, hauing all the Cattell of that Countrey.

The Gagas are the greateſt Man-eaters in the World.

They ſetled themſelues in this Countrey, and tooke the ſpoile of it. Wee had great Trade with theſe Gagas fiue monethes, and gained greatly by them. Theſe Gagas were not contented to ſtay in this place of Benguela, although they lacked almoſt nothing. For they had great ſtore of Cattell and Wheate, and many other Commodities, but they lacked Wine: for in theſe parts there are no Palme-trees.

The Prouince of Bambala.

After the fiue monethes were expired, they marched toward the Prouince of Bambala, to a great Lord, that is called Calicanſamba, whoſe Countrey is fiue dayes iourney vp into the Land. In theſe fiue monethes ſpace we made three Voyages to the Citie of San Paul, and comming the fourth time we found them not.

Moſarigoſat, a great Negro Lord.

Being loth to returne without Trade, wee determined to goe vp into the Land after them; So we went fifty on ſhore, and left our ſhip riding in the Bay of Benguela to ſtay for vs: and marching two dayes vp into the Countrey, we came to a great Lord, which is called Moſarigoſat: and comming to his firſt Towne, we found it burned to the ground, for the Gagas had paſſed and taken the ſpoyle. To this Lord we ſent a Negro, which we had bought of the Gagas, and liued with vs, and bid him ſay, that he was one of the great Gagas men, and that hee was left to carrie vs to the Campe. This Lord bade vs welcome for feare of the great Gaga: but hee delayed the time, and would not let vs paſſe, till the Gaga was gone out of his Countrey. This Lord Moſarigoſat, ſeeing that the Gagas were cleere of him, began to palter with vs, and would not let vs goe out of his Land, till we had gone to the warres with him; for hee thought himſelfe a mightie man hauing vs with him. For in this place they neuer ſaw white man before, nor Gunnes. So we were forced to goe with him, and deſtroyed all his Enemies, and returned to his Towne againe. Then we deſired him, that he would let vs depart: But he denyed vs, without we would promiſe him to come againe, and leaue a white man with him in pawne.

Theſe Portugals and Mulatos being deſirous to get away from this place, determined to draw lots who ſhould ſtay: but many of them would not agree to it. At laſt they conſented together that it were fitter to leaue me, becauſe I was an Engliſhman, then any of themſelues. Here I was faine to ſtay perforce. So they left me a Musket, Powder, and ſhot; promiſing this Lord Moſtarigoſat, that within two monethes they would come againe, and bring an hundred men to helpe him in his Warres, and to trade with him: but all was to ſhift themſelues away, for they feared that he would haue taken vs all Captiues. Here I remayned with this Lord till the two monethes were expired, and was hardly vſed, becauſe the Portugals came not according to promiſe.

The chiefe men of this Towne would haue put me to death, and ſtripped me naked, and were readie to cut off mine head. But the Lord of the Towne commanded them to ſtay longer, thinking that the Portugals would come. And after that I was let looſe againe, I went from one Towne to another, ſhifting for my ſelfe, within the liberties of this Lord. And beeing in feare of my life among them, I ranne away, purpoſing to goe to the Campe of the Gagas.

In danger of death.

And hauing trauelled all that night, the next day I came to a great Towne, which was called, Caſhil, which ſtood in a mightie ouer-growne thicket. Here I was carried into the Towne to the Lord Caſhil; and all the Towne great and ſmall came to wonder at mee, for in this place there was neuer any white man ſeene. Here were ſome of the great Gagas men, which I was glad to ſee, and went with theſe Gagas to Calicanſamba, where the Campe was.

Caſhil a great Towne.

This Towne of the Lord Caſhil is very great, and is ſo ouer-growne with Olicondie Trees, Cedars, and Palmes, that the ſtreets are darkened with them. In the middle of the Towne there is an Image, which is as bigge as a man, and ſtandeth twelue foot high: and at the foot of the Image there is a Circle of Elephants Teeth, pitched into the ground. Vpon theſe Teeth ſtand great ſtore of dead mens skuls, which are killed in the warres, and offered to this Image. They vſe to powre Palme-wine at his feet, and kill Goats, and powre their bloud at his feet. This Image is called Queſango, and the people haue a great beliefe in him, and ſweare by him; and doe beleeue when they are ſick, that Queſango is offended with them. In many places of this Towne were litle Images, and ouer them great ſtore of Elephants Teeth piled.

A Giantly Image called Queſango, and their Idolatrous Rites.

The ſtreets of this Towne were paled with Palme-canes very orderly. Their Houſes were round like an Hiue, and within hanged with fine Mats very curiouſly wrought. On the South-eaſt end of the Towne was a Mokiſo, which had more then three Tunnes of Elephants Teeth piled ouer him.

Their ſtreets and houſes.

A Mokiſſo, or Idoll.

From this Towne of Caſhil, I trauelled vp into the Countrey with the Gagas two dayes, and came to Calicanſamba, where the great Gaga had his Campe, and was welcome to him. Among the Caniball people, I determined to liue, hoping in God, that they would trauell ſo farre to the Weſt-ward, till we ſhould ſee the Sea againe; and ſo I might eſcape by ſome ſhip. Theſe Gagas remayned foure monethes in this place, with great abundance and plentie of Cattle, Corne, Wine, and Oyle, and great triumphing, drinking, dancing, and banquetting with mans fleſh, which was an heauie ſpectacle to behold.

He commeth to the Campe of the great Gaga.

Of theſe Giagas, reade alſo Pigafettas book of Congo, tranſlated into Engliſh by M. Hartwell, and my Pilgrimage, l.7 But none could ſo well know them as this Author, which liued ſo long with them.

At the end of foure monethes they marched toward the Serras, or Mountaines of Caſhindcabar, which are mightie high, and haue great Copper-mynes, and they tooke the ſpoyle all the way as they went. From thence they went to the Riuer Longa, and paſſed it, and ſetled themſelues in the Towne of Calango, and remayned there fiue or ſixe monethes. Then wee aroſe, and entred into the Prouince of Tondo, and came to the Riuer Gonſa, and marched on the South-ſide of the Riuer to a Lord that was called Makellacolonge, neere to the great Citie of Dongo. Here we paſſed ouer mightie high Mountaines, and found it very cold.

Hauing ſpent ſixteene moneths among theſe Canibals, they marched to the Weſtward againe, and came along the Riuer Gonſa, or Gunza, to a Lord that is called Shillambanſa, Vnkle to the King of Angola. We burned his chiefe Towne, which was after their faſhion very ſumptuouſly builded. This place is very pleaſant and fruitfull. Heere we found great ſtore of wild Peacockes, flying vp and downe the Trees, in as great abundance as other Birds. The old Lord Shillambanſa was buried in the middle of the Towne, and had an hundred tame Peacockes kept vpon his Graue: which Peacockes he gaue to his Mokeſo, and they were called Angello Mokeſo, that is, The Deuils or Idols Birds, and were accounted as holy things. He had great ſtore of Copper, Cloth, and many other things laid vpon his Graue; which is the order of that Countrey.

From this place we marched to the Weſtward, along the Riuer Coanza, and came right againſt the Serras, or Mountaines of Cambanbe, or Serras de Prata. Here is the great fall of water, that falleth right downe, and maketh a mightie noyſe, that is heard thirtie miles. Langere. He obeyed the Great Gaga, and carried vs to a Lord, called Caſoch, which was a great Warrier; for he had ſome ſeuen yeeres before, ouerthrowne the Portugals Campe, and killed eight hundred Portugals, and fortie thouſand Negroes, that were on the Portugals ſide. This Lord did ſtoutly withſtand the Gagas, and had the firſt day a mightie battaile: but had not the victorie that day. So wee made a Sconſe of Trees after their faſhion, and remayned foure moneths in the Warres with them. I was ſo highly eſteemed with the Great Gaga, becauſe I killed many Negroes with my Musket, that I had any thing that I deſired of him. He would alſo, when they went out to the Warres, giue charge to his men ouer me. By this meanes I haue beene often carried away in their armes, and ſaued my life. Here we were within three dayes Iourney of Maſſangano, before mentioned, where the Portugals haue a Fort: and I ſought meanes, and got to the Portugals againe with Merchant Negroes, that came to the Campe to buy Slaues.

Orations.

There were in the Campe of the Gagas, twelue Captains. The firſt, called Imbe Calandola, their Generall a man of great courage. He warreth all by enchantment, and taketh the Deuils counſell in all his exploits. He is alwaies making of ſacrifices to the Deuill, and doth know many times what ſhall happen vnto him. Hee beleeueth that hee ſhall neuer die but in the Warres. There is no Image among them, but he vſeth certaine ceremonies. He hath ſtraight Lawes to his Souldiers: for, thoſe that are faint-hearted, and turne their backes to the Enemie, are preſently condemned and killed for cowards, and their bodies eaten. He vſeth euery night to make a warlike Oration vpon an high Scaffold, which doth encourage his people.

Their fortifying.

It is the order of theſe people, whereſoeuer they pitch their Campe, although they ſtay but one night in a place, to build their Fort, with ſuch wood or trees as the place yeeldeth; ſo that the one part of them cutteth downe trees and boughs, and the other part carrieth them, and buildeth a round Circle with twelue Gates. So that euery Captaine keepeth his Gate. In the middle of the Fort is the Generals houſe, intrenched round about, and hee hath many Porters that keepe the Doore. They build their houſes very cloſe together, and haue their Bowes, Arrowes, and Darts, ſtanding without their Doores: And when they giue alarme, they are ſodainly all out of the Fort. Euery companie at their Doores keepe very good watch in the night, playing vpon their Drums and Tauales.

A Riuer hauing great ſtore of Cold, to the South of Bahia das Vaccas.
They found of this Gold.

Theſe Gagas told vs of a Riuer that is to the Southward of the Bay of Vaccas, that hath great ſtore of Gold: and that they gathered vp great ſtore of graines of Gold vpon the Sand, which the freſh water driueth downe in the time of raine. We found ſome of this Gold in the handles of their Hatchets, which they vſe to engraue with Copper, and they called it Copper alſo, and doe not eſteeme it.

Palme-wine, how drawne.

Theſe Gagas delight in no Countrie, but where there is great ſtore of Palmares, or Groues of Palmes. For they delight greatly in the Wine, and in the Fruit of the Palme, which ſerueth to eate and to make Oyle: and they draw their Wine contrarie to the Imbondos. Theſe Palme-trees are ſixe or ſeuen fathoms high, and haue no leaues but in the top: and they haue a deuice to goe vp to the top of the Tree, and lay no hands on it, and they draw the Wine in the top of the tree in a Bottle.

Such difference betweene Waſpes and Bees.

But theſe Gagas cut the Palme-trees downe by the roote, which lie ten dayes before they will giue Wine. And then they make a ſquare hole in the top and heart of the Tree, and take out of the hole euery morning a quart, and at night a quart. So that euery Tree giueth two quarts of Wine a day for the ſpace of ſixe and twentie dayes, and then it drieth vp.

What they doe being reſiſted.

Stratagems.

When they ſettle themſelues in any Countrie, they cut downe as many Palmes as will ſerue them Wine for a moneth: and then as many more. So that in a little time they ſpoile the Countrie. They ſtay no longer in a place, then it will affoord them maintenance. And then in Harueſt time they ariſe, and ſettle themſelues in the fruitfulleſt place that they can find; and doe reape their Enemies Corne, and take their Cattell. For they will not ſowe, nor plant, nor bring vp any Cattell, more then they take by Warres. When they come into any Countrie that is ſtrong, which they cannot the firſt day conquer, then their Generall buildeth his Fort, and remayneth ſometimes a moneth or two quiet. For he ſaith, it is as great warres to the Inhabitants to ſee him ſetled in their Countrey, as though he fought with them euery day. So that many times the Inhabitants come and aſſault him at his Fort: and theſe Gagas defend themſelues and fleſh them on for the ſpace of two or three dayes. And when their Generall mindeth to giue the onſet, he will in the night put out ſome one thouſand men: which do emboske themſelues about a mile from their Fort. Then in the morning the great Gaga goeth with all his ſtrength out of the Fort, as though he would take their Towne. The Inhabitants comming neere the Fort to defend their Countrey, being betweene them, the Gagas giue the watch-word with their Drummes, and then the embosked men ariſe, ſo that very few eſcape. And that day their Generall ouerrunneth the Countrey.

His attire.
Bamba ſhells, Maſo ſhells, of great account among the Gagas.

The great Gaga Calando hath his haire very long, embroydred with many knots full of Banba ſhels, which are very rich among them, and about his necke a Collar of Maſoes, which are alſo ſhels, that are found vpon that Coaſt, and are ſold among them for the worth of twentie ſhillings a ſhell: and about his middle he weareth Landes, which are Beades made of the Oſtridges Egges. He weareth a Palme cloth about his middle, as fine as Silke. His body is carued and cut with ſundry workes, and euery day anointed with the fat of men. Hee weareth a peece of Copper croſſe his noſe, two inches long, and in his eares alſo. His body is alwaies painted red and white. He hath twenty or thirty wiues, which followed him when he goeth abroad; and one of them carrieth his Bow and Arrowes, and foure of them carry his Cuppes of drinke after him. And when hee drinketh, they all kneele downe, and clap their hands and ſing.

Cruell brauery

They vſe this ceremony in Florida.

Their women weare their haire with high trompes, full of Bamba ſhels, and are anointed with Ciuet. They pull out foure of their teeth; two aboue and two below for a brauery: And thoſe that haue not their teeth out, are loathſome to them, and ſhall neither eate nor drinke with them. They weare great ſtore of Beades about their neckes, armes and legs; about their middles, Silke cloathes.

Fooliſh Gallantry.

The women are very fruitfull, but they enioy none of their children: For as ſoone as the woman is deliuered of her Childe, it is preſently buried quicke; So that there is not one Childe brought vp in all this Generation. But when they take any Towne, they keepe the Boyes and Girles of thirteene or foureteene yeares of age, as their owne children. But the men and women they kill and eate. Theſe little Boyes they traine vp in the warres, and hang a collar about their neckes for a diſgrace, which is neuer taken off till he proueth himſelfe a man, and bring his enemies head to the Generall: And then it is taken off, and he is a Free-man, and is called Gonſo, or Souldier. This maketh them all deſperate, and forward to be free, and counted men: and ſo they doe increaſe. In all this Campe there were but twelue naturall Gagas that were their Captaines, and foureteene or fifteene women. For it is more then fiftie yeares ſince they come from Serra de Lion, which was their natiue Countrey. But their Campe is ſixteene thouſand ſtrong, and ſometimes more.

When the great Gaga Calandola, vndertaketh any great enterprize againſt the Inhabitants of any Countrey, he maketh a ſacrifice to the Diuell, in the morning before the Sunne riſeth. He ſitteth vpon a ſtoole, hauing on each ſide of him a man Witch: then he hath fortie or fiftie women which ſtand round about him, holding in each hand a Zeueras, or wilde horſes tayle, wherewith they doe flouriſh and ſing. Behind them are great ſtore of Petes, Ponges, and Drummes, which alwaies play. In the midſt of them is a great fire; vpon the fire an earthen pot with white powders, where-with the men Witches doe paint him on the forehead, temples, thwart the breaſt and belly, with long ceremonies and inchanting tearmes. Thus he continueth till ſunne is downe. Then the Witches bring his Caſengala, which is a weapon like an hatchet, and put it into his hand, and bid him bee ſtrong againſt his enemies: for his Mokiſo is with him. And preſently there is a Man-childe brought, which forth-with he killeth. Then are foure men brought before him; two whereof, as it happeneth, he preſently ſtriketh and killeth; the other two, he commandeth to be killed without the Fort.

His ſolemne ſacrifice to the Deuill.

Butcherly rites.

Here I was by the men Witches commanded to goe away, becauſe I was a Chriſtian. For then the Diuell doth appeare to them, as they ſay. And preſently he commandeth fiue Cowes to be killed in the Fort, and fiue without the Fort: And likewiſe as many Goates, and as many Dogges; and the bloud of them is ſprinkled in the fire, and their bodies are eaten with great feaſting and triumph. And this is vſed many times by all the other Captaines of their Armie.

When they bury the dead, they make a vault in the ground, and a ſeate for him to ſit. The dead hath his haire newly imbroydred, his body waſhed, and anointed with ſweete powders. He hath all his beſt robes put on, and is brought betweene two men to his graue, and ſet in his ſeate, as though he were aliue. He hath two of his wiues ſet with him, with their armes broken, and then they couer the vault on the top. The Inhabitants when they dye, are buried after the ſame faſhion, and haue the moſt part of their goods buried with them. And euery moneth there is a meeting of the kindred of the dead man, which mourne and ſing dolefull ſongs at his graue, for the ſpace of three daies; and kill many Goates, and powre their bloud vpon his graue, and Palme-Wine alſo; and vſe this ceremony as long as any of their kindred be aliue. But thoſe that haue no kindred think themſelues vnhappy men, becauſe they haue none to mourne for them when they dye. Theſe people are very kind one to another in their health; but in their ſickneſſe they doe abhorre one another, and will ſhun their company.

His returne to the Portugals : inuaſions of diuers Countries, abuſe, flight from them, and liuing in the Woods diuers moneths : His ſtrange Boate, and comming to Loango.

Maſangano, a Towne of Portugal.

Salt Mines.
Siluer Mines.

The Riuer Coanza.

BEing departed from the Gagas, I came to Maſangano, where the Portugals haue a Towne of Garriſon. There was at that time a new Gouernor, which was called, Sienor Iuan Continho: who brought authority to conquer the Mines or Mountaines of Cambamba: and to performe that ſeruice, the King of Spaine had giuen him ſeauen yeares cuſtome, of all the Slaues and Goods that were carried thence to the Weſt-Indies, Braſil, or whither ſoeuer: with condition, that he ſhould build three Caſtles; one in Demba, which are the ſalt Mines; the other, in Cambamba, which are the Siluer Mines; and the other in Bahia das Vaccas, or The Bay of Cowes. This Gentleman was ſo bountifull at his comming, that his fame was ſpread through all Congo, and many Mulatos and Negroes came voluntarily to ſerue him. And being ſome ſixe moneths in the Citie, he marched to the Outaba of Tombe: and there ſhipped his Souldiers in Pinnaſſes, and went vp the Riuer Conſa, or Coanza, and landed at the Outaba of Songo, ſixtie miles from the Sea. This Lord Songo is next to Demba, where the Salt Mines be. In this place there is ſuch ſtore of Salt, that moſt part of the Countrey are perfect cleere Salt, without any earth or filth in it: and it is ſome three foot vnder the earth as it were Ice: and they cut it out in ſtones of a yard long, and it is carried vp into the Countrey, and is the beſt commoditie that a man can carry to buy any thing whatſoeuer.

Stone-ſalt, a ſpeciall commoditie. The like is in Poland.

Andrew Battle made Sergeant of a Portugall Company.

Seignior Iuan de Continho dieth.

Here the Gouernour ſtayed ten daies, and ſent a Pinnaſſe to Maſangano, for all the beſt Souldiers that were there. So the Captain of the Caſtle ſent me down among an hundred Souldiers, and I was very well vſed by the Gouernor; and he made me a Sergeant of a Portugall Company, and then he marched to Machimba; from thence to Cauo, and then to Malombe, a great Lord. Here we were foure daies, and many Lords came and obeyed vs. From thence we marched to a mightie Lord, called Angoykayongo, who ſtood in the defence of his Countrey, with more then ſixtie thouſand men. So we met with him, and had the victory, and made a great ſlaughter among them. We tooke captiues all his Women and Children, and ſetled our ſelues in his Towne, becauſe it was a very pleaſant place, and full of Cattle and victuals. And being eight daies in this Towne, the Gouernour ſickned and dyed, and left a Captaine in his roome to performe the ſeruice.

Serras da Prata.

Newes of the death of the Queene of England, 1603.

After we had beene two moneths in the Countrey of Angoykayongo, we marched toward Cambambe, which was but three daies iourney, and came right againſt the Serras da Prata, and paſſed the Riuer Coanza, and preſently ouer-ranne the Countrey, and built a Fort hard by the Riuers ſide. Here I ſerued two yeares. They opened the Siluer Mines: but the Portugals did not like of them as yet; becauſe they yeelded ſmall ſtore of Siluer. This new vp-ſtart Gouernour, was very cruell to his Souldiers, ſo that all his voluntary men left him; and by this meanes he could goe no farther. At this time, there came newes by the Ieſuites, that the Queene of England was dead; and that King Iames had made peace with Spaine. Then I made a petition to the Gouernour, who granted me licence to goe into my Countrey: And ſo I departed with the Gouernor and his Traine to the Citie of Saint Paul.

Bamba.
The Onteiro of Congo.

But he left fiue hundred Souldiers in the Fort of Cambambe, which they hold ſtill. Then I went with a Portugall Marchant to the Prouince of Bamba: and from thence to the Onteiro, or Citie ſtanding vpon a Mountaine of Congo: from thence to Gongon and Batta: and there wee ſold our commodities, and returned in ſixe moneths to the Citie againe. Then I purpoſed to haue ſhipped my ſelfe for Spaine, and thence homewards. But the Gouernour denyed his word, and commanded me to prouide my ſelfe within two daies, to goe vp to the Conqueſt againe. This Gouernour had ſerued his three yeares, and the Citizens looked euery day for another out of Portugall. So I determined to abſent my ſelfe for ten or twentie daies, till the other Gouernour came, and then to come to the Citie againe. For euery Gouernour that commeth, maketh Proclamation for all men that be abſent, to come with free pardon.

The Riuer Bengo.
The Riuer Dande.

The ſame day at night, I departed from the Citie, with two Negro Boyes that I had, which carried my Musket, and ſixe pounds of Powder, and an hundred Bullets, and that little prouiſion of victuals which I could make. In the morning I was ſome twentie miles from the Citie, vp along the Riuer Bengo, and there I ſtayed certaine dayes; and then paſſed Bengo, and came to the Riuer Dande, which is to the North-ward; purpoſing to know what newes was in the Citie, for I was neere the high-way of Congo: And one of my Negroes inquired of thoſe that paſſed, and brought me word; That it was certaine, that the new Gouernour came not that yeare. Now I was put to my ſhifts, whether I would goe to the Citie againe and be hanged, or to ſtay and liue in the Woods: for I had runne away twice before. So I was forced to liue in the Wood a moneth, betwixt the Riuers of Dande and Bengo.

Then I went to Bengo again, to Mani Kaſwea, & paſſed ouer the Riuer, and went to the lake of Caſanſa. Here is the greateſt ſtore of wild beaſts, that is in any place of Angola. About this lake I ſtaid ſix monethes, & liued only vpon dried fleſh, as Buffes, Deere, Mokokes, Impolancas, and Ro-bucks, and other ſorts which I killed with my Musket, and dryed the fleſh, as the Sauages doe, vpon an Hurdle three foot from the ground, making vnderneath it a great fire, and laying vpon the fleſh greene boughes, which keepe the ſmoke and heate of the fire downe, and dry it. I made my fire with two little ſtickes, as the Sauages vſe to doe. I had ſometimes Guiney Wheate, which my Negro Boy would get of the Inhabitants for pieces of dryed fleſh. This Lake of Caſanze doth abound with fiſh of ſundry ſorts. I haue taken vp a fiſh, that hath skipped out of the water on ſhoare, foure foot long, which the Heathen call Sombo. Thus after I had liued ſixe monethes with dryed fleſh and fiſh, and ſeeing no end of my miſerie, I wrought meanes to get away.

The Lake of Caſanſa.

The manner of the Sauages drying of their fleſh.

In this Lake are many little Ilands, that are full of trees, called Memba; which are as light as Corke, and as ſoft. Of theſe trees I built a Gingado, with a Knife of the Sauages that I had, in the faſhion of a Boat, nayled with woodden pegs, and rayled round about, becauſe the Sea ſhould not waſh me out, and with a Blanket that I had, I made a ſayle, and prepared three Oares to row withall. This Lake of Caſunza is eight miles ouer, and iſſueth into the Riuer Bengo. So I entred into my Gingado, and my two Negro Boyes, and rowed into the Riuer Bengo, and ſo came downe with the current twelue leagues to the barre. Here I was in great danger, becauſe the Sea was great; and being ouer the barre, I rowed into the Sea, and then ſayled afore the wind along the Coaſt, which I knew very well, minding to goe to the Kingdome of Longo, which is toward the North: and being that night at Sea, the next day I ſaw a Pinnaſſe come before the wind, which came from the Citie, and was bound to San Thome, and ſhee came neere to mee. The Maſter was my great friend, for we had beene Mates together, and for pitie ſake he tooke me in, and ſet me on ſhoare in the Port of Longo; where I remayned three yeares, and was well beloued of the King, becauſe I killed him Deere and Fowles with my Musket.

He made a Boat with a Knife.

§. V.

Of the Prouince of Engoy, and other Regions of Loango, with the Cuſtomes there obſerued by the King and people.

FRom the Point of the Palmar, which is the North-ſide of the Riuer Zaire, is the Port of Cabenda, where many ſhips vſe to water and refreſh themſelues; and it is fiue leagues Northwards. This place is called Engoy, and is the firſt Prouince of Longo, and is full of Woods and Thickets. And ſeuen leagues North-wards of that place is the Riuer Cacongo; a very pleaſant place and fruitfull. Here is great ſtore of Elephants Teeth: and a Boat of ten tunnes may goe vp the Riuer.

The Mombales haue great Trade with them, and paſſe the Riuer Zaire in the night, becauſe then it is calme; and carrie great ſtore of Elephants Teeth to the Towne of Mani Sonna, and ſell them in the Port of Pinda to the Portugals, or any other ſtranger, that firſt commeth.

The Mombales.

And foure leagues from Cacongo, is the Riuer of Caye, or Longo Leuyes. This Towne of Caye is one of the foure Seates or Lordſhips of Longo: and then the Angra, or Gulfe das Almadias. In this Gulfe or Bay are great ſtore of Canoes and Fiſhermen, becauſe the Sea is ſmoother there, then vpon the Coaſt. And two leagues North-ward is the Port of Longo. And it is a ſandie Bay; and a ſhip may ride within a Musket ſhot of the ſhoare in foure or fine fathomes.

The Riuer of Caye.

Golfam das Almadias.

The Port of Longo.

The Towne of Mani Longo is three miles from the waters ſide, and ſtandeth on a great Plaine. This Towne is full of Palme and Plantan Trees, and very freſh: and their Houſes are builded vnder the Trees. Their ſtreets are wide and long, and alwayes cleane ſwept. The King hath his Houſes on the Weſt-ſide, and before his doore hee hath a Plaine, where hee ſitteth, when hee hath any feaſting or matters of warres to treate of. From this Plaine there goeth a great wide ſtreet ſome Musket ſhot from the place, and there is a great Market euery day, and it doth begin at twelue of the clocke.

Here is great ſtore of Palme-clothes of ſundry ſorts, which is their Merchandizes: and great ſtore of Victuals, Fleſh, Hens, Fiſh, Wine, Oyle and Corne. Here is alſo very fine Logwood, which they vſe to dye withall; it is the root of the Logwood, which is the beſt, and Molangos of Copper. Here is likewiſe great ſtore of Elephants Teeth, but they ſell none in the Market place. The King hath ten great Houſes, and is neuer certaine to be found, but in the afternoone, when he commeth to ſit. And then he keepeth alwayes one Houſe. The Houſe is very long, and at twelue of the clocke it is full of Noblemen. They ſit vpon Carpets vpon the ground. The Houſe is alwayes full of people till mid-night. The laſt King Gembe, neuer vſed to ſpeake in the day, but alwayes in the night. But this King ſpeaketh in the day: howbeit hee ſpendeth moſt of the day with his Wiues. And when the King commeth in, he goeth to the vpper end of the Houſe, where hee hath his ſeate, as it were a Throne. And when the King is ſet, they clap their hands and ſalute him, ſaying in their Language; Byani Pemba, Ampola, Meneya, Queſinge.

The King Macomas, or wiues.

On the South-ſide of the Kings Houſes he hath a circuit or Village, where his Wiues dwell: and in this circuit no man may come in paine of death. He hath in this place one hundred & fifty Wiues and more. And if any man be taken within this Circuit, if he be with a woman, or doe but ſpeake to her, they be both brought into the Market place, and their heads bee cut off, and their bodies quartered, and lye one day in the ſtreets. The laſt King Gymbe, had foure hundred children by his women.

Strange cuſtome of drinking.

Tyrannicall cuſtome.

When the King drinketh he hath a cup of wine brought, and he that bringeth it hath a Bell in his hand, and aſſoone as he hath deliuered the cup to the King, hee turneth his face from the King, and ringeth the Bell: and then all that be there fall downe vpon their faces, and riſe not till the King haue drunke. And this is very dangerous for any ſtranger, that knoweth not the faſhions: for if any ſeeth the King drink, he is preſently killed, whatſoeuer he be. There was a Boy of twelue yeares, which was the Kings Sonne; This Boy chanced to come vnaduiſedly when his Father was in drinking: preſently the King commanded he ſhould be well apparelled, & victuals prepared. So the youth did eat & drink: afterward the King commanded that he ſhould be cut in quarters, and carryed about the Citie; with Proclamation that he ſaw the King drinke. Likewiſe for his Dyet, when it is dinner time, there is an Houſe of purpoſe, where hee alwayes eateth; and there his Dyet is ſet vpon a Benſa, like a Table: then hee goeth in and hath the doore ſhut. So when he hath eaten, then he knocketh and commeth out. So that none ſee the King eat nor drinke. For it is their Beliefe, that if hee bee ſeene eating or drinking, hee ſhall preſently dye. And this is an order with all the Kings that now are, or ſhall ſucceed, vnleſſe they aboliſh this cruell cuſtome.

Arrogating to giue raine. It raineth here in December.

This King is ſo honoured, as though hee were a God among them: and is called Sambe and Pongo, that is, God. And they beleeue that he can giue them raine, when hee liſteth. So once a yeare when it is time to raine; which is in December, the people come to begge raine, and bring their gifts to the King: for none come emptie. Then he appointeth the day, and all the Lords farre and neere come to that Feaſt with all their troupes, as they goe in the warres. And when all the troupes of men be before the King, the greateſt Lord commeth forth with his Bow and Arrowes, and ſheweth his skill with his weapons, and then he hath a merrie conceit or ieſt, that he ſpeaketh before the King, and kneeleth at his feet, and then the King thanketh him for his loue: and in like manner they doe all. The King ſitteth abroad in a great place, and hath a Carpet ſpread vpon the ground, which is ſome fifteene fathomes about of fine Enſacks, which are wrought like Veluet, and vpon the Carpet his ſeat, which is a fathome from the ground. Then he commandeth his Dembes to ſtrike vp, which are Drums, ſo great that they cannot carrie them, and others that are very great. He hath alſo eight Pongos, which are his Wayters, made of the greateſt Elephants Teeth, and are hollowed and ſcraped light: which play alſo. And with the Drums and Waytes they make an helliſh noyſe. After they haue ſported and ſhewed the King pleaſure, he ariſeth and ſtandeth vpon his Throne, and taketh a Bow and Arrowes in his hand and ſhooteth to the Skie, and that day there is great reioycing, becauſe ſometimes they haue raine. I was once there when the King gaue raine, and it chanced that day to raine mightily, which made the people to haue a great beliefe in their folly.

Policie of the Deuill.

Some white children borne among them.

Here are ſometimes borne in this Countrey white children, which is very rare among them, for their Parents are Negroes. And when any of them are borne, they bee preſented vnto the King, and are called Dondos. Theſe are as white as any white man. Theſe are the Kings Witches, and are brought vp in Witchcraft, and alwayes wayte on the King. There is no man that dare meddle with theſe Dondos. If they goe to the Market, they may take what they liſt, for all men ſtand in awe of them. The King of Longo hath foure of them.

Their Mokiſſo and Checocke. A Village called Kinga.

This King is alſo a Witch and beleeueth in two Idols, which are in Longo. The one is called, Mokiſſo à Longo, the other is called, Checocke. This laſt is a little blacke Image, and ſtandeth in a little houſe, at a Village that is called, Kinga, which ſtandeth in the landing place of Longo. This houſe of Checocke ſtandeth in the high-way, and they that go by clap their hands, which is the courteſie of the Country. Thoſe that be Crafts-men, as Fiſhermen, Hunters & Witches do, offer to this Idol, that they may haue good lucke. This Checocke doth ſometimes in the night come and haunt ſome of his beſt Beloued: ſometimes a man, ſometimes a Boy, or a Woman. And then they be franticke for the ſpace of three houres. And whatſoeuer the franticke Perſon ſpeaketh, that is the will of Checocke. And they make a great Feaſt and dancing at his houſe.

Mokiſſo Gomberi.

There is another Mokiſſo, which is alſo in Kinga, and it is called, Gomberi. It is the name of a woman, and is in an houſe, where an old Witch dwelleth, and ſhee is called, Ganga Gomberi, which is, the Prieſt of Gomberi. Here once a yeare is a Feaſt made, and Ganga Gomberi ſpeaketh vnder the ground. And this is a common thing euery yeare. I haue asked the Negroes what it was, and they told me, that it is a ſtrong Mokiſſo, that is come to abide with Checocke.

Colour of their children when they are borne.

The children in this Countrey are borne white, and change their colour in two dayes to a perfect blacke. As for example, the Portugals which dwell in the Kingdome of Congo, haue ſometimes children by the Negro Women, and many times the Fathers are deceiued, thinking when the child is borne that it is theirs, and within two dayes it proueth the ſonne or daughter of a Negro; which the Portugals doe greatly grieue at: for they reioyce when they haue a Mulato child, thought it be a baſtard.

The Towne of Longo ſtandeth in the middeſt of the foure Lordſhips; and is gouerned by foure Princes, which are the Kings ſiſters ſonnes. For the Kings ſonnes neuer come to be Kings. The firſt is, Mani Cabango. The ſecond, Mani Salag. The third Mani Bock. The fourth, Mani Cay. This Mani Cay is next to be King, and hath his Traine and Court as a Prince. And when the King dieth, he commeth preſently into the ſeat of the King. Then Mani Bock commeth to Cay: Mani Salag commeth to Bock, and Mani Cabango commeth to Salag. And then they prouide another to goe to Cabango. So there be foure Princes that wait to be Kings, when their turnes come. The Mother of theſe Princes is called, Mani Lombo: and ſhee is the higheſt and chiefe woman in all the Land. Shee maketh choice of her husband, and when ſhee is wearie of him, ſhe putteth him away, and taketh another. Her children are greatly honoured; and whoſoeuer paſſeth by them, kneele downe and clap their hands, which is the curteſie of the Countrie. Theſe Lordſhips are champaine grounds, and full of Corne, and Fruit. The men in this Kingdome make great ſtore of Palme-cloth of ſundrie ſorts, very fine and curious. They are neuer idle: for, they make fine Caps of needle-worke, as they goe in the ſtreets.

Foure Princes in Loango.

There is a place two leagues from the Towne of Longo, called Longeri, where all their Kings be buried: and it is compaſſed round about with Elephants teeth pitched in the ground, as it were a Pale, and it is ten roods in compaſſe.

Burial of their Kings.

Theſe people will ſuffer no white man to be buried in their Land. And if any Stranger or Portugall come thither to trade, and chance to die, he is carried in a Boat two miles from the ſhoare, and caſt into the Sea. There was once a Portugall Gentleman, that came to trade with them, and had his houſe on ſhoare. This Gentleman died, and was buried ſome foure moneths. That yeere it did not raine ſo ſoone as it was wont, which beginneth about December: ſo that they lacked raine ſome two moneths. Then their Mokiſo told them, that the Chriſtian which was buried, muſt be taken out of the earth, and caſt into the Sea. And ſo he was taken vp, and caſt into the Sea; and within three dayes it rained: which made them haue a great beliefe in the Deuill.

No white man may be buried in Longo.

§. VI.

Of the Prouinces of Bongo, Calongo, Mayombe, Manikeſocke, Motimbas: of the Ape-monſter Pongo, their hunting, Idolatries, and diuers other obſeruations.

To the Eaſtward of Longeri is the Prouince of Bongo, and it bordereth vpon Mocoke, the Great Angeca is King. In this place is great ſtore of Iron, and Palme-cloth, and Elephants teeth, and great ſtore of Corne. To the North-eaſt, is the Prouince of Cango, and it is fourteene dayes iourney from the Towne of Longo. This place is full of Mountaines and rockie ground, and full of Woods, and hath great ſtore of Copper. The Elephants in this place doe excell. Here are ſo many, that the people of Longo fetch great ſtore of Elephants teeth, and bring them to the Port of Longo.

Bongo.

To the Northwards of Longo three leagues is, the Riuer Quelle: and on the North ſide is, the Prouince of Calongo. This Countrey is alwaies tilled, and full of Corne: and is all plaine and champaine ground, and hath great ſtore of Honie. Here are two little Villages, that ſhew at Sea like two homocks: which are the markes to know the Port of Longo. And fifteene miles Northward is the Riuer Nombo: but it hath no depth for any Barke to goe in. This Prouince, toward the Eaſt, bordereth vpon Bongo; and toward the North, vpon Mayombe, which is nineteene leagues from Longo, along the Coaſt.

Calongo.

This Prouince of Mayombe is all Woods and Groues; ſo ouergrowne, that a man may trauaile twentie dayes in the ſhadow without any Sunne or heat. Here is no kind of Corne nor Graine: ſo that the people liueth onely vpon Plantanes, and Roots of ſundrie ſorts very good, and Nuts, nor any kind of tame Cattell, nor Hens. But they haue great ſtore of Elephants fleſh, which they greatly eſteeme; and many kind of wild Beaſts; and great ſtore of Fiſh. Here is a great ſandy Bay, two leagues to the Southward of Cape Negro, which is the Port of Mayombe. Sometimes the Portugals lade Logwood in this Bay. Here is a great Riuer, called Banna: in the Winter it hath no barre, becauſe the generall winds cauſe a great Sea. But when the Sunne hath his South declination, then a Boat may goe in: for then it is ſmooth becauſe of the raine. This Riuer is very great and hath many Ilands, and people dwelling in them. The Woods are ſo couered with Baboones, Monkies, Apes, and Parrots, that it will feare any man to trauaile in them alone. Here are alſo two kinds of Monſters, which are common in theſe Woods, and very dangerous.

Mayombe.

Cape Negro is in fifteene degrees to the South of the Line.

Banna Riuer.

The Pongo, or Giant-ape. He told me in conference with him, that one of theſe Pongos tooke a Negro Boy of his, which liued a moneth with them. For they hurt not thoſe which they ſurpriſe at vnawares, except they looke on them, which hee auoyded. He ſaid, their highth was like a mans, but their bigneſſe twice as great. I ſaw the Negro Boy. Their ſtrength. What the other Monſter ſhould be, he hath forgotten to relate: and theſe papers came to my hand ſince his death, which otherwiſe in my often conferences I might haue learned. Perhaps he meaneth the Pigmey Pongo-killers, mentioned.

The greateſt of theſe two Monſters is called, Pongo, in their Language: and the leſſer is called, Engeco. This Pongo is in all proportion like a man, but that he is more like a Giant in ſtature, then a man: for he is very tall, and hath a mans face, hollow eyed, with long haire vpon his browes. His face and eares are without haire, and his hands alſo. His bodie is full of haire, but not very thicke, and it is of a dunniſh colour. He differeth not from a man, but in his legs, for they haue no calfe. Hee goeth alwaies vpon his legs, and carrieth his hands claſped on the nape of his necke, when he goeth vpon the ground. They ſleepe in the trees, and build ſhelters for the raine. They feed vpon Fruit that they find in the Woods, and vpon Nuts, for they eate no kind of fleſh. They cannot ſpeake, and haue no vnderſtanding more then a beaſt. The People of the Countrie, when they trauaile in the Woods, make fires where they ſleepe in the night; and in the morning, when they are gone, the Pongoes will come and ſit about the fire, till it goeth out: for they haue no vnderſtanding to lay the wood together. They goe many together, and kill many Negroes that trauaile in the Woods. Many times they fall vpon the Elephants, which come to feed where they be, and ſo beate them with their clubbed fiſts, and pieces of wood, that they will runne roaring away from them. Thoſe Pongoes are neuer taken aliue, becauſe they are ſo ſtrong, that ten men cannot hold one of them: but yet they take many of their young ones with poiſoned Arrowes. The young Pongo hangeth on his mothers bellie, with his hands faſt claſped about her: ſo that, when the Countrie people kill any of the femals, they take the young one, which hangeth faſt vpon his mother. When they die among themſelues, they couer the dead with great heapes of boughs and wood, which is commonly found in the Forreſts.

A Dog ſold for thirtie pounds.

The Morombes vſe to hunt with their Countrie Dogs, and kill many kinds of little beaſts, and great ſtore of Pheaſants. But their Dogs be dumbe and cannot barke at all. They hang wooden clappers about their neckes, and follow them by the ratling of the clappers. The Huntſmen haue Petes, which they whiſtle their Dogs withall. Theſe Dogs in all this Countrie are very little, with prickt eares, and are for the moſt part red and dunne. The Portugall maſtie Dog, or any other great Dog are greatly eſteemed, becauſe they doe barke. I haue ſeene a Dog ſold vp in the Countrie for thirtie pounds.

The Towne of Mani Mayombe. The author was twelue moneths in this Countrie.

In the Towne of Mani Mayombe is a Fetiſſo, called Maramba: and it ſtandeth in an high basket made like an Hiue, and ouer it a great houſe. This is their houſe of Religion: for they beleeue onely in him, and keepe his lawes, and carrie his Reliques alwaies with them. They are for the moſt part Witches, and vſe their witchcraft for hunting and killing of Elephants, and fiſhing, and helping of ſicke and lame men: and to fore-caſt iourneyes, whether they ſhall ſpeed well or euill. By this Maramba are all thefts and murthers tried: for in this Countrie they vſe ſometimes to bewitch one another to death. And when any dieth, their neighbours are brought before Maramba: and if it be a great man that dieth, the whole Towne commeth to ſweare. The order is, when they come before Maramba, to kneele and claſpe Maramba in their armes, and to ſay; Emeno, eyge bembet Maramba: that is, I come to be tried, O Maramba. And if any of them be guiltie, they fall downe ſtarke dead for euer. And if any of them that ſweare hath killed any man or child before, although it be twentie yeeres paſt, hee preſently dieth. And ſo it is for any other matter. From this place as farre as it is to Cape De lopo Gonſalues, they are all of this ſuperſtition. I was twelue moneths in this place, and ſaw many die after this ſort.

All Angola circumciſed.

Theſe people be circumciſed, as they be through all Angola, except the Kingdome of Congo, for they are Chriſtians. And thoſe that will be ſworne, to Maramba, come to the chiefe Gangas, which are their Prieſts, or Men-witches; as Boyes of twelue yeeres of age, and men and women. Then the Gangas put them into a darke houſe, and there they remaine certaine dayes with very hard diet: after this they are let abroad, and commanded not to ſpeake for certaine dayes, what iniurie ſoeuer they be offered: ſo that they ſuffer great penurie before they bee ſworne. Laſtly, they are brought before Maramba, and haue two markes cut vpon both their ſhoulders before, like an halfe Moone; and are ſworne by the bloud that falleth from them, that they ſhall be true to him. They are forbidden ſome one kind of fleſh, and ſome one kind of fiſh, with many other toyes. And if they eate any of this forbidden meate, they preſently ſicken and neuer proſper. They all carrie a relique of Maramba in a little boxe, and hang it about their necks, vnder their left armes. The Lord of this Prouince of Mayombe, hath the Enſigne or ſhape of Maramba carried before him, whitherſoeuer he goeth; and when he ſitteth downe, it is ſet before him; and when he drinketh his Palme-wine, the firſt cup is powred at the foote of the Mokiſo, or Idoll; and when he eateth any thing whatſoeuer, the firſt piece he throweth toward his left hand, with enchanting words.

His trauaile to Mani Keſock. Mani Seat.

From Cape Negro Northward is a great Lord, called Mani Seat; which hath the greateſt ſtore of Elephants teeth of any Lord in the Kingdome of Longo: for, his people practiſe nothing elſe but to kill Elephants. And two of thoſe Negroes will eaſily kill an Elephant with their darts. And here is great ſtore of Logwood.

Great ſtore of Logwood. Mani Keſock.

There is another Lord to the Eaſtward, which is called Mani Keſock, and he is eight dayes iourney from Mayombe. Heere I was with my two Negro Boyes, to buy Elephants haires and tayles; and in a moneth I bought twentie thouſand, which I ſold to the Portugals for thirtie Slaues, and all my charges borne. From this place I ſent one of my Negro Boyes to Mani Seat with a Looking-glaſſe: he did eſteeme it much, and ſent me foure Elephants teeth, (very great) by his owne men; and deſired me to cauſe the Portugals, or any other ſhippe, to come to the Northward of the Cape Negro, and hee would make fires where his landing place is: For there was neuer yet any Portugall, or other ſtranger in that place.

Twentie thouſand Elephants tailes.

A Trade a litle North ward of Cape Negro, which is about ſixteene degrees to the South of the line.

To the North-eaſt of Mani Keſock, are a kind of little people, called Matimbas; which are no bigger then Boyes of twelue yeares old, but are very thicke, and liue onely vpon fleſh, which they kill in the Woods with their Bowes and Darts. They pay tribute to Mani Keſock, and bring all their Elephants teeth and tayles to him. They will not enter into any of the Marombos houſes, nor will ſuffer any to come where they dwell. And if by chance any Maramba, or people of Longo paſſe where they dwell, they will forſake that place, and go to another. The Women carry Bow and Arrowes as well as the Men. And one of theſe will walke in the Woods alone, and kill the Pongos with their poyſoned Arrowes. I haue asked the Marombos, whether the Elephant ſheddeth his teeth or no? And they ſay no. But ſometimes they finde their teeth in the Woods, but they find their bones alſo.

The Matimbas a people of very ſmal ſtature, a kind of Pigmeys.

Women vſing Bowes and Arrowes.

Elephants, whether they ſhed their teeth.

When any man is ſuſpected for any offence, he is carried before the King, or before Mani Bomma, which is as it were a Iudge vnder the King. And if it be vpon matter that hee denyeth, and cannot be proued but by their oath; then the ſuſpected perſon is thus ſworne. They haue a kind of roote which they call Imbondo. This roote is very ſtrong, and is ſcraped into water. The vertue of this roote is, that if they put too much of it into the water, the perſon that drinketh it cannot voyd vrine: and ſo it ſtriketh vp into the braine, as though hee were drunke, and he falleth downe as though he were dead. And thoſe that fall are counted as guiltie, and are puniſhed.

The vertue of the roote Imbondo.

In this Countrey none, of any account dyeth, but they kill another for him: for they beleeue they dye not of their owne naturall death, but that ſome other hath bewitched them to death: And all thoſe are brought in by the friends of the dead which they ſuſpect; ſo that many times there come fiue hundred men and women to take the drinke, made of the foreſaid root, Imbonda. They are brought all to the High-ſtreete or Market place, and there the maſter of the Imbonda ſitteth with his water, and giueth euery one a cup of water by one meaſure: and they are commanded to walke in a certaine place till they make water, and then they be free: But he that cannot vrine, preſently falleth downe, and all the people great and ſmall fall vpon him with their kniues, and beate and cut him into pieces. But I thinke the Witch that giueth the water is partiall, and giueth to him whom he will haue to dye the ſtrongeſt water, but no man * can perceiue it that ſtandeth by. And this is done in the Towne of Longo, almoſt euery week in the yeare.

He told me that this root makes the water as bitter as Gall (he taſted it) and one root will ſerue to try one hundred. They which haue drunke and made water after are cleared, before which if dizzines take them, they cry, Vndoke, Vndoke, and preſently execute them. See my Relat. l. 7. c. 10. which I writ from his mouth. Neither may this be aſcribed to the vertue of the herbe, but to the vice of the Deuill, a murtherer and his Inſtruments. The Ganga or Prieſt. * And therefore that coniecture ſeems vnprobable. For how could an ordinary tryall of life where are ſo many ſo perilous; and therefore curious (more then) ſpectators, not perceiue this in ſo long and frequent experience, which coſts ſo many their deareſt friends their deareſt life? I thinke rather that this was the tranſcribers coniecture. I remember no ſuch ſcruple in his Narrations to me, who knowes not the Deuils ambition of Deity, and cruell Miſanthropie or man-hating? This is his Apiſh imitation of Diuinity, and thoſe Rites preſcribed for triall in caſe of Iealouſie, Num. 5. In Guinea like triall is made by Salt, and alſo by the Fetiſſeroes pot. In Benomotapa, by a water alſo: in the Moramba triall before, and Motamba triall by hot Iron in Angola; the Plough-ſhares in old times with vs: and the tryall of Witches ſtill in the Eaſt parts by water, &c. were not vnlike in deceiueable ſuperſtition.

§. VII.

Of the Zebra and Hippopotamus: The Portugals Warres in thoſe parts: The Fiſhing, Graine, and other things remarkable.

IN this Kingdome there is no kind of tame Cattle but Goats; for none other Cattle will liue here. Oxen and Kine haue beene brought hither, but they preſently dye: The Hennes in this place doe ſo abound, that a man may buy thirtie for the worth of ſixe pence in Beads. Heere is ſtore of Pheaſants, and great plenty of Partridges, and wilde Fowle. Here is a kind of Fowle that liues in the Land bigger then a Swan, and they are like an Heron, with long legges, and long neckes, and it is white and blacke, and hath in her breaſt a bare place without Feathers, where ſhe ſtriketh with her Bill. This is the right Pelican, and not thoſe Sea Birds which the Portugals call Pelicans, which are white, and as bigge as Geeſe, and thoſe abound in this Country alſo.

Plenty of wilde Fowle.

The right Pelican.

Here is alſo the Zeuera or Zebra, which is like an horſe; but that his mane, his taile, his ſtrakes of diuers colours downe his ſides and legges, doe make a difference. Theſe *Zeuera*s are all wilde,

The Zeuera or Zebra.

and liue in great heards, and will ſuffer a man to come within ſhot of them, and let them ſhoote three or foure times at them before they will runne away.

The Hippopotamus or Riuer Horſe.

A preſent remedy for the Fluxe.

Moreouer, there are great ſtore of Sea or Riuer Horſes, which feed alway on the Land, and liue onely by Graſſe, and they be very dangerous in the water. They are the biggeſt creature in this Countrey, except the Elephant: They haue great vertue in the clawes of their left forefoote, and haue foure clawes on euery foot, like the clawes of an Oxe. The Portugals make Rings of them, and they are a preſent remedy for the Fluxe.

The ZEVERA or ZEBRA.

The Port-wars in Congo.

The Generall of the blacke Campe.

The Portugals make warre againſt the Negroes in this manner. They haue out of Congo a Noble-man, which is knowne to be a good Chriſtian, and of good behauiour. He bringeth out of Congo ſome one hundred Negroes that are his followers. This Macicongo is made Tandala, or Generall ouer the blacke Campe; and hath authoritie to kill, to put downe Lords, and make Lords, and hath all the cheefe doings with the Negroes. And when any Lord commeth to obey; firſt he commeth to the Tandala and bringeth his preſent; as Slaues, Kine, and Goats: Then the Tandala carrieth him before the Portugall Gouernour, and bringeth two Slaues for the Gouernours Page before he goeth in. Then he muſt haue a great gift for the Gouernour; which is ſometimes, thirtie or fortie Slaues, beſides Cattle. And when he commeth before the Gouernour, he kneeleth downe and clappeth his hands, and falleth downe with his face vpon the ground, and then he riſeth and ſaith; I haue beene an enemy, and now I proteſt to be true, and neuer more to lift my hand againſt you. Then the Gouernour calleth a Souldier which hath deſerued a reward, and giueth the Lord to him. This Souldier ſeeth that he haue no wrong: and the Lord acknowledgeth him to be his Maſter; and he doth maintaine the Souldier, and maketh him rich. Alſo, in the warres he commandeth his Maſters houſe to be built before his owne: and whatſoeuer he hath taken that day in the warres, he parteth with his Maſter. So that there is no Portugall Souldier of any account, but he hath his Negro Soua, or Lord.

Their Fiſhing on the Coaſt.

They vſe vpon this Coaſt to Fiſh with harping Irons, and waite vpon a great Fiſh that commeth once a day to feed along the ſhoare, which is like a Grampas. Hee runneth very neere the ſhoare, and driueth great ſkuls of Fiſh before him: and the Negroes runne along the ſhoare, as faſt as they are able to follow him, and ſtrike their Harping Irons round about him, and kill great ſtore of Fiſh, and leaue them vpon the Sand till the Fiſh hath done feeding; and then they come and gather their Fiſh vp. This Fiſh will many times runne himſelfe on ground, but they will preſently ſhoue him off againe, which is as much as foure or fiue men can doe. They call him Emboa, which is in their ſpeech, A Dogge; and will by no meanes hurt or kill any of them. Alſo, they vſe in the Bayes and Riuers, where ſhoald water is, to Fiſh with Mats, which are made of long Ruſhes, and they make them of an hundred fathoms long. The Mats ſwim vpon the Water, and haue long Ruſhes hanged vpon one edge of the Mat, and ſo they draw the Mat in compaſſe, as we doe our Nets. The Fiſhes fearing the Ruſhes that hang downe, ſpring out of the water, and fall vpon the Mat that lyeth flat on the water, and ſo are taken.

A ſtrange kind of fiſhing with Mats.

They haue foure ſorts of Corne in Longo: The firſt, is called Maſanga, and it groweth vpon a ſtraw as bigge as a Reede, and hath an eare a foote long, and is like Hemp-ſeed. The ſecond, is called Maſembala. This is of great increaſe: for of one kernell there ſprings foure or fiue Canes, which are tenne foote high, and they beare halfe a pinte of Corne a peece. This graine is as big as Tares, and very good. Thirdly, they haue another that groweth low like Graſſe, and is very like Muſtard-ſeed: and this is the beſt. They haue alſo the great Guiney Wheate, which they call Maſ-impota. This is the leaſt eſteemed.

Foure ſorts of corne in Longo.

They haue very good Peaſon, ſomewhat bigger then ours: but they grow not as ours do. For the poodes grow on the rootes vnderneath the ground; and by their leaues they know when they be ripe. They haue another kind of Peaſon, which they call Wandos. This is a little tree; and the firſt yeare that it is planted, it beareth no fruit: but after it beareth fruit three yeares, and then it is cut downe.

Two ſorts of Peaſon: how they grow.

Their Plantan trees beare fruit but once, and then are cut downe: and out of the root thereof ſpring three or foure young ones.

They haue great ſtore of Hony, which hangeth in the Elicondy Trees. They gather it with an hollow piece of Wood or Cheſt, which they hang in the top of the Tree, and once a yeare it is full, by ſmoake rewarding the laborious Creatures with robbery, exile, death.

Their Hony.

T*HIS* Alicunde or Elicondy Tree is very tall, and exceeding great; ſome as big as twelue men can fathome, ſpreading like an Oake; ſome of them are hollow, and from the liberall skies receiue ſuch plentie of water, that they are Hoſpitall entertainers of thouſands in that thirſtie Region. Once haue I knowne three or foure thouſand remaine at one of thoſe Trees, and thence receiuing all their watery prouiſion for foure and twentie houres, and yet not emptie. The Negroes climbed vp with pegges of hard Wooke (which that ſofter eaſily receiueth, the ſmoothneſſe not admitting other climbing) and I thinke that ſome one Tree holds fortie tunne of water. This Tree affoords no leſſe bountifull hoſpitality to the backe then belly, yeelding (as her belly to their bellies, ſo) her backe to their backes: excepting that this is better from the younger Trees, whoſe tenderer backes being more ſeaſonable for Diſcipline, are ſoundly beaten (for mans fault, whence came the firſt nakedneſſe) whereby one fathome cut from the Tree, is extended into twentie, and is preſently fit for wearing, though not ſo fine as the Iuzanda tree yeelds. This tree yeelds excellent cloath from the inner backe thereof by like beating. Of their Palme Trees, which they keepe with watering and cutting euery yeare; they make Veluets, Sattins, Taffataes, Damaskes, Sarcenets, and ſuch like: out of the leaues cleanſed and purged, drawing long threads, and euen for that purpoſe. They draw Wine (as is ſaid) from the Palme Tree; there is another kind of Palme Tree, which beareth a fruite good for the ſtomacke, and for the Liuer moſt moſt admirable.

I added this that followes out of his owne reports to my ſelfe. Other like things you may find from his relation ſcattered in my Pilgrimage.

The Iuzanda.

One Crocodile was ſo huge and greedy, that he deuoured an Alibamba, that is, a chained company of eight or nine Slaues: but the indigeſtible Iron paid him his wages, and murthered the murtherer, found after in his belly. I haue ſeene them watch their prey, haling in gennet, Man or other Creature into the water. But one Souldier thus wrapt in ſhallower water, drew his knife, tooke his Taker in the belly and ſlue him.

§. I.

The iourney by Sea from Lisbone to the Kingdome of Congo*: Of the Ayre, Winds, Raines, Temperature thereof.*

IN the yeare 1588. when Don Sebaſtian King of Portugall, embarked himſelfe for the Conqueſt of the Kingdome of Morocco : Edward Lopes borne at Beneuentum. (a place foure and twentie miles diſtant from Lisbone, neere vpon the South ſhore of the Riuer Tagus) ſayled likewiſe in the moneth of Aprill towards the hauen of Loanda, ſituate in the Kingdome of Congo, in a ſhip called S. Anthony, belonging to an Vncle of his, and charged with diuers marchandiſes for that Kingdome: And it was accompanied with a Patache (which is a ſmall veſſell) whereunto the ſhip did continually yeeld good guard, and miniſtred great releefe, conducting and guiding the ſame with lights in the night time, to the end it ſhould not loſe the way, which the ſhippe it ſelfe did keepe. He arriued at the Iſland of Madera, belonging to the King of Portugall, diſtant from Lisbone about ſixe hundred miles, where he remained fifteene daies, to furniſh himſelfe with freſh Victuall and Wine; which in great abundance groweth in that Iſland, yea and in mine opinion the beſt in the world, whereof they carry abroad great ſtore into diuers Countries, and eſpecially into England. He prouided there alſo ſundry other Confections and Conſerues of Sugar, which in that Iſland are made and wrought both in great quantity, and alſo ſingular excellency. From this Iſland they departed, leauing all the Canaries belonging to Caſtile, and tooke hauen at one of the Iſlands of Cape Verde, called S. Anthony, without hauing any ſight thereof before they were come vpon it: and from thence to another called S. Iacopo, which commandeth all the reſt, and hath a Biſhop & a Chaplaine in it, that rule and gouerne them: and here they prouided themſelues againe of victuals. Theſe Iſlands of Cape Verde were eſtabliſhed by Ptolomee in the Tables of his Geography, to be the beginning of the Weſt, together with the Cape or Promontorie which he termeth Cornu vltimum, or the Iſlands Macarie or Bleſſed, which we commonly call Fortunate. In theſe Iſlands of Cape Verde: the Portugals do often arriue, and in thoſe Countries do Trafficke with ſundry marchandiſes, as little balles of diuers coloured Glaſſe, and other ſuch things, wherein thoſe people doe greatly delight, and Holland cloath, and Caps and Kniues, and coloured Clothes: In exchange whereof they bring backe againe, Slaues, Waxe, Hony, with other kind of food, and Cotten-cloth of ſundry colours.

Now the ſhippe called S. Anthony, holding on his courſe, met with the generall windes, * and then turned their Prow and their Sayles, by North, and by North-weſt on the right hand towards the Kingdome of Congo. And ſayling on-wards cloſely with the halfe ſhippe, they came in twelue daies and twelue nights, to the Iſland of S. Elena, not looking for the ſame, nor thinking of it. This Iſland was ſo called, becauſe on the Feaſt day of S. Helena, which falleth vpon the third day of May, it was by the Portugals firſt deſcried. And as it is very ſmall, ſo is it (as it were) ſingular by it ſelfe: for being ſituate in the height of ſixteene degrees towards the Antarctike, it containeth in compaſſe nine miles about, and is farre diſtant from the firme Land.

* Theſe generall winds are the Eteſij, which blow from ſome Northerly point vnto twentie nine degrees South latitude. For about ſixe moneths together for this cauſe they vſe to ſet off toward Braſil, to gaine the wind and returne to Congo.

Iſle of S. Elena, all of Ebenwood.

From the Iſland of S. Helena, they made ſayle with the ſame weather, and ſo within the ſpace of ſeuenteene daies came to the hauen of Loanda, which is in the Prouince of Congo, the winds being ſomewhat more calme then they were afore. This is a very ſure and great hauen, ſo called of an Iſland of the ſame name, whereof we ſhall ſpeake hereafter.

The ſecond courſe of ſayling to Loanda.

The Iſle of S. Thomas.

There are two courſes of ſayling from the Iſland of Cape Verde to Loanda; the one of them now declared, which being neuer vſed afterwards, was at the firſt attempted and performed by the ſame ſhippe wherein Signor Odoardo went, being then guided by Franciſco Martinez the Kings Pilot, a man very greatly experienced in thoſe Seas, and the firſt that euer conducted veſſell by that way: the other is atchieued by paſſing along the Coaſt of the firme Land. From the Iſland of San Iacomo, they came to Cape Das Palmas, and from thence direct themſelues to the Iſland of San Thomas, which lyeth vnder the Equinoctiall; ſo called, becauſe it was diſcouered vpon that day, wherein the Feaſt of that Apoſtle is vſed to be celebrated. It is diſtant from the firme Land, one hundred and eightie miles, right againſt the Riuer, called Gaban, which is ſo termed becauſe it is in ſhape very like to that kind of Veſture, that it is called a Gaban, or a Cloke.

The Hauen thereof is fore-cloſed with an Iland that raiſeth it ſelfe in the Channell of the Riuer, whereunto the Portugals doe ſayle with ſmall Barkes from Saint Thomas Iland, carrying thither ſuch things as vſually they carrie to the Coaſt of Guinea, and from thence carrying backe with them Iuorie, Waxe and Honey, Oyle of Palme, and Blacke-moore ſlaues. Neere to the Iland of Saint Thomas, towards the North lyeth another Iland, called the Ile of the Prince, diſtant from the firme Land one hundred and fiue miles, being of the ſame condition and Trafficke, that the Ile of Saint Thomas is, although in circuit ſome-what leſſe. This Iland of Saint Thomas is in faſhion almoſt round, and in breadth contayneth ſixtie miles, and in compaſſe one hundred and eightie. Very rich it is and of great trafficke, diſcouered at the firſt and conquered by the Portugals, at ſuch time as they began the conqueſt of the Indies. It hath diuers Hauens, but the principall and chiefeſt of all, whereinto the Veſſels arriuing there, doe with-draw themſelues, is in the place, where the Citie ſtandeth.

Great tafficke.

The Iland breedeth an infinite deale of Sugar, and almoſt all kinds of victuals. In the Citie there are ſome Churches, and a Biſhop, with many Clerkes and one Chaplain or Prieſt. There is alſo a Caſtle, with a Garriſon and Artillerie in it, which beate vpon the Hauen, beeing a verie great and a ſafe Port, where many ſhips may ride. But a very ſtrange and admirable thing it is, that when the Portugals did firſt come thither, there was no Sugar there planted, but they brought it thither from other Countries: as they did Ginger alſo, which tooke roote, and grew there in moſt abundant manner. The ſoyle indeed is moyſt, and as it were appropriated to foſter the Sugar-cane, which without any other watering, multiplyeth of it ſelfe, and fructifieth infinitely: the reaſon whereof is, becauſe the dew falleth there like raine, and moyſteneth the Earth.

There are in this Iland aboue ſeuentie Houſes or Preſſes for making of Sugar, and euery Preſſe hath many Cottages about it as though it were a Village, and there may bee about ſome three hundred perſons that are appointed for that kind of worke: They doe euery yeare loade about fortie great ſhips with Sugar. True it is, indeed, that not long agoe the Wormes (as it were a plague to that Land) haue deuoured the roots of the Canes, and deſtroyed the fruits of their Sugar, in ſuch ſort as now of the fortie ſhips, they doe not loade aboue fiue or ſixe Veſſels with that Merchandize.

The Iland of Saint Thomas holdeth Trafficke with the people that dwell in the firme Land, which do vſually reſort to the mouthes or entries of their Riuers: The firſt whereof (to begin withall) is named the Riuer of Fernando di Poo, that is to ſay, of Fernando Pouldre, who did firſt diſcouer the ſame, and lyeth in fiue degrees towards our Pole. Right againſt the mouth of it, riſeth an Iland of the ſame name, lying thirtie and ſixe miles diſtant from it. The ſecond Riuer is called Bora, that is to ſay, Filth: The third, La riuiera del Campo. The fourth, di San Benedetto. and the fifth, that of Angra, which in the mouth of it hath an Iland, called di Coriſco, that is to ſay, Thunder. All theſe doe Trafficke the ſame Merchandizes, which we mentioned before.

But to returne to the Voyage of Saint Thomas: departing from thence towards the South, we found the Cape of Lupo Gonzale, which ſtandeth in the altitude of one degree beyond the Equinoctiall towards the Pole Antarctike, one hundred and fiue miles diſtant from the foreſaid Ile. And from thence they ſaile with Land winds, creeping ſtill all along the Coaſt, and euery day caſting Anchor in ſome ſafe place either behind ſome point, or elſe in ſome Hauen, vntill they come to the mouth of the greateſt Riuer in Congo, called in their Tongue Zaire, which ſignifieth in Latine, Sapio, (in Engliſh, I know.) From whence if yee will goe through to the Hauen of Loanda, ye muſt ſaile the length of one hundred and foureſcore miles.

The Kingdome * of Congo in the middle part thereof, is diſtant from the Equinoctiall towerds the Pole Antarctike (iuſt where the Citie called Congo doth lye) ſeuen degrees and two thirds: ſo that it ſtandeth vnder the Region which ancient Writers thought to be vnhabitable, and called it Zona Torrida.

* Here beginneth the ſecond chapter as it is in the Booke, which method I haue for breuitie altered, and brought to longer Paragraphs.

The habitation there is exceeding good, the Ayre beyond all credit temperate, the Winter nothing ſo rough, but is rather like Autumne in Rome. The people vſe no Furres, nor change of apparell, they come not neere the fire, neither is the cold in the tops of the Mountaynes greater then that which is in the Plaines: but generally in Winter time, the Ayre is more hot then it is in Summer, by reaſon of their continuall raines, and eſpecially about two houres before and after noone, ſo that it can hardly be endured. The men are blacke, and ſo are the women, and ſome of them alſo ſomewhat inclining to the colour of the wild Oliue. Their hayre is blacke and curled, and ſome alſo red. The ſtature of the men is of an indifferent bigneſſe, and excepting their blackneſſe they are very like to the Portugals. The apples of their eyes are of diuers colours, blacke and of the colour of the Sea. Their lips are not thicke, as the Nubians and other Negroes are: and ſo likewiſe their countenances are ſome fat, ſome leane, and ſome betweene both, as in our Countries there are, and not as the Negroes of Nubia and Guinea, which are very

The temperature of the Kingdome.

The complexion of the people.

Small difference between their dayes and nights.

Their Winter and Summer.

deformed. Their nights and their dayes doe not greatly differ, for in all the whole yeare yee ſhall not diſcerne the difference betweene them to bee more then a quarter of an houre.

The Winter in this Countrey (to ſpeake at large) beginneth at the ſame time, that our ſping heere beginneth, that is to ſay, when the Sunne entreth into the Northerne Signes, in the moneth of March. And at the ſame time that wee haue our Winter, when the Sunne entreth into the Southerne Signes in the moneth of September, ber, then beginneth their Summer. In their Winter it rayneth fiue monethes almoſt continually, that is to ſay, in Aprill, May, Iune, Iuly and Auguſt. Of faire dayes they haue but a few, becauſe the raine falleth ſo greatly, and the drops of it are ſo big, as it is a wonder to ſee. Theſe waters doe maruellouſly ſupple the ground, which is then very dry, by reaſon of the heate of the Summer paſt, wherein it neuer rayneth for the ſpace of ſixe monethes together, and after the ground is full, and as it were ingorged with water, then do the Riuers ſwell beyond all credit, and are ſo repleniſhed with troubled waters, that all the Countrey is ſurrounded by them.

The winds in this Countrey in Winter time

The winds which blow in theſe Moones through all this Region, are the very ſelfe-ſame that Caſar calleth by a Greeke word Eteſy, that is to ſay, Ordinary euery yeare: whereby are meant thoſe winds, that in the Card are noted from the North to the Weſt, and from the North to the North-eaſt. Theſe winds do driue the Cloudes to the huge and high mountaynes, wherevpon they ruſh with very great violence, and being there ſtayed of their owne nature, they are afterwards melted into water. So that when it is likely to raine, you ſhall ſee the Cloudes ſtanding (as it were) vpon the tops of their higheſt hils.

The cauſe of the increaſe of Nilus, and other Riuers in Æthiopia.

The Riuer Niger, or Senega, runneth Weſtward.

Nilus runneth North-ward.

It ſeldome raineth in Egypt but onely in Alexandria, and the raines which there fall are vnwholſome.

And hence ariſeth the increaſing and augmentation of the Riuers that ſpring in Æthiopia, and eſpecially of Nilus and others, that diſcharge themſelues into the Eaſt and Weſt Ocean. And in the Kingdome of Congo and Guinea, through which runneth the Riuer Niger, ſo called by the ancient Writers; and by the new, termed Senega, you ſhall ſee the ſaid Riuer increaſe at the very ſelfe-ſame time that Nilus doth; but indeed carrieth his waters towards the Weſt, directly againſt the Ilands of Cape Verde, whereas Nilus runneth by the Ile of Meroe in Egypt towards the North, refreſhing and watering all thoſe Regions that are full of ſcorching Heates, and Wilderneſſes, and Deſerts.

Now, for as much as in the Regions of Congo and Æthiopia, it is alwayes woont to raine eury yeare at a certaine ſet time, the ſwelling and ouer-flowing of the Riuers there, is of no great conſideration, nor any ſtrange accident to make account of. But in the Countries, that are farre diſtant and very dry, as in Egypt, where it neuer raineth (ſauing onely in Alexandria, and the Territories thereof) it is accounted a maruellous matter, to ſee euery yeare ſo great a quantitie of thicke troubled water come vpon them, from places ſo remote, at a certaine ſet time, without miſſing: which water doth quicken the ground, and miniſtreth food both to man and beaſt.

This is then the cauſe of the increaſe of Nilus, and other Riuers in that Climate, whereof the Ancients of olde times made ſo great doubt, and inuented ſo many Fables and Errours.

Their winds in Summer time.

But in their Summer, which is our Winter, there blow other winds that are quite oppoſite to the former, euen in Diametro, and are noted in the Carde, from the South to the Southeaſt, which out of all queſtion muſt needs be cold, becauſe they breathe from the contrarie Pole Anarctike, and coole all thoſe Countries, euen for all the World as our winds in Summer doe coole our Countries. And whereas, there with them, theſe winds doe make the Ayre very faire and cleere, ſo doe they neuer come vnto vs, but they bring with them great ſtore of raine.

Cooling of hot Regions by the breeze or winds.

And certainly, if the breath of theſe winds did not refreſh and coole theſe Countries of Æthiopia, and Congo, and other places neere about them, it were not poſſible for them to endure the heate, conſidering that euen in the night time they are conſtrayned to hang two couerings ouer them to keepe away the heate. The ſame cooling and refreſhing by winds, is common alſo to the Inhabitants of the Ile of Candie, and of the Ilands in Archipelago, and of Cyprus, and of Aſia the leſſe, and of Soria, and of Egypt, which doe liue (as it were) with this refreſhing of the fore-ſaid winds of the North-weſt, and of the Weſt: ſo that they may well bee called as they are in Greeke, Zepheri, quaſi ζωηφόροι, breeders of life.

No Snow nor Ice in Æthiopia or Congo.

Let it be alſo remembred, that in the mountaines of Æthiopia, and of Congo, and the Regions neere adioyning, there falleth no Snow, neither is there any at all in the very tops of them, ſauing onely towards the Cape of Good Hope, and certaine other hils, which the Portugals call, Sierra Neuada, that is to ſay, the Snowie Mountaines. Neither is there any Ice or Snow to bee found in all the Countrey of Congo, which would be better eſteemed there then Gold, to mingle with their drinkes: So that the Riuers there doe not ſwell and increaſe by melting of Snow, but becauſe the raine doth fall out of the Cloudes for fiue whole Moones continually together, that is to ſay, in Aprill, May, Iune, Iuly, and Auguſt: the firſt raine ſometimes beginning on the fifteenth day, and ſometimes after. And this is the cauſe why the new waters of Nilus, which are ſo greatly deſired and expected by the Inhabitants there, doe arriue ſooner or later in Egypt.

§. II.

§. II.

Of the circuit of the Kingdome of Congo, and of the borders and confines thereof; As alſo of diuers bordering Nations: and remarkeable Rarities therein.

THe Kingdome of Congo, is diſtinguiſhed by foure borders: The firſt, of the Weſt, which is watered with the Ocean Sea: The ſecond, of the North: The third, of the Eaſt, and the laſt, which is towards the South.

The Weſterne border of Congo. The Bay of Cowes.

And to beginne with the border lying vpon the Sea, the firſt part of it is in the Bay; called Seno delle Vacche, and is ſituate in the height of thirteene degrees vpon the Antarctike-ſide, and ſtretcheth all along the Coaſt vnto foure degrees and a halfe on the North-ſide, neere to the Equinoctiall; which ſpace contayneth ſix hundred and thirtie miles. This Seno delle Vacche, is a Hauen but of a moderate bigneſſe, and yet a good one, and able to receiue any ſhip that arriueth. It is called Seno delle Vacche, that is to ſay, The Bay of Cowes, becauſe thereabouts there are paſturing very many Herds of that kind of Cattle. The Countrey is plaine, and aboundeth with all manner of victuals, and there you ſhall find ſome kind of Metals to be publikely ſold, eſpecially ſiluer, and it is ſubiect to the King of Angola.

The Riuer Bengleli. The Riuer Songa.

A little more forward lyeth the Riuer Bengleli, where a certaine Lord, beeing ſubiect to the King of Angola, doth ſpecially command: and about the ſaid Riuer is a great compaſſe of Countrey, much like to the former. And a little further runneth the Riuer Songa, ſo called by the Portugals: wherein you may ſayle fiue and twentie miles vpwards in a Countrey alſo like to the former.

The Riuer Coanza.

Then followeth the Riuer Coanza, which iſſueth out of a little Lake, fed by a certaine Riuer that floweth out of a great Lake, being the chiefe and principall Spring or Head of Nilus, whereof in the other part of this Diſcourſe wee ſhall haue occaſion to write. Coanza, at the mouth of it is two miles broad, and you may ſayle with ſmall Barkes vpwards againſt the ſtreame about one hundred miles, but hath no Hauen. And here it is to bee noted, that all this Countrey which we haue here deſcribed, was woont to be ſubiect to the King of Congo: but a while agoe the Gouernour of that Countrey is become the abſolute Lord thereof, and profeſſeth himſelfe to be a friend to the King of Congo, but not his Vaſſall: and yet ſometimes he ſendeth the King ſome Preſent, in manner of a tribute.

The Iland of Loanda.

Beyond the Riuer Coanza, is the Hauen of Loanda, being in ten degrees, made (as it is ſaid) by a certaine Iland, called Loanda, which ſignifieth in that Language, Bald, or Shauen; becauſe it is a Countrey without any hils and very low: for, indeed, it ſcarce rayſeth it ſelfe aboue the Sea. This Iland was framed of the ſand and durt of the Sea, and of the Riuer Coanza, whoſe waues meeting together, and the filthy matter ſinking downe there to the bottome, in continuance of time it grew to be an Iland. It may be about twentie miles long, and one mile broad at the moſt, and in ſome places but onely a bow ſhoot. But it is a maruellous thing, that in ſuch a ſandie ground, if you ſhall digge to the depth of two or three hand-breadthes, you ſhall find ſweet water, the beſt in all thoſe Countries. Wherein alſo there is a very ſtrange effect, that when the Ocean ebbeth, this water becommeth ſomewhat ſalt, but when it floweth to the top, it is moſt ſweet. A thing that falleth out alſo in the Iland of Cadis in Spaine, by the report and teſtimonie of Strabo.

Strange water ſprings.

The money of Congo.

This Iland is the Mine of all the Money which the King of Congo ſpendeth, and all the people thereabouts. For vpon the ſhoares you ſhall haue certaine women, that vſe to diue and ducke into the Sea, two yards deepe and more, and fill their baskets with ſand, and afterwards diuide the grauell from certaine ſmall Shel-fiſhes that are among it, which are called Lumache: and when theſe Lumache are ſeuered by themſelues, then doe they picke out the Males from the Females, which they may eaſily doe, becauſe the Female is more fine then the Male, and greatly eſteemed for her colour, which is very neat, bright and pleaſant to the ſight. Theſe Lumache doe breed in all the ſhoares of the Kingdome of Congo, but the beſt of all are thoſe of Loanda, becauſe they looke very fine, and of a very bright colour, ſome gray or aſh-coloured, and ſome of other colours not ſo precious.

The Lumache of Loanda.

And here you muſt note that gold and ſiluer and metall is not of any eſtimation, nor in vſe of money in theſe Countries, but onely theſe Lumache: ſo that neither with gold nor ſiluer, in maſſe or in coine you ſhall buy any thing there, but with theſe Lumache you ſhall buy both gold and ſiluer, or any thing elſe.

No metall-money.

In this Iland there are ſeuen or eight Townes, called in that Countrey Language, Libata, the principall whereof is Spirito Sancto: and therein dwelleth the Gouernour which is ſent from Congo, to miniſter Iuſtice and to gather the treaſure of the moneyes of theſe Lumache. Here are alſo Goates and Sheepe, and Bores in great numbers, which being tame at the firſt, doe afterwards become wild and liue in the Woods. Here groweth alſo a tree, called Enzanda, which is Spirito Sancto.

The tree Enzanda.

Cloth made of the barke of a tree.

is a great one and alwayes greene, and endued with a ſingular qualitie. For from the boughes of it that ſprout vpwards, there hang downe certaine threeds (as it were) which creeping into the Earth doe take roots, and out from theſe roots doe riſe other trees, and ſo they multiply. And within the outmoſt barke thereof, there groweth a certaine kind of Pill like fine Linnen, which being beaten and cleanſed, they ſpread out in length and in breadth, and therewith they cloath their men and women, that are of the baſeſt ſort.

Their Boats or Canoes.

In this Iland they haue certaine veſſels made of the bodies of Palme-trees, ioyned together and framed after the manner of our Boates, with a prow and a ſterne, wherein they paſſe from place to place, both with Oares and Sayles. In theſe Boates they vſe to fiſh about the Riuers, which are indeed exceeding full of fiſh, and ſometime alſo they will goe ouer to the firme Land.

Shel-fiſhes growing on trees. Ambizamatare.

In that part of this Iland, which is towards the maine Land, in certaine low places there grow certaine trees (which when the water of the Ocean ebbeth) diſcouer themſelues: and at the feet thereof you ſhall find certaine other Shel-fiſhes cleauing as faſt to the trees as may bee, hauing within them a great fiſh as bigge as a mans hand, and very good meate. The people of the Countrey know them very well, and call them Ambiziamatare, that is to ſay, The fiſh of the Rocke. The ſhels of theſe fiſhes, they vſe to burne, and thereof make very good Lime to build withall. And being like the corke or barke of the tree, which is called Manghi, they dreſſe their Oxe-hides withall, to make their ſhooe ſoles the ſtronger.

What kind of money is vſed in ſundrie Countries.

To be briefe, this Iland bringeth forth neither Corne nor Wine, but there is great ſtore of victuall brought thither from all parts thereabouts, to fetch away theſe Lumache. For as in all other places all things may be had for money of metall, ſo all things here are had for Lumache. Whereby may be noted, that not onely here in this Kingdome of Congo, but alſo in her Neighbour Æthiopia and in Africa, and in the Kingdome of China, and certaine others of the Indies; they vſe moneyes of other matter then of metall, that is to ſay, neither gold, nor ſiluer, nor copper, nor any other mixture tempered of theſe.

Pepper money, &c.

For in Æthiopia, their money is Pepper: and in the Kingdome of Tombuto, which is about the Riuer Niger, otherwiſe called Senega, their money is Cockles or Shel-fiſh: and among the Azanaghi, their moneyes are Porcellette: and in the Kingdome of Bengala, likewiſe they vſe Porcellette, and metall together. In China they haue certaine Shel-fiſhes, called alſo Porcellette, which they vſe for their money: and in other places Paper ſtamped with the Kings Seale, and the barkes of the tree called Gelſomora.

Great ſtore of Whales.

Neere to this Iland towards the outward Coaſt to the Sea, there ſwimme an innumerable ſort of Whales, that looke blacke, and fighting one with another doe kill themſelues: which afterwards being by the waues caſt vp vpon the ſhoare, as bigge as a midling Merchants ſhip; the Negroes go forth with their Boats to fetch them, and to take the Oyle out of them, which being mingled with Pitch they vſe to trimme their Veſſels withall. Vpon the ridges or backs of theſe creatures, there grow many Shel-fiſhes, made like Snailes, Cockles, and Whelkes: whereof Signor Odoardo affirmed, that he had ſeene great ſtore. He was alſo of opinion that Amber commeth not from theſe fiſhes. For ouer all the Coaſt of Congo, where there is an infinite number of them, you ſhall not find either Ambergriz, or any other Amber, blacke or white in any place.

Villa di San Paulo.

Store of fiſh.

Vpon the firme Land directly ouer againſt the Iland is a Towne, called Villa di San Paulo, altogether inhabited with Portugals, and their Wiues, which they brought with them out of Spaine: and yet it is not fortified. All this Channell is very full of fiſh, eſpecially of Sardinaes, and of Anchioues; whereof there is ſo great ſtore, that in the Winter time they will of themſelues leape vp to Land. Other kinds of moſt excellent fiſhes there are, as Soles, and Sturgeons, and Barbelles, and all manner of daintie fiſh; and great Crabs, in ſtrange abundance, and all very wholſome: ſo that the greateſt part of the people that dwell about the bankes there, doe liue vpon them.

The Riuer Bengo.

The Riuer Dande.

The Riuer Lembe.

The Riuer Ozone.

The Riuer Loze.

The Riuer Ambriz.

The Riuer Lelunda.

The Oteiro of Congo.

Into this Channell runneth the Riuer called Bengo, which is a very great one, and nauigable vpwards twentie fiue miles. This Riuer with that other of Coanza, whereof I told you before, do make the Ile of Loanda, becauſe when their waters doe meete together, they leaue their ſand & filth behind them, and ſo increaſe the Iland. There runneth alſo into it another great Riuer called Dande, which will receiue Veſſels of an hundred tunne: and then another Riuer called Lemba, which neither hath Hauen, neither doe any ſhips enter into it. Very neere vnto this there is alſo another Riuer called Ozone, which iſſueth out of the ſame Lake, whence Nilus likewiſe ſpringeth, and it hath a Hauen. Next to Ozone, there is another called Loze, without any Hauen: and then another great one with a Hauen called Ambriz, which runneth within foure leagues neere to the Royall Citie of Congo. Laſt of all, is the Riuer Lelunda, which ſignifieth a Trowt fiſh, and watereth the roots of that great Hill, whereon the Palace of Congo ſtandeth, called by the Portugals, the Oteiro. This Riuer Lelunda, ſpringeth out of the ſame Lake, from whence Coanza iſſueth, and taketh into it by the way another Riuer, that commeth from the great Lake: and when it doth not raine, then you may paſſe ouer Lelunda on foot, becauſe it hath ſo little ſtore of water in it.

Next vnto this is the Zaire, a huge Riuer and a large, and indeed the greateſt in all the Kingdome of Congo. The originall of this Riuer commeth out of three Lakes: one is the great Lake from whence Nilus ſpringeth; the ſecond, is the little Lake aboue mentioned; and the third, is the ſecond great Lake whieh Nilus engendreth. And certainly, when yon will conſider the abundance of water that is in this Riuer, you will ſay, that there was no need to haue any fewer or leſſer ſprings to make ſo huge a ſtreame as this carrieth. For in the very mouth of it, which is the onely entrance into it, the Riuer is eight and twentie miles broad, and when it is in the height of his increaſe he runneth freſh water fortie or fiftie miles into the Sea, and ſometimes eightie, ſo that the paſſengers doe refreſh themſelues withall, and by the troubleſomeneſſe of the water they know the place where they are. It is nauigable vpwards with great Barkes about fiue and twentie miles, vntill you come to a certaine ſtraight betweene the Rockes, where it falleth with ſuch a horrible noyſe, that it may be heard almoſt eight miles. And this place is called by the Portugals, Cachuiuera, that is to ſay, a Fall, or a Cataract, like to the Cataracts of Nilus. Betweene the mouth of this Riuer, and the fall thereof, there are diuers great Ilands well inhabited, with Townes, and Lords obedient to the King of Congo, which ſomtimes for the great enmitie that is among them, doe warre one againſt another in certaine Boats, hollowed out of a ſtocke of a tree, which is of an vnmeaſurable bigneſſe, and theſe Boats they call Lungo.

The Riuer Zaire.

Boats.

The tree Licondo.

The greateſt Boates that they haue, are made of a certaine tree, called Licondo, which is ſo great, that ſixe men cannot compaſſe it with their armes, and is in length of proportion anſwerable to the thickneſſe, ſo that one of them will carrie about two hundred perſons. They row theſe Boates with their Oares, which are not tyed to any loopes, but they hold them at liberty in their hands, and moue the water therewith at pleaſure. Euery man hath his Oare and his Bow, and when they fight together they lay downe their Oare and take their Bow. Neither do they vſe any other Rudders to turne and gouerne their Boats, but onely their Oares.

The firſt of theſe Ilands, which is but a little one, is called, the Ile of Horſes, becauſe there are bred and brought vp in it great ſtore of thoſe creatures that the Greekes call Hippopotami, that is to ſay Water-horſes. In a certaine Village within this Iland doe the Portugals dwell, hauing withdrawne themſelues thither for their better ſecuritie. They haue their Veſſels to tranſport them ouer the water to the firme Land, vpon the South banke of the Riuer, which Land is called the Hauen of Pinda, where many ſhips doe ride that arriue therein.

The Ile of Horſes.

The Hauen of Pinda.

In this Riuer there are liuing diuers kinds of creatures, and namely, mightie great Crocodiles, which the Countrey people there, call Caiman, and Water-horſes aboue named: And another kind of creature, that hath (as it were) two hands, and a tayle like a Target, which is called, Ambize Angulo, that is to ſay, a Hog-fiſh, becauſe it is as fat as a Porke. The fleſh of it is very good, and thereof they make Lard, and ſo keepe it: neither hath it the ſauour or taſte of a fiſh, although it be a fiſh. It neuer goeth out from the freſh water, but feedeth vpon the graſſe that groweth on the bankes, and hath a mouth like the muzzell of an Oxe. There are of theſe fiſhes, that weigh fiue hundred pounds apiece.

The fiſhermen vſe to take them in their little Boats, by marking the places where they feed, and then with their hookes and forkes, ſtriking and wounding them, they draw them dead forth of the water: and when they haue cut them in pieces, they carrie them to the King. For whoſoeuer doth not ſo, incurreth the penaltie of death, and ſo doe they likewiſe that take the Trowt, and the Tench, and another fiſh called Cacongo, which is ſhaped after the likeneſſe of a Salmon, ſauing that it is not red: but indeed ſo fat it is, that it quencheth out the fire whiles it is roſted or broyled. Other fiſhes alſo there are that are called Fiſhes Royall, which are carried to the King, vpon very ſeuere and rigorous puniſhments.

Fiſhes Royall.

Beyond this Riuer of Congo, there commeth downe another Riuer, which the Portugals call, La Baia de las Almadias, that is to ſay, the Gulfe of Barkes, becauſe there are great ſtore of them, that are made there, by reaſon of the abundance of Woods and Trees that grow thereabouts, which are fit for that vſe, and wherewith all the Countries round about doe furniſh themſelues. At the mouth of this Bay there are three Ilands, one great Ile in the middle of the Channell, which maketh a conuenient Hauen for ſmall Veſſels, and two other leſſe, but none of them inhabited.

La Baia de las Almadias.

A little higher runneth another ſtreame, not very great, which is called, De las Barreras Roſſas, of the red Clay-pits, becauſe it floweth from among certaine Rockes of Hils, whoſe Earth is dyed with a red colour: where alſo there is a very high Mountaine, called by the Portugals, La Surra Complida, that is to ſay, the long Mountaine.

The riuer de las Barreras Vermeglias.

And yet going vp a little further, there are two Gulfes of the Sea in the likeneſſe of a paire of Spectacles, wherein is a good Hauen, called La Baia d'Aluaro Gonzales, that is, The Gulfe of Aluaro Gonzales. Beyond all theſe, are certaine hils and ſhoares, not worth the remembrance, vntill you come to the Promontorie, that is called by the Portugals, Capo de Caterina, which is the border of the Kingdome of Congo towards the Equinoctiall, and is diſtant from the Equinoctiall Line two degrees and a halfe, which is one hundred and fiftie Italian miles.

The Northern Border of Congo.

Now from Cape De Caterina on the North ſide, beginneth another Border or Coaſt of the Kingdome of Congo, which Eaſtward ſtretcheth it ſelfe to the place where the Riuer Vumba ioyneth with the Riuer Zaire, contayning the ſpace of ſixe hundred miles and more. Beyond this Coaſt of Congo towards the North, and vnder the Equinoctiall Line vpon the Sea ſhoare, and about two hundred miles within Land, (comprehending in that reckoning the aforeſaid Gulfe of Lope Gonzales) the People called the Bramas doe inhabite in a Countrey, that is now called the Kingdome of Loango; and the King thereof, Mani Loango, that is to ſay, The King of Loango. The Countrey hath great abundance of Elephants, whoſe teeth they exchange for Iron, whereof they make their Arrow heads, their Kniues, and ſuch other inſtruments. In this Countrie alſo, they weaue certaine Cloth of the leaues of Palme-trees, in ſundrie ſorts: as we ſhall tell you in ſome other place of this narration.

The Bramas. The Kingdom of Loango.

The People of Loango circumciſed.

The King of Loango is in amitie with the King of Congo, and the report is, that in times paſt he was his vaſſall. The People are circumciſed after the manner of the Hebrews, like as alſo the reſt of the Nations in thoſe Countries vſe to be.

The Countrie of Anzicos.

Beyond the Kingdome of Loango, are the People called Anzigues, of whom wee ſhall deliuer vnto you a hiſtorie, which in trueth is very ſtrange, and almoſt incredible, for the beaſtly and cruell cuſtome that they vſe in eating mans fleſh; yea, and that of the neereſt kinſ-folkes they haue. This Countrey towards the Sea on the Weſt, bordereth vpon the People of Ambus; and towards the North, vpon other Nations of Africa, and the Wilderneſſe of Nubia; and towards the Eaſt, vpon the ſecond great Lake, from whence the Riuer of Congo ſpringeth, in that Part which is called Anzicana; and from the Kingdome of Congo, it is diuided by the Riuer Zaire, wherein there are many Ilands (as before is told you) ſcattered from the Lake downewards, and ſome of them belonging to the Dominion of the Anzigues, by which Riuer alſo they doe traffique with the People of Congo. In this Kingdome of the Anzigues, there are many Mines of Copper; and great quantitie of Sanders, both red and grey: the red is called Tauilla, and the grey (which is the better eſteemed) is called Chicongo, whereof they make a powder of a very ſweet ſmell, and diuers medicines. They doe alſo mingle it with the Oyle of Palme-tree, and ſo anoynting all their bodies ouer withall, they preſerue themſelues in health. But the Portugals vſe it being tempered with Vinegar, which they lay vpon their pulſes, and ſo heale the French Poxe, which they call in that Language, Chitangas. Some doe affirme, that this grey Sanders is the very Lignum Aquila, that groweth in India: and Signor Odoardo affirmed, that the Portugals haue proued it for the head-ache, by laying it on the coales, and taking the ſmoake of it. The pith and innermoſt part of the Tree is the beſt, but the outter part is of no eſtimation.

For the head-ache.

They make great ſtore of Linnen of the Palme-tree, both of ſundrie ſorts and colours, and much Cloth of Silke, whereof wee will diſcourſe more hereafter. The People are ſubiect to a King that hath other Princes vnder him. They are very actiue and warlike. They are readie to take Armes; and doe fight on foot. Their weapons are different from the weapons of all other people round about them: for, their Bowes are ſmall and ſhort, made of wood, and wrapped about with Serpents skins of diuers colours, and ſo ſmoothly wrought, that you would thinke them to be all one with the wood: and this they doe, both to make the Bowe ſtronger, and alſo to hold it the faſter. Their Strings are of little woodden twigs like reeds, not hollow within, but ſound and pliable, and very daintie; ſuch as the Caualieros of Portugall doe carrie in their hands to beate their Palfreyes withall. They are of an aſh-colour, and of a Lion-tawney, ſomewhat tending to blacke. They grow in the Countrey of the Anzigues, and alſo in the Kingdome of Bengala, through which the Riuer Ganges runneth. Their Arrowes are ſhort and ſlender, and of a very hard wood, and they carrie them on their Bow-hand. They are ſo quicke in ſhooting, that holding eight and twentie Shafts or more in their Bow-hand, they will ſhoot and diſcharge them all, before the firſt Arrow light on the ground: yea, and ſometimes there haue beene ſeene diuers ſtout Archers, that haue killed birds as they flie in the aire.

Their Bowes.

Their Arrows.

Their weapons

Other weapons alſo they make, as Axes and Hatchets, which they vſe and frame after a ſtrange manner: for, the handle is ſhorter by the halfe then the Iron is, and at the loweſt end of it there is a pommell, for the faſter holding of it in the hand; and all couered ouer with the foreſaid skinne of a Serpent. In the vppermoſt end of it, is the Iron very bright and ſhining, faſtned to the wood with plates of Copper, in the manner of two nailes, as long as the handle: it hath two edges, the one cutteth like a Hatchet, and maketh a wound after the faſhion of an halfe roundell; the other is a Hammer. When they fight with their Enemies, or defend themſelues from their Arrowes, they are ſo exerciſed with a wonderfull ſpeed and nimbleneſſe to manage their weapons, that whirling them round about, as it were in a circle, they keepe all that compaſſe of the ayre which is before them; ſo that when the Enemie ſhooteth, and the Arrow beginne to fall, it lighteth vpon the Hatchet, being ſo ſwiftly and vehemently whirled about, that it breaketh the force of the Arrow, and ſo it is repulſed: then doe they hang the Hatchet vpon their ſhoulder, and begin to ſhoot themſelues. They haue alſo certaine ſhort Daggers, with ſheaths of the Serpents skins, made like Kniues with an haft vnto them, which they vſe to weare acroſſe. Their Girdles are of diuers ſorts; but the Men of warre haue their Girdles of Elephants skin, three good fingers broad: and becauſe they are at the firſt two fingers thicke, and very hard to handle handſomely, by the heat of the fire they bow them round, and ſo with certaine buttons tye them ouerthwart about them. The men are very actiue and nimble, and leape vp and downe the Mountaines like Goats. Couragious they are and contemne death: men of great ſimplicitie, loyaltie, and fidelitie, and ſuch as the Portugals doe truſt more then any other. In ſo much as Signor Odoardo was wont to ſay, that if theſe Anzichi would become Chriſtians (being of ſo great fidelitie, ſinceritie, loyaltie, and ſimplicitie, that they will offer themſelues to death, for the glorie of the world, and to pleaſe their Lords will not ſticke to giue their owne fleſh to bee deuoured) then would they with a farre better heart and courage indure martyrdome, for the name of our Redeemer Ieſus Chriſt, and would moſt honourably maintaine our Faith and Religion, with their good teſtimonie, and example againſt the Gentiles.

The nature of the Anzicos.

Vain-glorious madneſſe.

Moreouer, the ſaid Signor Odoardo did likewiſe affirme, that there was no conuerſing with them, becauſe they were a ſauage and beaſtly people, ſauing onely in reſpect that they come and traffique in Congo, bringing thither with them Slaues, both of their owne Nation, and alſo out of Nubia (whereupon they doe border) and linnen Cloth (whereof we will tell you hereafter,) and Elephants teeth: in exchange of which chaffare they recarrie home with them, Salt, and theſe Lumache, which they vſe in ſtead of money and Coyne; and another greater kind of Lumache, which come from the Ile of Saint Thomas, and which they vſe to weare for Brooches to make themſelues fine and gallant withall. Other Merchandiſes, alſo they carrie backe with them, which are brought out of Portugall, as Silkes, Linnen, and Glaſſes, and ſuch like. They vſe to circumciſe themſelues. And another fooliſh cuſtome they haue, both men and women, as well of the Nobilitie, as of the Commonaltie, euen from their childhood, to marke their faces with ſundrie ſlaſhes made with a knife, as in due place ſhall be further ſhewed vnto you.

Their merchandiſe.

Circumciſion. The Anzichi are circumciſed, and marked in their faces.

They keepe a Shambles of mans fleſh as they doe in theſe Countries for Beefe and other victuals. For their Enemies whom they take in the Warres, they eate; and alſo their Slaues, if they can haue a good market for them, they ſell: or if they cannot, then they deliuer them to the Butchers, to be cut in pieces, and ſo ſold, to be roſted or boiled. And (that which a maruellous hiſtorie to report) ſome of them being wearie of their liues, and ſome of them euen for valour of courage, and to ſhew themſelues ſtout and venturous, thinking it to bee a great honour vnto them, if they runne into voluntarie death, thereby to ſhew that they haue a ſpeciall contempt of this life, will offer themſelues to the butcherie, as faithfull ſubiects to their Princes, for whoſe ſakes, that they may ſeeme deſirous to doe them notable ſeruice, they doe not onely deliuer themſelues to bee deuoured by them, but alſo their Slaues, when they are fat and well fed, they doe kill and eate them. True it is, that many Nations there are, that feed vpon mans fleſh, as in the Eaſt Endies, and in Braſill, and in other places: but that is onely the fleſh of their aduerſaries and enemies, but to eate the fleſh of their owne friends, and ſubiects, and kinſfolkes, it is without all example in any place of the World, ſauing onely in this Nation of the Anzichi.

A ſhambles of mans fleſh.

Blind ſubiection.

A ſtrange beaſtly cuſtom

The ordinarie apparell of theſe people is thus: The common ſort goe naked from the girdle vpwards, and without any thing vpon their heads, hauing their haire truſſed vp, and curled. The Noblemen are apparelled in Silkes and other Cloth, and weare vpon their heads, blue and red, and blacke colours, and Hats and Hoods of Portugall Veluet, and other kinds of Caps vſuall in that Countrie. And indeed, they are all deſirous to haue their apparell handſome and neat, as their abilitie will ſuffer them. The women are all couered from top to toe, after the manner of Africa. The poorer ſort of them doe gird themſelues cloſe from the girdle downewards. The Noble women and ſuch as are of wealth, doe weare certaine Mantles, which they caſt ouer their heads, but keepe their faces open and at libertie: and Shooes they haue on their feet, but the poore goe bare-foot. They goe very quicke and lightſome. Their ſtature is comely, and their conditions faire and commendable. Their Language is altogether different from the Language of Congo, and yet the Anzichi will learne the Language of Congo very ſoone and eaſily, becauſe it is the plainer Tongue: but the People of Congo doe very hardly learne the Language of the Anzichi. And when I once demanded what their Religion was, it was told mee they were Gentiles, and that was all that I could learne of them.

Their Apparel.

Their Language.

The Eaſt Coaſt of the Kingdome of Congo, beginneth (as we haue told you) at the meeting of the Riuer Vumba, and the Riuer of Zaire; and ſo with a line drawne towards the South in equall diſtance from the Riuer Nilus, which lieth on the left hand, it taketh vp a great Mountaine which is very high, and not inhabited in the tops thereof, called the Mountaine of Cryſtall, becauſe there is in it great quantitie of Cryſtall, both of the Mountaine and of the Cliffe, and of all ſorts. And then paſſing on farther, includeth the Hills that are called Sierras de Sol, that is to ſay, the Hills of the Sunne, becauſe they are exceeding high. And yet it neuer ſnoweth vpon them, neither doe they beare any thing, but are very bare and without any trees at all. On the left hand there ariſe other Hills, called the Hills of Sal-Nitrum, becauſe there is in them great ſtore of that Minerall. And ſo cutting ouer the Riuer Berbela, that commeth out of the firſt Lake, there endeth the ancient bound of the Kingdome of Congo on the Eaſt.

Thus then the Eaſt Coaſt of this Kingdome is deriued from the meeting of the two foreſaid Riuers, Vumba and Zaire; vntill you come to the lake Achelunda, and to the Countrie of Malemba; contayning the ſpace of ſixe hundred miles. From this line which is drawne in the Eaſterne Coaſt of Congo to the Riuer Nilus, and to the two Lakes (whereof mention ſhall be made in conuenient place) there is the ſpace of one hundred and fiftie miles of ground well inhabited, and good ſtore of Hills, which doe yeeld ſundrie Metals, with much Linnen, and Cloth of the Palme tree.

The Arte of making Silkes, in this Eaſtern Coaſt, of Palm-trees.

And ſeeing wee are now come to this point of this diſcourſe, it will be very neceſſarie to declare vnto you the maruellous Arte which the people of this Countrie, and other places thereabouts doe vſe in making Clothes of ſundrie ſorts, as Veluets ſhorne and vnſhorne, Cloth of Tiſſue, Sattins, Taffata, Damaskes, Sarcenets, and ſuch like, not of any ſilken Stuffe, (for they haue no knowledge of the Silke-wormes at all, although ſome of their apparell bee made of Silke that is brought thither from our Countries.) But they weaue their Clothes afore-named of the leaues of Palme-trees, which Trees they alwaies keepe vnder and low to the ground, euery yeere cutting them, and watering them, to the end they may grow ſmall and tender againſt the new Spring. Out of theſe leaues, being cleanſed and purged after their manner, they draw forth their threeds, which are all very fine and daintie, and all of one euenneſſe, ſauing that thoſe which are longeſt, are beſt eſteemed: for, of thoſe they weaue their greateſt pieces. Theſe Stuffes they worke of diuers faſhions, as ſome with a nappe vpon them like Veluet, on both ſides, and other Cloth, called Damaskes, branched with leaues, and ſuch other things; and the Broccati, which are called High and Low, and are farre more precious then ours are. This kind of Cloth no man may weare but the King, and ſuch as it pleaſeth him. The greateſt pieces are of theſe Broccati: for they containe in length foure or fiue ſpans; and in breadth, three or foure ſpannes, and are called Incorimbas, by the name of the Countrey where it groweth, which is about the Riuer Vumba. The Veluets are called Enſachas, of the ſame bigneſſe; and the Damaskes, Infulas; and the Raſi, Maricas; and the Zendadi, Tangas; and the Ormeſini, Engombos. Of the lighter ſort of theſe Stuffes they haue greater pieces, which are wrought by the Anzichi; and are ſixe ſpannes long, and fiue ſpannes broad, wherewith euery man may apparell himſelfe according to his abilitie. Beſides that, they are very thicke and ſound to keep out the water, and yet very light to weare. The Portugals haue lately begun to vſe them for Tents and Boothes, which doe maruellouſly reſiſt both water and wind.

The Southerne Coaſt. The Mountaine of Siluer.

This Eaſterne Coaſt (as it is before ſet downe) endeth in the mountaine, called Serras de Plata, that is, the Mountaines of Siluer; and there beginneth the fourth and laſt border of the Kingdome of Congo, towards the South, that is to ſay, from the foreſaid Mountaine to the Bay of Cowes on the Weſt, containing in length the ſpace of foure hundred and fiftie miles. And this Southerne Line doth part the Kingdome of Angola in the middle, and leaueth on the left hand of it, the foreſaid Mountaines of Siluer; and farther beyond them towards the South, the Kingdome of Matama; which is a great Kingdome, very mightie, and abſolute of it ſelfe, and ſometimes in amitie, and ſometimes at vtter enmitie with the Kingdome of Angola.

The King of Matama.

The King of Matama is in Religion a Gentile, and his Kingdome ſtretcheth towards the South to the Riuer Brauagal, and neere to the Mountaines, commonly called the Mountaines of the Moone; and towards the Eaſt bordereth on the Weſterne bankes of the Riuer Bagamidri, and ſo croſſeth ouer the Riuer Coari.

This Countrie aboundeth in Vaults of Cryſtall and other Metals, and all manner of victuall, and good aire. And although the people thereof, and their neighbour borderers doe traffique together: Yet the King of Matama, and the King of Angola, doe oftentimes warre one againſt the other, as we told you before: And this Riuer Bagamidri diuideth the Kingdome of Matapa from the Kingdome of Monomata, which is towards the Eaſt, and whereof Iohn de Barros doth moſt largely diſcourſe, in the firſt Chapter of his tenth Booke.

§. VI.

Of Angola, the Warres betwixt Congo and Angola: their manner of warfare. The preſent Kingdome of Congo bounded. Of Bamba, one of the ſixe Princes of Congo, and the Creatures therein.

TOwards the Sea-coaſt there are diuers Lords, that take vpon them the Title of Kings: 60 but indeed they are of very baſe and ſlender eſtate: Neither are there any Ports or Hauens of any account or name in the Riuers there. And now, foraſmuch as we haue oftentimes made mention of the Kingdome of Angola, this will bee a very conuenient place for vs to intreat thereof; becauſe it hath beene heretofore ſaid, that the King of Angola, being in times paſt but a Gouernour or Deputie vnder the King of Congo; although, ſince that time he is become a Chriſtian, he made himſelfe a free and an abſolute Prince, and vſurped all that Quarter to his owne Iuriſdiction, which before he had in regiment and gouernment vnder another. And ſo afterwards in time conquered other Countries thereabouts; inſomuch, as he is now growne to be a great Prince, and a rich, and in power little inferiour to the King of Congo himſelfe; and therefore either payeth tribute, or refuſeth to pay tribute vnto him, euen at his owne good pleaſure.

The King of Angola freeth himſelfe from ſubiection to the King of Congo, ſince Congo receiued the Faith.

It came to paſſe, that Don Giouanni the Second, being King of Portugall, planted the Chriſtian Religion in the Kingdome of Congo; and thereupon, the King of Congo became a Chriſtian. After which time the Lord of Angola was alwaies in amitie, and (as it were) a Vaſſall of the forenamed King of Congo, and the People of both Countriet did traffique together one with another, and the Lord of Angola did euery yeere ſend ſome Preſents to the King of Congo. And by licence from the K. of Congo, there was a great trade betweene the Portugals and the People of Angola, at the Hauen of Loanda, *where they bought Slaues, and changed them for other merchandiſes, and ſo tranſported all into the Ile of S.*Thomas. *Whereby it came to paſſe, that the traffique was here vnited with the traffique of S.*Thomas: ſo that the ſhips did vſe firſt to arriue at that Iland, and then afterward paſſed ouer to Loanda. And when this trade began in proceſſe of time to encreaſe, they diſpatched their ſhips from Lisbone to Angola of themſelues, and ſent with them a Gouernour, called Paulo Diaz of Nouais, to whom this buſineſſe did (as it were) of right appertaine, in regard of the good deſerts of his Anceſtors, who firſt diſcouered this Traffique. To this Paulo Diaz, did Don Sebaſtiano King of Portugall grant leaue and authoritie to conquer, for the ſpace of three and thirtie leagues vpwards along the Coaſt, beginning at the Riuer Coanza towards the South, and within the Land alſo, whatſoeuer hee could get towards all his charges for him and his heires. With him there went many other ſhips that opened and found out a great trade with Angola, which notwithſtanding was directed to the foreſaid Hauen of Loanda, where the ſaid ſhips did ſtill diſcharge themſelues. And ſo by little and little he entred into the firme Land, and made himſelfe an houſe in a certaine Village, called Anzelle, within a mile neere to the Riuer Coanza, becauſe it was the more commodious and nigher to the traffique of Angola. When the trade here began thus to encreaſe, and merchandiſes were freely carried by the Portugals, and the People of Congo to Cabazo, a place belonging to the Lord of Angola, and diſtant from the Sea, one hundred and fiftie miles, there to ſell and barter them, it pleaſed his Lordſhip to giue out order, that all the Merchants ſhould be ſlaine, and their goods confiſcated, alledging for his defence, that they were come thither as ſpies, and to take poſſeſſion of his eſtate: but in trueth it is thought that he did it onely to gaine all that wealth to himſelfe, conſidering that it was a People that did not deale in the habite of Warriers, but after the manner of Merchants. And this fell out in the ſame yeere, that the King Don Sebaſtiano was diſcomfited in Barbarie.

Iohn the Second, King of Portugall, firſt brought Chriſtianitie into Congo.

Paulo Diaz, the firſt diſcouerer of this trafficke. Don Sebaſtian King of Portugall.

Paulo Diaz buildeth an houſe in Anzella. The Author calleth him Lord, becauſe he was then but a petie King.

When Paulo Diaz vnderſtood of this courſe, he put himſelfe in Armes againſt the King of Angola, and with ſuch a troupe of Portugals as he could gather together, that were to be found in that Countrie, and with two Gallies and other veſſels, which he kept in the Riuer Coanza, he went forward, on both ſides of the Riuer conquering, and by force ſubdued many Lords, and made them his Friends and Subiects. But the King of Angola perceiuing that his Vaſſals had yeelded to the obedience of Paulo Diaz, and that with all proſperous ſucceſſe he had gained much Land vpon him, hee aſſembled a great Armie to goe againſt him, and ſo vtterly to deſtroy him. Whereupon Paulo Diaz requeſted the King of Congo, that he would ſuccour him with ſome helpe to defend himſelfe withall, who preſently ſent vnto him for ayde, an Armie of ſixtie thouſand men, vnder the conduct of his Couſin Don Sebaſtiano Mani-bamba, and another Captaine, with one hundred and twentie Portugall Souldiers, that were in thoſe Countries, and all of his owne pay for the atchieuing of this enterpriſe. This Armie was to ioyne with Paulo Diaz, and ſo altogether to warre againſt the King of Angola: but arriuing at the ſhoare, where they were to paſſe ouer the Riuer Bengo, within twelue miles of Loanda, and where they ſhould haue met with many Barkes to carrie the Campe to the other ſhoare, partly becauſe the ſaid Barkes had ſlacked their comming, and partly becauſe much time would haue beene ſpent in tranſporting ſo many men, the whole Armie tooke their way quite ouer the Riuer, and ſo going on forwards, they met with the People of the King of Angola, that were readie to ſtop the Souldiers of Congo from entring vpon their Countrie.

Paulo Diaz, in Armes againſt the King of Angola.

P. Diaz demandeth ſuccour of the King of Congo.

The militarie order of the Mociconghi (for by that terme wee doe call the naturall borne People of the Kingdome of Congo, as we call the Spaniards, thoſe that are naturally borne in Spaine) and the militarie order of the People of Angola, is almoſt all one: for both of them doe vſually fight on foot, and diuide their Armie into ſeuerall troupes, fitting themſelues according to the ſituation of the Field where they doe encampe, and aduancing their Enſignes and Banners in ſuch ſort as before is remembred. The remoues of their Armie are guided and directed by certaine ſeuerall ſounds and noyſes, that proceed from the Captaine Generall, who goeth into the middeſt of the Armie, and there ſignifieth what is to be put in execution; that is to ſay, either that they ſhall ioyne battell, or elſe retire, or put on forward, or turne to the right hand, and to the left hand, or to performe any other warlike action. For by theſe ſeuerall ſounds diſtinctly deliuered from one to another, they doe all vnderſtand the commandements of their Captaine, as we here among vs doe vnderſtand the pleaſure of our Generall by the ſundrie ſtroakes of the Drum, and the Captaines ſounds of the Trumpet.

The militarie order of the People of Congo.

How the Souldiers doe vnderſtand the pleaſure of their Generall.

Three kinds of Inſtruments vſed in their warres.

Three principall ſounds they haue which they vſe in Warre: One which is vttered aloud, by great Rattles, faſtned in certaine Wooden Caſes, hollowed out of a tree, and couered with Leather, which they ſtrike with certaine little handles of Iuory. Another is made by a certaine kind of Inſtrument, faſhioned like a Pyramis turned vpward: for the lower end of it is ſharpe, and endeth as it were in a point, and the vpper end waxeth broader and broader, like the bottome of a Triangle, in ſuch ſort, that beneath they are narrow and like an Angle, and aboue they are large and wide. This Inſtrument is made of certaine thinne plates of Iron, which are hollow and emptie within, and very like to a Bell turned vp-ſide-downe. They make them ring, by ſtriking them with woodden wands: and oftentimes they doe alſo cracke them, to the end that the ſound ſhould be more harſh, horrible, and warlike: The third Inſtrument is framed of Elephants teeth, ſome great, and ſome ſmall, hollow within, and blowen at a certaine hole which they make on the ſide of it, in manner of the Fife, and not aloft like the Pipe. Theſe are tempered by them in ſuch ſort, that they yeeld as warlike and harmonious Muſicke, as the Cornet doth, and ſo pleaſant and iocond a noyſe, that it mooueth and ſtirreth vp their courages, and maketh them not to care for any danger whatſoeuer. Now of theſe three ſeuerall ſorts of warlike Inſtruments, there are ſome bigger, and ſome leſſe. For the Captaine Generall carrieth alwaies with him the greater ſort, to the end that by them he may giue ſignification to the whole Campe what they ſhall doe. The particular bands and troupes of the Armie haue in like manner their ſmaller ſort, and euery Captaine in his ſeuerall Regiment hath alſo one of the ſmalleſt, which they ſtrike with their hands. Whereupon it falleth out, that when they heare the ſound of the generall Rattle, or Cornet, or the other third kind of Inſtrument, euery part of the Army doth preſently anſwere in the ſame note, ſignifying thereby, that they haue well vnderſtood the good pleaſure of the Captaine, and ſo conſequently the vnder Captaines doe the like. Neither doe they onely vſe theſe Inſtruments and ſounds vniuerſally, but alſo when they are in fight and in skirmiſh, the valiant and couragious Souldiers go before the reſt, and with this kind of bells, which they ſtrike with their woodden wands, they dance, and encourage their fellowes, and by the note doe ſignifie vnto them in what danger they are, and what weapons they haue met withall.

The vſe of theſe Inſtruments.

The Militarie apparell of the better ſort.

The Military apparell of the better ſort, and of the Lords of the Moci-Conghi, is this. On their heads they carry a Cap, which is garniſhed with ſundry Plumes of the feathers of the Eſtridge, of the Peacocke, of the Cocke, and of other kinds of Birds, which make them to ſeeme men of greater ſtature then they are, and terrible to looke vpon. From the girdle vpwards they are all naked, and haue hanging about them from their neckes, both on the right ſide and on the left, euen as low as to both their flankes, certaine chaines of Iron, with Rings vpon them as bigge as a mans little finger, which they vſe for a certaine militarie pompe and brauery. From the girdle downewards they haue breeches of Linnen, or Sendale, which are couered with Cloath, and reach downe to their heeles, but then they are folded againe vpwards, and tucked vnder their girdle. Vpon their girdle, which (as we told you) is made with exquiſite and curious worke, they doe faſten certaine bells, very like to the inſtruments that are before named, which in moouing of themſelues, and in fighting with their enemies, doe ring and make a noyſe, and adde courage vnto them, while they are in combate with their aduerſaries. Vpon their legges they haue likewiſe their Buskins, after the Portugall faſhion. Their Armour we haue already declared, that is to ſay; Bow and Arrowes, Sword, Dagger and Target: but yet with this caueat, that whoſoeuer weareth a Bow, he weareth alſo a Dagger, but no Target: for thoſe two weapons may not be worne together, but Sword and Target they may lawfully weare both at once.

Their weapons

The Militarie apparell of the meaner ſort.

The common Souldiers goe all naked from the girdle-ſtead vpwards, and haue the reſt of their bodies armed with Bow and Arrowes, and Daggers. Theſe are they that doe firſt offer the skirmiſh, going out before the reſt of the Army, as it were ſeuerally and diſperſedly prouoking to fight, and receiuing the ſhot from a farre off, they turne and winde this way and that way, and doe nimbly leape from one ſide to another, to the end they may auoyd the lighting of their enemies Arrowes. Beſides theſe, there are alſo certaine quicke and gallant young men, that runne out before the reſt, which with the ringing of their bells (as before is ſaid) are as it were comforters of their fellowes, and when they haue fought ſo much, that the Captaine thinketh them to be euen weary, then doth he call them backe with the ſound of one of thoſe inſtruments aboue mentioned: ſo that perceiuing the medley to wax hot, they turn about and retyre themſelues backe againe, and others ſucceede in their places, which courſe is ſtill obſerued and kept vntill ſuch time, as both the Armies doe indeed ioyne all their maine forces together, and ſo fight it out.

The Iſſue of this battell.

In the place aboue deſcribed, there were ſundry encounters on the one ſide, and on the other. And in the firſt battailes the people of Congo remained Conquerors: but afterward, when they had diuers times fought together with great loſſe on both ſides, and victuals began now to faile, and conſequently men waxed ſicke and died, the Campe of the King of Congo was diſſolued, and euery man returned to his owne home.

P. Diaz at Luiola.

In this meane while Paulo Diaz, though he could not ioyne his forces with the Army of his friends that came to ſuccour him, yet ſet himſelfe forwards, and paſſing ouer the Riuer ſtayed at Luiola, becauſe it was a place very ſtrong, and fit to reſiſt the King of Angola. The ſituation of Luiola is this: The two Riuers, Coanza and Luiola doe ioyne together about one hundred and fiue miles from the Sea ſhore, and a little aboue the ſaid ioyning, theſe Riuers doe ſeuer themſelues, for the ſpace of an Harquebuſſe ſhot, ſo that they make as it were an Iland betweene them. In which Iland, at the meeting ting of the two Riuers there riſeth a hill, which Paulo Diaz ſurprized and fortified for his better ſafetie. And whereas in times paſt, there was neuer any habitation there, now at this preſent it is growne to be a prety Countrey inhabited by the Portugals.

The hills Cabambe.

From this place thus ſurprized by Paulo Diaz, and called Luiola, you may ſaile along the Riuer with certaine ſmall veſſels, euen to the Sea, and goe by land without any danger for the ſpace of one hundred and fiue miles. Neere thereunto are the hills, that are called the hills of Cabambe, producing infinite ſtore of Siluer: which the ſaid Diaz doth euery day by little and little endeuour to conquer. And theſe hils are the grand quarrell betweene him and the people of Angola. For knowing that the Portugals doe eſteeme greatly of theſe hills, in regard of the Siluer pits which are there in great abundance; they doe vſe all the force and skill they can to keepe the Portugals from them. They fight alſo with them in diuers other places: for the Portugals paſſing ouer the Riuer Coanza, do continually make in-roades into the Countries that are ſubiect to the King of Angola.

The weapons of the people of Angola.

Their militarie actions.

The weapons of theſe peoples, are Bowes ſixe handfull long, with ſtrings made of the barks of Trees, Arrowes of Wood, leſſe then a mans little finger, and ſixe handfuls long. They haue Iron heads, made like a hooke, and feathers of Birds in the tops of them: and of theſe Arrowes they vſe to carry to the number of ſixe or ſeuen vpon their Bow hand, without any Quiuer at all. Their Daggers are faſhioned with a haft after the manner of a Knife, which they weare at their girdle, on their left ſide, and hold them aloft in their hands, when they fight with them. By their Militarie actions and proceedings, you may obſerue their great skill and good order in matter of warre. For in diuers batailes that were betweene them and the Portugals, it was plainely ſeene how they could chuſe their aduantages againſt their enemies, as by aſſaulting them in the night time, and in rainy weather, to the end that their Harquebuſſes and Gunnes ſhould not take fire; and alſo by diuiding their forces into many troopes, to trouble them the more. The King doth not vſe to goe to the warre in his owne perſon, but ſendeth his Captaines in his ſtead. The people are alſo accuſtomed to flye and runne away incontinently, as ſoone as they ſee their Captaine ſlaine, neither can they be perſwaded to ſtay by any reaſon or argument, but preſently yeeld vp the field. They are all Foot-men, neither haue they any Horſes at all: and therefore the Captaines, if they will not goe on foote, cauſe themſelues to bee carried on the ſhoulders of their Slaues, after one of the three manners, which we will ſhew vnto you hereafter.

Rudeneſſe of art military, and prouiſion of and for ſouldiers.

This Nation goeth out to warre, in number almoſt infinite, and very confuſedly: they leaue no man at home that is fit to carry a weapon: they make no preparation of victuals neceſſarie for the Campe: but ſuch as perhaps haue any, conuey it with them vpon the ſhoulders of their Seruants, and yet they haue ſundry ſorts of creatures that might bee managed, and ſerue their turnes to draw, and to carry, as in the ſecond part of this Treatiſe ſhall be deſcribed vnto you. And thereupon it falleth out, that when they come into any Countrey with their whole Army, all their food is quickly quite conſumed, and then hauing nothing left to feed vpon, they diſſolue their hoaſt euen in the greateſt neceſſitie of proſecuting their enterpriſe, and ſo are inforced by hunger to returne into their owne Countries.

They are giuē to diuination by Birds.

They are greatly giuen to Diuination by Birds: If a Bird chance to flye on their left hand, or cry in ſuch manner, as thoſe which make profeſſion to vnderſtand the ſame, do ſay, that it fore-ſheweth ill lucke and aduerſity, or that they may go no further forwards, they will preſently turne backe and repaire home: which cuſtome was alſo in the old time obſerued by the ancient Romans, and likewiſe at this day by ſundry other Pagans.

Why ſo ſmall a number, as Paulo Diaz had with him, was able to reſiſt ſo huge an Army of the King of Angola.

Now if it ſhall ſeeme ſtrange to any man, that ſo few Portugall Souldiers, as Paulo Diaz retaineth there with him, and others of the Portugall Nation, which Trafficke into the Realme, and releeue him with ſuccours, being in number but three hundred at the moſt, accounting their Slaues, and alſo the Male-contents, the Rebels and Fugitiues of Angola, which daily reſort vnto him, and amount not in all to the quantitie of fifteene thouſand men, ſhould be able to make ſo gallant a reſiſtance againſt that innumerable rabble of Negroes, being ſubiect to the King of Angola, which are gathered there together (as it is ſaid) to the number of a Million of ſoules. I anſwere, that great reaſon may be alleadged for the ſame. For the Armie of the Negroes is all naked, and vtterly deſtitute of all prouiſion and furniture for Armour of defence: And as for their weapons of offence, they conſiſt onely but of Bowes and Daggers (as I told you.) But our few Portugals that are there, are well lapped in certaine Iackets that are ſtuffed and baſted with bombaſte, and ſtitched and quilted very ſoundly, which keepe their Armes very ſafe, and their bodies downe-wards as low as their knees: Their heads alſo are armed with cappes made of the ſame ſtuffe, which doe reſiſt the ſhot of the Arrow, and the ſtroke of the Dagger: Beſides that, they are girt with long ſwords, and ſome Horſemen there are among them that carry ſpeares for their weapons. Now you muſt vnderſtand that one man on horſe-backe, is of more worth then a hundred Negroes, becauſe the Horſemen doe afright them greatly: and eſpecially of thoſe that doe diſcharge Gunnes and Peeces of Artillarie againſt them, they doe ſtand continually in an extreame bodily feare. So that theſe few being well armed, and cunningly and artificially ordered, muſt needs overcome the other, though they be very many in number. This Kingdome of Angola, is full of peo- ple beyond all credite: For euery Man taketh as many Wiues as he liſteth, and ſo they multiply infinitely: But they doe not vſe ſo to do in the kingdome of Congo, which liueth after the manner of the Chriſtians.

This Kingdome alſo is very rich in Mines of Siluer, and moſt excellent Copper; and for other kinds of Mettall, there is more in this kingdome then in any other Countrey of the world whatſoeuer. Fruitfull it is in all manner of food, and ſundry ſorts of Cattell, and ſpecially for great heards of Kine. True it is, that this people doe loue Dogges fleſh better then any other meate: and for that purpoſe they feed and fatten them, and then kill them and ſell them in their open ſhambles. It is conſtantly affirmed, that a great Dog accuſtomed to the Bull, was ſold by exchange for two and twentie Slaues, which after the rate of ten Duckets a poll, were worth in all two hundred and twentie Duckets: in ſo high a price and account doe they hold that Creature.

A Dogge ſold for two hundred and twentie Duckets. The money of Angola.

The Monyes that are vſed in Angola, are much different from the Lumache of Congo: for they of Angola doe vſe Beads of Glaſſe, ſuch as are made in Venice, as bigge as a Nut, and ſome of leſſer quantitie, and of diuers and ſundry colours and faſhions. Theſe doe the people of Angola make, not onely to vſe them for money, but alſo for an ornament of their men and women, to weare about their necks and their armes, and are called in their tongue Anzolos: but when they are threeded vpon a ſtring like a paire of Beads, they call them Mizanga.

The Religion of Angola. The language of the people of Angola.

The King of Angola is by religion a Gentile, and worſhippeth Idols, and ſo doe all the people in his Kingdome. It is true, that he hath greatly deſired to become a Chriſtian, after the example of the King of Congo. But becauſe there hath not beene as yet any poſſibilitie to ſend Prieſts vnto him, that might illuminate and inſtruct him, he remaineth ſtill in darkneſſe. The foreſaid Signor Odoardo told mee, that in his time the King of Angola ſent an Ambaſſadour to the King of Congo, requeſting that hee would ſend him ſome religious perſons to informe him in the Chriſtian Religion: but the King of Congo had none there that he could ſpare, and therefore could ſend him none. At this day, both theſe Kings doe Trafficke together, and are in amitie one with another: the King of Angola hauing now cleered and diſcharged himſelfe for the iniuries and ſlaughters that were committed vpon thoſe of Congo, and vpon the Portugals at Gabazo.

The language of the people of Angola is all one with the language of the people of Congo, becauſe (as we told you before) they are both but one Kingdome. Onely the difference betweene them is, as commonly it is betweene two Nations that border one vpon another.

The reſt of the Kingdome of Angola deſcribed.

Cape Negro 1. The blacke Cape.

We haue ſignified vnto you heretofore, that the Bay of Cowes doth diuide the Kingdome of Angola in the middeſt; and hitherto we haue treated but of the one halfe thereof: Now wee will deſcribe vnto you the ſecond part of it, which lyeth from the ſaid Bay of Cowes towards the South. From this Bay then, to the blacke Cape, called Cape Negro, by the Coaſt of the Ocean, they doe reckon two hundred and twenty miles, of ſuch Countrey and ſoyle as the former is, and poſſeſſed by many Lords that are ſubiect to the King of Angola. From Cape Negro there runneth a line towards the Eaſt, through the middeſt of the Mountaines, that are called, Monti Freddi, that is to ſay, The cold Mountaines: which alſo in ſome certaine parts of them, that are higher then the reſt towards the Equinoctiall, are tearmed by the Portugals, Monti Neuoſi, or Snowy Mountaines, and ſo endeth at the rootes of other Mountaines, that are called the Mountaines of Cryſtall. (Out of theſe Snowy Mountaines doe ſpring the waters of the Lake Dumbea Zocche.) This foreſaid line, from the Mountaine of Cryſtall, draweth on-wards towards the North through the Mountaines of Siluer, till you come to Malemba, where we told you the Kingdome of Congo was diuided, and parted the Riuer of Coari in the midſt. And this is the Countrey poſſeſſed by the King of Angola, whereof I haue no more to ſay, then is already ſet downe, neither of the qualities of his perſon, nor of his Court.

Monti Freddi. 1. The cold Mountaines.

The Mountaines of Chriſtall.

The Weſt containeth 375. miles.

The North 540.

The Eaſt 500.

The South 360

Beginning therefore at the Riuer Coanza, and drawing towards the Equinoctiall three hundred ſeuentie fiue miles, you ſhall finde the Riuer, that they call Las Barreas Vermellias, or the Redde Pits, which are indeed the ragged ruines of certaine Rockes worne by the Sea; and when they fall downe, doe ſhew themſelues to bee of a red colour. From thence by a direct line vpon the North, that which the King poſſeſſeth, is foure hundred and fifty miles. And then the ſaid line diuiding it ſelfe towards the South, paſſeth by the hills of Cryſtall (not thoſe that we told you before did belong to Angola, but others that are called by the ſame name) and ſo by the Mountaines of Salnitro, trauerſing the Riuer Verbela, at the roots of the Mountaines of Siluer, it endeth at the Lake Aqueluuda, which is the ſpace of fiue hundred miles. The fourth line runneth along the Riuer Coanza, which iſſueth out of the ſaid Lake, and containeth three hundred and ſixtie miles. So that the whole Realme now poſſeſſed by Don Aluaro, the King of Congo is in compaſſe, one thouſand ſixe hundred eightie fiue miles. But the breadth thereof beginneth at the mouth of the Riuer Zaire, where the point is, which in the Portugall ſpeech is called, Padraon, and ſo cutting the Kingdome of Congo in the middle, and croſſing ouer the Mountaines of the Sunne, and the Mountaines of Cryſtall, there it endeth, containing the ſpace of ſixe hundred miles, and within one hundred and fiftie miles, neere to the Riuer Nilus. Very true it is indeed, that in ancient time the Predeceſſors of this Prince did raigne ouer many other Countries there-abouts, which in proceſſe of time they haue loſt: and although they bee now in the gouernment of others, yet doe the Kings of Congo, retaine ſtill to this day the titles of thoſe Regions, as for example, Don Aluaro, King of Congo, and of Abundos, and of Matama, and of Quizama, and of Angola, and of Cacongo, and of the ſeuen Kingdomes of Congere Amolaza, and of the Pangelungos, and Lord of the Riuer Zaire, and of the Anziquos, and Anziquana, and of Loango.

The title or ſtile of the King of Congo.

This Kingdome is diuided into ſixe Prouinces, that is to ſay, Bamba, Songo, Sundi, Pango, Batta, and Pemba. The Prouince of Bamba, (which is the greateſt and the richeſt) is gouerned by Don Sebaſtian Mani-Bamba, couſin to the King Don Aluaro laſt deceaſed, and it is ſituated vpon the Sea-coaſt, from the Riuer Ambrize, vntill you come to the Riuer Coanza towards the South. This Don Sebaſtian hath vnder his Dominion many Princes and Lords, and the name, of the greateſt of them are theſe, Don Antonio Mani-Bamba, who is Lieutenant and Brother to Don Sebaſtian, and Mani-Lemba another, and Mani-Danda, and Mani Bengo, and Mani-Loanda, who is Gouernour of the Iland of Loanda, and Mani-Corimba, and Mani-Coanza, and Mani-Cazzanzi. All theſe doe gouerne all the Sea-coaſt but within Land, for that part which belongeth to Angola, there are another people called the Ambundos, who dwelling on the borders of Angola, are ſubiect to the ſaid Mani-Bamba, and they are theſe, Angazs, Chingbengo, Motollo, Chabonda, and many others of baſer condition.

The firſt Prouince is Bamba, and the deſcription of it. Sebaſtian chiefe Gouernour of Bamba, and thoſe that rule vnder him.

Note, that this word Mani, ſignifieth a Prince or a Lord, and the reſt of the word is the name of the Countrey and Lordſhip, where the Lord ruleth. As for example, Mani-Bamba ſignifieth the Lord of the Countrey of Bamba, and Mani-Corimba, the Lord of the Countrey of Corimba, which is a part of Bamba, and ſo likewiſe of the reſt. This Prouince of Bamba confineth with Angola on the South, and vpon the Eaſt of it towards the Lake Achelunda, lyeth the Countrey of Quizama, which is gouerned like a Common-wealth, and is diuided among a number of Lords, who indeed liuing at their owne libertie, doe neither obey the King of Congo, nor the King of Angola.

Mani, what it ſignifieth. The Confines of Bamba. The Countrey of Quizama.

And to be ſhort, theſe Lords of Quizama, after they had a long time quarrelled with Paulo Diaz, yet at laſt they became his ſubiects, becauſe they would auoyd the yoke of the King of Angola, and by their good aid and aſſiſtance, doth Paulo Diaz greatly helpe himſelfe againſt the ſaid King of Angola.

Now, the aforeſaid Countrey of Bamba, (as we haue told you) is the principall Prouince of all the Realme of Congo, and indeed the very Key, and the Buckler and the Sword, and the defence thereof, and (as it were) the frontier which oppoſeth it ſelfe againſt all their Enemies. For it reſiſteth all the reuolts and rebellions of thoſe quarters, and hath very valorous people in it, that are alwayes readie for to fight, ſo that they doe continually keepe their Aduerſaries of Angola in great awe: and if it happen at any time that their King ſtand in need, they are alwayes at his command to annoy the other Countries whenſoeuer. When need requireth, he may haue in Campe foure hundred thouſand men of Warre, and yet that number is but onely the ſixt part of the whole Kingdome, though indeed it be the better part and the ſtronger. The principall Citie of this Prouince lyeth in the Plaine which is betweene the Riuer Loze and Ambrize, and is called Panza (which is a common name for euery Towne.) There dwelleth the Lord of the Prouince, and it is diſtant from the Sea one hundred miles. In this Signorie alſo doe the hils begin, where the Mines of ſiluer and other metals are found, and ſo ſtretch out towards the Kingdome of Angola. It is very rich, for vpon the Coaſt of the Sea there, they haue great ſtore of the Lumache, which are vſed for moneyes ouer all the Kingdome of Congo: Beſides, there is alſo a greater Trafficke and Market for ſlaues, that are brought out of Angola, then in any place elſe. For there are yearely bought by the Portugals aboue fiue thouſand head of Negroes, which afterwards they conueigh away with them, and ſo ſell them into diuers parts of the World.

Bamba the principall Prouince of all Congo. Bamba yeeldeth for a need 400000. men of warre. Panza the principall Citie of Bamba. Mines of ſiluer and other metals. Incredible numbers of ſlaues yearely ſold to the Portugals. One M.T.Turner which liued there, told me of 10000. ſlaues out of theſe parts of Africa yearely can yeeld, and that one Portugall in Braſill had 10000.

The people of this Prouince, are in Armes the moſt valiant of all the Kingdome of Congo. They goe armed like the Slauonians, with long and large Swords, that are brought them out of Portugall. There are among them very mightie men, that will cleaue a ſlaue in the middeſt at one blow, and cut off the head of a Bull at one ſtroke with one of thoſe Swords. And (that which is more, and will peraduenture ſeeme incredible) one of theſe valiant men did beare vpon his arme a certaine Veſſell of Wine, which was the fourth part of a Butte, and might weigh about three hundred twentie fiue pound, vntill it was cleane emptied. Moreouer, they doe carrie Bow and Arrowes, whereat they are very quicke and nimble, and withall their long Targets made of the Dants skinne, whereof wee told you before, when wee made mention of the Anzichi.

The creatures that are found in this Prouince, are firſt the Elephants, which do breed ouer all the Kingdome of Congo, but principally in the Countrey of Bamba, becauſe it aboundeth in Woods, in paſtures and in waters.

Certaine creatures in Bamba Prouince. Elephants.

Signor Odoardo told mee, that hee had oftentimes taken the meaſure of an Elephants foot in the duſt, and one of them was in plaine Diameter foure ſpannes broad. But in theſe quarters they ſay that the Elephants doe liue one hundred and fiftie yeares, and that vntill the middle of their age they continue ſtill in growing. And to confirme this truth he added, that hee had ſeene and weighed diuers of their Teeth (which are not of horne, as ſome thinke) and their waight amounted to two hundred pounds apiece, after the rate of twelue ounces to euery pound. In the Language of Congo, the Elephants Tooth is called Mene-Manzao, that is to ſay, The Tooth of an Elephant.

Their Eares are greater then the greateſt Targets that the Turkes vſe to weare, in length ſixe ſpannes, in ſhape like an Egge, and towards their ſhoulders they grow to be narrower and ſharper. With their Eares, and with their Trunke, and with their Tayle, they beat away the Flies that trouble them.

Certain haires in the Elephants tayle, very precious. M. Iobſon gaue me one of theſe tayles with ſuch blacke ſtrong haires.

They haue in their Tayle, certaine haires or briſtles as bigge as Ruſhes or Broome-ſprigs, of a ſhining blacke colour. The older they be, the fairer and ſtronger they bee, and of great price among them.

And for the cauſe lately rehearſed, many there are, which wayting for the Elephants, when they aſcend ſome ſteepe and narrow way, doe come behind them, and with very ſharpe Kniues cut off their Tayles: the poore beaſt being not able in thoſe ſtraites to turne backe to reuenge it ſelfe, nor with his Trunke to reach his Enemie. And this they doe, onely to haue thoſe haires, which they ſell for two or three ſlaues a piece. Other light and couragious perſons there are, that truſting much to their ſwiftneſſe in running, doe lye in a waite, and ſet vpon the poore beaſts behind, whiles they are in feeding, and at one blow attempt to cut off their Tayles, and ſo endeuour to ſaue themſelues by running away in a round. For the greatneſſe of the beaſt is ſuch, as out-right it is very ſwift, becauſe it maketh very large ſtrides, though indeed but ſlow, and in the plaine is farre quicker then any luſtie Horſe: but in turning round it loſeth much time, and ſo the Huntſman eſcapeth in ſafetie.

The manner of the Elephants feeding their want of knees is a fable

In their feeding, they vſe to ſhake and root vp the great Trees with the force of their ſhoulders, and ſtrength of their whole backes: But the ſmaller Trees they take betweene both their Teeth, and ſo bow them and plucke them downe, that they may feede vpon the leaues of them: inſomuch, as ſometimes they breake one of their Teeth with ſo doing. And this is the cauſe why you ſhall find diuers of them in the fields that haue loſt their Teeth. They chawe their meate with their ſhort Teeth, which are not ſeene as their two long Tuskes are: and they carrie it to their mouth by their long Snout, or Trunke, which is to them in ſtead of an arme and a hand. The tip of their Trunke is faſhioned and diuided into little ſlits, and (as it were) fingers, wherewith they will take vp very ſmall things, as Nuts, and Strawes, and Berries, and ſo reach them to their mouth, as I, Philippo Pigafetta haue ſeene my ſelfe at Liſbon.

The ſhee-Elephant.

The Females of theſe Creatures, doe beare their brood in their wombe for the ſpace of two yeares and no more: And for as much as the yong Elephant cannot ſo quickly be brought vp, (for it groweth very ſlowly) the Milke is kept from it, and ſo it waxeth apt to feed of it ſelfe. And therefore Mother Nature hath prouided that the Elephants are not great with young, but from ſeuen yeares to ſeuen yeares.

The Elephants ſkinne.

Their ſkinne is hard beyond all credit. For being foure fingers thicke, it cannot be pierced, no not with the ſhot of an Harquebuſſe.

The manner of taking the Elephants.

The people of that Countrey haue not the skill to tame theſe beaſts. Whereby they might reape great commoditie and profit, for carrying their ſtuffe from place to place for diuers other good vſes. But yet they take them; by digging certaine deepe Trenches in the places, where they vſe to paſture, which Trenches are very narrow at the bottome, and broad aboue, to the end the beaſt may not helpe himſelfe, and leape out when hee is fallen into them. Theſe Trenches they couer with Soddes of Earth, and Graſſe, and leaues, becauſe the beaſt ſhould not ſee their traine, but paſſing ouer them remayne there entrenched. Whereupon the Gentleman beforenamed told me, that he had ſeene with his owne eyes a very ſtrange and admirable thing in Coanza; namely, that a young Elephant following his Damme, fell downe by chance into one of theſe Pits, and after that ſhe could not with all her skill and ſtrength draw him out of it, ſhe buried him therein, and couered him with Earth, with branches and with boughes, inſomuch as ſhe filled the pit vp to the top, to the end that the Hunters ſhould not enioy her Calfe, chooſing rather to kill it her ſelfe, then to leaue it to the mercie of the cruell Huntſmen. This louing and kind Mother, not fearing the people (that ſtood round about her, and ſhouted againſt her, and threatned her with ſundry weapons, and vttered ſtrange clamours and noyſes to affray her, and caſt many fires at her) but aſſuring her ſelfe in her owne ſtrong and valiant nature, did labour and toyle from morning till night, that ſhe might draw her Calfe out of the pit: and when ſhee found that it was not poſſible for her to atchieue what ſhee deſired, then ſhe couered it in manner as we haue told you.

A ſtrange effect of nature.

The nature of the Elephant.

The Elephant is a very gentle beaſt, and truſteth greatly in his naturall ſtrength. Hee feareth nothing, nor hurteth any man that doth not trouble him: and haunteth neere to mens houſes, without doing any harme at all. If hee eſpie men that goe in his walke, hee will not meddle with them, vnleſſe they ſeeke to moleſt him: ſauing that ſometimes perauenture he will gently with his Snout, hoyſe them vpwards into the Ayre, whom hee meeteth withall in his way, and that is all the hurt he will doe vnto them. Theſe Elephants doe greatly delight in waters. For Signor Odoardo affirmed, that in the way betweene Cazanza and Loanda, in a little graſſie Valley he had ſeene about one hundred of them in a company, old and young that followed their Dammes: they vſe to goe together in Heards, as Kine, and Camels, and other ſuch like gentle Creatures doe, and not alone like Lions and other ſuch wild beaſts.

Rhinoceros, or Abadas.

There are brought into the Countries of the Anzichi, ſome of the Hornes that grow vpon the noſe of the Rhinoceros, that are both of great value and eſtimation, and alſo vſed for the helpe of diuers Diſeaſes.

Lions.

There are in the Region of the Anzichi, Lions alſo, like the Lions that breed in other parts of the World, but they doe not vſe to haunt the Region of Bamba: But in Bamba there are verie great ſtore of Tygres, which are of the very ſame ſhape that thoſe in Florence are, which Signor Odoardo ſaw there, and teſtified to be very Tygres indeed. They will not ſet vpon any men that are white, but onely ſuch as are blacke: And it hath beene found, that when the white and the blacke haue ſlept together in the night-time, they haue ſlaine the black to deuoure them, and ſpared the white.

Tygres.

When they are hungry, they will be ſo bold as to fetch Cattle, euen out of the yards that are about the houſes without any feare at all, when they cannot find any victuals abroad in the fields. They are very dangerous and hurtfull to all kinds of Creatures whatſoeuer they bee, and in that Language they are called, Engoi.

They are as fierce and cruell beaſts as the Lion, and roare as the Lion doth. They are alſo altogether like the Lion, ſauing onely in the colour of their haire; for the Tygre is ſpotted, but the Lion all of one colour. They vſe to take and kill theſe Tygres after diuers manners. For beſides that, which hath beene before ſpoken, they poyſon them with Sublimate, or ſome other venome, mingled with fleſh which is laid for them. Or elſe they tye young Goates at certaine Lines made like ſnares, and faſtned about the ſtocke of a Tree, ſo that when the beaſt commeth to her prey, the Engine openeth it ſelfe, and the more the beaſt ſtriueth withall, the more it is intangled, and ſo at laſt is hanged therein.

The manner of taking the tame Tygres.

A tame Tygre.

Signor Odoardo told me, that he had gotten one of them, that was fifteene dayes old, and hee brought it vp with Goats Milke: which being afterwards growne bigger would follow him like a Dogge: and although it were tame, yet it would not willingly ſuffer any other to touch it, beſides his Maſter. He would alſo roare mightily, and when hee was angry, his eyes would looke very terribly and fearefully. But in proceſſe of time this Tygre killed a Dogge, belonging to the houſe, and alſo a Zebra, that were very deare to their Maſter, and thereupon, perceiuing how perillous a beaſt it was, he ſlue it with an Harquebuſſe-ſhot. Hee reported, moreouer, that the Moſtacchios of the Tygre are held in that Region to be mortall Poyſon: for beeing giuen in meates, it procureth a man to die, as it were in a madneſſe: And therefore the King doth puniſh all thoſe that bring him a Tygres skin without the Moſtacchios.

The Zebra.

There breedeth likewiſe in this Countey another Creature, which they call a Zebra, commonly found alſo in certaine Prouinces of Barbary and Africa, which although it be altogether made like a great Mule, yet is not a Mule indeed, for it beareth young ones. It hath a moſt ſingular skin, and peculiar from all other Creatures. For from the ridge of the chin downe towards the belly, it is ſtraked with rowes of three colours, blacke, white, and browne Bay, about the breadth of three fingers a piece, and ſo meet againe together in a Circle, euery row, with his owne colour. So that the necke, and the head; and the Maine (which is not great) and the eares, and all the legs are ſo interchanged with theſe colours, and in ſuch manner and order, as with out all faile, if the firſt ſtrake beginne with white, then followeth the ſecond with blacke, and in the third place the Bay: and ſo another courſe beginning in white, endeth ſtill in Bay. And this rule is generally and infallibly obſerued ouer all the bodie. The Tayle is like the Tayle of a Mule, of a Morell colour, but yet it is well coloured, and hath a gliſtering gloſſe. The feet like the feet of a Mule, and ſo are the hooſes. But touching the reſt of her carriage and qualities, ſhe is very luſtie and pleaſant as a Horſe: and ſpecially in going, and in running ſhee is ſo light and ſo ſwift, that it is admirable. Inſomuch as in Portugall and in Caſtile alſo, it is commonly vſed (as it were for a Prouerbe) as ſwift as a Zebra, when they will ſignifie an exceeding quikneſſe. Theſe Creatures are all wild, they breed euery yeare, and are there in ſuch abundance that they are innumerable. If they were made tame, they would ſerue to runne and to draw for the warres, and for many other good vſes, as well as the beſt Horſes that are.

The manner of the carrying of the Mociconghi.

Neceſſitie hath taught them to vſe men in ſteed of labouring Cattell. For either they lay themſelues all along in certaine Litters (as it were) or elſe ſet themſelues vpright, with ſhadowes ouer them to keepe them from the Sunne, and ſo they cauſe themſelues to bee carryed too and fro, by their ſlaues, or by other men that for wages are alwayes readie at Poſte-houſes to that purpoſe. They that meane to iourney with ſpeed, doe take with them many ſlaues, and when the firſt number are weary, then doe the ſecond number vndertake the burden, and ſo ſuceſſiuely change one after another, as the Tartarians and Perſians vſe to doe with their Horſes: and theſe men being thus accuſtomed to theſe labours, (and ſo often changing) will goe as faſt as any Poſtilion gallop.

The Dante.

There are alſo to be found in this Countrie, certaine other foure-footed beaſts, ſomewhat leſſe then Oxen, of colour Red, with hornes like Goats hornes, which are very ſmooth and gliſtring, and inclining to blacke, whereof they make diuers pretie knackes, as they doe likewiſe of the Buffes hornes. They haue their heads and their haires, like the heads & haires of Oxen: and their skins are of great eſtimation; and therefore they are carried into Portugall, and from thence into Germanie, to be dreſſed, and then they are called Dantes. The King of Congo is very deſirous to haue ſome men that had skill to cleanſe them, and dreſſe them, and to make them fit for vſe, to end he might employ them for Armour of defence. And yet thoſe Nations doe alreadie vſe them for Shields and Targets; and doe find that they will reſiſt the blow of a weapon, and eſpecially the ſhot of an Arrow. They kill them with Harquebuſſes, and with Arrowes. But if they doe eſpie the Huntſman, they will ſet vpon him, and being by nature very fierce, and couragious, they will ſo knocke him and thumpe him with their feet, and their Muzzle (becauſe they cannot doe him any harme with their hornes) that they will leaue him either halfe dead, or ſtarke dead. There is alſo an infinite number of wild Buffes, that goe wandring about the Deſarts, in the Kingdome of the Anzichi; and wild Aſſes likewiſe, which the Greekes call Onagri.

Wild Buffes.
Wild Aſſes.

Empalanga.

There are beſides theſe, other beaſts, called Empalanga; which are in bigneſſe and ſhape like Oxen, ſauing that they hold their necke and head aloft, and haue their hornes broad and crooked, three hand-breadths long, diuided into knots, and ſharpe at the ends, whereof they might make very faire Cornets to ſound withall: and although they liue in the Forreſts, yet are they not noyſome nor harmefull. The skins of their neckes are vſed for ſhoo-ſoles, and their fleſh for meate. They might likewiſe be brought to draw the Plough, and doe good ſeruice in any other labour, and tilling of the ground. Moreouer, they feed great herds of Kine, and tame Oxen, tame Hogs, and wild Boares, flockes of Sheepe and Goats. Signor Odoardo affirmed, that the Goats and the Sheepe doe bring forth two, and three, and foure Lambs or Kids at a time, and two, when they haue feweſt; and neuer one alone at any time.

Other fruitfull Cattell.

Wolues.

There are Wolues alſo which loue the Oyle of Palmes, beyond all meaſure. They will ſmell this Oyle afarre off, and ſteale it in the night time out of their houſes of ſtraw, and ſometimes from thoſe that carrie it by the way, whiles the poore ſoules doe reſt themſelues and ſleepe. The Oyle (as ſhall be told you) is made of the Palme-tree; it is thicke and hard, like Butter. And it is a maruell to ſee, how theſe Wolues doe take a Bottle that is full of this liquor betweene their teeth, and ſo caſt it on their ſhoulders, and runne away withall, as our Wolues here doe with a Sheepe. There are very great ſtore of Foxes, that ſteale Hennes as our Foxes doe. And farther in this Countrie of Bamba, there is an innumerable quantitie of hunting game, as Stags, fallow Deere, Roe-buckes, and Gazels, whereof he affirmed that he had ſeene exceeding great herds, as alſo of Conies and Hares, becauſe there were no Hunters to kill them.

Foxes.

Hunting game.

In Pemba, Ciuet-cats.

In the Region of Pemba there are many wild Ciuet-cats, which the Portugals call Algazia, and ſome of theſe, the people of that Countrie had made tame, that they might enioy their Ciuet, in the ſmell whereof they doe greatly delight. But this was before the Portugals did trafficke with thoſe Countries. And in Manibatta there are caught many Sables, with very white haires, and exceeding fine, called Incire: but no man may weare theſe skinnes vnleſſe the Prince permit him ſo to doe; for, it is held in great eſtimation, and euery Sable is worth a Slaue. Towards the Anzichi they catch Marterns alſo, wherewith they apparell themſelues, as in due place we will note vnto you. Apes, Monkies, and ſuch other kind of beaſts, ſmall and great of all ſorts there are many in the Region of Sogno, that lieth vpon the Riuer Zaire.

In Batta, Sables

In Anzigua, Marterns.
In Sogno, Apes, and Monkies.

Adders and Snakes of an huge ſcantling. The Author doth not ſet downe the name. In Braſill they call it Cucuryuba.

Of Adders and Snakes you ſhall find ſome that are fiue and twentie ſpanne long, and fiue ſpan broad: and the bellie and the mouth ſo large, that they can ſwallow and receiue into their bellie a whole Stag, or any other creature of that bigneſſe. And it is called, that is to ſay, A great Water-adder. It will goe forth of the water vp to the Land to prey for his victuals, and then returne into the Riuers againe, and ſo it liueth in both the Elements. It will get it ſelfe vp vpon the boughs and branches of Trees, and there watch the Cattell that feed thereabouts, which when they are come neere vnto it, preſently it will fall vpon them, and wind it ſelfe in many twines about them, and clap his taile on their hinder parts, and ſo it straineth them, and biteth ſo many holes in them, that at laſt it killeth them. And then it draweth them into ſome Wood, or other ſolitarie place, where it deuoureth them at pleaſure, skinne, hornes, hoofes and all. Now it falleth out, that when it is thus full, and (as it were) great with ſo monſtrous a meale, it becommeth almoſt drunke, and very ſleepie, ſo that any child may kill it. And in this ſort will it remaine full and ſatisfied for the ſpace of fiue or ſixe dayes together, and then returne againe to prey. Theſe Adders doe change their skinnes in their ordinarie ſeaſons; yea, and ſometimes after they haue eaten ſo monſtrouſly, and the ſaid Sloughs, when they are found, are gathered vp, and reſerued for a ſhew of ſo vnmeaſurable a Creature. Theſe Adders are alſo greatly eſteemed by the Pagan Negroes, for they doe vſe to roaſt them, and eate them for meate, and make more account of them then they doe of Hennes, or any ſuch delicate fleſh. They find great ſtore of them, when they haue occaſion to burne their thicke Woods: for there they ſhall haue them lying on the ground, roſted with the fire. Beſides theſe there are Vipers alſo, well knowne vnto that People. Which Vipers are ſo venemous, that ſuch as are bitten by them, doe die within the ſpace of foure and twentie houres. But the Negroes are acquainted with certaine herbs that will heale their wounds.

Vipers.

There are alſo certaine other Creatures, which being as big as Rams, haue wings like Dragons, with long tailes, and long chaps, and diuers rewes of teeth, and feed vpon raw fleſh. Their colour is blue and greene, their ſkinne bepainted like ſcales; and two feet they haue, but no more. The Pagan Negroes, doe vſe to worſhip them as Gods, and at this day you may ſee diuers of them, that are kept for a wonder. And becauſe they are very rare, the chiefe Lords there doe curiouſly preſerue them, and ſuffer the people to worſhip them, which tendeth greatly to their profit, by reaſon of the gifts and oblations which the people offer vnto them. There are there alſo to be found Chamelions.

Another ſtrange Creature.

Chamelions.

Other Serpents there are that are venemous, that carrie vpon the tippe of their tayle, a certaine little roundell like a Bell, which ringeth as they goe, ſo as it may be heard.

A ſtrange Serpent.

Eſtridges are found in thoſe Parts of Sundi, and of Batta, that are towards the Muzambi. The young Eſtridges doe ſpring out of their egges, being warmed and diſcloſed by the eye and heate of the Sunne. Their feathers are vſed in ſtead of Enſignes and Banners in Warre, mingled with ſome plumes of the Peacocke, and are faſhioned in the likeneſſe of a ſhadow againſt the Sunne. And foraſmuch as I am fallen into the ſpeech of Peacocks, I muſt tell you by the way, that in the Parts of Angola, there are Peacocks brought vp priuately in a certaine Wood that is compaſſed about with walls: and the King will not ſuffer any other bodie to keep thoſe Birds but onely himſelfe, becauſe they are for the Royall Enſignes, as I told you before.

The Eſtridge.

Peacocks.

There are alſo Indie-cocks, and Hens, and Geeſe, and Duckes of all ſorts both wild and tame: Partridges, ſo many as children take them with ginnes. Other Birds they haue likewiſe, as Pheſants, which they call Gallignoles, Pigeons, Turtles, and of theſe ſmall Birds, called Becca-fichi, an infinite number. Birds of prey, as Eagles Royall, Faulcons, Gerfaulcons, and Sparrow-hawks, and others, great ſtore, which notwithſtanding the people neuer vſe to hawke withall. Birds of the Sea, as Pelicanes (for ſo the Portugals doe call them) white and great, which ſwimme vnder the water, and haue their throats ſo wide, that they will ſwallow a whole fiſh at once. This Bird hath ſo good a ſtomacke, and naturally ſo hot, that it eaſily digeſteth the Fiſh that it ſwalloweth whole, and the ſkinne of it is ſo hot, that the people of that Countrie doe vſe to weare them, and to warme their cold ſtomackes withall, and therefore make great reckoning of them. There are many white Herons, and grey Bittours, that feed in the Waſhes there, and are called, Royall Birds. Other Fowles there are of the likeneſſe of a Crane, with a red bill and red feet, as bigge as Storkes, and their feathers for the moſt part red and white, and ſome darke grey. Goodly Birds they are to looke to, and the people of the Countrie doe call them Flemmings, becauſe they doe much reſemble them, and are good meat to eate.

Fowles of diuers ſorts.

Birds of prey.

Birds of the Sea.

Other kinds of Fowle.

They haue Parrots of grey colour, great and very talkatiue: and others of greene colour, but they are little ones, and not ſo talkatiue. They haue likewiſe certaine ſmall little Birds, which they call Birds of Muſicke, and yet greater then the Canarie Birds, of feather and bill red: ſome greene, with their feet and bill onely blacke: ſome all white: ſome grey or dunne: ſome all blacke, and this kind is more ſweet in their notes then all the reſt afore-named; for you would thinke that they talked in their ſinging. Others there are of diuers colours, but they doe all ſing in ſundrie ſorts, ſo that the chiefe Lords of thoſe Countries, from ancient times to this day, haue continually kept them in Cages, and greatly eſteemed them for their ſong.

Parrots.

Birds of Muſicke.

§. IIII.

Of the fiue other Prouinces of Congo, to wit, Sogno, Sundi, Pango, Batta, and Pemba.

THis Countrie is bounded with the Riuer Ambrize, towards the North in ſeuen degrees and an halfe, and ſo trauerſing the Riuer Lelunda, and the Riuer Zaire, it endeth at the Rockes, called Berreuras Vermellias, that is to ſay, the Red pits, which are in the Borders of the Kingdome of Loango. In the middeſt of this Prouince there is a certaine Territorie, called by the ſame name Sogno, where the Gouernour of the Countrie dwelleth. The chiefe Lords that rule this Prouince, are called Mani-Sogno, that is, Princes of Sogno, and are commonly of the bloud Royall. The Prince that gouerneth there at this day,* is called Don Diego Mani-Sogno. He hath vnder his dominion many other petie Lords, and other Prouinces, that in old time were free, and liued by themſelues, as the People of Mombalas, ſituate ſomewhat neere to the Citie of Congo, which are now ſubiect to this gouernment. And on the other ſide of the Riuer Zaire towards the North, is the Prouince of Palmar, that is to ſay, of Palmes, becauſe there is great ſtore of Palme-trees growing therein. Other Lords there are, that border vpon the King of Loango, who was ſometime ſubiect to the King of Congo; but in proceſſe

The ſecond Prouince Sogno, and the deſcription thereof.

Sogno the chief Towne of this Prouince.

* 1588.

Don Diego, chiefe Gouernour of Sogno, and thoſe that rule vnder him.

The Bramas.

of time he became a free Lord, and now profeſſeth himſelfe to bee in amitie with the King of Congo, but not to be his vaſſall. The people that are vnder theſe Lords in thoſe borders, are called the Bramas: and they reach within the Land, vnder the Equinoctiall line towards the Eaſt, to the bounds of Anzicana, all along the Mountaines which diuide them from the Anzichi vpon the North. They are called by the people of Loango, Congreamolal, becauſe they were ſubiect to Congo.

The commodities of Sogno.

In this Countrey of Loango there are many Elephants, and great ſtore of Iuory, which they doe willingly exchange for a little Iron, ſo that for the naile of a ſhip (be it neuer ſo ſmall) they will giue a whole Elephants tooth. The reaſon thereof, is either becauſe there groweth no Iron in that place, or elſe they haue not the skill to get it out of the Mines where it groweth: But all the Iron they can get, they imploy for the heading of their Arrowes, and their other weapons, as we told you when we ſpake of the Bramas.

The manner of the life of the Inhabitants.

Sunne worſhipped.

They make great ſtore of Cloth of the Palme tres, whereof we made mention before: but theſe are leſſer, and yet very fine. They haue great abundance of Kine, and of other cattell, before named. They are in Religion Pagans: their apparell after the faſhion of the people of Congo: They maintaine warre with their bordering neighbours, which are the Anzichi, and the Inhabitants of Anzicana; and when they enterpriſe warre againſt the Anzichi, then they craue ayde of the people of Congo, and ſo they remaine halfe in freedome, and halfe in danger of others. They worſhip what they liſt, and hold the Sunne for the greateſt God, as though it were a man, and the Moone next, as though it were a woman. Otherwiſe euery man chooſeth to himſelfe his owne Idoll, and worſhippeth it after his owne pleaſure. Theſe people would eaſily embrace the Chriſtian Religion: For many of them that dwell vpon the borders of Congo, haue beene conuerted to Chriſtendome: and the reſt, for want of Prieſts, and of ſuch as ſhould inſtruct them in the true Religion, do remaine ſtill in their blindneſſe.

The third Prouince Sundi, & the deſcription thereof.

The chiefe Towne of Sundi.

Sundi, is the neereſt of all to the Citie of Congo, called, Citta di San-Saluatore, the Citie of Saint Sauiours, and beginneth about fortie miles diſtant from it, and quite out of the Territorie thereof, and reacheth to the Riuer Zaire, and ſo ouer the ſame to the other ſide, where the Caduta or Fall is, which we mentioned before: and then holdeth on vp-wards on both ſides towards the North, bordering vpon Anzicana, and the Anzichi. Towards the South it goeth along the ſaid Riuer Zaire, vntill you come to the meeting of it with the Riuer Bancare, and all along the bankes thereof, euen to the rootes of the Mountaine of Cryſtall. In the bounds of the Prouince of Pango, it hath her principall Territorie, where the Gouernor lyeth, who hath his name from the Prouince of Sundi, and is ſeated about a daies iourney neere to the Fall of the Riuer, towards the South.

This Prouince of Sundi, is alwaies gouerned by the heire apparent of the King of Congo.

This Prouince is the chiefeſt of all the reſt, and (as it were) the Patrimony of all the Kingdome of Congo: and therefore it is alwaies gouerned by the Kings eldeſt Son, and by thoſe Princes that are to ſucceed him. As it fell out in the time of their firſt Chriſtian King, that was called Don Iohn: whoſe eldeſt ſonne, that was Gouernour heere, ſucceeded him, and was called Don Alfonſo. And euer ſithence, the Kings of Congo haue ſucceſſiuely continued this cuſtome, to conſigne this gouernment to thoſe Princes which are to ſucceed in the Kingdome: As did the King that now * is called Don Aluaro, who was in this gouernment before Don Aluaro the King his father died, and was called Mani-Sundi.

In all the kingdome of Congo, no man hath any thing of his owne whereof he may diſpoſe, or leaue to his heires, but all is the Kings.

And heere by the way you muſt note, that in all the Kingdome of Congo, there is not any perſon that poſſeſſeth any proper goods of his owne, whereof he may diſpoſe, and leaue to his heires: but all is the Kings, and he diſtributeth all Offices, all Goods, and all Lands, to whomſoeuer it pleaſeth him; yea, and to this Law, euen the Kings owne ſonnes are ſubiect. So that if any man doe not pay his tribute yearely (as he ought) the King taketh away his Gouernment from him, and giueth it to another. As it happened to the King that now liueth, who at the time that Signor Odoardo was at the Court, being of his owne nature very liberall, and bountifull beyond meaſure, and one that beſtowed much vpon his ſeruants, could not diſcharge thoſe impoſitions that the King had laid on him. Whereupon he was by the King depriued of his reuenues, of his gouernment, and of his royall fauour; that is to ſay, in that language, he was Tombocado, as we will declare more at full in the ſecond part of this Diſcourſe.

The manner of the life of Sundi Inhabitants.

Many Lords there are that are ſubiect to the Gouernour of Sundi. The people doe Trafficke with their neighbour Countries, ſelling and bartring diuers things. As for example, Salt, and Cloathes of ſundry colours, brought from the Indies, and from Portugall, and Lumachette, to ſerue for their Coyne. And for theſe commodities they doe exchange cloath of Palme Trees, and Iuory, and the skinnes of Sables and Marternes, and certaine girdles wrought of the leaues of Palme trees, which are greatly eſteemed in thoſe parts.

There groweth in theſe Countries great ſtore of Cryſtall, and diuers kinds of Metall: but Iron they loue aboue all the reſt; ſaying, That the other Metals are to no vſe: for with Iron they can make Kniues, and Weapons, and Hatchets, and ſuch like Inſtruments, that are neceſſary and profitable for the vſe of mans nature.

The Prouince of Pango in ancient time was a free Kingdome, that was gouerned of it ſelfe, and bordereth on the North vpon Sundi, on the South vpon Batta, on the Weſt vpon the Countrie of Congo, and on the Eaſt vpon the Mountaines of the Sun. The principall Territorie, where the Gouernors dwelling is, hath the ſame name that the Prouince hath, (viz:) Pango. It ſtandeth vpon the Weſterne ſide of the Riuer Barbela, and in old time was called, Pangue-lungos: and in time afterwards, the word was corrupted and changed into Pango. Through the midſt of this Prouince runneth the Riuer Berbela, which fetcheth his Originall from the great Lake, (whence the Riuer Nilus alſo taketh his beginning) and from another leſſer Lake, called Achelunda, and ſo diſchargeth it ſelfe into Zaire. And although this be the leaſt Countrey of all the reſt, yet doth it yeeld no leſſe tribute then the reſt.

The fourth Prouince Pango, and the deſcription thereof.
Pango the chiefe town of this Prouince.
Berbela.

This Prouince was conquered after the Countrey of Sundi, and made ſubiect to the Princes of Congo: and is now all one with it, both in ſpeech and manners; neither is there any difference at all betweene them. The preſent Gouernor thereof is called, Don Franceſco Mani-Pango, and hath remained in the gouernment of this Region for the ſpace of fiftie yeares, and no man euer complained of him.

Don Franciſco, chiefe Gouernor of Pango.

The bounds of Batta are towards the North, the Countrey of Pango: on the Eaſt it taketh quite ouer the Riuer Barbela, and reacheth to the Mountaines of the Sunne, and to the foote of the Mountaines of Sal-Nitre. And on the South from the ſaid Mountaines, by a line paſſing through the meeting of the Riuers Barbela and Cacinga, to the Mountaine Bruſciato, that is to ſay, Scorched.

The fift Prouince Batta, & the deſcription thereof.

Within theſe bounds is Batta contained, and the principall Citie where the Prince dwelleth, is likewiſe called Batta. In ancient time it was called Aghirimba, but afterwards the word was corrupted, and it is now called Batta. It was in old time a very ſtrong and a great Kingdome, and voluntarily of it ſelfe, without any warre it ioyned it ſelfe with the Kingdome of Congo, peraduenture becauſe there were ſome diſſention among their Lords: and therefore it hath more preheminence then the reſt of the Prouinces of the Kingdome of Congo, in priuiledges and liberties. For the Gouernment of Batta is alwaies aſſigned to one, that is of the blood of the Kings of that Countrey, at their choiſe and pleaſure, hauing no more reſpect to one then to another, ſo that he be of the ſtocke and blood Royall, neither to the eldeſt ſonne, nor to the ſecond. Neither yet goeth this Gouernment by inheritance, but the King of Congo (as is told you before) doth diſpoſe it at his owne pleaſure to whom he thinketh beſt, to the end they ſhould not vſurpe it by way of ſucceſſion, or by rebellion. He dwelleth neerer the King then any other Gouernour or Lord of the Kingdome of Congo, and is the ſecond perſon therein, neither may any man gaine-ſay his arguments and reaſons, as they may any of the reſt, for it is ſo decreed among them. Now if the line of the King of Congo ſhould chance to faile, ſo that there were none of that blood to ſucceed, the ſucceſſion ſhall fall vpon the Gouernour of Batta. He that now gouerneth there, is called, Don Pedro Mani-Batta.

Batta, the chiefe towne of all Batta.
The preheminence of the Gouernor of Batta.
Don Pedro, chiefe Gouernor of Batta.

Sometimes he eateth at the Kings owne Table, but yet in a baſer ſeat then the Kings ſeat is, and that alſo not ſitting, but ſtanding; which is not granted to any other Lord of Congo, no nor to the ſonnes of the King himſelfe. His Court and his traine, is little leſſe then the Court and traine of the King of Congo. For he hath Trumpets and Drums, and other inſtruments going before him, as becommeth a Prince.

1588.
State-ceremony.

He doth hold continuall warres with the Pagans that border vpon him, and he is able to gather together about ſeuentie or eightie thouſand fighting men. And becauſe he doth ſtill maintaine warre with the people that are next him, he hath libertie granted vnto him to entertaine Harquebuſires, that ſhall be of his owne naturall ſubiects. For the King of Congo will not ſuffer any other Gouernor of any other Prouinces, nor any of their children, to haue any Harquebuſiers that are borne within their Countrey, but onely the Portugals.

The King of Congo will not ſuffer any naturall borne ſubiect in Congo, to haue an Harquebuſſe.

Towards the Eaſt of Batta, beyond the Mountaines of the Sunne, and of Sal-Nitre, vpon the bankes of the Eaſt and Weſt of the Riuer Nilus, and in the borders of the Empire of Mohenbe-Muge there liueth a Nation, which by the people of Congo, are called Giaquas, but in their owne language they are called Agag: Very fierce they are and warlike, much giuen to fight and pillage, and make continuall inroades into the Countries neere adioyning; and ſometimes among the reſt into the Prouince of Batta. So that this Countrey muſt needs be in continuall Armes, and ſtand vpon good guard, and maintaine Harquebuſiers to defend themſelues from them.

The Giaquas. Of theſe, ſee Andrew Battell, which liued and warred with them.

The Prince of Batta hath many Lords vnder him: and the naturall people of this Prouince are called Monſobos, and their language is well vnderſtood by the Inhabitants of Congo. They are farre more rude and ruſticall then the Moci-Congi, and the Slaues that are brought from thence, doe prooue more obſtinate and ſtubborne, then thoſe that come from other Countries.

The conditions of the people of Batta.

The Prouince of Pemba is ſeated in the heart and middle of the Kingdome of Congo, compaſſed and compriſed within the bounds before deſcribed, whoſe Gouernor is called Don Antonio Mani-Pemba, ſecond ſonne to King Don Aluaro, that dead is, and brother to the King that raigneth at this preſent. And for as much as his father did loue him dearely, he aſſigned vnto him this Gouernment, becauſe he knew not what better thing to giue him, ſauing the Realme it ſelfe: which in deed he would willingly haue beſtowed on him, for that hee was more like vnto him in quality and nature then his eldeſt ſonne was. But it would not be by reaſon of the law of the Kingdome, which would not haue yeelded thereunto.

The chiefe Citie of all Congo, is ſituate in this Prouince of Pemba

This Countrey is the very Centre, and middeſt of all the State of Congo, and the originall of all the ancient Kings, and the Territorie where they were borne, and the chiefe and principall ſeat of all the other Prouinces and Principalities. And therefore the chiefe and royall Citie of all that Empire, is aſſigned to this Prouince, whereof we will hereafter deliuer you a full information. The Gouernor of Pemba dwelleth in a Territory of the ſame name, ſituate at the foote of the ſcorched Mountaine, along the Riuer Loze, which riſeth out of the Lake, and runneth through the Region of Bamba into the Sea. The Courtiers and Lords, and Seruitors belonging to the King of Congo, haue their goods and poſſeſſions, and reuenues in this Prouince; becauſe it is neereſt to the Court, and very conuenient for the conueighing of their victuals, and their other ſtuffe vnto the Court. Some of theſe Lords, in that part ſpecially, that bordereth vpon the aforeſaid Prouince of Bamba, haue much adoe to keepe fight and defend themſelues from the people of Quizama, becauſe they are neereſt vnto them. For this people (as we told you) did rebell againſt the King of Congo, and reuolted from him, and doe profeſſe that they will be at libertie, and gouerned of themſelues.

The Courtiers &c. dwell for the moſt part in Pemba.

§. V.

Of the ſituation of the Royall Citie of the Kingdome of Congo: Of their firſt conuerſion and Warre, thence ariſing betwixt the Kings two Sonnes.

The Territory of the chiefeſt Citie in all Congo, containeth in compaſſe twentie miles about.

ALthough the chiefe and Royall Citie of the Kingdome of Congo be after a ſort comprehended within the Prouince of Pemba, yet notwithſtanding for as much as the gouernment thereof, and the Territorie thereunto belonging, which may in compaſſe amount to the ſpace of twentie miles about, doth depend wholly of the King of Congo himſelfe, we will place it in a ſeuerall Regiment, and intreat of it by it ſelfe.

This Citie is called San Saluatore, or Saint Sauiour, and in times paſt in that Countrie Language it was called Banza, which generally ſignifieth The Court, where the King or the Gouernour doeth ordinarily ſoiourne. It is ſeated about one hundred and fiftie miles from the Sea, vpon a great and a high Mountaine, being almoſt all of a Rocke, but yet hauing a veyne of Iron in it, whereof they haue great vſe in their houſing. This Mountaine hath in the toppe of it a great Plaine, very well manured and furniſhed with Houſes and Villages, contayning in circuit about ten miles, where there doeth dwell and liue, the number of one hundred thouſand perſons.

The chiefe Citie, called San Saluatore.
The ſituation of the Citie.
The Mountain whereupon it ſtandeth.

The ſoyle is fruitfull, and the aire freſh, wholſome, and pure: there are great ſtore of Springs, of indifferent good water to drinke, and at certaine times doe not harme any man: and of all ſorts of Cattell great abundance. The top of the Mountaine is ſeuered and diſtinguiſhed from all the reſt of the Hill which is about it, and therefore the Portugals doe call it, The Otheiro, that is to ſay, A view, or a Watch-tower, or a Singular heighth, from whence you may take a ſight of all the Champaine round about: onely towards the Eaſt, and towards the Riuer, it is very ſteepe and rockie.

The ſoyle, the aire, the waters and the Cattell.
The Otheiro.

For two cauſes did the Princes of this Kingdom place this habitation in the foreſaid heighth of this Mountaine. Firſt, becauſe it lieth in the very middeſt, and (as it were) in the Centre of all the Realme, from whence hee may preſently ſend aide to any part of his Kingdome, that may ſtand in need of reliefe: and ſecondly, becauſe it is ſituated in a Territorie that is by Nature mounted aloft, hauing a very good aire, and of great ſafetie; for it cannot be forced. By the chiefe common high-way that goeth vp to the Citie, and looketh towards the Sea, being diſtant from thence one hundred and fiftie miles (as hath beene told you) which way is very large and competent, though it goe ſomewhat about in compaſſe, you ſhall aſcend fiue miles from the bottome to the top of the Mountaine. At the foot thereof on the Eaſt ſide there runneth a Riuer, whereunto the women doe deſcend by the ſpace of a miles walke to waſh their clothes. In diuers other parts thereof there are ſundrie valleys planted and manured: neither doe they ſuffer any part of the Countrie thereabouts to be left vntilled or vnuſed, becauſe it is the Countrie where the Court remaineth.

The reaſon why they built in this place.
2.
Fiue miles from the bottome of the Hill to the top.
A Riuer at the Hill foot.

The Citie is ſeated in a corner or angle of the hill towards the South-eaſt, which Don Alfonſo the firſt Chriſtian King did compaſſe about with walls, and gaue vnto the Portugals a ſeuerall place for themſelues, ſhut vp likewiſe within walls. Then did he alſo incloſe his owne Palace and the Kings Houſes with another wall, and in the middeſt betweene theſe two encloſures left a great ſpace of ground, where the principall Church was built, with a faire Market place before it. The doores and gates as well of the Lodgings of the Lords, as of the Portugals Inhabitations, doe open on the ſide of the ſaid Church. For, in the vppermoſt end of the Market place doe diuers great Lords of the Court dwell, and behind the Church doeth the Market place runne into a narrow ſtreet, where there is alſo a gate, and beyond that gate many houſes towards the Eaſt. Without theſe walls, (which doe encloſe the Kings houſes, and the Citie of the Portugals) there are a number of other buildings, erected by diuers Lords, euery man making his ſeuerall choiſe of the place which he thinketh moſt fit and conuenient for his dwelling neere vnto the Court. So that the greatneſſe of this Citie cannot well be determined or limited. Beyond theſe walls alſo, that thus doe compaſſe this Citie; there is a great champaine Plaine, full of Villages, and ſundrie Palaces, where euery Lord poſſeſſeth (as it were) a whole Towne within himſelfe. The circuit of the Portugals Citie containeth about a mile; and the Kings houſes as much. The walls are very thicke: the gates are not ſhut in the night time, neither is there any watch or ward kept therein.

The particular ſituation of the Citie.
A ſeuerall place for the Portugals.
The Kings Palace.
The principall Church and Market place.

And although that Plaine doeth lie very high and aloft, yet is there great abundance of waters in it, ſo that there is no want thereof. But the Court and the Portugals Citie doe all drinke of a certaine Fountaine that ſpringeth continually, towards the North, and lieth downe the hill, as farre as a Gunne will ſhoot: and from hence they doe fetch all their water, and bring it to the Citie in veſſels of Wood, of Earth, and Leather, vpon the backes of their Slaues.

Good ſtore of waters

All this Plaine is very fruitfull, and well manured. It hath Meadowes full of Graſſe, and Trees that are alwaies greene. It beareth ſundrie ſorts of Graine, but the principall and beſt of all is called Luco, which is very like to Muſtard-ſeed, but that it is ſomewhat bigger. When it is grinded with Hand-querns (for ſo they vſe to do) it yeeldeth a very white Meale, whereof they make Bread, that is both white, and alſo of a very good ſauour, and wholſome withall: neither doth it giue place to our Wheat in any ſort, ſauing that they doe not celebrate the Sacrament with it. Of theſe Graines there now is great ſtore, ouer all the Kingdome of Congo: but it is not long ſince that this Seed was brought thither from that part of the Riuer Nilus, where it falleth into the ſecond Lake. There is alſo a white kind of Millet, called the Mazza of Congo, that is to ſay, The Corne of Congo: and another Graine which they call Maiz, but they make no account of it, for they giue it to their Hogs: neither doe they greatly eſteeme of Rice. The foreſaid Maiz they commonly terme by the name of Mazza-Manputo, that is to ſay, the Portugals Corne; for they call a Portugall Manputo.

There are moreouer diuers and ſundrie ſorts of Trees, that beare very great ſtore of Fruits, inſomuch as the greateſt part of the people doe feed vpon the Fruits of the Countrie, as Citrons, Lymons, and ſpecially Oranges, very full of liquor, which are neither ſweet nor ſowre, and are ordinarily eaten without any annoyance or harme at all. And to ſhew the fruitfulneſſe of this Countrie, the ſaid Signor Odoardo reported, that he had ſeene from a kernell of the fruit of a Pome-Citrone, which was left within the rind thereof, there ſprung vp within the ſpace of foure dayes a pretie tall ſprig. Other Fruits there are, which they call Banana, and wee verily thinke to be the Muſes of Ægypt and Soria, ſauing that in thoſe Countries they grow to be as bigge as Trees; but here they cut them yeerely, to the end they may beare the better. The Fruit is very ſweet in ſmell, and of good nouriſhment. In theſe Plaines there grow likewiſe ſundrie kinds of Palme-trees; one that beareth Dates, and another that beareth the Indian Nuts, called Cocoes, becauſe they haue within them a certaine ſhell that is like to an Ape: and thereupon they vſe in Spaine to ſhew their children Coccola, when they would make them afraid. Another Palme-tree there groweth alſo very like to the former, but of a more ſtrange and ſingular propertie: for it yeeldeth Oyle, Wine, Vinegar, Fruit and Bread. The Oyle is made of the ſhell of the fruit, and is of the colour and ſubſtance of Butter, ſauing that it is ſomewhat greeniſh. They vſe it, as other people doe vſe Oyle and Butter, and it will burne like Oyle. They anoint their bodies withall; and beſides, it is very good to eate. They preſſe it out of the Fruit, as Oyle is preſſed out of the Oliues, and then they boyle it, and ſo preſerue it. The Bread is made of the ſtone of the fruit it ſelfe, which is like to an Almond, but ſomewhat harder: and within the ſame is there a certaine kernell or pith, which is good to eate: very wholſome and of good nouriſhment. The whole Fruit, together with the outter ſhell is greene; and they vſe to eate it both raw and roſted. The Wine is drawen from the top of the Tree, by making an hole therein, from whence there diſtilleth a liquor like Milke, which at the firſt is ſweet, but afterwards ſowre, and in proceſſe of time becommeth very Vinegar, to ſerue for Sallets. This Wine they drinke cold, and it moueth to vrine very much: ſo that in thoſe Countries, there is not a man that is troubled with Grauell or Stone in the bladder. It will make them drunke, that drinke too much of it: but indeed it is of a very good nutriment.

The fruit Cola. See of it Finches Iournall.

Andrew Battell affirmed this to be true.

Other kinds of Palme-trees.

Trees called, Ogheghe.

There are other Trees, that beare a certaine fruit, called Cola, as big as a Pine-apple, which hath within it other fruits like Cheſt-nuts, wherein are foure ſeuerall ſhells or skins, of red and Carnation colour. Theſe they vſe to hold in their mouthes, and chaw them, and at laſt to eate them, for the quenching of their thirſt, and better reliſhing of their water. They comfort and preſerue the ſtomacke, but aboue all other qualities, they are ſingular good againſt the diſeaſes of the Liuer. And it is ſaid, that the Liuer of a Henne, or of any other like Bird, which is putrified, and ſtinketh, being ſprinkled ouer with the matter of this fruit, returneth into his former eſtate, and becommeth freſh and ſound againe. This food is commonly and generally vſed among them all, and there is very great abundance of it: and therefore it is good cheape. Other kinds of wild Palme-trees there are, which yeeld diuers fruits that are eaten: and their leaues reſerued to make Mats, wherewith their houſes are couered; and Baskets and Skeps, and ſuch other like Inſtruments that are neceſſarie for their daily vſes. Other Trees there are likewiſe, called Ogheghe, which beare a fruit which is like a yellow Plumme, and is very good to eate, and hath a very ſweet ſmell withall. Of theſe Trees they cut off the boughs, and plant them ſo thicke together, that they touch one another, and ſtand cloſely all in a ranke; ſo that when they are growne great, they make a ſtrong Fence or wall about their houſes, which being afterwards couered with Mats, it reſembleth a handſome Court or Cloſſe, wherein they vſe to walke, (as it were) in an Arbour that maketh a great ſhadow, and defendeth them from the heate of the Sunne. In the middeſt of theſe encloſures, they vſe to build certaine houſes of wood, couered with ſtraw, and diuided into ſundrie conuenient roomes, all on the ground without any Stories or Sollers aboue them. Theſe they doe line with very faire and delicate Mats, and furniſh them with other ornaments in very handſome manner.

Great ſtore of ſtone to build withall.

There are to bee found among them many maſſes and lumpes of ſtone, which are of ſuch thickneſſe and hugeneſſe, that you may cut out a whole Church, euen of one whole piece; yea, and of the ſame kind of ſtone, whereof the Obeliſco is made, that is erected before Porta del Popolo in Rome. Beſides this, there are whole Mountaines of Porphyrie, of Iaſper, and of white Marble, and of other ſundrie colours, which here in Rome are called, Marbles of Numidia, of Africa, and of Æthiopia: certaine Pillars whereof, you may ſee in the Chappell of Pope Gregorie.

Other Stone there is, that is ſpeckled with graines or ſtrakes, but among all the reſt, that kind is moſt admirable, which hath in it faire Iacynthes, that are good Iewels. For the ſtrakes being diſperſed like veynes ouer all the bodie of their Mother-ſtone, if you ſhall diuide them, and plucke them out as you would picke the kernels out of a Pomegranate, they will fall into graines and little pieces of perfect Iacynth. But if you pleaſe to make Pillars, or Obeliskes, or other ſuch like memorials, of the whole maſſe, you ſhall ſee them ſhine and ſparkle, full of moſt faire and goodly Iewels.

There are alſo other kinds of rare ſtones, which make a ſhew of metall in them, as of Copper, and of ſundry other colours, that are very freſh, and bright, and ſmooth, whereof you may make Images, or any other worke of ſingular beautie. True it is, indeed, that they want Maſons, and Cutters, and Playſterers, and Carpenters, and other ſuch Artificers: for when the Churches, and the walls, and the other fabrickes in thoſe Countries were built, the Workmen were brought thither out of Portugall.

Want of workmen to build.

There are alſo Tamarindes, and Caſſia, and Ceders in ſuch multitudes growing all along the Riuer of Congo, beſides other Trees of an vnmeaſurable length and thickneſſe, that an infinite number of ſhips and houſes may be builded of them. Their Gardens doe beare all manner of Herbes and Fruits, as Pompions, Melions, Cucumbers, Coleworts, and ſuch like, beſides other ſorts that doe not agree with our Climates of Europe.

Stuffe for building ſhips and houſings. Herbs & fruits.

The King of Portugall, Don Giouanni the ſecond, being deſirous to diſcouer the Eaſt Indies, ſent forth diuers ſhips by the Coaſt of Africa to ſearch out this Nauigation, who hauing found the Ilands of Cape Verde, and the Ile of Saint Thomas, and running all along that Coaſt, did light vpon the Riuer Zaire, whereof we haue made mention before, and there they had good Trafficke, and tryed the people to bee very courteous and kind. Afterwards hee ſent forth (for the ſame purpoſe) certaine other Veſſels, to entertaine this Trafficke with Congo, who finding the Trade there to bee ſo free and profitable, and the people ſo friendly, left certaine Portugals behind them, to learne the Language, and to Trafficke with them: among whom one was a Maſſe-prieſt. Theſe Portugals conuerſing familiarly with the Lord of Sogno, who was Vncle to the King and a man well ſtricken in yeares, dwelling at that time in the Port of Praza (which is in the mouth of Zaire) were very well entertained and eſteemed by the Prince, and reuerenced as though they had beene earthly Gods, and deſcended downe from Heauen into thoſe Countries. But the Portugals told them that they were men as themſelues were, and profeſſors of Chriſtianitie. And when they perceiued in how great eſtimation the people held them, the foreſaid Prieſt and others began to reaſon with the Prince touching the Chriſtian Religion, and to ſhew vnto them the errors of the Pagan Superſtition, and by little and little to teach them the Faith which we profeſſe, inſomuch as that which the Portugals ſpake vnto them, greatly pleaſed the Prince, and ſo he became conuerted.

The firſt trafficke of the Portugals into Congo.

Mani-Sogno, the Kings Vncle entertayneth the Portugals.

Mani-Sogno, conuerted and become a Chriſtian.

With this confidence and good ſpirit, the Prince of Sogno went to the Court, to enforme the King of the true Doctrine of the Chriſtian Portugals, and to encourage him that he would imbrace the Chriſtian Religion which was ſo manifeſt, and alſo ſo wholſome for his ſoules health. Hereupon the King commanded to call the Prieſt to Court, to the end he might himſelfe treat with him perſonally, and vnderſtand the truth of that which the Lord of Sogno had declared vnto him. Whereof when hee was fully informed, he conuerted and promiſed that he would become a Chriſtan.

The King of Congo, promiſeth to become a Chriſtian.

And now the Portugall ſhips departed from Congo, and returned into Portugall: and by them did the King of Congo write to the King of Portugall, Don Giouanni the ſecond, with earneſt requeſt, that he would ſend him ſome Prieſts, with all other Orders and Ceremonies to make him a Chriſtian. The Prieſt alſo that remayned behind, had written at large touching this buſineſſe, and gaue the King full information of all that had happened, agreeable to his good pleaſure. And ſo the King tooke order for ſundry Religious perſons, to be ſent vnto him accordingly, with all Ornaments for the Church and other ſeruice, as Croſſes and Images: ſo that he was throughly furniſhed with all things that were neceſſarie and needfull for ſuch an action.

The King of Portugall ſendeth Prieſts to the King of Congo to inſtruct him.

In the meane-while, the Prince of Sogno, ceaſed not day and night to diſcourſe with the Portugall Prieſt, whom hee kept in his owne Houſe, and at his owne Table, aſwell that hee might learne the Chriſtian Faith himſelfe, as alſo inſtruct the people therein: ſo that hee began to fauour Chriſtianitie with all his power.

Mani-Sogno promoteth the Chriſtian Religion.

At laſt the ſhips of Portugall, arriued with the expected prouiſions (which was in the yeare of our Saluation 1491.) and landed in the Port which is in the mouth of the Riuer Zaire. The Prince of Sogno with all ſhew of familiar ioy, accompanied with all his Gentlemen, ranne downe to meete them, and entertayned the Portugals in moſt courteous manner, and ſo conducted them to their Lodgings. The next day following, according to the direction of the Prieſt that remayned behind, the Prince cauſed a kind of Church to be builded, with the bodies and branches of certaine trees, which hee in his owne perſon, with the helpe of his Seruants, moſt deuoutly had felled in the Wood. And when it was couered, they erected therein three Altars in the worſhip and reuerence of the moſt holy Trinitie, and there was baptiſed himſelfe and his young Sonne, himſelfe by the name of our Sauiour, Emanuel, and his childe by the name of Anthony, becauſe that Saint is the Protector of the Citie of Lisbone.

The ſhips returne from Portugall, 1491.

Mani Sogno & his traine entertayneth the Portugals.

Mani-Sogno buildeth a Church.

Mani Sogno & his Sonne baptized.

The men and women before this had no proper names agreeable to reaſonable creatures, but the common names of Plants, of Stones, of Birds and of Beaſts. But the Princes and Lords had their denominations from the Places and States which they gouerned. As for example, the foreſaid Prince, which was the firſt Chriſtian in Congo, was called Mani-Sogno, that is to ſay, The Prince of Sogno, and when hee was chriſtned, was called Emanuel, but at this day they haue all in generall ſuch Chriſtian names as they haue learned of the Portugals.

After a Maſſe was celebrated and ſung, one of the Prieſts that came from Portugall went vp, and made

A ſermon contayning the ſum of Chriſtian Religion.

Mani Sogno rehearſeth the Sermon to his people.

made a briefe Sermon in the Portugall Language, declaring the ſumme of the new Religion, and faith of the Goſpell which they had receiued. This Sermon, the Prieſt that was left behind, hauing now learned the Congo ſpeech, did more at large expound to the Lords that were in the Church: for the Church could not poſſibly hold the innumerable multitude of the people that were there gathered together, at the conuerſion of their Prince: who afterwards came abroad vnto them, and rehearſed the whole Sermon, with great loue and charitie, mouing and exhorting them to imbrace likewiſe the true beliefe of the Chriſtian Doctrine.

The Portugals goe to the Court to baptiſe the King.

When this was done, all the Portugals put themſelues on their way towards the Court, to baptiſe the King, who with a moſt feruent longing attended the ſame. And the Gouernour of Sogno tooke order that many of his Lords ſhould wait vpon them with Muſicke, and ſinging, and other ſignes of wonderfull reioyſing; beſides, diuers ſlaues which he gaue them to carrie their ſtuffe, commanding alſo the people, that they ſhould prepare all manner of victuall to bee readie in the ſtreets for them. So great was the number of people, that ranne and met together to behold them, as the whole Champaigne ſeemed to bee in a manner couered with them, and they all did in great kindneſſe entertaine and welcome the Portugall Chriſtians, with ſinging and ſounding of Trumpets and Cymbals, and other Inſtruments of that Countrey.

How beautiful are the feet of them that bring tydings of peace?

And it is an admirable thing to tell you, that all the ſtreets and high-wayes, that reach from the Sea, to the Citie of Saint Sauiours, being one hundred and fiftie miles, were all cleanſed and ſwept, and abundantly furniſhed with all manner of victuall and other neceſſaries for the Portugals. Indeed, they doe vſe in thoſe Countries, when the King or the principall Lords goe abroad, to cleanſe their wayes and make them handſome.

The Courtiers of Congo meet the Portugals.

Three dayes iourney from the place whence they departed, they deſcryed the Kings Courtiers, that came to meet them, to preſent them with freſh victuals, and to doe them honour: and ſo from place to place they encountred other Lords, that for the ſame purpoſe were ſent by the King to receiue the Chriſtians, who were the Meſſengers and Bringers of ſo great a ioy. When they were come within three miles neere to the Citie, all the Court came to entertaine and welcome the Portugals, withall manner of pompe and ioyfulneſſe, and with Muſicke and Singing, as in thoſe Countries is vſed vpon their ſolemneſt Feaſt-dayes.

The King himſelfe receiueth them.

And ſo great was the multitude of people, which abounded in the ſtreets, and that there was neither Tree nor Hillocke higher then the reſt, but it was loden with thoſe that were runne forth and aſſembled to view theſe Strangers, which brought vnto them this new Law of their Saluation. The King himſelfe attended them at the gate of his Palace, in a Throne of Eſtate erected vpon a high Scaffold, where he did publikely receiue them, in ſuch manner and ſort as the ancient Kings of that Realme were accuſtomed to doe, when any Embaſſadours came vnto him, or when his Tributes were payed him, or when any other ſuch Royall Ceremonies were performed.

The Portugall Embaſſadour declareth his Embaſſage.

The King reioyceth at the Embaſſage.

The people reioyce at it.

And firſt of all, the Embaſſadour declared the Embaſſage of the King of Portugall, which was expounded and interpreted by the foreſaid Prieſt, that was the principall Author of the conuerſion of thoſe people. After the Embaſſage was thus deliuered, the King rayſed himſelfe out of his Seate, and ſtanding vpright vpon his feet, did both with his countenance and ſpeech, ſhew moſt euident ſignes of the great ioy, that he had conceiued for the comming of the Chriſtians, and ſo ſate downe againe. And incontinently all the people with ſhouting, and ſounding their Trumpets, and Singing, and other manifeſt arguments of reioycing, did approue the Kings words, and ſhewed their exceeding good liking of this Embaſſage. And further in token of obedience, they did three times proſtrate themſelues vpon the ground, and caſt vp their feet according to the vſe of thoſe Kingdomes.

The King vieweth the Preſents ſent vnto him by the King of Portugall.

Then the King tooke view of all the Preſents that were ſent him by the King of Portugall, and the Veſtments of the Prieſts, and the Ornaments of the Altar, and the Croſſes, and the Tables, wherein were depainted the Images of Saints, and the Streamers, and the Banners, and all the reſt, and with incredible attention, cauſed the meaning of euery one of them to be declared vnto him, one by one. And ſo withdrew himſelfe, and lodged the Embaſſadour in a Palace made readie of purpoſe for him, and all the reſt were placed in other Houſes of ſeuerall Lords, where they were furniſhed with all plentie and eaſe.

Conſultation among the Portugals for the Chriſtning of the King, and for the building of a Church.

The day following, the King cauſed all the Portugals to be aſſembled together in priuate: where they deuiſed of the courſe that was to be taken for the Chriſtning of the King, and for effecting the full conuerſion of the people to the Chriſtian Faith. And after ſundry Diſcourſes, it was reſolued and concluded, that firſt of all a Church ſhould bee builded, to the end that the Chriſtning, and other Ceremonies thereunto belonging, might be celebrated therein with the more Solemnitie: and in the meane-while the King and Court ſhould be taught and inſtructed in the Chriſtian Religion. The King preſently commanded, that withall ſpeed prouiſion ſhould be made of all manner of ſtuffe neceſſary for this Building, as Timber, Stone, Lime, and Bricke, according to the direction and appointment of the Work-maſters and Maſons, which for that purpoſe were brought out of Portugall.

An inſurrection rayſed by the Deuill, to hinder the progreſſe of Chriſtian Religion.

But the Deuill who neuer ceaſeth to croſſe all good and holy proceedings, rayſed new diſſentions and conſpiracies, by procuring a rebellion among certaine people of the Anzichi, and of Anzicana, which dwell vpon both the bankes of the Riuer Zaïre, from the foreſaid fals vpwards, to the great Lake, and are ſubiect and belonging to the King of Congo. Now this monſtrous Riuer being reſtrayned and kept backe by theſe fals, doth ſwell there mightily, and ſpreadeth it ſelfe abroad in a very large and deepe channell. In the breadth whereof there are many Ilands, ſome ſmall and ſome great, ſo that in ſome of them, there may be maintayned about thirtie thouſand perſons. In theſe Ilands and in other places adioyning to the Riuers thereabouts, did the people make an inſurrection, and renounced their obedience to the King, and ſlue the Gouernours that he had ſent thither to rule.

The King muſt needs goe himſelfe in perſon to pacifie theſe broyles: howbeit, he reſolued to bee baptiſed before his going, and ſo was enforced to forbeare the building of the Church of Stone, and withall ſpeed, in ſtead thereof to erect one of Timber, which Church hee in his owne perſon with the aduice of the Portugals, did accompliſh in ſuch manner and ſort as it ought to bee, and therein did receiue the Sacrament of holy Baptiſme, and was named Don Giouanni, and his Wife Donna Eleonora, after the names of the King and Queene of Portugall, and the Church it ſelfe intituled and dedicated to Saint Sauiour.

The King buildeth in haſte a church of timber.

The King and Queene of Congo chriſtned.

The Church of S. Sauiours.

The ſame day, wherein the King was baptiſed, diuers other Lords following his example were baptiſed likewiſe, hauing firſt learned certaine Principles of the Chriſtian Faith. And when all this was done, the King went in perſon to diſperſe the turbulent attempts of his Aduerſaries, againſt whom hee found the Prince his Sonne, and the Lord of Batta alreadie fighting with a formall Armie. But at the arriuall of the King, the Enemies yeelded, and ſubmitted themſelues to the obedience which before they performed: and ſo he returned in triumph to the Citie of Congo, and the Prince his Sonne with him, who preſently was deſirous to become a Chriſtian, and was chriſtned by the name of the firſt Prince of Portugall, called Alfonſo: and with him alſo were chriſtned many Gentlemen and Caualieros, and other of his Seruants, that came with him out of his Prouince.

Diuers Lords baptiſed.

The King goeth in perſon againſt the rebels, and diſcomfiteth them.

Mani-Sundi chriſtned and many other with him.

The Kings ſecond Sonne, would not agree to receiue the new Religion, many other Lords fauoured him, who being addicted rather to the ſenſualitie of the fleſh, then the puritie of the minde, reſiſted the Goſpel, which began now to be preached, eſpecially in that Commandement, wherein it is forbidden, that a man ſhould haue any mo Wiues but one.

Mani-Pango reſiſteth the Goſpel.

Polygamie.

The eldeſt Brother Don Alfonſo, did with great feruencie, defend Chriſtianitie, and burned all the Idols that were within his Prouince. The ſecond Brother (called Mani-Pango, becauſe hee was Gouernour of the Countrey of Pango) did reſiſt it mightily, and had gotten the greateſt part of the principall Lords of Pango to be on his ſide. For there were diuers of the new chriſtned Lords, whoſe Ladies ſeeing themſelues ſeperated, and forlorne of their Husband-Lords by force of the Chriſtian Law, did take it as a great iniurie and ſcorne done vnto them, and blaſphemed and curſed this new Religion beyond all meaſure. Theſe Lords vnited themſelues together with others, and began to plot Trecherie againſt Don Alfonſo, hoping that if they could rid him out of the World, the Chriſtian Faith would vtterly ceaſe of it ſelfe. And therefore Mani-Pango and his Complices gaue intelligence to his Father, that the Prince Don Alfonſo fauoured the Chriſtian Faction, onely to the end that vnder the colour of his countenance and fauor, they might rayſe an Inſurrection & Rebellion againſt him, & ſo driue him out of his Kingdom.

Mani-Pango & his Complices accuſe Mani-Sundi to his Father.

The King gaue credit to their informations, and depriued his Sonne of the Gouernment wherein hee was placed: But the Prouidence of God which reſerued him for a greater matter, did relieue him by the good mediation and counſell of his friends, who entreated the King his Father, that hee would not be moued to anger, before he had examined the Anſweres and Reaſons of the Prince his Sonne. Wherein the King was eſpecially perſwaded by Mani-Sogno, who (as wee told you) was before chriſtned, and called, Don Emanuel, and by good hap was in Court at that preſent. This man (being the ancienteſt Courtier and Lord of that time, ſingularly well beloued of the King and all his people) did with ſound reaſons and dexteritie of wit, procure the King to reuoke the ſentence, with a ſpeciall charge, that hee ſhould not proceed with ſuch rigour againſt the Gentiles, for the propagation and exaltation of the Chriſtian Religion. But he being full of feruent charitie, and godly ſpirit, ceaſed not (for all that) to aduance the Faith of the Goſpell, and to put the Commandements of God in execution.

The King depriueth Mani-Sundi of his gouernment.

Mani-Sogno, maketh interceſſion for his Brother.

Whereupon his Aduerſaries who neuer reſted from their former attempt, were continually at the Kings elbow, and ſought by all cunning ſhifts and ſecret deuiſes; to deſtroy that which the good Prince had builded, eſpecially when they ſaw that the Prince of Sogno was departed from Court, and returned into his gouernment. So that no bodie being now left to protect and defend the Chriſtian Religion, the King began to doubt of the Faith, which with ſo great zeale he had before imbraced: and therefore ſent to his Sonne, that he ſhould come againe to the Court, to make account of thoſe Reuenues that hee had gathered within the Countrey of his Gouernment, with a full intent and meaning, indeed, to depriue him, when his accounts ſhould be finiſhed.

The King wauereth in Religion, and calleth Mani Sundi to account, of purpoſe to depriue him.

But he, in the meane-while, his Father being an old man, did by meanes of a naturall infirmitie depart out of this life. And his Mother who alwaies perſeuered conſtant in the Catholike Faith, louing her eldeſt Sonne moſt entirely, concealed the Kings death for the ſpace of three dayes, being therein ayded and aſſiſted by ſome of her truſtie friends, & gaue it out, that the King had taken ſuch order as no man might come vnto him to trouble him. In the meane ſeaſon, ſhe did ſecretly ſignifie to her Sonne, the death of his Father, which ſhe would keepe cloſe till his comming, and charged him without any delay, and in all haſte to ſpeed him to the Court.

The King dyeth.

The Queene Mother ſendeth in al haſte for her Sonne Mani Sundi.

This ſhee did by certaine Runners, that from place to place in conuenient diſtances and iourneyes, are alwaies readie like Poſtes, to conuey the precepts and commandements of the King ouer all the Realme. Whereupon he preſently cauſed himſelfe to be carried poſte both day and night, by certaine Slaues according to the vſe of that Countrie, and in one day and two nights, with moſt exquiſite diligence, accompliſhed the iourney of two hundred miles, and ſo arriued at the Citie, before he was expected.

The funerall of King Iohn, celebrated by King Alfonſo.

Now together with the death of the King, there was alſo publiſhed the ſucceſſion to the Crowne of Don Alfonſo, being then preſent, who in his owne perſon did accompanie the corps of his dead Father to the buriall, with all the Lords of the Court, and all the Chriſtian Portugals, which was ſolemnized after the manner of Chriſtendome, with ſeruice and prayers for the dead, and all this with ſuch funerall pompe, as was neuer ſeene before among thoſe people. But they which heretofore were aduerſaries to this new King, doubting of their owne ſafetie, if they ſhould remaine in the Court, vnited themſelues with Mani-Pango, who was now departed into the Prouince of his owne Gouernment, and while his father liued, was wholly employed in fighting againſt the Mozombi, and certaine other people that had rebelled againſt him.

Mani-Pango, rebelleth againſt his brother.

Mani-Pango and his forces ſet forwards to the beſieging of the Citie, with ſo great a noyſe of warlike Inſtruments, and cryes, and ſhowtings, and terrible threatnings, that the poore few, which were in the Citie, as well Chriſtians as others, fainted in their hearts, and failed in their courage, and came and preſented themſelues before the King, ſaying, that he had not power enough to reſiſt ſo powerfull an Enemie, and therefore they thought it better for him to grow to ſome concord and compoſition, and to abandon the new Religion, which he had lately begun to profeſſe, to the end he might not fall into the hands of his cruell aduerſaries. But the King being reſolute, and full of religious conſtancie, reproued their cowardiſe, and called them daſtards, and baſe people; and willed them, if they had any mind or deſire to forſake him, and goe to the Enemie, that they ſhould ſo doe. As for himſelfe, and thoſe few that would follow him, he did not doubt, but aſſuredly truſt, though not with the poſſibilitie or ſtrength of Man, yet with the fauour of God, to vanquiſh and ouercome that innumerable multitude. And therefore hee would not requeſt them either to ioyne with him, or to put their liues in hazard againſt his aduerſaries for his ſake, but onely they might reſt themſelues and expect the iſſue that ſhould follow thereon.

The King to his Souldiers.

He did preſently cauſe a Croſſe to be planted, and erected in the middeſt of the Market place, right againſt the Church, which his Father had builded. This Croſſe was of a wonderfull length, for it was fourescore ſpanne long, and the Croſſe-barre in proportion anſwerable thereunto. The Croſſe is to be ſeene in the ſame place, wherein it was erected, at the front of the Church, which Church was called Saint Croſſes, of the Croſſe there planted. This Croſſe the laſt King, that dead is, Don Aluaro, Father to the King that now is, renewed and made another of the ſame bigneſſe that the firſt was of.

The King erecteth a Croſſe of a great length. The miracle which the author addes, I haue omitted, a viſion of light and fiue ſwords, as alſo the viſion of our Ladie and Saint Iames, fighting againſt Mani-Pango.

Mani-Pango terrified with viſions, and not with his brothers forces, ouercome with feare and danger ranne away, and fell into the Snares and Nets which he himſelfe had laid for the Chriſtians; For, lighting among the foreſaid Stakes, he was with one of them thruſt into the bodie, and ſo being ſurprized with an euill death, he finiſhed his life, as it were in a rage. For you muſt vnderſtand, that the ſharpe ends of the ſaid Stakes, were enuenomed with a certaine poyſon, which taking hold of the blood, and entring ſomewhat into the fleſh, would kill without all cure or remedie. By this victorie and death of his brother, did the King remaine in ſecuritie and libertie.

The ſtratagem of Mani-Pango, turneth to his owne deſtruction. The death of Mani-Pango. The building of the Church called Saint Croſſes.

All things well eſtabliſhed, the King Don Alfonſo tooke order, that they ſhould preſently goe in hand with the fabricke of the Principall Church, called Saint Croſſes, which was ſo named of the Croſſe that was there planted, (as wee told you before) and alſo becauſe vpon the Feaſt day of the holy Croſſe, the firſt ſtone was laid in the foundation thereof. Moreouer, he commanded that the men ſhould bring ſtones, and the women ſhould fetch ſand from the Riuer, for the furthering of this worke. The King would needs be the firſt Porter himſelfe, and vpon his owne ſhoulders brought the firſt basket of ſtones, which he caſt into the foundation, and the Queene her basket of ſand likewiſe, thereby giuing an example to the Lords and the Ladies of the Court to doe the like, and to encourage and hearten the people in ſo holy an action. And ſo this fabricke being furthered by ſo good Work-maſters and Workmen, in a very ſhort time was fully finiſhed, and therein were celebrated Maſſes, and other Diuine Seruice, with great ſolemnitie, beſidet, a number of Lords and others, that were there baptiſed and chriſtned: ſo that the multitude of ſuch as came to be partakers of the holy Baptiſme abounded ſo greatly, that there were not Prieſts enough to execute that office.

King Alfonſo diſpatcheth the Portugall Embaſſadour, and another of his owne into Portugall.

After this the King diſpatched away the Portugall Embaſſadour, who till this time had remained at the Court, by reaſon of theſe troubles: and with him he ſent alſo another Embaſſadour of his owne, called Don Roderico, and diuers others that were of kinne both to himſelfe and to his Embaſſadour, to the end that they ſhould learne, both the Doctrine of the Chriſtians in Portugall, and alſo their Language, and further declare vnto the King all theſe accidents that hapned.

The king commandeth all Idols to bee brought in, and all other things that are contrarie to the Chriſtian Religion.

Moreouer, hee cauſed the Lords of all his Prouinces to be aſſembled together, in a place appointed for that purpoſe, and there publikely ſignified vnto them, that whoſoeuer had any Idols, or any thing elſe that was contrarie to the Chriſtian Religion, he ſhould bring them forth and deliuer them ouer to the Lieutenants of the Countrie. Otherwiſe, whoſoeuer did not ſo, ſhould be burned themſelues, without remiſſion or pardon. Which commanded was incontinently put in execution. And a wonderfull thing it is to be noted, that within leſſe then one moneth, all the Idols, and Witcheries and Characters, which they worſhipped and accounted for Gods, were ſent and brought vnto the Court. Many there were, that caried a deuotion to Dragons with wings, which they nouriſhed and fed in their owne priuate houſes, giuing vnto them for their food, the beſt and moſt coſtly Viands that they had. Others kept Serpents of horrible figures: Some worſhipped the greateſt Goats they could get; ſome Tygers, and other moſt monſtrous creatures; yea, the more vncouth and deformed the Beaſts were, the more they were honored. Some held in veneration certaine vncleane Fowles, and Night-birds, as Bats, Owles, and Scritch-Owles, and ſuch like. To be briefe, they did chooſe for their Gods diuers Snakes, and Adders, and Beaſts, and Birds, and Herbs, and Trees, and ſundry Characters of Wood and of Stone, and the figures of all theſe things aboue rehearſed, as well painted in Colours, as grauen in Wood and in Stone, and in ſuch other ſtuffe. Neither did they onely content themſelues with worſhipping the ſaid Creatures, when they were quicke and aliue, but alſo the verie skinnes of them when they were dead, being ſtuffed with ſtraw.

The act of this their adoration, was performed in diuers ſorts, all wholly addreſſed, and directed to expreſſe their humilitie, as by kneeling on their knees, by caſting themſelues groueling vpon the earth, by defiling their faces with duſt, by making their prayers vnto their Idols, in words and in actions, and by offering vnto them the beſt part of the ſubſtance which they had in their poſſeſſion. They had moreouer, their Witches, which made the fooliſh people to beleeue that their Idols could ſpeake, and ſo deceiued them: and if any man being in ſickneſſe or infirmitie, would recommend himſelfe vnto them, and afterwards that man recouered his health, the Witches would perſwade, him that the Idoll had beene angry with him, but now was appeaſed, and had healed him.

Their deuout worſhipping of Idols.

Witches.

The King cauſed fire to be ſet vnto their Idols, and vtterly conſumed them. When he had thus done, he aſſembled all his people together, and in ſtead of their Idols which before they had in reuerence, hee gaue them Crucifixes, and Images of Saints, which the Portugals had brought with them, and enioyned euery Lord, that euery one in the Citie of his owne Gouernment and Regiment, ſhould build a Church, and ſet vp Croſſes, as he had already ſhewed vnto them by his owne example. And then he told them, and the reſt of his people, that he had diſpatched an Embaſſadour into Portugall to fetch Prieſts, that ſhould teach them Religion, and adminiſter the moſt holy and wholeſome Sacraments to euery one of them, and bring with them diuers Images of Chriſt, of the Virgin Mother, and of other Saints to diſtribute among them. In the meane while, he willed them to be of good comfort, and to remaine conſtant in the faith. But they had ſo liuely imprinted the ſame in their hearts, that they neuer more remembred their former beliefe in falſe and lying Idols.

The king commandeth euery Lord to build a Church, in the Citie of his owne gouernment.

Exchanged Imagerie.

He ordained moreouer, that there ſhould be three Churches builded. One in reuerence of our Sauiour, to giue him thankes for the victorie which he had granted vnto him, wherein the Kings of Congo doe lye buried, and whereof the Citie Royall tooke the name, (for as it was told you before, it is called, S. Sauiours.) The ſecond Church, was dedicated to the bleſſed Virgin, the mother of God, called, Our Ladie of Help, in memorie of the ſuccour which he had againſt his enemies: And the third, was conſecrated to S. Iames: in honour and remembrance of the Miracle which that Saint had wrought by fighting in the fauour of the Chriſtians, and ſhewing himſelfe on Horſe-backe in the heate of the battaile.

The King buildeth three Churches. One to Saint Sauiour. The ſecond, to our Lady of Helpe. The third, to S. Iames.

Not long after this, the ſhips arriued from Portugall, with many men that were skilfull in the holy Scriptures, and diuers religious Friers of the Orders of S. Francis, and of S. Dominick, and of S. Auſtine, with ſundry other Prieſts, who with great charitie and feruency of ſpirit, ſowed and diſpearſed the Catholike Faith ouer all the Countrey: which was preſently embraced by all the people of the Kingdome, who held the ſaid Prieſts in ſo high reuerence, that they worſhipped them like Saints, by kneeling vnto them, and kiſſing their hands, and receiuing their bleſſing, as often as they met them in the ſtreetes. Theſe Prieſts being arriued into their ſeuerall Prouinces, did inſtruct the people in the Faith of Chriſt.

The ſhips returne from Portugall with Friers and Prieſts.

Prieſts worſhipped.

§. VI.

The death of the King DON ALFONSO, and the ſucceſsion of DON PIEDRO. How the Iland of S. THOMAS was firſt inhabited, and of the Biſhop that was ſent thither: The Kings linage extinct: Inuaſion of the Iagges: Their ſauage conditions.

WHile theſe matters were thus in working for the ſeruice of God, and that Chriſtianitie was now begun and increaſed with ſo happy ſucceſſe, it pleaſed God to call away to himſelfe the King Don Alfonſo, who at the time of his death, diſcourſed of the Chriſtian Religion, with ſo great confidence and charitie, as it euidently appeared, that the Croſſe and Paſſion, and the true beliefe in our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, was imprinted in the root of his heart. To Don Piedro, his ſonne and ſucceſſour, he did eſpecially and principally recommend the Chriſtian doctrine, which indeed following the example of his father, hee did maintaine and vphold accordingly.

King Alfonſo dieth.

Don Piedro ſucceedeth him.

In his time, there began to ſaile into theſe quarters a great number of veſſels, and the Iland of S.

The Ile of S. Thomas beginneth to be inhabited.

The King of Portugall ſendeth one to be Biſhop of the Ile of S. Thomas, and of Congo.

Thomas was inhabited with Portugals, by the Kings commandement. For before thoſe dayes, it was all waſte and deſert within Land, and inhabited onely vpon the ſhoare by a few Saylers that came from the Countries adioyning. But when this Iland in proceſſe of time was well peopled with Portugals, and other Nations, that came thither by licence of the King, & became to be of great Trafficke, and was Tilled and Sowed, the King ſent thither a Biſhop, to gouerne the Chriſtians that were in that Iland, and thoſe alſo that were in Congo: which the ſaid Biſhop did accompliſh preſently vpon his arriuall, and afterwards in Congo, where hee tooke poſſeſſion of his Paſtorall charge. When he was come into the Kingdome of Congo, it was a thing incredible to ſee, with how great ioy he was entertained by the King and all his people.

The entertainment of the Biſhop in Congo.

For from the Sea ſide, euen vnto the Citie, being the ſpace of one hundred and fiftie miles, he cauſed the ſtreetes to be made ſmooth and trim, and to bee couered all ouer with Mats, commanding the people, that for a certaine ſpace ſeuerally appointed vnto them, they ſhould prepare the waies in ſuch ſort, that the Biſhop ſhould not ſet his foot vpon any part of the ground which was not adorned. But it was a far greater wonder, to behold all the Countrey thereabouts, and all the Trees, and all the places that were higher then the reſt, ſwarming with men and women that ran forth to ſee the Biſhop, as a man that was holy and ſent from God, offering vnto him, ſome of them Lambs, ſome Kids, ſome Chickins, ſome Partridges, ſome Veniſon, and ſome Fiſh, and other kinds of victuals in ſuch abundance, that he knew not what to doe withall, but left it behind him; whereby he might well know the great zeale and obedience of theſe new Chriſtians. And aboue all other things it is to be noted for a memorable matter, that the Biſhop going on his way, there met him an innumerable multitude of men, and women, and girles, and boyes, and perſons of fourescore yeares of age, and aboue, that croſſed him in the ſtreets, and with ſingular tokens of true reliefe required the water of holy Baptiſme at his hands: neither would they ſuffer him to paſſe vntill he had giuen it them: ſo that to ſatisfie their deſires, hee was greatly ſtayed in his voyage, and was faine to carrie water with him in certaine veſſels, and Salt, and other prouiſion neceſſary for that action.

The Biſhop foundeth the Cathedrall Church of S. Croſſes.

And now I will tell you, he arriued at the Citie of Saint Sauiours, where he was met by the Prieſts, and by the King, and by all the Court, and ſo in proceſſion entred into the Church, and after due thankes giuen to God, he was conducted to his lodging, that was aſſigned vnto him by the King. And then preſently he beganne to reforme and reduce to good order, the Church it ſelfe, and the Friers, and Prieſts that dwell therein: ordaining the ſaid Church to be the Cathedrall Church of Saint Croſſes; which at that time had belonging vnto it eight and twentie Canons, with their Chaplaines, and a Maſter of the Chappell, with Singers, and Organs, and Bels, and all other furniture meete to execute Diuine ſeruice. But this Biſhop who laboureth in the Lords Vineyard, ſometimes in Congo, and ſometimes in the Ile of Saint Thomas, going and comming continually by ſhip, the ſpace of twentie daies, and ſtill leauing behind him his Vicars in the place where he himſelfe was abſent, at the laſt dyed, and was buried in the Iland of Saint Thomas.

The Biſhop dyeth.

The ſecond Biſhop dyeth.

After this Biſhop, ſucceeded another Biſhop in Congo, being a Negro, and deſcended of the blood Royall, who before had beene ſent by King Alfonſo firſt into Portugall, and afterwards to Rome, where he learned the Latine tongue, and the Chriſtian Religion, but being returned into Portugall, and landed out of his ſhip, to goe and enter vpon his Biſhopricke of Saint Sauiours, he dyed by the way: whereupon the Kingdome remained without a Paſtor for the ſpace of diuers yeares. Don Piedro alſo the King aforeſaid, dyed likewiſe without Children; and there ſucceeded him his Brother, called, Don Franciſco, who in like manner laſted but a while: and then was created the fift King, named Don Diego, who was next of all the race Royall: A man of haughtie courage, and magnificall, and wittie, of a very good diſpoſition, wiſe in counſell, and aboue all other qualities, a maintainer of Chriſtian Faith: and in briefe, ſo great a Warriour he was, that in few yeares he conquered all the Countries adioyning. He loued the Portugals very much, ſo that he forſooke the vſuall garments of his owne naturall Countrey, and attired himſelfe after the Portugall faſhion. He was very ſumptuous, as well in his apparell, as alſo in the ornaments and furniture of his palace: he was beſides very courteous and liberall, and would beſtow largely, both vpon his owne Subiects, and alſo vpon the Portugals. With great coſt would he prouide and buy ſuch ſtuffe as pleaſed him, and would often ſay, that Rare things ſhould not be in the hands of any but onely of Kings. He vſed to weare one ſuite of apparell but once or twice, and then he would giue it away to his followers. Whereupon the Portugals perceiuing, that he did ſo greatly eſteeme cloath of Gold and Arras, and ſuch other coſtly houſhold-ſtuffe, they brought great ſtore thereof out of Portugall, ſo that at that time, Arras-hangings, and Cloth of Gold, and of Silke, and ſuch like Lordly furniture, began to be of great eſtimation in that Kingdome.

The King Don Piedro dyeth.

Don Franciſco ſucceedeth and dyeth.

Don Diego the fift King.

The King Diego very ſumptuous.

The third Biſhop of S. Thomas, & of Congo

In the time of this King, there was a third Biſhop of Saint Thomas, and Congo, by Nation a Portugall, who with the vſuall ceremonies was entertained both by the way, and alſo in the Court at Saint Sauiours. And now euery man eſteemed himſelfe not onely to be as good as the Biſhop, but alſo to be a farre better man then he was; and therefore would yeeld no obedience to their Prelate. But the King like a good Catholike, and a faithfull, did alwaies maintaine the Biſhops part, and to cut off theſe troubles and ſtirres, he ſent ſome of theſe Prieſts to priſon into Portugall, and others into the Ile of Saint Thomas, and ſome others went away with all their ſubſtance of their owne accord.

Alſo after the death of this King, there ſtarted vp three Princes at once to challenge the ſucceſſion.

ceſſion. The firſt was the Kings Sonne, whom few of them fauoured, becauſe they deſired to haue another, ſo that hee was ſlaine incontinently. The two other that remained were of the blood Royall: one of them was created King by his fauourites and followers, with the good liking of the greater part of the people, but vtterly againſt the minds of the Portugals, and certaine of the Lords, who aymed and endeauoured to ſet vp the other. In ſo much as the foreſaid Lords, together with the Portugals, went into the Church to kill the King elected: making this reckoning with themſelues, that if they ſlue him, the other muſt of neceſſitie bee made King. But at that very ſelfe-ſame time, thoſe of the contrary faction had ſlaine the King that was already made by the Portugals, perſwading themſelues aſſuredly, that he being dead, there would be no difficultie for them to obtaine the State for their King, becauſe there was none other left, that by law could challenge the Scepter Royall. And thus in an houre, and in two ſeuerall places, were theſe two Kings murthered at once.

In theſe conſpiracies and ſlaughters, when the people ſaw that there were no lawfull perſons left to enioy the Royall Crowne, they laid all the blame vpon the Portugals, who were the cauſers of all theſe miſchiefes: and thereupon they turned themſelues againſt them, and ſlue as many of them as they could find: Onely they ſpared the Prieſts, and would not touch them, nor any other that dwelt in other places.

The Portugals ſlaine and diſperſed.

Seeing therefore (as before is ſaid) that there was none of the blood Royall left to be placed in the Gouernment, they made choiſe of one Don Henrico, Brother to Don Diego the King deceaſed. And this Henrico going to warre againſt the Anzichi, left behind him in his ſtead for Gouernour, vnder the Title of King, one Don Aluaro, a young man of fiue and twenty yeares of age, ſonne to his Wife by another Husband. But Don Henrico dyed ſhortly after the warre was ended, and thereupon the ſaid Don Aluaro was with the common conſent of them all elected King of Congo, and generally obeyed of euery man. And thus failed the Royall ſtocke of the ancient Kings of Congo, in the perſon of Don Henrico.

Don Henrico created King.

King Henrico dieth, and Don Aluaro ſucceedeth: and ſo the ſtocke of the ancient Kings of Congo ceaſed.

But Don Aluaro was a man of good iudgement and gournment, and of a milde diſpoſition, ſo that he did preſently appeaſe all theſe tumults in his Kingdome, and cauſed all the Portugals that by the laſt warres were diſpearſed ouer all the Conntries there-abouts, to be gathered together, as well religious perſons as lay men, and by their meanes he was much better confirmed in the Catholike Faith, then he was before.

King Aluaro reſtoreth the Portugals.

Moreouer, he vſed them very courteouſly, and cleared them of all faults that were laid to their charge, declaring vnto them by gentle diſcourſes, that they had not beene the occaſion of the former troubles, as euery man would confeſſe and acknowledge: and to that effect hee determined with himſelfe to write a large information touching all theſe accidents to the King of Portugall, and to the Biſhop of Saint Thomas, which he did accordingly, and diſpatched certaine Meſſengers vnto them with his letters.

When the Biſhop of Saint Thomas underſtood theſe newes, he was very glad thereof, and whereas before he durſt not aduenture to goe into the Kingdome of Congo in the heate of all thoſe troubles, he did now preſently take ſhip and ſayled thither, where he imployed himſelfe wholly with all his authoritie, to pacifie his former diſſentions, and to ſet downe order for all ſuch matters as concerned the worſhip of God, and the office of his Prieſts. And a while after he had ſo done, he returned to his habitation in the Ile of Saint Thomas, where by meanes of ſickneſſe he finiſhed his daies. And this was the third time, that thoſe parts remained withont a Biſhop.

The Biſhop of S. Thomas returneth into Congo.

The Biſhop of S. Thomas dieth.

Now it came to paſſe, that for want of Biſhops, the King and the Lords, and the people likewiſe began to waxe cold in the Chriſtian Religion, euery man addicting himſelfe licentiouſly to the libertie of the fleſh, and eſpecially the King, who was induced thereunto by diuers young men of his owne age, that did familiarly conuerſe with him. Among whom there was one principall man, that was both a Lord, and his Kinſman, called Don Franciſco Bullamatare, that is ſay, Catch-ſtone. This man, becauſe he was a great Lord, and wholly eſtranged from all inſtructions of Chriſtianitie, walked inordinately after his owne pleaſure, and did not ſticke to defend openly, That it was a very vaine thing to keepe but one Wife, and therefore it were better to returne to their former ancient cuſtome. And ſo by his meanes did the Deuill open a gate, to the onerthrow and deſtruction of the Church of Chriſt in that Kingdome, which vntill that time with ſo great paine and trauaile had beene there eſtabliſhed. But afterwards the man did ſo wander and ſtray out of the way of truth, that he fell from one ſinne to another, and in the end quite relinquiſhed and abandoned all true Religion. Yet at the laſt, the ſaid Franciſco died, and was ſolemnly buried.

King Aluaro liueth licentiouſly.

Franciſco Bulla Matare, an ill companion & Counſellour to the King.

Bullamatare dieth: and as they ſay, caried out of his graue by Deuils.

For not long after, there came to rob and ſpoyle the Kingdome of Congo, certaine Nations that liue after the manner of the Arabians, and of the ancient Nomades, and are called Giachas. Their habitation or dwelling is about the firſt Lake of the Riuer Nilus, in the Prouince of the Empire of Moenemugi. A cruell people they are, and a murderous, of a great ſtature, and horrible countenance, fed with mans fleſh, fierce in battell, & valarous in courage. Their weapons are Paiuiſes or Targets, Darts and Daggers: otherwiſe they goe all naked. In their faſhions and daily courſe of liuing, they are very ſauage and wilde: They haue no King to gouerne them, and they leade their life in the Forreſt vnder Cabbins and Cottages like Shepheards.

What people the Giachas are: Their conditions, and weapons. Of theſe, ſee Andrew Battell, Chap. 3. which better knew them.

The Giachas ſpoile the prouince of Batta.

The Giachas come to the Royall Citie of Congo.

King Aluaro flyeth into the Ile of Horſes.

The Giachas ſurpriſe the Citie, and rule ouer all the Kingdome.

This people went wandring vp and downe, deſtroying, and putting to fire and ſword, and robbing and ſpoyling all the Countries that they paſſed through, till they came to the Realme of Congo, which they entred on that ſide where the Prouince of Batta lyeth. Thoſe that firſt came forth to make reſiſtance againſt them, they ouerthrew, and then addreſſed themſelues towards the Citie of Congo, where the King remayned at that time in great perplexitie, for this victorie that his enemies had gotten in the Countrey of Batta: yet ſome comfort he tooke to himſelfe, and went out againſt his Aduerſaries with ſuch Souldiers as he had, and in the ſame place, where in times paſt Mani-Pango fought with the King Don Alfonſo, he ioyned battell with them. In which encounter the King being halfe diſcomfited, retyred into the Citie, wherein when hee perceiued that he could not remayne in good ſafetie, being vtterly forſaken of the grace of God by reaſon of his ſinnes, and not hauing that confidence in him, that Don Alfonſo had, he thought good to leaue it for a prey to his Aduerſaries, and to betake himſelfe to an Iland within the Riuer Zaire, called Iſola del Cauallo, that is to ſay, The Ile of Horſe; where he continued with certaine Portugall Prieſts, and other principall Lords of his Kingdome. And thus were the Giachi become Lords and Maſters of the Citie Royall, and of the whole Realme. For the naturall Inhabitants fled away, and ſaued themſelues in the Mountaynes, and deſart places: but the enemies burned and waſted, Citie, and Churches, and all, and ſpared no mans life, ſo that hauing diuided themſelues into ſeuerall Armies, they ruled and gouerned ſometimes in one Prouince, and ſometimes in another ouer all the Kingdome.

The King, and thoſe that followed him, plagued with an extreame famine.

Many of the bloud Royall ſold for Slaues to the Portugalls.

As for the poore people, they went wandring like Vagabonds ouer all the Countrey, and periſhed for hunger and want of neceſſaries. And for the King with thoſe that followed him, and had ſaued themſelues in the Iland, they alſo, becauſe the Ile was very little, and the multitude great, were oppreſſed with ſo terrible a ſcarſitie of victualls, that the moſt part of them died by famine and peſtilence. For this dearth ſo increaſed, and meate aroſe to ſo exceſſiue a rate, that for a very ſmall pittance (God wot) they were faine to giue the price of a ſlaue, whom they were wont to ſell for ten Crownes at the leaſt. So that the Father was of neceſſitie conſtrayned to ſell his owne Sonne; and the Brother, his Brother, and ſo euery man to prouide his victualls by all manner of wickedneſſe. The perſons that were ſold, for the ſatisfying of other mens hunger, were bought by the Portugall Merchants, that came from Saint Thomas with their ſhips laden with victualls. Thoſe that ſold them, ſaid, they were Slaues; and thoſe that were ſold, iuſtified and confirmed the ſame, becauſe they were deſirous to be rid of their greedie torment. And by this occaſion there was no ſmall quantitie of Slaues, that were borne in Congo, ſold vpon this neceſſitie, and ſent to the Ile of Saint Thomas, and to Portugall, among whom there were ſome of the bloud Royall, and ſome others, principall Lords.

King Aluaro falleth into a dropſie.

King Aluaro ſendeth to the King of Portugall for ſuccor.

Don Sebaſtian the King of Portugall ſendeth ſuccour vnto him.

By this affliction, the King did manifeſtly learne and know, that all theſe great miſeries and aduerſities abounded for his miſdeeds: and although he was not much puniſhed with hunger, becauſe he was a King, yet he did not eſcape the cruell infirmitie of the dropſie, that made his legs to ſwell exceedingly, which diſeaſe was engendred, partly by the aire, and very ill diet, and partly by the moyſtneſſe of the Iland, and ſo it accompanied him euen vntill his death. But in the meane while, being ſtricken to the heart with theſe misfortunes and calamities, he conuerted and turned to God, requiring pardon for his offences, and doing penance for his ſinnes: and then was counſelled and aduiſed by the Portugals, that he ſhould ſend to requeſt ſuccours of the King of Portugall, by certaine Embaſſadors, that might recount vnto him all the miſchiefs which had lighted vpon him. This embaſſage was accordingly performed, at the ſame time that the King Don Sebaſtiano began his reigne, who with great ſpeed and kindneſſe ſent him ſuccours by a Captaine, called Franciſco di Gouea, a man well exerciſed in diuers warres, both in India, and alſo in Africa, who lead with him ſixe hundred Souldiers, and many Gentlemen Aduenturers, that did accompanie him.

Franciſco di Gouea reſtoreth the King, and driueth the Giachas out of Congo.

Franciſco di Gouea, after foure yeeres returneth into Portugall with letters for moe Prieſts.

This Captaine, Franciſco di Gouea, carried with him a commandement from his King, that the Iland of Saint Thomas ſhould prouide him ſhips and victualls, and whatſoeuer elſe was requiſite for this enterpriſe. And with this prouiſion he arriued at the laſt in the Ile of Horſe, where the King of Congo was reſident. In whoſe companie the Portugalls departing from thence, and gathering together all the men of warre in that Countrey, with all ſpeed poſſible, put themſelues onwards againſt their Aduerſaries, and fought with them ſundrie times in plaine battell, ſo that at the end of one yeere and a halfe, they reſtored the King into his former eſtate. Which victorie they atchieued indeed by the noyſe and force of their Harquebuſſes, for the Giachi are exceedingly afraid of that weapon.

The King becommeth a good Chriſtian, and marrieth.

The Portugall Captaine ſtayed there for the ſpace of foure yeeres, to ſettle the King in his Kingdome, and then returned into Portugall with letters of requeſt to his King, that hee would ſend ouer ſome moe Prieſts to vphold and maintayne the Chriſtian Religion. And the King being thus eſtabliſhed in his former degree, and the Kingdome all in quiet and peace, became a very good Chriſtian, and married the Lady Katharina, who is yet aliue; by whom hee had foure daughters, and by certaine Maid-ſeruants, which he kept, two ſonnes and one daughter. And becauſe in thoſe Regions the women doe not ſucceed: there remayned as Heire of his Kingdome his elder ſonne, called alſo Don Aluaro, who liueth at this day, 1588.

During the time, that the foreſaid Captaine ſtayed in Congo, the King of Portugall, Don Sebaſtiano vnderſtanding, that there were in that Kingdome diuers Caues and Mines of Siluer, of Gold, and other Metals, ſent thither two perſons that were cunning and skilfull in that Arte, (for therein they had ſerued the Caſtilians in the Weſt) to make ſearch for them, and to draw ſome profit thereof. But the King of Congo was by a certaine Portugall, called Franciſco Barbuto, that was his Confeſſor, and great familiar, perſwaded to the contrarie, that he ſhould not in any caſe ſuffer thoſe Mines to be diſcouered: ſignifying vnto him, that thereby peraduenture the free enioying and poſſeſſion of his Kingdome, might by little and little be taken quite from him, and therefore aduiſed him that he would cauſe theſe skilfull Maſters to bee led and guided by ſome other wayes, where he knew there were no metall Mines to be found, which he did accordingly. But aſſuredly, it grew afterwards to a great miſchiefe: for, thereupon began the great trade and trafficke in that Countrie to ceaſe, and the Portugall Merchants did not greatly care for venturing thither, or dwelling there any more. And ſo conſequently, very few Prieſts reſorted among them. So that as well vpon theſe occaſions, as alſo for other ſuch cauſes afore rehearſed, the Chriſtian Religion waxed ſo cold in Congo, that it wanted very little of being vtterly extinguiſhed. But the King Don Aluaro ceaſed not ſtill to ſend new Embaſſadors into Portugall, with earneſt requeſt that he might haue moe Prieſts, and ſuch as were skilfull in the holy Scriptures to maintaine the Catholike Faith, which was now almoſt vtterly forgotten in that Realme, onely for want of religious perſons, that ſhould teach the people and adminiſter the Sacraments. He had none other anſwere from him, but words and promiſes, that he would haue a care of the matter that was demanded: but in the meane while he prouided neither Prieſts, nor Diuines to be ſent for Congo. Whereupon the King of Congo diſpatched againe another principall Embaſſadour, being his kinſman, called Don Sebaſtiano Aluarez, together with a Portugall, to beare him companie. But he was faine to returne home againe into Congo, without any Prieſts or Religious perſons to goe with him.

The K. of Portugall ſendeth to make ſearch in Congo for metall Mines.

Franciſco Barbuto diſſwadeth the King from making the ſearch, and auoydeth it by pollicie.

The inconuenience of not ſuffering the metall Mines to be digged and melted.

Prieſts reſort not to ſaue ſoules ſo much as to get gold.

The King ſendeth new Embaſſadors into Portugall for moe Prieſts.

Don Sebaſtiano was faine to returne into Congo without any Prieſts.

Three yeeres after, the King Don Sebaſtiano diſpatched a certaine Biſhop (called Don Antonio de gli Oua, being a Caſtilian borne) principally to the Iland of Saint Thomas: but withall hee gaue him alſo a commiſſion to viſite the Kingdome of Congo: who being arriued at Saint Thomas, fell at iarre with the Captaine there, and ſo ſailed into Congo; there he ſtayed eight moneths, and then departed againe, and left behind him in Congo, two Friars, and foure Prieſts. The Biſhop being thus gone, and the King ouerthrowne in Africa, there was exalted to the Crowne of Portugall, Don Henrico the Cardinall, to whom the King of Congo did write, with great inſtance, and earneſt requeſt; that hee would ſend him ſome religious perſons, and Preachers.

Antonio de gli Oua ſent by the Portugall King to be Biſhop of S. Thomas, and Congo.

Don Sebaſtian K. of Portugall ouerthrowne in Africa, and Don Henrico the Cardinall ſucceedeth.

After Don Henrico ſucceeded Philip King of Caſtile, who ſent aduertiſements to the Captaine of Saint Thomas, that he was inueſted in the Crowne of Portugall, and Letters alſo to the King of Congo, to the ſame effect: and in his Letters proffered to diſcouer vnto him the metall Mines, which heretofore had beene concealed from all the other Kings his Predeceſſors: and withall ſent him diuers trials of them; beſeeching him eſpecially withall affectionate entreatie, that (as ſoone as poſſibly he could) he would furniſh him with ſome ſtore of Prieſts: But Coſta, which was ſent, died by the way, the Veſſell wherein he ſailed being caſt away vpon the ſhoare of Portugall, and euery man drowned that was in it: and the naughtie newes were knowne by the contents of the Letters, that were found in a little Cheſt, which was driuen on Land by the waues of the Sea.

Philip King of Spaine ſucceedeth the Cardinall.

After this he made choiſe of one Odoardo Lopez a Portugall borne, from whoſe mouth Pigafetta tooke this preſent report, and put it in writing. This man had dwelt now a good time in thoſe Regions, and was well experienced in the affaires of the World.

The King of Congo offereth King Philip of Spaine the diſcouerie of the metall Mines in Congo, with requeſt for Prieſts.

Coſta dieth by the way, and his meſſage knowne by letters that were found.

The ſumme of his Embaſſage was this: That he ſhould preſent his Letters to the King Don Philip, and at large diſcourſe vnto him the ſtate, wherein the Kingdome of Congo ſtood, touching matter of Religion, by the reaſon of the former Warres, and ſcarſitie of Prieſts, and thereupon requeſt his Maieſtie to prouide him a competent number of Confeſſors, and Preachers, that might be ſufficient to maintaine the Goſpell in thoſe remote Countries, being but lately conuerted to Chriſtianitie. Moreouer, that he ſhould ſhew vnto him the ſundrie trials of Metals, which he had made, and many other matters, which were worthie to be knowne: and withall, that he ſhould proffer vnto him in his name, free and liberall trafficke of them, which heretofore was euer denied to his Predeceſſors. Touching the Pope, That he ſhould likewiſe on his behalfe kiſſe his feet, deliuer vnto him his Letters, and recount the miſerable trouble and detriment that his people had ſuffered for the Chriſtian Faith. That he ſhould recommend thoſe poore ſoules to his Holineſſe, and beſeech him, as the vniuerſall Father of all Chriſtians, to haue compaſſion vpon ſo many faithfull perſons, who becauſe they had no Prieſts to deliuer the holy Faith vnto them, and to adminiſter the wholſome Sacraments, were by little and little falling into euerlaſting perdition. And being thus diſpatched he departed from the Court, and went about certain ſeruices for the King, wherein he ſpent about eight moneths. So that in Ianuarie, being then Sommer time in Congo, he embarked himſelfe in a Veſſell of one hundred Tunne burthen, which was bound with her lading for Liſbon. But forced by leakes and winds, the Pilot thought it better to turne his courſe, and taking the wind in the poope, to goe and ſaue themſelues in the Ilands of Noua Hiſpania. And they arriued with much adoe, at a little Iland, called Cubagoa; and ſituate ouer againſt the Ile of Saint Margarete, where they fiſh for Pearles. From thence, when they had in ſome haſte amended their ſhip, and ſome-what refreſhed themſelues, they ſayled with a ſhort cut to the firme Land, and tooke Hauen in a Port, called Cumana, or (as it is called by another name) The new Kingdome of Granado in the Weſt Indies. This battered and weather-beaten Veſſell, was no ſooner arriued in this ſafe Harbour, but it ſunke preſently.

Cumana or the new kingdome of Granada in the Weſt Indies

While the foreſaid Embaſſadour endeauoured in this place to recouer his former health, the company of ſhips, which is called La Flotta, that is to ſay, The Fleet, and vſeth euery yeare to ſaile from that Coaſt for Caſtile, departed from thence, ſo that he was conſtrayned to ſtay for a new Nauie, and ſo conſumed a whole yeare and a halfe without doing any good. In this meane time the King of Congo ſent another Embaſſadour with the ſelfe-ſame commandements, called Don Piedro Antonio, the ſecond perſon in all his Realm, & with him one Gaſparo Diaz, a Portugal.

Odoardo Lopez ſtayeth in Cumana, a yeare and a halfe.
The King of Congo ſendeth Don Piedro Antonio, and Gaſpar Diaz a Portugall, with the ſame Embaſſage which he ſent by Lopez.

But an infortunate end had this Embaſſadour, for he was taken at Sea by Engliſhmen, and his ſhip alſo, which being drawne towards England, when it was neere vnto the Coaſt, by great misfortune it ranne a-thwart the ſhoare, and there Don Piedro Antonio, and his Sonne were both drowned: but the Portugall and ſome few others with him eſcaped, and arriued in Spaine, at ſuch time as the ſaid Odoardo was come to the Court, and had entred vpon the charge of his Embaſſage.

Don Piedro taken by the Engliſh, and by misfortune drowned, and his Sonne with him.

There he was courteouſly entertained by his Catholike Maieſtie, to whom he propounded the contents of his Commiſſions. But diuers great accidents there happened. For firſt, he heard the dolorous newes of the Kings death, that ſent him on this meſſage: and then the King Don Philip was wholly buſied about the Conqueſt of England, ſo that his buſineſſe went nothing forwards, but was delayed from time to time: neither did he ſee any meanes of diſpatch, but rather he was giuen to vnderſtand, that for that time they could not intend to harken vnto him.

Aluaro King of Congo dyeth.
King Philip buſied about the Conqueſt of England,

Now the foreſaid Odoardo, being afflicted with ſo many aduerſities, renounced the World with all the deceitfull pompe and glorie thereof, and in Madrill apparelled himſelfe in a grey courſe habit, and ſo went to Rome, to declare to Sixtus Quintus the Pope, the Tenor and Commiſſion of his Embaſſage, becauſe he would not altogether neglect the good intent and meaning of the King, that had ſent him, although hee were now deſcended into a better life. Hee was kindly welcommed and receiued by his Holineſſe, to whom he diſcourſed the miſerable eſtate wherein the Chriſtian people of the Realme of Congo did ſtand, for want of the worſhip and ſeruice of God, and alſo the ſmall number of Prieſts, that were there to inſtruct them in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and to deliuer vnto them the Sacraments of the Church, eſpecially the multitude in that Countrey, being (as it were) innumerable, that euery day reſorted together, to be baptiſed, inſtructed, confeſſed and communicated. Moreouer, he made a vow and reſolued in his mind, that with ſuch ſtore of wealth, as God had bleſſed him withall in Congo, (which was not very ſmall) he would build a houſe, wherein for the ſeruice of God, there ſhould dwell certaine learned men, and ſundry Prieſts, to inſtruct the youth of thoſe Countries in all good Languages, and in the Arts Liberall, and in the Doctrine of the Goſpel, and in the Myſteries of our Saluation. Out of which Houſe, as it were out of a holy Schoole, there might come forth from time to time, many learned men and well ſtudyed in the Law of God, that ſhould be able in their owne naturall Countrey Tongue, to awaken and raiſe againe the Faith of Chriſt, which was now aſleepe, and dryed vp in thoſe Regions: and thereby in proceſſe of time there would ſpring vp many fruits of bleſſing, and vigilant ſoules in the Chriſtian Faith. Hereunto hee meant alſo to adde an Hoſpitall, that might be a Recourſe and Harbour for Gods poore, which comming and ſayling out of ſtrange Countries ſhould haue reliefe and entertainement in that Hoſtelry, and there be cured and reſtored of their infirmities and neceſſities. With this purpoſe therefore he went to Rome, to obtaine of his Holineſſe a Licence to erect this Seminarie and Hoſpitall, and to beſeech him alſo that he would grant him Iubilies, Indulgences, and other Diſpenſations, that for ſuch Chriſtian and wholſome workes are requiſite, eſpecially to the vſe and benefit of thoſe Countries, which are ſo remote from Chriſtendome. He preſented himſelfe to the Pope, and deliuered vnto him his Letters of credence, and then declared vnto him at large the Tenor of his Commiſſions, wherein hee had a gracious audience. But when the Pope did vnderſtand that the Kingdome of Congo belonged to the King of Spaine, he remitted that matter wholly vnto him.

Odoardo Lopez changeth his kind of profeſſion.
Lopez goeth to Rome, where he was kindly entertayned by the Pope.
The Vow of Odoardo Lopez to erect a Seminary, and an Hoſpitall in Congo.
The Pope remitteth the whole matter to the King of Spaine.

§. VII.

Of the Court of the King of Congo. Of the apparell of that people before they became Chriſtians and after. Of the Kings Table, and manner of his Court.

The ancient apparell of the King of Congo, and his Courtiers.

IN ancient time this King and his Courtiers were apparelled with certaine Cloth made of the Palme-tree (as wee haue told you before) wherewith they couered themſelues from the Girdle-ſtead downewards, and girded the ſame ſtraite vnto them with certaine Girdles made of the ſame ſtuffe, very faire and well wrought.

They vſed alſo to hang before them, like an Apron, certaine delicate and daintie skinnes, of little Tygres, of Ciuet-cats, of Sabels, of Maternes, and of ſuch like creatures for an ornament: and for a more glorious pompe and ſhew, they did weare vpon their ſhoulders a certaine Cape like a Hood. Vpon their bare skinne they had a certaine round Garment like a Rotchet, which they call Incutto, reaching downe to their knees, made after the manner of a Net, but the ſtuffe of it was very fine cloth of the ſaid Palme-tree, and at the skirts there hung a number of threed-taſſels, that made a very gallant ſhew. Theſe Rotchets were turned vp againe, and tucked vpon their right ſhoulder, that they might be the more at libertie on that hand. Vpon that ſhoulder alſo they had the tayle of a Zebra, faſtned with a handle, which they vſed for a kind of brauerie, according to the moſt ancient cuſtome of thoſe parts. On their heads they wore Caps of yellow and red colour, ſquare aboue and very little, ſo that they ſcarcely couered the tops of their heads, and worne rather for a pompe and a vanitie, then to keep them either from the Aire or from the Sunne. The moſt part of them went vnſhod: but the King and ſome of the great Lords did weare certaine ſhooes of the old faſhion, ſuch as are to bee ſeene in the ancient Images of the Romanes, and theſe were made alſo of the Wood of the Palme-tree. The poorer ſort and common people were apparelled from their middle downewards, after the ſame manner, but the cloth was courſer: and the reſt of their bodie all naked. The women vſed three kinds of Trauerſes, or (as it were) Aprons: beneath their Girdle-ſtead. One was very long and reached to their heeles: the ſecond ſhorter then that, and the third ſhorter then both the other, with fringes about them, and euery one of theſe three faſtned about their middle, and open before. From their breſts downewards, they had another Garment, like a kind of Doublet or Iacket, that reached but to their Girdle: and ouer their ſhoulders a certaine Cloake. All theſe ſeuerall Garments were made of the ſame cloth of the Palme-tree. They were accuſtomed to goe with their faces vncouered, and a little Cap on the head, like a mans Cap. The meaner ſort of women were apparelled after the ſame manner, but their cloth was courſer. Their Maid-ſeruants, and the baſeſt kind of women were likewiſe attyred from the Girdle downeward, and all the reſt of the bodie naked.

The ancient apparell of the meaner ſort.

But after that this Kingdome had receiued the Chriſtian Faith, the great Lords of the Court beganne to apparell themſelues after the manner of the Portugals, in wearing Cloakes, Spaniſh Caps, and Tabbards, or wide Iackets of Scarlet, and cloth of Silke, euery man according to his wealth and abilitie. Vpon their heads they had Hats, or Caps, and vpon their feet Moyles or Pantofles, of Veluet and of Leather, and Buskins after the Portugall faſhion, and long Rapiers by their ſides.

Their new kind of apparell.

The common people, that are not able to make their apparell after that manner doe keepe their old cuſtome. The women alſo goe after the Portugall faſhion, ſauing that they weare no Cloakes, but vpon their heads they haue certaine Veiles, and vpon their Veiles blacke Veluet Caps, garniſhed with Iewels, and Chaines of Gold about their neckes. But the poorer ſort keepe the old faſhion: for onely the Ladies of the Court doe bedecke themſelues in ſuch manner as we haue told you.

After the King himſelfe was conuerted to the Chriſtian Religion, hee conformed his Court in a certaine ſort after the manner of the King of Portugall. And firſt, for his ſeruice at the Table when he dineth or ſuppeth openly in publike, there is a Throne of Eſtate erected with three ſteps, couered all ouer with Indian Tapiſtrie, and thereupon is placed a Table, with a Chaire of Crimſon Veluet, adorned with Boſſes and Nayles of Gold. He alwayes feedeth alone by himſelfe, neither doth any man euer ſit at his Table, but the Princes ſtand about him with their heads couered. He hath a Cupboord of Plate of Gold and Siluer, and one that taketh aſſay of his meate and drinke.

The Court of Congo now imitateth the Court of Portugall.

He maintayneth a Guard of the Anzichi, and of other Nations, that keepe about his Palace, furniſhed with ſuch Weapons as are aboue mentioned: and when it pleaſeth him to goe abroad, they ſound their great Inſtruments, which may be heard about fiue or ſixe miles, and ſo ſignifie that the King is going forth. All his Lords doe accompany him, and likewiſe the Portugals, in whom hee repoſeth a ſingular truſt: but very ſeldome it is that hee goeth out of his Palace.

Twice in a weeke he giueth audience publikely, yet no man ſpeaketh vnto him but his Lords. And becauſe there are none, that haue any goods or Lands of their owne, but all belongeth to the Crowne, there are but few Suites or Quarrels among them, ſauing peraduenture about ſome words.

The Cuſtomes and Lawes of Congo.

They vſe no Writing at all in the Congo Tongue. In Caſes Criminall they proceed but ſlenderly, for they doe very hardly and ſeldome condemne any man to death. If there be any Riot or Enormitie committed againſt the Portugals by the Moci-Conghi, (for ſo are the Inhabitants of the Realme of Congo, called in their owne Language) they are iudged by the Lawes of Portugall. And if any miſchiefe bee found in any of them, the King confineth the Malefactor into ſome Deſart Iland: for he thinketh it to be a greater puniſhment to baniſh him in this ſort, to the end he may doe penance for his ſinnes, then at one blow to execute him. And if it ſo happen, that thoſe which are thus chaſtized doe liue ten or twelue yeares, the King vſeth to pardon them, them, if they be of any conſideration at all, and doth imploy them in the Seruice of the State, as perſons that haue beene tamed and well ſcooled, and accuſtomed to ſuffer any hardneſſe. In Ciuill diſagreements there is an order, that if a Portugall haue any Suite againſt a Moci-Congo, he goeth to the Iudge of Congo: but if a Moci-Congo doe impleade a Portugall, he citeth him before the Conſul, or Iudge of the Portugals: for the King hath granted vnto them one of their owne Nation to be Iudge in that Countrey: In their bargaines betweene them and the Portugals, they vſe no Writings nor other Inſtruments of Bils or Bonds, but diſpatch their buſineſſe onely by word and witneſſe.

No Writing.

Time meaſured by the Moone.

They keepe no Hiſtories of their ancient Kings, nor any memoriall of the Ages paſt, becauſe they cannot write. They meaſure their times generally by the Moones. They know not the houres of the day nor of the night: but they vſe to ſay, In the time of ſuch a man ſuch a thing happened. They reckon the diſtances of Countries not by miles or by any ſuch meaſure, but by the iourneyes and trauell of men, that goe from one place to another, eyther loden or vnloden.

Their manner of Aſſemblies. Their Inſtruments of Muſick.

Touching their aſſembling together at Feaſts, or other meetings of ioy, as for example, when they are marryed, they ſing Verſes and Ballads of Loue, and play vpon certaine Lutes that are made after a ſtrange faſhion. For in the hollow part and in the necke they are ſomewhat like vnto our Lutes, but for the flat ſide (where wee vſe to carue a Roſe, or a Rundle to let the ſound goe inward) that is made not of wood, but of a skinne, as thinne as a Bladder, and the ſtrings are made of haires, which they draw out of the Elephants tayle, and are very ſtrong and bright: and of certaine Threeds made of the wood of Palme-tree, which from the bottome of the Inſtrument do reach & aſcend to the top of the handle, & are tied euery one of them to his ſeueral ring. For towards the necke or handle of this Lute, there are certaine rings placed ſome higher and ſome lower, whereat there hang diuers plates of Iron and Siluer, which are very thinne, and in bigneſſe different one from another, according to the proportion of the Inſtrument. Theſe rings doe make a ſound of ſundry tunes, according to the ſtriking of the ſtrings. For the ſtrings when they are ſtricken, doe cauſe the rings to ſhake, and then doe the plates that hang at them, helpe them to vtter a certaine mingled and confuſed noyſe. Thoſe that play vpon this Inſtrument, doe tune the ſtrings in good proportion, and ſtrike them with their fingers, like a Harpe, but without any quill very cunningly: ſo that they make thereby (I cannot tell whether I ſhould call it a melodie or no, but) ſuch a ſound as pleaſeth and delighteth their ſences well enough.

Speech by Inſtrument.

Beſides all this (which is a thing very admirable) by this Inſtrument they doe vtter the conceits of their minds, and doe vnderſtand one another ſo plainly, that euery thing almoſt which may be explaned with the Tongue, they can declare with their hand in touching and ſtriking this Inſtrument. To the ſound thereof they doe dance in good meaſure with their feet, and follow the iuſt time of that Muſicke, with clapping the palmes of their hands one againſt the other. They haue alſo in the Court, Flutes and Pipes, which they ſound very artificially, and according to the ſound they dance and moue their feet, as it were in a Moreſco, with great grauitie and ſobrietie. The common people doe vſe little Rattles, and Pipes, and other Inſtruments, that make a more harſh and rude ſound, then the Court-Inſtruments doe.

Their Phyſick.

In this Kingdome, when any are ſicke, they take nothing but naturall Phyſicke, as Herbes, and Trees, and the barkes of Trees, and Oyles, and Waters, and Stones, ſuch as Mother Nature hath taught them. The Ague is the moſt common Diſeaſe that raigneth among them: and plagueth them in Winter by reaſon of the continuall raine, that bringeth heat and moyſture with it more then in Summer, and beſides that the ſickneſſe which heere wee call the French Diſeaſe, and Chitangas in the Congo Tongue, is not there ſo dangerous and ſo hard to be cured, as it is in our Countries.

Their Medicine for an Ague. Their Medicine for the head-ache, & other griefes of the bodie, is letting of bloud. Their Medicine for the French Poxes. Their Purgations. Curing of wounds.

They heale the Ague with the poulder of a wood, called Sandale, or Sanders, whereof there is both red and grey, which is the wood of Aguila. This poulder being mingled with the Oyle of the Palme-tree, and hauing anointed the bodie of the ſicke perſon two or three times with all from the head to the foot, the partie recouereth. When their head aketh, they let bloud in the Temples, with certaine little boxing hornes: firſt, by cutting the skinne a little, and then applying the Cornets thereunto, which with a ſucke of the mouth, will bee filled with bloud: and this manner of letting bloud is vſed alſo in Egypt. And ſo in any other part of a mans bodie, where there is any griefe, they draw bloud in this faſhion and heale it. Likewiſe they cure the infirmitie, called Chitangas, with the ſame Vnction of Sanders: whereof there are two ſorts, one red (as we told you) and that is called Tauila: the other grey, and is called Chicongo: and this is beſt eſteemed, for they will not ſticke to giue or ſell a ſlaue for a piece of it. They purge themſelues with certaine barkes of trees, made into powder, and taken in ſome drinke: and they will worke mightily and ſtrongly. When they take theſe purgations, they make no great account for going abroad into the Ayre. Their wounds alſo they commonly cure with the iuyce of certaine Herbes, and with the Herbes themſelues.

§. VIII.

Of the Countries that are beyond the Kingdome of Congo, towards the Cape of Good-Hope: Of the Riuer Nilus, and of Sofala, Monomotapa, the Amazones, Saint LAVRENCE, and other Æthiopian Countries.

QVimbebe (which is the Kingdome of Matama) from the firſt Lake, and the Confines of Angola, containeth all the reſt of the Countrey Southwards, till you come to the Riuer of Brauagull, which ſpringeth out of the Mountaines of the Moone, and ioyneth with the Riuer Magnice, and that ſpringeth out of the foreſaid firſt Lake: Theſe Mountaines are diuided by the Tropicke of Capricorne, towards the Pole Antarcticke, and beyond this Tropicke lyeth all the Countrey and borders of the Cape of Good-Hope, which are not ruled and gouerned by any one King, but by diuers and ſundry ſeuerall Princes. In the middeſt betweene that Cape and the Tropicke, are the ſaid Mountaines of the Moone, ſo famous and ſo greatly renowned among the ancient Writers, who doe aſſigne them to be the originall head and ſpring of the Riuer Nilus: which is very falſe and vntrue, as the ſituation of the Countrey doth plainly ſhew, and as we a little hereafter will diſcouer vnto you. This Countrey is full of high and rough Mountaines: it is verie cold, and not habitable: It is frequented and haunted with a few perſons that liue after the manner of the Arabians, vnder little Cabbins in the open fieldes, and apparelled with the skins of certaine beaſts. It is a ſauage and ruſticall Nation, without all faith and credite, neither will they ſuffer any ſtrangers among them. Their furniture is Bowes and Arrowes. They feed vpon ſuch fruits as the land breedeth, and alſo vpon the fleſh of beaſts.

Among theſe Mountaines of the Moone, there is a Lake called Gale: a very little one it is, and lyeth ſomewhat towards the Weſt. Out of this Lake there iſſueth a Riuer, called Camiſſa, and by the Portugals, named, the Sweete Riuer, which at the point of the Cape of Good-Hope, voydeth it ſelfe into the Sea, in that very place that is termed, The Falſe Cape. For the ſhippes of the Indies ſayling that way, doe firſt diſcouer another greater Cape, which is called, The Cape of the Needles, and then afterwards this leſſer Cape: Whereupon they call it the Falſe Cape, becauſe it is hid and couered with the true and great Cape. Betweene theſe two Capes or Promontories, there is the diſtance of an hundred miles, containing the largeneſſe and breadth of this famous Cape: which being diuided into two points, as it were into two hornes, it maketh a Gulfe, where ſometimes the Portugall ſhips doe take freſh water, in the Riuer that they call the Sweete Riuer.

*Not perfect blacke.

Beyond the Cape or Point of the Needles, there are many competent Harboroughs and Hauens, the principall whereof is Seno Formoſo, the Faire Bay: and Seno del Lago, the Bay of the Lake: For there the Sea maketh a certaine Gulfe, wherein are ſundry Ilands and Ports: and ſomewhat beyond there runneth into the Sea the Riuer of Saint Chriſtopher, and at the mouth thereof there lye three pretie Ilets. And a little further forwards, the Coaſt runneth all along by a Countrey, which the Portugals call, Terra do Natal, the Land of the Natiuitie, becauſe it was firſt diſcouered at Chriſtmas: and ſo reacheth to the Cape, called Della Peſcheria. Between which Cape and the Riuer Magnice, within the Land is the Kingdome of Buttua, whoſe Territories are from the roots or bottome of the Mountaines of the Moone, vntill you come to the Riuer Magnice towards the North, where the Countrey of Monomotapa ſtandeth, and Weſtwards from the Riuer Brauagul towards the Sea, all along the bankes of the Riuer Magnice. In this Kingdome there are many Mines of Gold, and a people that is of the ſame qualities and conditions, that the people of Monomotapa is, as hereafter ſhall bee ſhewed vnto you. And ſo going along the ſhoares of the Ocean, you come to the Riuer Magnice, which lyeth in the very entrance of the Kingdome of Sofala, and the Empire of Monopotapa.

The Kingdome of Sofala beginneth at the Riuer Magnice, which ſpringeth out of the firſt Lake of Nilus, and conueyeth it ſelfe into the Sea in the middeſt of the Bay, betweene the Point Peſcheria, and the Cape, called Cape Delle Correnti, ſituate in three and twentie degrees and a halfe of the Pole Antarcticke, vnder the Tropicke of Capricorne. With this Riuer neere vnto the Sea, there ioyne three other notable Riuers, the principall whereof is by the Portugals, called Saint Chryſtophers, becauſe vpon the day of that Saints Feaſt it was firſt diſcouered, but by the Inhabitants it is named Nagoa. The ſecond tooke the name of one Lorenzo Margues, that firſt found it. Theſe two Riuers doe ſpring originally from the Mountaines of the Moone, ſo greatly renowned among the ancient Writers, but by the people of the Countrey they they are called, Toroa: out of which Mountaines they did thinke, that famous Nilus tooke alſo his beginning: but they were vtterly deceiued. For (as wee haue already told you) the firſt Lake ariſeth not out of thoſe Mountaines, but lyeth a great way diſtant from it: and betweene it and them, is there a very great and a huge low plaine. Beſides that, the ſtreames that flow from the ſaid Mountaines, doe runne towards the Eaſt, and beſtow their Waters vpon other great Riuers; ſo that it is not poſſible for them to paſſe into the foreſaid Lake, much leſſe into Nilus, conſidering eſpecially that the Riuer Magnice, ſpringeth out of that firſt Lake, and by a farre different courſe from the courſe of Nilus, runneth towards the Eaſt, and ſo ioyneth it ſelfe with the two Riuers aforeſaid. The third, is called Arroe, and ariſeth on another ſide out of the Mountaines of the Gold Mines of Monomopata: and in ſome places of this Riuer there are found ſome ſmall pieces of Gold among the Sand.

The Riuer of Cuama.

The kingdome of Sofola.

The commodities of Sofala, Gold, Iuory and Amber.

The Inhabitants of Sofola.

Theſe three Riuers enter into the great Magnice, neere vnto the Sea, and all foure together doe make there a great Water, in a very large Channell, and ſo diſchargeth it ſelfe into the Ocean. From the mouth of this Riuer all along the Sea Coaſt, ſtretcheth the Kingdome of Sofala, vnto the Riuer Cuama, which is ſo called of a certaine Caſtle or Fortreſſe that carrieth the ſame name, and is poſſeſſed by Mahometans and Pagans: but the Portugals call it, The mouthes of Cuama; becauſe at the entry into the Sea, this Riuer diuideth it ſelfe into ſeuen mouthes, where there are fiue ſpeciall Ilands, beſides diuers others that lie vp the Riuer, all very full, and well peopled with Pagans. This Cuama commeth out of the ſame Lake, and from the ſame ſprings from whence Nilus floweth. And thus the Kingdome of Sofala is compriſed within the ſaid two Riuers, Magnice and Cuama, vpon the Sea coaſt. It is but a ſmall Kingdome, and hath but a few Houſes or Townes in it: The chiefe and principall head whereof, is an Iland that lyeth in the Riuer called Sofola, which giueth the name to all the whole Countrey. It is inhabited by Mahometans, and the King himſelfe is of the ſame ſect, and yeildeth obedience to the Crowne of Portugall, becauſe he will not be ſubiect to the Empire of Monomotapa. And therevpon, the Portugals there doe keepe a Fort in the mouth of the Riuer Cuama, and doe trade in thoſe Countries for Gold, and Iuory, and Amber, which is found vpon that Coaſt, and good ſtore of Slaues, and inſtead thereof, they leaue behind them Cotton-cloath, and Silkes that are brought from Cambaia, and is the common apparell of thoſe people. The Mahometans that at this preſent doe inhabite thoſe Countries, are not naturally borne there, but before the Portugals came into thoſe quarters, they Trafficked thither in ſmall Barkes, from the Coaſt of Arabia Fœlix. And when the Portugals had conquered that Realme, the Mahometans ſtayed there ſtill, and now they are become neither vtter Pagans, nor holding of the Sect of Mahomet.

The Empire of Monomotapa, full of Gold Mines.

Sofola ſuppoſed Ophir.

From the ſhoares and Coaſt, that lyeth betweene the two foreſaid Riuers of Magnice and Cuama, within the Land ſpreadeth the Empire of Monomotapa, where there is very great ſtore of Mines of Gold, which is carried from thence into all the Regions there-abouts, and into Sofola, and into the other parts of Africa. And ſome there be that will ſay, that Solomons Gold, which he had for the Temple of Ieruſalem, was brought by Sea out of theſe Countries. A thing in truth not very vnlikely: For in the Countries of Monomotapa, there doe remaine to this day many ancient buildings of great worke, and ſingular Architecture, of Stone, of Lime, and of Timber, the like whereof are not to be ſeene in all the Prouinces adioyning.

The people of Monomotapa.

The King of Monomotapa maintaineth many Armies.

Left-handed Amazons.

The Empire of Monomotapa is very great, and for people infinite. They are Gentiles and Pagans, of colour blacke, very couragious in Warre, of a middle ſtature, and ſwift of foot. There are many Kings that are vaſſals and ſubiects to Monomotapa, who do oftentimes rebell and make warre againſt him. Their weapons are Bowes and Arrowes, and light Darts. This Emperour maintaineth many Armies in ſeuerall Prouinces, diuided into Legions, according to the vſe and cuſtomes of the Romanes. For being ſo great a Lord as he is, he muſt of neceſſitie be in continuall warre, for the maintenance of his eſtate. And among all the reſt of his Souldiers, the moſt valourous in name, are his Legions of Women, whom he eſteemeth very highly, and accounteth them as the very ſinewes and ſtrength of his militarie forces. Theſe Women doe burne their left paps with fire, becauſe they ſhould be no hindrance vnto them in their ſhooting, after the vſe and manner of the ancient Amazones, that are ſo greatly celebrated by the Hiſtoriographers of former prophane memories. For their weapons, they practiſe Bowes and Arrowes: They are very quicke and ſwift, liuely and couragious, very cunning in ſhooting, but eſpecially and aboue all, venturous and conſtant in fight. In their battailes they vſe a warlike kind of craft and ſubtiltie: For they haue a cuſtome, to make a ſhew that they would flye and runne away, as though they were vanquiſhed and diſcomfited, but they will diuers times turne themſelues backe, and vexe their enemies mightily with the ſhot of their Arrowes. And when they ſee their Aduerſaries ſo greedy of the victorie, that they begin to diſperſe and ſcatter themſelues, then will they ſuddenly turne againe vpon them, and with great courage and fierceneſſe make a cruell ſlaughter of them. So that partly with their ſwiftneſſe, and partly with their deceitfull wiles, and other cunning ſhifts of warre, they are greatly feared in all thoſe parts. They doe enioy by the Kings good fauour certaine Countries, where they dwell alone by themſelues: and ſometime ſometimes they chooſe certaine men at their owne pleaſure, with whom they doe keepe company for generations ſake: So that if they do bring forth Male-children, they ſend them home to their fathers houſes: but if they be Female, they reſerue them to themſelues, and breed them in the exerciſe of warfare.

The ſituation of the Empire of Monomotapa.

The Empire of this Monomotapa lyeth (as it were) in an Iland, which is made by the Sea-coaſt, by the Riuer Magnice, by a piece of the Lake from whence Magnice floweth, and by the Riuer Cuama. It bordereth towards the South, vpon the Lords of the Cape of Good-Hope, before mentioned, and Northward vpon the Empire of Mohenemugi, as by and by ſhall be ſhewed vnto you.

The kingdome of Angoſcia.

But now returning to our former purpoſe, that is to ſay, to runne forwards vpon the Sea-coaſt, after you haue paſſed ouer ſome part of the Riuer Cuama, there is a certaine little Kingdome vpon the Sea, called Angoſcia, which taketh the name of certaine Ilands there ſo called, and lye directly againſt it. It is inhabited with the like people, both Mahometans and Gentiles, as the Kingdome of Sofala is. Merchants they are, and in ſmall Veſſels doe Trafficke along that Coaſt with the ſame Wares and Commodities, where-with the people of Sofala doe Trade.

The kingdome of Mozambique R. Meghincate.

The Iland of Mozambique.

The Inhabitants of Mozambique.

A little beyond, ſuddenly ſtarteth vp in ſight the Kingdome of Mozambique, ſituate in foureteene degrees and a halfe towards the South, and taketh his name of three Ilands, that lye in the mouth of the Riuer Meghincate, where there is a great Hauen and a ſafe, and able to receiue all manner of ſhips. The Realme is but ſmall, and yet aboundeth in all kind of Victuals. It is the common landing place for all Veſſels that ſayle from Portugall, and from India into that Countrey. In one of theſe Iles, which is the chiefe and principall, called Mozambique, and giueth name to all the reſt; as alſo to the whole Kingdome, and the Hauen aforeſaid, wherein there is erected a Fortreſſe, guarded with a Garriſon of Portugals, whereupon all the other Fortreſſes that are on that Coaſt doe depend, and from whence they fetch all their prouiſion: all the Armadas and Fleetes that ſayle from Portugall to the Indies, if they cannot finiſh and performe their Voyage, will goe and Winter (I ſay) in this Iland of Mozambique: and thoſe that trauell out of India to Europe, are conſtrained of neceſſitie to touch at Mozambique, to furniſh themſelues with Victuals: This Iland, when the Portugals diſcouered India, was the firſt place where they learned the language of the Indians, and prouided themſelues of Pilots to direct them in their courſe. The people of this Kingdome are Gentiles: Ruſticall and rude they bee, and of colour blacke. They go all naked. They are valiant and ſtrong Archers, and cunning Fiſhers, with all kind of hookes.

The kingdome of Quiloa.

The Iland of Quiloa, and the Inhabitants thereof.

The King of Quiloa ouerthrowne by the Portugals, and driuen out of the Iland.

As you go on forwards vpon the foreſaid Coaſt, there is another Iland, called Quiloa, in quantitie not great, but in excellency ſingular: For it is ſituate in a very coole and freſh Ayre: It is repleniſhed with Trees that are alwaies greene, and affordeth all varietie of Victuals. It lyeth at the mouth of the Riuer Coano, which ſpringeth out of the ſame Lake from whence Nilus floweth, and ſo runneth about ſixtie miles in length, till it commeth neere to the Sea, and there it hath a mightie ſtreame, and in the very mouth of it maketh a great Iland, which is peopled with Mahometans and Idolaters, and a little beyond that, towards the Coaſt on the Weſt, you may ſee the ſaid Iland of Quiloa. This Iland is inhabited with Mahometans alſo, which are of colour ſome-thing whitiſh. They are well apparelled, and trimly adorned with Cloath of Silke and Cotten: Their Women doe vſe ornaments of Gold, and Iewels about their hands and their neckes, and haue good ſtore of houſhold-ſtuffe made of Siluer. They are not altogether ſo blacke as the men are: and in their limbs they are very well proportioned. Their houſes are made of Stone, and Lime, and Timber, very well wrought, and of good Architecture, with Gardens and Orchards, full of Hearbs and ſundry Fruits. Of this Iland the whole Kingdome tooke the name, which vpon the Coaſt extendeth it ſelfe from Capo Delgado, (the Cape Delicate, that bordereth Mozambique and Quiloa,) and is ſituate in nine degrees towards the South, and from thence it runneth out vnto the aforeſaid Riuer of Coano. In old time the Kingdome of Quiloa was the chiefeſt of all the Principalities there adioyning, and ſtood neere to the Sea: but when the Portugals arriued in thoſe Countries, the King truſted ſo much to himſelfe, that he thought he was able with his owne forces not onely to defend himſelfe againſt them, but alſo to driue them from thoſe places which they had already ſurpriſed. Howbeit the matter fell out quite contrary. For when it came to Weapons, he was vtterly ouerthrowne and diſcomfited by the Portugals, and ſo fled away. But they tooke and poſſeſſed the Iland, and enriched themſelues with the great ſpoyles and booties that they found therein. They erected there alſo a Fortreſſe, which was afterward pulled downe by the commandement of the King of Portugall, becauſe he thought it not neceſſarie, conſidering that there were others ſufficient enough for that Coaſt.

The cōmendation of the Ile of S. Laurence. Of it, ſee the former Iournals.

And heere we may not leaue behind vs the Ile of Saint Laurence, ſo called by the Portugals, becauſe they did firſt diſcouer it vpon that Martyrs feaſt day. It is ſo great, that it containeth in length almoſt a thouſand miles, and ſtandeth right ouer againſt the Coaſt which wee haue deſcribed, beginning directly at the mouthes of the Riuer Magnice, which are in ſixe and twentie degrees of the South, and ſo going forwards to the North, it endeth right againſt the mouths of Cuama in the Kingdome of Quiloa. Betweene this Iland and the firme Land, there is (as it were) a Channell, which at the entry Weſt-ward, is three hundred and fortie miles broad: in the middeſt where it is narroweſt, ouer againſt the Iland of Mozambiche; one hundred and ſeuentie miles, and for the reſt, it enlargeth it ſelfe very much towards Indea, and containeth many Iles within it. The ſhips that goe from Spaine into India, or returne from India to Spaine, doe alwaies for the moſt part paſſe and ſayle in, and through this Channell, if by time or weather they be not forced to the contrary. And ſurely, this Iland deſerueth to be inhabited with a better people, becauſe it is furniſhed with ſingular Commodities. For it hath many ſafe & ſure hauens. It is watred with ſundry Riuers, that cauſe the earth to bring forth fruits of diuers kinds, as Pulſe, and Rice, and other Graine, Oranges, Limons, Citrons, and ſuch like fruit. Fleſh of all ſorts, as Hens, &c. and Veniſon, as wilde Boare, & Deere, and ſuch like, and all this of a very good taſte and reliſh, becauſe the ſoyle is very fat: their Fiſh alſo is exceeding good. The Inhabitants are Pagans, with ſome of the Sect of Mahomet among them. They are of the colour which the Spaniards call Mulato, betweene black and white. Very warlike they are, and giuen to their weapons, which are Bowes and Arrowes, and Darts of very light Wood, ſtrengthned with Iron, whereof they make the heads of their Darts, which are crooked like hookes: and theſe they will caſt and throw moſt ſlightly and cunningly. They vſe alſo Targets, and Iackes that are made of certaine beaſts skinnes, wherewith they ſaue themſelues in fight from the blowes of their enemies.

The Inhabitants of the Ile of Saint Laurence. Their Weapons.

This Iland is diuided among ſeuerall Princes, that are at enmitie one with another: for they are in continuall Warres, and perſecute one another with Armes. There are diuers Mines of Gold, of Siluer, of Copper, of Iron, and of other Metals. The ſauage people doe not vſe to ſayle out of the Iland, but onely from one ſide to the other they goe coaſting along the ſhoares, with certaine Barkes that are made but of one ſtocke of a Tree, which they hollow for that purpoſe. The moſt part of them doe not willingly entertaine ſtrangers, neither will they conſent that they ſhould Trafficke or conuerſe with them. Notwithſtanding, in certaine Ports the Portugals doe vſe to Trade with the Ilanders, for Amber, Waxe, Siluer, Copper, Rice, and ſuch other things, but they neuer come vpon the Land. In the Channell before mentioned, there are diuers Ilands, ſome greater, and ſome leſſe, inhabited with Mahometans. The chiefe of them is the Ile of Saint Chriſtopher, and then of Santo Spirito: and another, called Magliaglie, and ſo the reſt, as the Iles of Comora, Anzoame, Maiotto, and ſome other.

Sundry Ilands in the channel.

The kingdome of Mombaza rich in Gold and Siluer, and Pearle.

The Citie of Mombaza ſpoyled as Quiloa was.

But let vs returne to the Sea ſide, and proſecute the Coaſt of the Kingdome of Quiloa, where we left. Next vnto it, is the Kingdome of Mombaza, in the height of three degrees and a halfe towards the South, which taketh the name from an Iland inhabited with Mahometans, which is alſo called Mombaza, where there is a faire Citie, with houſes that haue many Sollers, furniſhed Pictures, both grauen and painted. The King thereof is a Mahometan, who taking vpon him to reſiſt the Portugals, receiued the ſame ſucceſſe that hapned to the King of Quiloa, ſo that the Citie was ranſacked and ſpoyled by his enemies, who found therein good ſtore of Gold and Siluer, and Pearle, and Cloath of Cotton, and of Silke, and of Gold, and ſuch other Commodities. This Kingdome lyeth betweene the borders of Quiloa, and Melinde, and is inhabited with Pagans and Mahometans, and yeeldeth obedience to the Empire of Mohenemugi.

The kingdome of Melinde.

A little beyond is the Kingdome of Melinde, which being likewiſe but a little one, extendeth it ſelfe vpon the Sea Coaſt, as farre as the Riuer Chimanchi, and lyeth in the height of two degrees and a halfe: and vp the ſtreame of that Riuer, it reacheth to the Lake Calice, the ſpace of one hundred miles within land. Neere vnto the Sea, along the bankes of this Riuer, there is a great deale of Countrey inhabited by Pagans and Mahometans, of colour almoſt white. Their houſes are built after our faſhion. But there is one particularitie to be admired, that their Muttons or Sheepe, are twice as great as the Sheep of our Countrey: for they diuide them into fiue quarters, (if a man may ſo call them) and reckon the tayle for one, which commonly weigheth ſome fiue and twentie, or thirtie pound. The Women are white, and ſumptuouſly dreſſed, after the Arabian faſhion, with Cloath of Silke. About their neckes and hands, and armes, and feet, they vſe to weare Iewels of Gold and Siluer: When they go abroad out of their houſes, they couer themſelues with Taffata, ſo that they are not knowne but when they liſt themſelues. In this Countrey there is a very good Hauen, which is a landing place for the Veſſels that ſayle through thoſe Seas. Generally, the people are very kind, true and truſtie, and conuerſe with Strangers. They haue alwaies entertained and welcomed the Portugals, and haue repoſed great confidence in them, neither haue they euer offered them any wrong in any reſpect.

The tayle of a ſheepe in Melinde weigheth commonly 25. or 30. pound. See Leo Afer of Egyptian ſheepe.

In the Sea betweene theſe two Capes of Mombaza and Melinde, there are three Iles: the firſt, is called Monfie; the ſecond, Zanzibar; and the third, Pemba; all inhabited only with Mohemetans, that are of colour white. Theſe Iles abound in all things as the others do, whereof we made mention before. Theſe people are ſomewhat enclined to Armes: but they are in deed more addicted to dreſſe and manure their ground: For there groweth much Sugar, which in ſmall Barks they carrie away to ſell into the firme Land, with other fruits of that Counerey.

The Empire of Mohenemugi.

Beſides theſe three Realmes laſt deſcribed, Quiola, Melinde, and Mombaza, within the Land is the great Empire of Mohenemugi, towards the Weſt. It bordereth vpon the South, with the Kingdome of Mozambique, and with the Empire of Monomotapa to the Riuer Coano, vpon the Weſt with the Riuer Nilus, betweene the two Lakes; and vpon the North it ioyneth with the Empire of Prete-Gianni. Towards the Sea, this Emperour ſtandeth in good termes of peace with the foreſaid Kings of Quiola, Melinde, and Mombaza, by reaſon of their trafficke together, and the better to ſecure the entercourſe and trade by Sea: by meanes whereof they haue brought vnto them much cloth of Cotton, and cloth of Silke from diuers Countries, and other merchandiſes that are well eſteemed in theſe parts: and particularly certaine little balls, that are made in the Kingdome of Cambaia, of a kind of Bitumen or clammie Clay, like vnto Glaſſe, but that it is (as it were) of a red colour, which they vſe to weare about their neckes, like a paire of Beades in ſtead of Neck-laces. It ſerueth them alſo in ſtead of Money, for of Gold they make none account. Likewiſe with the Silkes that are brought vnto them, they doe apparell themſelues from the girdle downewards. In exchange and barter of all theſe commodities, they giue Gold, Siluer, Copper, and Iuorie.

The Giachas, or Agagi.

And. Bat. ſayth, that the Iagges came from Sierra Liona. But they diſperſed themſelues as a generall peſtilence, and common ſcourge thorow moſt parts of Ethiopia.

But on the other ſide towards Monomotapa, there are continuall warres; yea, and ſometimes ſo bloudie, that it is hardly diſcerned who hath gotten the victorie. For in that Border there meet together two of the greateſt and moſt warlike Powers and Forces that are in all thoſe Regions: that is to ſay, on the Partie of Monomotapa, there came forth into the field the Amazones, of whom wee told you before; and on the other partie of Mohenemugi are the Giacchi, (as the Moci-Congi doe call them) but in their owne tongue they are called Agagi, who did ſometime ſo greatly afflict the Kingdome of Congo, as you may remember. Neither are theſe people leſſe couragious or ſtrong then the Amazones, but are of a blacke complexion, and preſumptuous countenances. They doe vſe to marke themſelues aboue the lip vpon their cheekes with certaine lines, which they make with Iron inſtruments and with fire. Moreouer, they haue a cuſtome to turne their eye-lids backwards: ſo that their skin being all blacke, and in that blackneſſe ſhewing the white of their eyes, and thoſe markes in their faces, it is a ſtrange thing to behold them. For it is indeed a very dreadfull and Deuilliſh ſight. They are of bodie great, but deformed, and liue like beaſts in the field, and feed vpon mans fleſh. In fight, they ſhew themſelues exceedingly couragious, and doe vtter moſt horrible ſhowting and crying, of purpoſe to daunt and affright their Enemies. Their weapons are Darts, and Paniſes of Leather that couer all their whole bodie, and ſo defend themſelues therewith. Sometimes they will encampe together, and ſticke their Pauiſes in the ground, which are vnto them inſtead a trench. Sometimes they will goe forwards in the battell, and ſhrowd themſelues vnder them, and yet annoy their aduerſaries with the ſhot of their Darts. And thus by warlike policie they doe ordinarily plague their Enemies, by endeauouring with all ſubtiltie to make them ſpend their ſhot in vaine, vpon their Targets: and when they ſee that they haue made an end of ſhooting, then doe they renew the battell a freſh, and driuing them to flight, make a cruell ſlaughter of them without all mercie. And this is the manner which they vſe againſt their Enemies, and the Amazones. But the Amazones, on the other ſide, which are very well acquainted herewithall, doe fight againſt them with other militarie ſtratagems (as we haue aboue declared) and doe ouercome the forces of their Aduerſaries with their ſwiftneſſe, and great skill in matters of Warre. For, they doe aſſure themſelues, that if they be taken, they ſhall be deuoured: and therefore with doubled courage they fight for life, that they might ouercome, and in any caſe ſaue their liues from that fierce and cruell Nation. And in this ſort doe they maintaine continuall Warre, alwaies with great mortalitie on both ſides. Theſe Agags dwell at the beginning of the Riuer Nilus, (where it runneth Northwards out of the Lake,) vpon both the bankes of the Riuer, till it come to a certaine limite, wherein they are bounded; and then Weſtwards all ouer the bankes of the ſaid Nilus, euen to the ſecond Lake, and to the borders of the Empire of Prete-Gianni. Touching theſe Agags, I thought it conuenient in this place to adde this, which before I had omitted. Betweene the confines of this Mohenemugi, and Prete-Gianni, there are ſundrie other petie Lords, and people that are of a white colour, and yeeld obedience ſometimes to one of theſe two Princes, and ſometimes to the other. They are men of a farre greater ſtature then all the reſt of the people in thoſe Countries.

The Amazones.

Many good Hauens.

The Cape of Guarda Fuy.

Towards the Cape of Guarda-Fuy, there are many places inhabited with Mahometans, all along the Sea-ſide, of colour being white. Vpon this ſhoare there are diuers good Hauens, where the ſhips of ſundrie Countries doe trafficke with the foreſaid merchandiſes. The firſt of theſe places, is called Patee; the ſecond, Braua; the third, Magadoxo; the fourth, Affion; and the laſt is, the famous Promontorie and Cape of Guarda-Fuy: which becauſe it is very great, and iutteth out a good way into the Sea, is well knowne to all Sailers that come from India, and from Ormuz, and from Arabia Fœlix. It is the place and harbour where the Portugals are wont to attend, and yeerely with their Nauies to watch for the Veſſels of the Mahometans, that being laden with precious merchandiſes, doe ſaile into thoſe parts without their licence, they being the Lords of the trafficke and trade for Spicerie, and all other commodities that are brought from India. So that euery yeere the Portugall Fleet doth take great prizes of Merchants ſhips in that place, as the Engliſh and the French doe at Cape Saint Vincent.

Diuers Ports on the Sea coaſt towards the red Sea.

After you haue compaſſed about the foreſaid Cape of Guarda-Fuy, toward the red Sea, you ſhall come to other Townes and Hauens of the Mahometans. The firſt of them is called Methe, and another beyond that, called Barbora. And this is the fartheſt place wherein you ſhall find any people with white skins: for here the men beginne to be all blacke. Then there is Ceila, and Dalaca, and Malaca, and Carachin: and all this Coaſt is called in that Countrie language, Baragiam. The People that inhabite therein are all blacke, valiant in Armes, and apparelled from the girdle downewards with cloth of Cotton: but thoſe that are of the beſt account among them, doe weare vpon their ſhoulders certaine Clokes with Hoods, called Bernuſſi, ſuch as the old Romans vſed, and were termed Saga Romana. It aboundeth in Gold, and in Iuorie, and in Metals, and in Victuals of all ſorts.

That which followeth of Abaſsia, Nilus, &c is omitted.

Then follow the Mouths or Entrances into the red Gulfe.

I know not who tranſlated this Booke, I found it in Maſter Hackluyts papers, and haue abbreuiated it where I could; al-

IN the Name of Ieſus, amen. I, Francis Aluarez, Prieſt of the Maſſe, which by eſpeciall commandement of the King our Lord, Don Emanuel (whom God hath receiued into his glorie) went with Edward Galuano, a Gentleman of his houſe, and one of his Counſellors; which was Secretarie vnto the King Don Alfonſo, and vnto King Iohn, his Sonne, till his dying day; and by King Don Emanuel was ſent Ambaſſadour vnto King Prete Ianni, haue determined to write all things which hapned vnto vs in this Voyage, and to deſcribe the Countries wherein we were, with the qualities, cuſtomes, and vſa- ges thereof, and how they agree with Chriſtian Religion. Neither doe I here take vpon me to reprehend or approue their cuſtomes and vſages, but leaue them wholly vnto the Readers (which are able to inſtruct mee) to praiſe, amend, and correct whatſoeuer they ſhall thinke good. And becauſe I may ſeeme ſometimes ſpeaking of one Countrie, and eftſoones of another, to confound the ſame together, I ſay, that wee were reſident in theſe Countries for the ſpace of ſixe yeeres together, wherein I ſought to know a great part of the Countries, Kingdomes, and Signiories of the ſaid Prete Ianni, and their cuſtomes and vſages, ſome by ſight, and ſome others by the report of credible perſons. And euer, as I came to the knowledge of them, ſo I put them downe in writing, that is to ſay, deliuering ſuch things as I ſaw, as hauing ſeene them; and things reported, as receiued by hearing: and therefore I ſweare and proteſt vpon my conſcience, that I will not wittingly report any vntruth. And euen as I hope and truſt in our Lord God, that my confeſſion ſhall be true vnto my liues end, ſo likewiſe ſhall this my preſent writing be true: for he that lyeth to his neighbour, lyeth to God.

though it ſtill continueth very long, if not tedious. I alſo examined it with Ramuſio his Italian Edition, and in many places amended the tranſlation, in many ſupplied it, and added other things: illuſtrating it with marginall notes, &c. He that compareth theſe Relations with thoſe of the Great Mogoll in Sir T. Roe, ſhall find great correſpondence in the vnciuill cuſtomes whereinto wild Maieſtie and barbarous Greatneſſe, both here and there, haue degenerated: both vaſt bodies rather then ſtrong; the one flouriſhing, the other fallen, and now retayning but the ſtruggling extremes of that giantly vnweldineſſe here by this eye-witneſſe in thoſe times obſerued. He calls him Prete or Prieſt Iohn, following the vulgar errour, growing from the relations of a Prieſt Iohn in Aſia, and by ignorance applied to this Negus of Ethiopia, as in my Pilgrimage you may ſee at large. I eſteeme his relations true in thoſe things which he ſaith he ſaw: in ſome others which he had by relation of enlarging Trauellers, or boaſting Abaſſines, hee may perhaps ſometimes rather mendacia dicere then mentiri. Euen yet the Law-giuer is not departed from Iuda, it Melechs poſteritie hath euer ſince raigned, wily wits had their pias fraudes to make Religion a ſtirrop of State.

§. I.

MATTHEW the Ambaſſadour of PRETE IANNI, is conducted by the Portugals vnto the Hauen of Maczua in the red Sea, and what hapned to his death.

WHereas I ſaid that I went with Edward Galuano (whom God pardon) true it is that I did ſo, and he died in Comoran, an Ile of the red Sea, neither tooke his Ambaſſage any effect, during the time that Lopez Suarez was Captaine generall of the Indies. Diego Lopez de Sequeira ſucceeding Suarez in the gouernment of India, effected that which Lopez Suarez would neuer execute, to wit, the conducting of Matthew (who was ſent Ambaſſadour from Prete Ianni to the King of Portugall) to the Hauen of Maczua, neere vnto Ercoco, being a Port-towne of Prete Ianni. This Diego Lopez prepared a goodly and great Fleet, wherewith we ſailed into the red Sea, and arriued at the ſaid Iland of Maczua on Munday in the Octaues of Eaſter, the ſixteenth of the moneth of Aprill, in the yeere 1520. which Iland we found abandoned and forſaken by the Inhabitants, becauſe that fiue or ſixe dayes before they had knowledge of our comming. This Ile is diſtant from the Continent about two Crosbow-ſhots, whither the Moores of the ſaid Iland were fled with their goods. Our Fleet therefore riding betweene the Continent and the Iland. The Tueſday following, there came vnto vs one Chriſtian and a Moore from the Towne of Ercoco. The Chriſtian ſaid that the Towne of Ercoco belonged to the Chriſtians, and was vnder the Iuriſdiction of a great Lord, called Barnagaſſo, being ſubiect vnto Prete Ianni; and that the Inhabitants of this Ile of Maczua, and of Ercoco, when the Turkes came thither, fled all into the Mountaines; but at this preſent they would not flee away, hauing vnderſtood that wee were Chriſtians. Our Generall hauing heard thus much, gaue thankes to God, that he was come to the happie knowledge of Chriſtians; and this procured great fauour vnto Matthew, which before that time was little accounted of.

The Chapters, as they are diuided in Ramuſio, are expreſſed by the figures in the beginnings of the lines: which method I haue reduced to our wonted forme of Paragraphs, leſt ſo many diuiſions ſhould make the Booke to ſwell ouermuch.

2. The day following being Wedneſday, the Captaine of the ſaid Towne of Ercoco came to ſpeake with our Generall, and preſented foure Oxen vnto him, and the Generall gaue him very courteous and honourable entertainment.

Twentie or foure and twentie miles from this place ſtandeth a very high Mountaine, with a famous Monaſterie thereupon, which Matthew oftentimes made mention of, being called the Monaſterie of Biſan, that is, Of the Viſion. The Friars of this Monaſterie hauing knowledge of vs, came ſeuen of them the Thurſday after the Octaues, to viſite vs; whom our Generall and all his people went on ſhoare to meet, with great ioy and gladneſſe: and they ſeemed to reioyce no leſſe; and ſaid, that they had long time looked for Chriſtians, becauſe they had certaine Propheſies in their written Booke, which foretold that Chriſtians ſhould arriue at this Hauen, and that a pit ſhould there be digged, after the opening whereof, no more Moores ſhould dwell in that place: with many other Speeches tending to the like purpoſe. At all theſe things the Ambaſſadour Matthew was preſent, whom the foreſaid Friars did greatly honour, kiſſing his hands and his ſhoulders, according to their manner; and he, on the other ſide, tooke great delight in them alſo. Theſe Friars ſaid that they obſerued then the Feaſt of Eaſter, and eight dayes next enſuing, and that during thoſe eight dayes they vſed neither to trauell, nor to doe any other work; but ſo ſoone as they heard ſay that Chriſtians were arriued at that Hauen (a thing which they ſo earneſtly deſired) they craued licence of their Superiour to vndertake this iourney for the ſeruice of God, and that Barnagaſſo was likewiſe informed of our arriuall, but that he would not ſet forward out of his houſe till eight dayes after Eaſter.

3. Theſe Friars vſe to carrie Croſſes in their hands, and other people weare them about their neckes, made of blacke wood, and all our companie bought of the ſame Croſſes which they weare about their neckes, becauſe it was a new thing, and not vſuall amongſt vs. While theſe Friars abode with vs, the Generall commanded one Fernando Diaz, which vnderſtood the Arabike Tongue, to goe and view their Monaſterie.

4. On Tueſday the foure and twentieth of Aprill, Barnagaſſo came to the Towne of Ercoco, and gaue vs aduertiſement of his arriuall. Order was taken, that they ſhould meet one another in the mid-way. Barnagaſſo came thither firſt, but he would not come to the place which was prepared for him. The Generall being lighted, ſeing that he would not come thither, cauſed the preparatiues to be carried before neere vnto the place where he ſtood: which againe, to maintayne his grandure and reputation, would not once ſtirre with his people to come vnto the place prepared, ſo that the ſaid Anthonie de Saldanza and Matthew the Ambaſſadour, were conſtrained to returne againe, which in the end reſolued, that both of them at one inſtant, ſhould ſet forward, that is to ſay, the Generall and Barnagaſſo, and ſo they did, meeting together and conferring in a large champaine field, as they ſate on the ground vpon certaine Carpets. And among many diſcourſes that they had together, giuing thankes to God for this their enteruiew. Barnagaſſo taking a Croſſe of Siluer in his hand (which was there readie for the ſame purpoſe) ſaid, that he ſware vpon the ſigne of the Croſſe, vpon which our Lord ſuffered his Paſſion, in the Name of Prete Ianni his Maſter, that he would alwaies fauour and aide the people and affaires of the King of Portugals, and alſo aſſiſt his Captaines which ſhould arriue at that Hauen, or in any other Hauens or Lands, where it lay in him to aide and aſſiſt them, and likewiſe that he would take into his protection the Ambaſſadour Matthew, and other Ambaſſadours, which it pleaſed the Generall to ſend into the Kingdomes and Dominions of Prete Ianni, with all ſuch people and goods as they ſhould carrie with them.

Mutuall gifts.

The Generall ſware, on the other part, to doe the like for the Subiects and Affaires of Prete Ianni, and of Barnagaſſo, there and in euery place where he ſhould find them, and that the reſt of the Captaines and Lords of the King of Portugall ſhould doe the like. The Generall gaue vnto Barnagaſſo a faire Armour, and certaine pieces of cloth of Silke; and Barnagaſſo gaue vnto the Generall a faire Horſe and a Mule: and ſo they departed glad and contented on either part.

This Barnagaſſo had in his traine two hundred perſons mounted vpon Horſes and Mules, and two thouſand Footmen. Our Gentlemen and Captaines ſeeing theſe ſo good newes which God had ſent vs, and that a doore was opened to exalt the Catholike Faith, whereof afore wee had ſmall hope of any ſucceſſe, all men holding this Matthew for no true Ambaſſadour, but for a falſe man and a Counterfeit, whereupon they were onely of opinion to put him on Land, and let him goe his way, when they had ſeene theſe things (as wee haue ſaid before) they all rouzed vp themſelues, requeſting the Generall of his fauour, that hee would ſuffer them to goe with the ſaid Matthew to Prete Ianni, in that Ambaſſage; conſidering that by that which they had ſeene, it was perfectly knowne that the ſaid Matthew was a true Ambaſſadour. And albeit, many requeſted this charge, yet was it granted to Roderigo de Lima: and the Generall appointed certaine that ſhould goe with him, which were theſe, George de Breu, Lopez de Gama, Iohn Scolaro Secretarie of the Ambaſſage, Iohn Gonſaluez Interpretor and Factor of the ſame Ambaſſage, Emanuel de Mares an Organiſt, Pedro Lopez, Maſter Iohn the Phyſician, Gaſpar Pereira, Stephen Pagliarte, both Kinſmen of Don Roderigo, Iohn Fernandez, Lazarus de Andrada Painter, Alfonſo Menzdez, and my ſelfe, Francis Aluarez Prieſt, though vnworthy. All we before mentioned went in the company of Don Roderigo, and likewiſe, three Portugals accompanied Matthew, of whom, the one was named Magaglianes, another Aluarenga, the third, Diego Fernandez, Preſents alſo were prouided.

Roderigo de Lima, ſent to the Prete in Embaſſage.

The vſe of a Painter in diſcoueries.

We went to Ercoco, where we were appointed by Barnagaſſo, which cauſed vs to lodge two or three Croſſe-bow-ſhoots, diſtant from the Towne in a certaine Plaine, which is at the foot of a Mountaine, whither immediately hee ſent vs of free gift an Oxe, and Bread and Wine of the Countrie. We ſtayed there, becauſe in that place they were to prouide vs of Horſes and Camels to carrie our goods. This was vpon a Friday, and becauſe in this Countrey they obſerue the old and the new Law, we reſted the Saturday and the Sunday to keepe both thoſe dayes holy.

Saturday and Sunday Sabbaths.

In this meane ſpace, the Ambaſſador Matthew, dealt very effectually with Don Rodorigo, and with vs all, not to ſtay with Barnagaſſo, although hee were a great Lord, but that it was farre better to goe vnto the Monaſtery of the Viſion, where wee ſhould haue farre better diſpatch. Whereupon, giuing him to vnderſtand, that wee were not to ſtay with him, hee departed and went his way, neuertheleſſe hee gaue vs fourteene Horſes and tenne Camels to carrie our goods.

6. We departed out of this Plaine, neere vnto the Towne of Ercoco, on Munday, the thirtieth of Aprill, wee trauelled not aboue two miles from that place, but that wee reſted about noone, neere vnto a Riuer which was dryed vp, which had no water ſauing in certaine ſmall Pits. And becauſe the Countrey through which we were to trauell, was dry and barren, and the heate extreame; each of vs carried with him his Veſſels and Bottles of Leather full of water. Vpon the bankes of this Riuer grew many trees of diuers ſorts, among which were Sallowes, and trees of bearing the fruit, called Iuiuba, with other fruitleſſe trees. While we reſted by this Riuer, about noone there came a Gentleman vnto vs, named Framaſqual, which in our Language ſignifieth, The Seruant of the Croſſe, who in his blackneſſe was ſo faire, that he ſeemed to be a Gentleman indeed, and they ſaid that he was allyed to Barnagaſſo, that is to ſay, his Wiues Brother. Before he came at vs, he lighted from his Horſe, becauſe this is their cuſtome, and they vſe it alſo for a courteſie. The Ambaſſadour Matthew, hearing of his comming, ſaid he was a Thiefe, and came to rob vs, and that we ſhould all betake vs to our Weapons; and Matthew himſelfe caught vp his Sword, and put on his Head-piece. Framaſqual hearing this noyſe, ſent to craue leaue to come vnto vs, and though he could not obtaine it of Matthew, yet neuertheleſſe, he came vnto vs as a man well brought vp and very courteous, and as one that had beene conuerſant at the Court. This Gentleman had a very good Horſe before him, and a faire Mule whereon hee rode, and foure men which went by him on foot.

7. From this Lodging we departed all together, and the ſaid Gentleman riding vpon his Mule with his Horſe before him, accoſted our Ambaſſadour, Don Roderigo with his Interpreter, and they rode a great while conferring and deuiſing together. Hee was in his conference and in his anſweres very gentle, and courteous, and the Ambaſſadour tooke ſingular delight in him. Wee found a Carauan of Camels and people, which came from Ercoco, becauſe they trauell not but in Carauans for feare of theeues. Wee lodged all in a Wood where there was water, being an ordinary place for Carauans to lodge in, and the foreſaid Framaſqual remayned with vs, where we and thoſe of the Carauan kept watch all night for feare of wild beaſts. The next morning, we departed from this place, alwayes trauelling ouer dry Riuers and Brookes, moſt huge Mountaines ſtanding on both ſides of the way, with great Woods and Trees of diuers ſorts, moſt beautifull and tall, the greateſt part whereof were without fruit, and among them were ſome which I my ſelfe knew, being called Tamarindi, which beare cluſters of fruit like vnto Grapes, which being preſſed are ſomewhat blacke, becauſe they make Wine of them, ſome quantitie whereof they carrie vnto all their Faires, as they vſe to make of Raiſins. The Riuers and wayes whereby we paſſed, ſeemed to be high and ragged, which commeth to paſſe through the fury of the water of ſtormes and tempeſts mingled with Thunder, which waters hinder not the way, according as they told vs, and as we ſaw our ſelues in other places like vnto theſe. The remedie was at the time of theſe ſtormes to ſtay vpon the ſide of ſome Hill, the ſpace of two houres, vntill the force of theſe ſtormes be runne downe. And how great and terrible ſoeuer theſe Riuers became through the foreſaid ſhowres, the water is no ſooner falne from the ſaid Mountaines, and come into the Plaine, but it is diſperſed and ſoked vp, and neuer commeth vnto the Sea: neither could we learne that any Riuer of Æthiopia entereth into the Red Sea, but that all of them haue their ending, as ſoone as they come to the low and plaine fields.

Vpon theſe Mountaines and Rockes, are many beaſts of diuers kinds, as we our ſelues ſaw, to wit, Elephants, Lions, Tygres, Buffes, Badgers, Ante, Deere without number, and other beaſts of all ſorts, ſauing two, which I neither ſaw, nor heard to be in thoſe parts, that is to ſay, Beares, and Conies. There are likewiſe all kind of ſinging Birds, which may be imagined, and alſo Partridges, Quailes, wild Hens, Doues, and Turtles, in ſuch incredible numbers, that they couered the Sunne, of all thoſe ſorts which are in our parts, ſauing that I ſaw no Pyes, nor Cuckoes. All along theſe Riuers and Rockes I ſaw great plentie of ſweet Herbes, which I knew not, ſauing onely Baſill, whereof there was exceeding ſtore, which yeelded a fragrant and ſweet ſmell, and had leaues of diuers ſorts.

Many beaſts. Ante a kind of beaſt. No Beares nor Conies.

8. The time of reſting our ſelues being come, Matthew determined to cauſe vs a-new to leaue the high way, and to trauel with him toward the Monaſterie of the Viſion, through Mountaines and Woods exceeding full of high Trees.

We departed from this Lodging, and trauelled through a more rough and craggie Countrey, and through farre greater and thicker Woods, being our ſelues on foot, and our Mules before vs, which were not able to trauell. The Camels yelled out as though they had beene poſſeſſed with Deuils. It ſeemed, to vs all, that Matthew had brought vs into this way, eyther to make vs loſe our liues or our goods, for in that place we could doe no other but call vpon God to helpe vs; and the Woods were ſo darke and fearefull, that Spirits would haue beene afraid to paſſe them. We ſaw many ſauage and cruell beaſts at noone-dayes, paſſing this way and that way, without being any whit afraid of vs. For all this we went forward, and began to find people of the Countrey, which kept their fields that were ſowne with Millet, and came farre off to ſow it vpon theſe high and craggie Mountaynes. We ſaw likewiſe many Herds of goodly Oxen, and Goats feeding. The ſaid people which we found there, were all naked, and hid in a manner, no part of their bodies. They were very blacke, and were ſaid to be Chriſtians. They had their Wiues with them, which couered their Priuities with a ragge of cloth halfe torne. Theſe women weare vpon their heads a kind of attyre, made after the faſhion of a Crowne, as blacke as Pitch, and their haire bound vp in round wreathes like Kandles of Tallow: the blackneſſe of theſe attyres, with theſe Lockes of haire faſtned vnto them, ſeemed a very ſtrange thing to behold. The men weare a piece of ſkinne before their Priuities.

Thus trauelling forward through many other Woods which could hardly be paſſed, and wee our ſelues lighting on foot, and vnlading our Camels there met vs tenne or twelue Friers of the Monaſterie of the Viſion, among whom, there was foure or fiue very aged, and one older then the reſt, whom all the reſt did reuerence, and kiſſed his hands; and our ſelues did the like, becauſe Matthew told vs that he was their Biſhop, but afterward we knew that he was no Biſhop; but that he had the Title of Dauid, which ſignifieth a Warden; & that in the Monaſterie there was another aboue him, whom they call Abba, which ſignifieth a Father, beeing like vnto a Prouinciall, and in regard of their age and dryneſſe (for they were as dry as a ſtocke) they ſeemed to be men of a holy life at the firſt blaſt. The foreſaid Friers trauelled through the Woods to gather their Millet which they had ſowed, as alſo to gather vp their Roots, which are payed vnto them by ſuch as ſow Corne in thoſe Mountaines and Woods. Their apparell was made of dreſſed Goat-skinnes, others weare apparell made of old yellow Cotton, and went bare-foot. From hence we departed not till our Camels had reſted a little: afterward, within the ſpace of halfe a mile, we came to the foot of a very rough and cragged Mountaine, vpon the which our Camels could not aſcend, and hardly the Mules without their burthens, and heere wee reſted our ſelues at the foot of a Tree.

S. Michael de Iſeo.

9. The next day the Ambaſſador Matthew commanded his goods to be laden vpon the backs of Negroes, to carry them into a ſmall Monaſterie, halfe a league diſtant from vs, called Saint Michael de Iſeo. Here Framaſqual departed from vs, and wee came vnto the Monaſterie halfe dead, as well for the roughneſſe and ſteepneſſe of the way, as alſo becauſe of the great heat.

Their Winter from Iune to September. They fall ſicke.

While we aboad there, the ſaid Matthew came vnto vs with a counter-mand, and ſaid vnto vs, that he had written vnto the Court of Prete Ianni, and to Queene Helena, and to Marke the Patriarke, and that the anſwere could not bee returned in leſſe then fortie dayes, and that without the ſame we could not depart, becauſe from that place they were to furniſh vs, and to haue Mules for vs, and for our goods; neither was he well aſſured of the performance of this, but ſaid that Winter began to approach, which laſted about the ſpace of three monethes, wherein we could not trauell, and that therefore it was needfull, that wee ſhould prouide victuals for our ſelues: for three monethes in the Winter they trauell not in theſe Countries, to wit, from the midſt of Iune to the midſt of September, which is their ordinarie Winter. Within a ſhort ſpace after our arriuall here, our people as well Portugals as ſlaues fell ſo ſick, that few or none eſcaped vntouched, and many were ſicke to the point of death, inſomuch that they ſtood in need often to be let bloud and to be purged. Among the firſt, Maſter Iohn our Phyſician fell ſicke, which was all our humane helpe, yet it pleaſed God that he recouered, and from that time forward he laboured for vs with all his power.

Matthew dieth. The death of Matthew, the Abaſsine Ambaſſadour.

Among theſe, Matthew the Ambaſſadour fell ſicke alſo, which had many Medicines miniſtred vnto him, and when he ſeemed to be very well recouered and ſtrong, he roſe vp and commanded his goods to be carryed to a Towne belonging to the Monaſterie of the Viſion, where he yeelded vp his ſpirit vnto our Lord, which was the foure and twentieth of May, Anno Dom. 1520. and I confeſſed him, and miniſtred the Communion vnto him, and he made his will in the Portugall Tongue, but it was alſo made in the Abaſſin Tongue, by a Frier of the ſaid Monaſtery. We cauſed the corps to bee buried very honorably in the ſaid Monaſtery, where wee ſaid Seruice and Maſſe for him according to our cuſtome, and the Friers did the like according to theirs.

Abaſsines vntruſtie, and therefore miſtruſtfull.

10. Wee determined, to ſend to requeſt Barnagaſſo, that hee would giue vs ſome meanes to returne into our Countrey, to the end wee might not periſh in that place. The Friers vnderſtanding this, tooke it in very ill part, and calling Don Roderigo aſide, perſwaded him not to ſend thither, praying him to attend the comming of the Prouinciall, which would bee within ten dayes, and if he come not, they would furniſh vs with neceſſaries for our iournies. And becauſe they are people of ſmall truſt themſelues, they gaue no credit vnto vs, although the Ambaſſadour had promiſed them to doe ſo, but ſought to miniſter an Oath vnto each of vs vpon a Crucifixe, that we would ſtay during thoſe tenne dayes, and they likewiſe tooke an Oath to performe that which they had promiſed.

§. II.

Of the manner and ſituation of the Monaſteries, and of their holy Rites, Times, Places, and Things: And firſt of this of Saint MICHAEL.

11. FIrſt, this Monaſterie is ſituate vpon the cragge of a Mountaine, which is very wild, ſeated at the foot of another huge Mountaine, vpon the which no man can aſcend. The ſtone of theſe Rockes is of the colour and graine of the ſtone, wherewith the wall of the Cities of Portugall are built, and the ſtones are verie great. All the ground except theſe ſtones is couered with many great Woods, and the greateſt part are wild Oliue Trees, and great ſtore of Herbs grow among them, and the moſt part is Baſill. The Trees which were not Oliues, were not knowne of vs, and all of them were without fruit. In certaine narrow Vallies, which belong to this Monaſterie, were Groues of Orange-trees, Limons, Cedars, Vines, and Figs of all ſorts, as well of thoſe which are found in Portugall, as thoſe of India, and Peaches: there were alſo Cabbages, Corianders, Creſſis, Wormewood, Mirtles, and many other kindes of Herbes fragrant and medicinall: and all was ill husbanded, becauſe they are people of no induſtrie; and the Earth bringeth forth the things aforeſaid, as it bringeth forth wild things, and would bring forth much better, all they ſhould plant or ſow. The Houſe of the Monaſterie ſeemeth, indeed, to bee a Church-building beeing made like vnto ours: it hath about it a circuit like to a Cloyſter, and the couering aboue is faſtned to the couering of the Church. It hath three gates, as ours haue, to wit, one chiefe gate in the fore-front, and one on each ſide in the midſt. The couering of the Church, and of the circuit is made of wild Reed, which laſteth the life of a man.

Orchards. The Abaſsins not induſtrious. The building of the Monaſterie.

The body of the Church is made with Iles, very well wrought, and the Arches are very well ſtored, it ſeemeth all to be made like a Vault: It hath a little Quire behind the great Altar, with a Croſſe afore it, whereupon hang Curtaines which goe from one ſide to another; and likewiſe, there are other Curtaines before the Gates, paſſing from one Wall to another, and they are of Silke, and the entrie by theſe Curtaines is at three places, and are faſtned againſt the Walls: and at theſe three entrances or gates, are little Bels faſtned to the Curtaines, about the bigneſſe of Saint Anthonies Bels; and a man cannot enter in at the gates, but theſe Bels will ring. There is but one Altar belonging to the whole Church, which ſtandeth in the great Chappell. Aboue the Altar is a Cloath of Gold borne vp with foure pillars, and the Altar toucheth all theſe foure Pillars, and the ſaid Cloath of Gold is hollow like a Vault, it hath his Super-Altare, or conſecrated ſtone, which they call Tabuto, and vpon this ſtone ſtandeth a very great Baſon of Copper, and it is flat in the bottome, and is low brimmed, which reacheth vnto all the foure Pillars of the Altar, becauſe the Pillars are ſet in a ſquare, and in the ſaid Baſon is ſet another leſſer Baſon, and on euery ſide of this cloth of Gold, that is to ſay, behind and on both ſides a Curtaine hangeth downe which coure th the whole Altar downe to the ground, ſauing that it is open before.

Little Bels.

Bels of ſtone.

Their Bels are of ſtone, that is to ſay, long and thin ſtones, hanged vp with Cords, and they beat them on the inſide with a piece of wood, and they make a very ſtrange ſound, like to the ſound of broken Bels when they are heard afarre off. And likewiſe on Feſtiuall dayes, they take Baſons, and ſtrike them with certaine ſmall ſtickes, which make them ſound very loud. They haue likewiſe Bels of Iron, which are not fully round, but haue two ſides like vnto the Iacket of a Muletier, whereof the one part coureth him before, and the other behind; they haue a clapper which beateth the ſame firſt on the one ſide, and then on the other, and it maketh a ſound like vnto a man that diggeth Vines. They haue alſo other Bels ill-fauouredly made, which they carrie in their hands when they go on Proceſſion, and ring them altogether vpon Feſtiuall dayes, on other dayes they vſe their Bels of ſtone, and of Iron; they ring to Mattens two houres before day, and they ſay them by heart without light: onely there hangs a Lampe before the Altar, wherein they burne Butter, for they haue no Oyle.

They ſing and ſay with a loud and harſh voice, as of one that cryeth, without any art of ſinging: they ſay no Verſes, but their ſpeech is as it were in Proſe, and yet they are Pſalmes, and on their Holidayes, beſides their Pſalmes, they ſay Proſe, and according to the Feaſts ſo is their Proſe, and alwayes they ſtand on their feet in the Church. They ſay not aboue one Leſſon at their Mattens, with a harſh, diſordered and vntuneable voice, and like vnto that wherein wee pronounce the words of the Iewes, in repreſenting the Paſſion of our Sauiour Chriſt. And although their voice be ſo harſh, yet they ſpeake it running, as faſt as the tongue of a man can wagge, and a Clerke or a Frier ſaith the ſame; and this Leſſon is read before the principall gate.

They ſtand alway in the Church.

Vndeuout deuotions.

Which being ended on Saturday and Sundayes, they goe on Proceſſion with foure or fiue croſſes, being carryed vpon certaine ſtaues not very high; and they carrie the ſame in their left hands, becauſe in their right hand they carrie a Cenſer, and alwayes there are ſo many Cenſers as there be Croſſes. They weare certaine Copes of Silke, but rudely made, for they be no broader then the breadth of a piece of Damaske, or of any other piece of Silke from the vpper part to the neather part; and on the breaſt before, they haue a trauerſe; and on both ſides they ſewe a piece of other Cloth of what colour ſoeuer, although it agree not with the principall; and of the principall Cloth they let a traine hang downe vpon the ground. They make this Proceſſion in their Circuit, which is like vnto a Cloiſter. Which being ended on Saturdayes, and Sundayes, and Feſtiuall dayes, he which is to ſay Maſſe, with two others, enter into the Chappell, and take out an Image of our Ladie, which they haue in an old Cell (for in all Churches they haue of their * Cells) and they put it on a Crozier, turning the face toward the principall gate, and this Image holdeth her hand before her breaſt, and they which ſtand on both ſides of it hold lighted Candles in their hands, and then they which are before it beginne to ſing in manner of proſe, and they goe all crying and dancing as if they were in a Towne-dance. And going before this Image with this their ſong or proſe, they ring their little Bells and Cymbals with the like ſound, and as often as any chanceth to paſſe before this Image they doe great reuerence to it, which ſeemeth to the beholder to be done with great deſire of deuotion: and ſo they carrie in this Feaſt Croſſes and Cenſers, as they did in their Proceſſion.

When this is ended, which continueth for a long ſpace, they ſalute the Image, and then they goe vnto a certaine cloſet, which ſtandeth toward the North; and that part where the Goſpell is ſaid, according to our Maſſe, is without the circuit, wherein they make the Hoſt, which they call Corbon, and they carrie Croſſes, Cenſers, and Bells with them, and from hence they bring a Cake of Wheat-flowre vnleauened, newly made, very white and very faire, of the bigneſſe and roundneſſe of a great Paten, becauſe there are but a few people in this Monaſterie: but in other Monaſteries and Churches (whereof there be many) they make this Cake great or ſmall according to the number of the people, for all doe communicate, and according to the breadth ſo they make the thickneſſe, either halfe a finger, or a whole finger, or a thumbe thicke: and they carrie this Cake in the little Baſon which is one of them that belong to the Altar couered with a cloth, with a Croſſe and Cenſer, and a Bell ringing afore them. Behind the Church where that Quire is, which they hold as a Cloiſter, no man may ſtand which is not in holy Orders *, but all of them muſt ſtand before the principall gate, where there is another great circuit which all Churches haue, but it is not couered, and there may ſtand any man that liſt.

When they goe in Proceſſion with this Cake, all they which ſtand in the Church and in the circuit, when they heare the little Bell, bow downe their heads vntill the Bell ceaſe, which is, when they ſet it vpon the Altar in the leſſer Baſon which is ſet (as I ſaid before) in the greater Baſon, and they couer it with a blacke Cloth like vnto a Corporall. This Monaſterie hath a Chalice of Siluer, and likewiſe in all principall Churches and Monaſteries they haue Chalices of Siluer, and in ſome they haue Chalices of Gold. In the Churches of the poorer people (which they call the Churches of the Balgues, that is to ſay, of the Husbandmen) they haue brazen Chalices. Theſe veſſels are more wide then ours are, but euill made; but they haue no couers. They powre into the Chalice, wine made of Raiſins in great quantitie; for, as many as receiue the Bodie, receiue alſo the Bloud.

Hee that is to ſay this Maſſe, beginneth, ſaying, Halleluia, with a lowd voyce, rather ſqueaking then ſinging, and all the companie anſwere him; and then he holdeth his peace, and beginneth to bleſſe them with a little Croſſe which he carrieth in his hand; and as well they that are about, as thoſe which are within beginne to ſing, vntill a certaine time, when as one of them two that ſtand at the Altar take a Booke, and receiueth bleſſing of him that ſayeth Maſſe, and the other taketh a Croſſe, and a Bell, and goeth ringing the ſame toward the principall gate, where all the people ſtandeth in that circuit; and there he readeth the Epiſtle running very faſt with his tongue, and afterwards ſinging returneth backe to the Altar: ſuddenly he which ſingeth the Maſſe taketh a Booke from the Altar, kiſſing the ſame, and giueth it to him which is to ſay the Goſpell, which boweth downe his head, and asketh him bleſſing; which when hee hath receiued, as many as ſtand at the Altar doe kiſſe the ſame, a candle is borne with this Booke, and he which reads the Goſpell, readeth it as the Epiſtle was read, very haſtily, and with as high a ſound as his tongue can vtter, and his voyce can beare: and returning to the Altar, on the way he beginneth likewiſe another ſong, and thoſe which goe with him follow him: and when they be come to the Altar, they giue the Booke to kiſſe to him that ſayeth Maſſe, and ſo they put it in his place.

And ſuddenly, he which ſayeth Maſſe, taketh a Cenſer, and cenſeth the vpper part of the Altar, and they goe often about it and cenſe the ſame. When they haue done theſe cenſings, he turneth to the Altar, and bleſſeth it very often with the Croſſe, and then hee vncouereth the Cake which he had couered in ſtead of the Sacrament, and taketh it vp in both his hands, and lifting vp his right hand the Cake remayneth in his left hand, and with his thumbe he maketh fiue ſignes like prickes, that is to ſay, one in the top, another in the midſt, another in the bottome, and the other two on both ſides; and therewithall he conſecrateth it in his owne Language, with the very words that we vſe, and he vſeth no eleuation. The very ſame he doth ouer the Cup, and lifteth it not vp, he ſayth ouer the ſame, the very words that wee vſe in his owne Tongue, and he couereth it, and taketh the Sacrament of the Bread in his hands, and breaketh it in twaine, and of the part that is in his left hand, hee breaketh a little Morſell of the top of the ſame, and the other two pieces hee layeth the one vpon the other. The Prieſt taketh this little Morſell for himſelfe, and likewiſe taketh part of the Sacrament of the bloud, and afterward he taketh the Baſon with the couered Sacrament, and giueth it to him which hath ſaid the Goſpell, and likewiſe he taketh the Chalice with the Sacrament, and giueth it to him which read the Epiſtle: and ſuddenly they giue the Communion to the Prieſts which ſtand at the Altar, receiuing a ſmall piece of Sacrament out of the Baſon, which a Deacon holdeth in his right hand; and while the Deacon giueth the ſame, a Sub-Deacon taketh of the bloud in a ſpoone of Gold, of Siluer, or of Copper, according to the abiltie of the Church, and giueth it vnto him which receiueth the Sacrament of the body in very ſmall quantitie: and on the other ſide, ſtandeth another Prieſt with a little Veſſell of holy Water, and powreth into the palme of his hand, which receiued the Communion, a litle of that water, wherewith he waſheth his mouth, and afterward ſwalloweth it vp.

This being done, they all goe to the Altar with this Sacrament, before the firſt Curtaine, and in this ſort they giue the Communion to them which ſtand there, and afterward to all thoſe of the other Curtaine, and laſtly, to the Secular people which ſtand at the principall gate, as well men as women, if the Church be ſuch that women may bee ſuffered to come thither: at the giuing of the Communion, and at all other diuine Seruices all ſtand vpon their feet: and when they goe to receiue the Communion, all of them come with their hands lifted vp before their ſhoulders, with the palmes of their hands ſpread abroad before them: and when any man receiueth the Sacrament of the bloud, he receiueth of that Holy Water, as I ſaid before. And alſo generally al ſuch as are to receiue the Communion before the Maſſe, vſe to waſh their hands with water, which is placed in all Churches and Monaſteries for this purpoſe. The Prieſt which ſaith the Maſſe, and they which ſtood with him at the Altar (the Communion being ended) returne vnto the Altar, and waſh the Baſon wherein the Sacrament was put with the water remayning in the Veſſell, which they ſay is Holy Water: this Water is put into the Chalice, and he which ſaid Maſſe drinketh it vp all. This done, one of the Miniſters of the Altar taketh a Croſſe and a ſacring Bell, and beginning a little Song, goeth to the principall gate where the Epiſtle and Goſpell were read, and where they ceaſed to giue the Communion, and all they which are in the Church, and without the Church, incline their heads and take their leaues, ſaying, That this is the bleſſing, and that without this no man may depart. On Saturdaies and Sundaies, and Feaſtiuall daies, in all Churches and Monaſteries, they vſe to giue holy Bread. The forme of Ceremonies which this little Monaſterie vſeth (which hath not aboue twentie or fiue and twentie Friers) is obſerued in all other Monaſteries and Churches. The ſeruice of the Maſſe, (except the Proceſſions) is very ſhort, becauſe the Maſſe in the weeke daies, is ended almoſt as ſoone as it is begun.

12. The manner how they make the Cake aforeſaid, is this: The houſe where they make it in all Churches & Monaſteries, is placed (as is ſaid before) toward that part where the Goſpel is ſaid without the Church, and the couered circuit, which is as a Cloyſter in all Churches and Monaſteries: and they vſe the other circuit which is without and not couered, as a Church-yard. This houſe is as bigge as the Quire behind the great Altar, and ſomewhat bigger, and in all Churches and Monaſteries they haue nothing elſe in that houſe, but that which ſerueth for this buſineſſe; to wit, a Staffe to beate the corne out of the eares, and an Inſtrument to grinde the Meale, becauſe they make it very white, as is conuenient for ſuch a purpoſe: becauſe they make not the ſaid Sacrament with Meale or Wheate, wherein Women haue put their hands. They haue Earthen Platters, wherein they knead the Meale, and they make the Dow harder then we make it, they make a little Ouen like a Still to Still Water, and vpon the ſame a plate of Iron, (and ſome Churches haue it of Braſſe, and ſome others of Bricke) which is round, with a large compaſſe, and they put the fire vnderneath it, and when it is hot, they make it cleane with a courſe cloath, and then lay a good piece of this Dow vpon it, and ſpread it abroad with a Woodden Knife, as broad as they will haue it, and make it very round, and when the Cake is baked they take it away, lay it aſide, and make another after the ſame faſhion; and this ſecond Cake after it is likewiſe ready, they take the former, and lay it thereupon, to wit, that ſide which was vppermoſt they turne downe-ward, and ſo both theſe two Cakes are laid together, as they were one Cake, and they doe nothing all the while but turne and toſſe them vpon this Plate, vntill they bee baked beneath and aboue, and on euery ſide, and ſo they make as many as they will. In the ſame houſe are alſo the Raiſins where-with they make their Wine, and the Inſtrument where-with they preſſe the ſame. In theſe houſes alſo is the Holy Bread made, which is diſtributed on the Saturdaies and Sundaies, and other Feaſtiuall dayes, and when their great Feaſts are held, as Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and our Lady of Auguſt, they fetch out this Sacrament of Bread with a Veſtment, *Bels and Croſſes, very deuoutly, and before they enter into the church therwith, they go once about the circuit, which is like vnto a Cloyſter, but when it is not Holy day they go ſtrait into the Church. The Saturday before Aſcenſion day when we vſe to ſay our Letanies, theſe Friers made a Proceſſion, and becauſe we were ſtrangers in the Countrey, it ſeemed a goodly ſight vnto vs, and it was on this wiſe: they tooke Croſſes and a conſecrated ſtone of the Altar with great reuerence, couered with cloth of Silk, & a Frier which carryed it on his head, was likewiſe wholly couered with the like cloth of Silke: they carryed alſo Bookes, Bels, Cenſers, and holy water, and went into certaine fields ſowed with Millet, and there they made their Deuotions, with cryes after the manner of Letanies, and with this Proceſſion they returned vnto the Monaſterie. And when we asked them wherefore they did this, they ſaid, becauſe the Wormes doe eate their Corne, therefore they went to ſprinkle them with Holy Water, and pray to God to take them away. He which ſaith Maſſe, hath no other difference in his apparell from a Deacon and Sub-deacon, ſauing a long Stole ſlit in the midſt, ſo that hee may thruſt his head through it, and behind and before it reacheth downe to the ground. The Friers which ſay Maſſe weare their haires long, and the Prieſts weare it not, but are ſhorne, and ſo they ſay Maſſe, and are alwayes bare-footed, and no man may come ſhod into the Church, and for this purpoſe they alleage that which God ſaid vnto Moſes, Put off thy ſhooes, for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy ground.

But one Maſſe a day.

Many Prieſts neceſſary to our Maſſe.

Shooes and ſpitting in Churches miſliked.

In Faſts, no eating till Sunne be downe.

13. In this Monaſterie of Saint Michael, where we were, we ſaid Maſſe euery day, not in the Monaſterie, but in the circuit which is like a Cloyſter: becauſe in this Countrey they ſay but one Maſſe a day in euery Church or Monaſterie. The Friers came vnto our Maſſe with great deuotiou, as they ſeemed, and ſupplyed our want with Cenſers and Incenſe, becauſe wee had brought none with vs: and they thinke it an ill thing to ſay Maſſe without Incenſe, and they ſaid that all things ſeemed well vnto them, ſauing that they thought it not commendable for one Prieſt alone to ſay Maſſe, becauſe among them they vſe not to ſay Maſſe, except they bee three, or fiue, or ſixe, and all theſe ſtand at the Altar. Alſo, they miſliked that we went with our ſhooes into the Church, and much more when we did ſpit in the Church. But wee excuſed our ſelues, ſaying; That this was the faſhion in our Countrey. And ſo wee ſaid Maſſe euery day vntill Trinitie Sunday, and when the Munday after the ſaid Trinitie Sunday came, then they would ſuffer vs to ſay no more Maſſe in the morning, and we marueiling thereat, and not well pleaſed, and hauing at that inſtant no Interpreter to learne wherefore they would not ſuffer vs to ſay Maſſe, at length we vnderſtood, that which by experience afterward we ſaw, to wit; that they obſerue the Old Teſtament in their faſting; for they faſt very ſtraitly in the Lent, which they begin the Munday after the Sunday of Sexageſima, which are ten dayes before our Shrouetide, and ſo they make their Lent of fiftie dayes, and ſay that they take thoſe dayes before, for the Saturdayes on which they doe not faſt: and their Faſt is to eate at euen-tide, and euery day they receiue the Communion, and therefore they ſay not Maſſe but in the euening, and when Maſſe is done, they receiue the Communion and then goe to ſupper. And like as they haue theſe fiftie dayes of faſt, ſo they take as many dayes after Eaſter and Whitſontide, wherein they faſt not at all; and when it is not faſting day, they ſay Maſſe in the morning, and all thoſe dayes they eate fleſh without obſeruing any one of them, and ſay Maſſe in the mornings, and ſtrait way goe to dinner becauſe they faſt not.

A Faſt from Trinitie Sunday till Chriſtmaſſe.

Lay Faſt till Aduent.

Faſt of Niniue.

When this time is ended, and Trinitie Sunday paſt, all the Clerkes and Friers are bound to faſt euery day ſauing Saturdayes, Sundayes, and this Faſt continueth vntill Chriſtmaſſe day. And becauſe they faſt all, they ſay Maſſe at night, alleaging for proofe hereof the Supper of Chriſt, how that it was faſting time, and almoſt night when he conſecrated his Bodie. But commonly, the Lay-people as well men as women are bound to faſt weekly on Wedneſdayes and Fridayes, from Trinitie Sunday vntill Aduent: and from Chriſtmaſſe day till the Purification of the Virgin Marie (which they call the Feaſt of Saint Simeon) they faſt not at all. The three dayes after the Purification being not Saturday nor Sunday, are an exceeding ſtrait Faſt for the Clerkes, Friers, and Lay-people, for they ſay that they eate but once in all theſe three dayes, and they call it the Faſt of Niniue. Theſe three dayes being ended, vntill the beginning of Lent, they faſt againe as they did before, vntill the Feaſt of the holy Trinitie. In the Aduent and all the Lent the Clearkes, the Friers, the Laitie, the men and women, ſmall and great, ſound and ſicke doe all faſt. And likewiſe, from Eaſter vnto Trinitie Sunday, and from Chriſtmaſſe vnto the Purification, the Maſſe is ſaid in the morning becauſe there is no Faſt, all the reſt of the yeare it is ſaid in the euening becauſe they faſt.

The ſituation and forme of the Monaſterie intituled, The Viſion of Ieſus.

Dreadfull Valley.

Forme of the Church.

The Monaſterie where we buried Matthew, is diſtant from this wherein we aboad three miles ſpace of very bad way, & it is called, The Monaſtery of the Viſion of Ieſus. It is ſeated vpon the point of a Rocke exceeding high, and from euery part as a man looketh downward, there is a Valley which ſeemeth to be as deepe as Hell. The Church of the Monaſterie is very great of bodie, & greater in reuenues, and is very well diſpoſed and gouerned. It is built with three great allies or walkes, which are very finely made with their Arches and their Vaults, which ſeeme to bee made of wood, becauſe they are all painted ouer, ſo that a man cannot perceiue whether the Church be built of ſtone, or of wood. It hath two walking places in forme of a Cloyſter about the bodie of the Church, which are both couered and painted with the Pictures of the Apoſtles, and Patriarkes, and with the ſtorie of all the Old Teſtament, and with Saint George on Horſe-backe, which is to be ſeene in all their Churches. And likewiſe, there is in the ſame a great piece of Arras, wherein is wouen a Crucifixe, our Ladie, the Apoſtles, the Patriarkes, and Prophets, and euery one hath his title or name in Latine, which ſheweth that the ſame worke was not made in thoſe Countries. There are alſo many ancient Images, which ſtand not vpon the Altars, becauſe it is not their faſhion, but they keepe them in a Veſtry lapped vp with many Bookes, and they bring them not forth but on Holy-dayes.

Saint George on horſe-backe in all their Churches.

Images in a Veſtry.

In this Monaſterie there is a great Kitchin, with all things thereto appertayning, with a great roome to dine in, where they ſate altogether, and they eat three and three in a Treen diſh which is not very deepe, but plaine like vnto a wooden Platter. Their Dyet is very homely, their Bread is made of Millet and of Barley, and of another Seed which they call Taſo, which is ſmall and blacke. This Bread they make round, about the bigneſſe of an Apple of Adam, and they giue three of theſe to each one, and vnto the Nouices they giue three of them betweene two, and I wonder greatly to thinke how they can liue with ſo little a quantitie. Likewiſe, they giue each of them a little freſh fiſh without Oyle or Salt. Of the ſelfe-ſame Dyet, they ſend ſo many aged and honorable Friers, towards whom they vſe great reuerence, which come not vnto the dining hall. And if any man aske me how I know this, I anſwere, that beſides that which I ſaw when we buried Matthew, the greateſt part of the ſixe yeares which wee aboad in Æthiopia, our Lodging was not farre from the ſaid Monaſtery, ſo that I departed oftentimes from our houſe vpon my Mule, and came in the euening to the Monaſterie, and for the moſt part I went to paſſe the time with the Friers, and principally at their Feſtiuall times, and I learned many things of them concerning their Affaires, Reuenues, Vſages, and Cuſtomes. An hundred Friers are commonly in this Monaſterie, and the moſt part of them are very aged, and as dry as a ſtocke, few of them are young. There are alſo many little children, of eight yeares old and vpward, which they bring vp, and many of them are lame and blind. This Monaſterie is walled round about, and hath no entrie but by two gates which are alwayes ſhut.

Hard Dyet.

Nouices.

They aboad ſix yeares in Æthiopia.

14. This Monaſterie is the head of ſixe Monaſteries, which ſtand about the ſame among theſe Mountaines, and that which is fartheſt, is not paſt nine and twentie or thirtie miles off, and all of them are ſubiect and yeeld obedience vnto this Monaſterie. In euery one of them there is a Dauid, that is to ſay, a Warden placed by the Abbot or Prouinciall, and that Monaſterie which hath a Dauid, that is to ſay, a Warden is ſubiect to the Abbot, which is as Prouinciall. I alwayes heard reported, that there were about three thouſand Friers in this Monaſterie, and becauſe I doubted much thereof, I came once to their Feaſt of our Ladie in Auguſt, to ſee how many were aſſembled there together: and ſurely, I tooke pleaſure when I beheld the riches of this place, in a certaine Proceſſion which they made, and in my iudgement, the Friers were not aboue three hundred, and the greateſt part of them were old men. I ſaw a great circuit, which this Monaſterie hath about two places, which are like to Cloyſters, which circuit is open; but at that time it was all couered ouer with great and ſmall Clothes of Gold, Veluets of Mecca, all long pieces ſewed one vnto another, to hang round about that circuit, through which they made a goodly Proceſſion, all clad in Copes of the ſaid Cloth of Gold, but made ill-fauouredly, as I haue ſaid before. They carried fiftie Croſſes of Siluer, ſmall and badly made, and as many Brazen Cenſers; when they ſaid Maſſe I ſaw a great Chalice of Gold, and a Spoone of Gold, wherewith they gaue the Communion. And of the three hundred which were aſſembled in this Monaſtery, there were very few of mine acquaintance: I enquired of certaine of my friends, wherefore ſeeing ſo many Friers belonged to this Monaſtery, as they ſaid, ſo few were preſent at ſo great a Solemnitie: they anſwered me, that the number was greater then they looked for, becauſe they are diuided in other Monaſteries, Churches, and Faires to earne their liuing as long as they be yong: for they cannot be maintayned in the Monaſtery, but by their owne induſtrie, and when they are ſo old that they cannot trauell, they come to end their dayes at this Monaſtery. This day I ſaw ſeuenteene yong men taken into Orders.

Six other Cels ſubiect to this Monaſtery of the Viſion, as in times paſt S. Albans and other great Abbeyes here had Three thouſand Friers.

Three hundred Friers, moſt old men.

Their riches.

Abaſſines, bad Artificers.

Yong Friers earne their liuing.

In this Monaſtery is the buriall of an Abbot or Prouinciall, called Philip, and his workes of Holineſſe were very great: for they ſay, that there was once a King or Prete Ianni, which ordained that they ſhould not keepe the Saturday holy throughout all his Kingdomes and Dominions. And this Philip repaired immediately vnto him with his Brethren and with many Bookes, and ſhewed him how God had commanded that the Sabbath Day ſhould bee obſerued, and that whoſoeuer obſerued it not ſhould be ſtoned. This man diſputed this queſtion before all the religious men of Æthiopia, and was commended before the King: and therefore they take him to bee a Saint, and they obſerue an Holy-day vnto him euery yeare in the moneth of Iuly, which they call the Faſcar of Philip, which finiſheth the Teſtament or Memorie of Saint Philip. And therefore the Inhabitants of this Countrey and Monaſterie are more infected with this Iewiſh Hereſie, then any other part of the Dominions of Prete Ianni, although all of them bee in part infected: but theſe are more then any others. I haue ſeene them with mine eyes ſeethe fiſh on the Sabbath, and bake bread alſo: and on the Sabbath in this Monaſtery, they make no fire at all. on the Sunday following, they make readie all things needfull for their Dyet, and I came Philip, an Erroneous Saint.

Holy day to him.

Difference of Rites.

Oxen offered to Philips feaſt.

twice to this Faſcar of Philip; at which times they receiued me with great honour. And at this Feaſt yearely, they kill many Oxen, and at one of them I ſaw them kill thirtie, and at another eight and twentie, which were offered by the Inhabitants their Neighbours, for deuotion vnto this Philip, and they giue this fleſh raw to all the people, that come to the Faſcar without any bread at all. The Friers eate no kind of fleſh.

Friers eate no fleſh.
Wine of Honey, or Mead.
No woman, nor beaſt of the female ſexe may come neere this Monaſtery.

They ſent me yearely two great and fat quarters of beefe, with much bread and wine of Honey, which likewiſe the Friers drinke not in the Monaſtery, but when they are abroad with vs Portugals, they drinke wine and eate fleſh if they be but one alone, but if they be two, they doe it not, for feare the one of the other. This Monaſtery and all the reſt which are ſubiect to it, obſerue an order, that no women may enter into it, nor ſhee Mules, nor Kine, nor Hens, nor any other beaſt of the female kind. This I both learned and ſaw my ſelfe; for when I came thither a Croſſe-bow ſhoot diſtant from the Monaſtery, they came to take my Mule, not ſuffering mee to come with her to the Monaſtery, and they ſent her to a houſe of theirs, called Giangargara, where Matthew died. They kill their Kine and Hens, a certaine diſtance from the Monaſterie. I ſaw but one Cocke in the Monaſtery with two bels at his legs, without Hennes, and they ſaid, that they kept him to crow at the time of their Mattens. If any women come into the houſe, they know it, for oftentimes I asked certaine children which were brought vp there, whoſe Sonnes they were, and they named vnto me, the Friers for their Fathers, and ſo I know the yong Friers to be called the Sonnes of all the old Friers.

Of the Husbandry of this Countrey, and how they preſerue themſelues from wild beaſts, and of the Reuenues of the Monaſterie. Their departure, ſtrange Riuers, Mountaines, Apes: BARNAGASSOES entertainment. Barua. Polygamie, Marriages, Diuorces, Baptiſme, and Circumciſion. Their Branding, and Burying.

Neglect of Husbandry.

15. THeſe Friers or thoſe of other Monaſteries, their ſubiects might very well play the good Husbandmen, and might cheriſh vp Trees, Vines, and Orch-yards with their diligence, yet neuertheleſſe, they do nothing at all, and the ſoile is good and fit to bring forth euery thing, as may be gathered by that which is wild and ſauage, but they till nought elſe but fields of Mill, and keepe ſwarmes of Bees, and as ſoone as night is come, they goe not once out of their houſes, becauſe of the wild beaſts which are in that Countrey, and they which keepe their Millet, haue their houſes very high from the ground vpon Trees, where they lodge in the night. There are about this Monaſtery, and in the Vallies of theſe Mountaines, great Heards of Cattell kept by Arabian Moores, which goe fortie or fiftie together with their wiues and children, and the Captaine among them is a Chriſtian, becauſe the Cattell which they keepe, are Chriſtian Gentlemens of the Countrey of Barnagaſſo. The Moores receiue none other wages for their paines, but the Millie and Butter which they get of the Kine, and therewithall they ſuſtaine themſelues, their wiues, and their children. Certaine times it chanced vs to lodge neere theſe Arabians, and they came to know of vs whether wee would buy any Cattell, and offered them vnto vs at a reaſonable price. It is reported, that they are all Theeues fauoured by the Lords which are Owners of the Cattell, and that men trauell not among them but in great Carauans.

Feare of wild beaſts.

Mooriſh Herdmen.

The Reuenues of this Monaſterie very great.

The Reuenues of this Monaſtery of the Viſion are very great, as I ſaw and vnderſtood. Firſt, this Mountaine whereon this Monaſtery is ſeated, containeth thirty miles in compaſſe, whereon they ſow much Millet, Barley, Rye, and Taſi, and of all this they pay a portion vnto the Monaſtery, and alſo for the paſturing of their Cattell. In the Vallies of theſe Mountaines are great Townes, and the moſt part of them belong vnto the Monaſtery, and within one or two dayes iourney, there are very many and ſundry places which belong vnto the Monaſtery, and they are called, The Gultus of the Monaſtery, which ſignifieth, priuiledged places. Don Roderigo the Ambaſſador and I, on a certaine time trauelled towards the Court, departing from this Monaſterie fiue dayes iourney at the leaſt, and came to a certaine peopled place, called Zama, where we reſted all Saturday and Sunday in a ſmall Village, where there were to the number of twentie Houſes. There they told vs that this place belonged vnto the Monaſtery of the Viſion, and that there were one hundred places all belonging to the Monaſtery, and therewithall ſhewed vs many of them, and told vs that theſe one hundred places payed vnto the Monaſtery euery third yeare, one Horſe apiece, which amount to thirtie foure Horſes euery yeare.

Zama.

Rent Horſes.

The Alicaſin, this agreeth to Antiquitie.

And to vnderſtand the ſame the better, I enquired of the Alicaſin, of the Monaſtery, which ſignifieth, The Anditour or Steward of the Houſe, becauſe hee receiueth and disburſeth all things. And hee told mee that it was true that they payed the ſaid Horſes. And I enquired of him why the Monaſterie required ſo many Horſes, conſidering that they vſed not to ride; he ſaid, That they payed not the Horſes, but Kine in their ſtead, that is to ſay, Fiftie Kine for one Horſe; and this tribute of Horſes continued all the time that theſe places were in the Kings hands, which endowed the Monaſtery with theſe iuriſdictions. And afterward the Inhabitants of thoſe Countries compounded with the Monaſterie, and changed the payment of Horſes into ſo many Kine: beſides which, they payed many other tributes of corne. This Monaſtery hath, aboue fifteene daies iourney diſtant within the Kingdome of Tigrimation, a great Territorie, which is ſufficient to make a Dukedome, which is called Adetyeſte, which payeth yearely ſixtie Horſes, and infinite tributes and rents. There goe alwaies vnto this Territorie, aboue one thouſand Friers of this Monaſterie, becauſe therein are many Churches. Of theſe Friers ſome be very good, reuerent, and deuout; and other ſome as bad and euill conditioned. Beſides the tribute of the foreſaid Horſes, which are payed vnto the ſaid Monaſterie, are many other places which appertaine onely to the King, which pay tribute of Horſes according to their ancient cuſtome; and theſe are places which frontier vpon the Countrey of Egypt, from whence come good and ſtately Horſes, and other places of the Arabians, which likewiſe haue good Horſes, but not ſo good as thoſe of Egypt.

Fiftie Kine paid in exchange.

Adetyeſte.

An excellent breed of horſes in Egypt.

From this Monaſterie of Saint Michael, we departed the fifteenth of the moneth of Iune, ſome went on foote, there were alſo but few people to carrie our goods, and the Oxen being not able to trauell through the Woods and Thickets, becauſe all the way was rocky and craggy: the Gunners with their Skourers were left behind, and the Barrels of Gun-powder; and they had not trauailed paſt two miles from the Monaſterie, but that the Embaſſadour and we which were in his company ouer-taking them, found all the goods vnladen, and when we could not learne wherefore they had done ſo, we cauſed them to lade them againe. Hauing paſſed ouer theſe Mountaines, we found certaine dry Riuers, which in Winter time are very great and terrible, that is to ſay, During the time of the ſtormes and Thunder; and as ſoone as the ſtorme and tempeſt is ouer, ſuddenly the Riuers become dry, and on both ſides of the ſaid Riuers are moſt high and ſteepe Mountaines, as ſauage as the reſt which we paſſed. Along theſe Brookes are very mightie Forreſts of Trees, which are very faire and tall, but ſuch as we knew not: among which, vpon the bankes were certaine Palme-trees. Neere one of theſe Riuers we lodged one night, with very great ſhowers of Raine and Thunder.

Riuers in extremity, either very ful or dry.

17. The day following, we went ouer another high Mountaine, exceeding wilde and ſauage, ſo that we could not well trauell ouer the ſame, neither on our Mules nor on foote. In this Mountaine we found many Beaſts of ſundry ſorts, and an infinite number of Apes in ſquadrons, and commonly they are not ſeene in all the Mountaine, ſauing onely where there is ſome great rupture and hole, and ſome Caue; and they went not fewer then two or three hundred together, and where there is any plaine ground aboue thoſe ruptures, they make their abode, and they leaue not any one ſtone vnremooued, and they digge the earth in ſuch ſort, that it ſeemeth to be ploughed. They are very great, and from the middle vpwards, are hairie like Lyons, and are as big as Weathers. After we had paſſed this Mountaine, we lodged in a place at the foote thereof, called Calote. From the Monaſtery whence we departed vnto this place, is about ſixteene or eighteene miles. We paſſed a Riuer of running water, which was very cleare.

Calote.

The next day we ſaid our Maſſe in the Church of the ſaid place, which is called Saint Michael, and the houſe with the furniture thereof, are very poore. In this Church were three married Prieſts, and other three Zagonari, that is to ſay, Prieſts of the Goſpell, and three other muſt be of neceſſitie, for with a leſſer number they cannot ſay Maſſe. This Sunday we departed about the Euening-tide, becauſe the people of the Countrey, which were our guides, would haue it ſo: and from thence we began to trauaile through plaine Countries, ſowed and manured after the manner of Portugall: and the Woods which were betweene theſe manured places, are all of wilde Oliues, exceeding faire without any other Trees. We lodged neere a running Riuer, among many good Villages.

Married Prieſts.

Woods of wilde Oliues.

18. We came vnto the Towne of Barua, which is about nine miles from the Towne of Calote, the eighteenth of the moneth of Iune: this is the chiefe Towne of the Countrey, and Kingdome of Barnagaſſo, where his principall Palaces are; which they call Bete-Negus, that is to ſay, The Houſes of the King. The ſame day that we came thither, Barnagaſſo departed before we came into the Towne vnto another. Heere we were exceedingly well lodged, according to the Countrey, and in great houſes, very well furniſhed in the lower part, and aloft they were flat couered with earth.

Barua.

The third day after our arriuall there, the Embaſſadour purpoſed to viſite Barnagaſſo, who tooke fiue of vs with him in his company, all riding vpon Mules, and wee came to the place where he was about Euening; and from the place whence we departed vnto the Towne where Bernagaſſo remained, was eleuen miles, or thereabout. Being come thither, we lighted before his Palace, neere vnto the Church doore, whereinto we entred and ſaid our Prayers, according to our manner; which ended, we tooke our way toward his Palace, ſuppoſing all of vs that we ſhould ſuddenly be admitted to his ſpeach: but they would not ſuffer vs to enter in, ſaying, That he was a ſleepe, where ſtaying a while to ſpeake with him, they tooke no order for vs, but lodged vs in a Goats-coate, wherein hardly we could all ſtand: for our lodging, in ſtead of beds, they ſent vs two Oxe hides with the haire on them; and for our Supper, they ſent vs Bread and Wine of the Countrey in abundance, and one Sheepe.

Barnagaſſo viſited. His brutiſh entertainment.

The Ambaſſadour had audience of Barnagaſſo.

No houſes with ſtories.

The day following, wee ſtayed a great while, looking when they would ſend for vs to haue audience. At length, we were ſent for, and entring into the firſt Gate, wee found three men like vnto Porters, hauing each of them a ſtaffe in their hands, and when we would haue entred they would not ſuffer vs, ſaying, that we ſhould giue them ſome Pepper, where they kept vs out for a long while. At length, being entred in at the firſt Gate, wee came to the ſecond, where we found three other Porters, which ſeemed to be men of more account, who made vs to ſtand wayting there aboue halfe an houre vpon a little ſtraw, and the Sunne ſo ſcorched vs, that we were almoſt ſmothered with heate; and we ſhould haue ſtayed there much longer, had not the Ambaſſadour ſent him word in choler, either to admit him into his preſence, or that he would returne againe vnto his lodging. Then one more honourable then the reſt, came and told vs, that we might come in. The ſaid Barnagaſſo was in a great houſe in a lower roome, becauſe in thoſe Countries they build no houſes with ſtories; and hee lay vpon a couch, as his manner was, compaſſed with certaine Curtaines which were very homely: hee had ſore eyes, and his wife ſate at his head. Here, after due ſalutations, the Ambaſſador offered him his phyſician to cure him: to whom he anſwered, That he needed no Phyſician, and that he made no reckoning of him. Then the Ambaſſador beſought him of his courteſie, to furniſh him with meanes for the performance of our voyage; Barnagaſſo replyed, That he could not giue him Mules, and that we muſt buy them our ſelues, but that hee would furniſh vs with all other things, and would ſend a ſon of his with vs, which ſhould accompany vs to the court of Prete Ianni, and ſo he diſmiſſed vs.

19. Being come forth out of the houſe where Barnagaſſo remayned, they cauſed vs to ſit downe vpon certaine Mats ſpread vpon the ground, whither they brought vs a treene diſh full of Barly meale halfe kneaded into dowe, with an horne of Wine made of honey: and becauſe wee were not vſed to eate nor to ſee ſuch kind of meats, wee would not eate thereof, but after that we were vſed thereunto, we ate thereof willingly: and ſo at that time wee roſe without eating of ought at all, and returned to our lodging, and ſtraight-way got to horſe-backe two houres before noone; and being about two miles on our way, a man came running after vs, which prayed vs to ſtay for him, becauſe the Mother of Barnagaſſo had ſent vs meat, and that ſhe would take it in ill part, if we accepted not thereof, and ſo we ſtayed for him, and they brought vs fiue wheaten Loaues very great and good, and one horne of good Wine, which was made of honey. Let no man maruell, in hearing mention of a horne of wine, becauſe the great Lords and Prete Ianni himſelfe, make their Veſſels to drinke wine in, of hornes of Oxen: and ſome hornes there are that contayne fiue and ſixe meaſures. Moreouer, ſhee ſent vs a quantitie of the ſaid meale in dowe; ſaying, that in that Countrey they take it for a good food. This food is made of parched Barly ground into meale, and they knead it with a little water, and ſo they eate it. After we had eaten we followed our iourney to the Towne of Barua, where we had left our goods, and where we were lodged. In this Countrey, and in all the Kingdomes and Dominions of Prete Ianni, they reckon not by Leagues nor Miles: and if you aske them how farre it is to ſuch a place, they will anſwere you, if you ſet forth at Sunne-riſing, You ſhall come thither when the Sunne is there, pointing to the place of the Sunne in the skie: and if you trauell ſoftly, You ſhall come thither when the Kine be ſhut up, which is at night: and if the way be long, you ſhall come thither in one Sambete, that is to ſay, in one weeke. Betweene theſe two Townes is a very goodly Countrey, that is to ſay, very well manured, and Fields of Wheat, of Millet, of Barly, of Chich-peaſon, of Lentils, and of many other kinds of graines, which are in that countrey vnknowne to vs, to wit, Tafo di guza, and Millet-Zaburre, and this Tafo di guza, is a ſeed very good and delicate among them, and greatly eſteemed, becauſe the Wormes eateth not the ſame, which is wont to deuoure their corne and other Pulſe, and it is of long continuance. On both ſides of the way, a man may ſee aboue fiftie great Villages which are very well inhabited, and all of them ſeated in goodly greene fields. Vpon the ſaid manured grounds, Herds of wild Kine range vp and downe, fortie, fiftie, and ſixtie in a companie, and we Portugals hunted them with great delight, and ſlue very many of them: for they of the Countrey will take no paines, although they receiue great damage by them in their Corne, but they know not how to kill them.

Barua.

Common women.

20. In this Towne of Barua, where we were, and where afterward we aboad a long time, are three hundred houſes, and the greateſt part of the Inhabitants are Women; for in this Towne is kept, as it were, a Court, for many reſpects. One is, becauſe it is neuer without people belonging to the Court of Prete Ianni; and thoſe which come thither, hauing no Women with them, vſe the Women of the Towne as their Concubines. Another is, becauſe here the Court of Barnagaſſo is kept, where for the greateſt part of the yeere hee maketh his reſidence, and continually hath in his ſtable aboue three hundred Horſes, and as many more, which daily come thither, to diſpatch their buſineſſe with Barnagaſſo, in regard of their affaires and ſuites. And few or none of them will bee without their Concubines; and hence it is that heere many light young Women ſettle their abode, which after they be growne old, betake themſelues to another kind of life: For in this Towne there is a great Market euery Tueſday, where there is three or foure hundred perſons met together, and all the old Women and young Laſſes carrie Meaſures in their hands, wherewith they meaſure in the Market all the Corne and Salt that is ſold, and in this ſort they earne their liuing. And moreouer, they lodge thoſe that remaine in the Towne, and keep the goods which are left vnſold vntill the next Market day, and all things elſe in like ſort. And becauſe there are many women in this town, thoſe which be rich and haue the meanes, take two or three Wiues, neither is it forbidden them by the King nor the Iuſtice, but onely by the Church; becauſe all ſuch as haue aboue one Wife may not come within the Church, much leſſe communicate or receiue any Sacraments of the Church, and are held for excommunicate perſons.

Tueſday Market.

Polygamie vſed, and how puniſhed.

During the time we abode in this place, a Couſin of mine and my ſelfe lodged in the houſe of a man, whoſe name was Ababitay, which had three Wiues, which were all of our acquaintance, and our good friends; and he told me that hee had ſeuen and thirtie children by them, and that no man had forbid him their company, ſauing that the Church admitted him not to the Communion. Before our departure he had diſmiſſed two of them, and held himſelfe to one onely; namely, to her which he had laſt married, and for all this he was reſtored to all the Sacraments, and licenſed to come to Church, as though he had neuer had but one Wife. And therefore there are many Women in this Towne, becauſe Rich men and Courtiers take two or three, or more of them, according to their pleaſure. Their marriages are very vnſtable, for they will be diuorced for a ſmall trifle.

Ababitay, our Authors Hoſte had three Wiues, and by them ſeuen and thirty children.

Marriages vnſtable.

I haue ſeene many of their Women married, and my ſelfe was preſent at a certaine marriage, made without the Church, which was celebrated on this manner. In a Court before a houſe, was placed a Litter or Couch, and they cauſed the Bridegroome and the Bride to ſit downe thereon, and there came three Prieſts, which beganne to ſing with a loud voyce, Haleluia, and thus ſinging as it were, certaine verſes, they went thriſe about the ſaid Couch or Litter: afterward they cut off a locke of haire from the Bridegroomes crowne, and as much from the ſame place of the Brides head, bathing the ſaid haires in Wine made of Honey, and the Bridegroomes haires they laid vpon the head of the Bride, and the Brides haires they laid vpon the head of the Bridgtoome, in the ſame places where they were cut off; and vpon the ſame they caſt holy Water, and afterward they beganne to make a feaſt, after the manner of marriages, and at night the ſaid married perſons were accompanied home vnto their houſe. And for the ſpace of one moneth no man entreth into that houſe, ſauing onely one man which is the Bridegroomes God-father, who remaineth all the moneth with them, and the moneth ended hee departeth home. And if the Bride be a Woman of account, it is fiue or ſixe moneths before ſhe commeth out of her houſe, and ſhe weareth continually a blacke veile before her face; and if ſhe be with child before ſixe moneths, ſhe layeth off her veile, and if ſhe proueth not with child within ſixe moneths ſpace, ſhe layeth it aſide.

Rites of marriage.

21 Moreouer, I haue ſeene Abuna Marco, whom they call their Patriarcke, vſe certaine bleſſings in the Church, that is to ſay; before the principall gate, where they cauſed the Bridegroome and the Bride to ſit downe on a Litter, about which he went with Incenſe and a croſſe, and comming vnto the ſaid couple, he laid his hands vpon their heads, ſaying, That they ſhould obſerue that which God commanded in the Goſpell, and that they ſhould remember that they were no more two, but vnited together in one fleſh, and that they ought ſo to bee in heart and mind, and they ſtayed there till Maſſe was done, where, after they had receiued the Communion, hee gaue them his bleſſing. This I ſaw done in a Towne called Dara, which is in the Kingdome of Xoa. Another of theſe marriages I ſaw in a Village, being in the Pariſh of Coquete, being a place in the Kingdome of Barnagaſſo. And when theſe marriages are made, they are concluded by contract or couenant in this ſort: If thou leaue me, or I thee, he which ſhall be the cauſe of this diuiſion, ſhall pay ſuch or ſuch a penaltie; which penaltie is appointed, according to the qualitie of the perſons, either in ſo much Gold or Siluer, or ſo many Mules, or ſo many Kine or Goates, or ſo many Cloathes, or ſo many meaſures of Corne. And if any man would diuorce himſelfe, immediatly he ſeeketh an occaſion wherefore he may doe ſo: and by theſe meanes few doe fall into thoſe penalties; and thus they diuorce themſelues, as well the Husband as the Wife.

Diuorces.

And if any obſerue the order of Matrimony, they be the Prieſts which cannot be diuorced, and alſo the Husbandmen which loue their Wiues, becauſe they be a great helpe vnto them in keeping of their Cattell, and bringing vp their Children, and in-digging their fields, and weeding of their Corne, and becauſe they find all things needfull made ready:, when they come home at night, and therefore by reaſon of theſe commodities, they continue married as long as they liue. And whereas I haue ſaid, that in their contracts they put downe penalties; The firſt, Barnagaſſo, whom hee knew (whoſe name was Dari) was diuorced from his Wife, and payed for a penaltie one hundred ounces of Gold, which are one thouſand Pardai, that is to ſay; One thouſand duckats, and was married to another, and his Wife married vnto a Gentleman, called Prieſts cannot, and husbandmen will not be diuorced.

Double iniquity, Adulterous and inceſtuous

Aron, brother to the ſaid Barnagaſſo, and both theſe Brethren had Children by this Woman, whom we our ſelues knew. Theſe are great Lords, and are Brethren to the Mother of Prete Ianni, whom all of vs did very well know, and we Portugals knew alſo Romana Orgue a noble Lady, the ſiſter of Prete Ianni, which was married vnto a great and noble young Gentleman; and in our time ſhee was diuorced from this her husband, and was married to a man aboue fortie yeeres of age, a perſon of great credit in the Court, whoſe name was Abucher, and his Father had the Title of Cabeata, which is one of the great Lords that remayne in the Court: thus I haue both ſeene and knowne many of theſe diuorcements, and I thought good to put downe theſe, becauſe they fell out among great perſonages. And whereas I haue ſaid, that Aron tooke to wife the wife of his brother Dori, maruell not awhit thereat, becauſe it is the manner of this Countrey, and ſeemeth not any ſtrange thing, that a brother ſhould lye with his brothers wife, for they ſay, that the brother rayſeth vp ſeede vnto his brother, as was accuſtomed.

Circumciſion.

Baptiſme.

Not in the Fount.

Oile.

No Chriſme nor extreme Vnction.

22. Any man may circumciſe that liſteth, without any ceremonie; onely they ſay, that they finde it written in their Books, that God commanded them to be circumciſed. And let no man maruell which heareth this, for they circumciſe women as well as men, which thing was not vſed in the old Law. They baptize in manner following; men children they baptize within fortie dayes, and the female ſexe after ſixtie, and if they die before, they goe without baptiſme. And I often told them, and in ſundrie places, that herein they committed a great error, and that they did againſt the Goſpell of our Lord, which ſaith: That which is borne of the fleſh, is fleſh; and that which is borne of the Spirit, is Spirit. Whereunto they anſwered me very often, that the faith of the Mother, and the communion which ſhee receiued, while ſhee was with child of them, was ſufficient for them. And this Baptiſme they miniſter in the Church as wee doe, but not in the chriſtning Fount, but at the Church-gate with a pot of water, and ſo they bleſſe them, and they powre Oile as we doe vpon the top of their fore-heads, and vpon their ſhoulders; neither doe they vſe the Sacrament of the Chriſome, nor the Oile of extreme Vnction. Their forme of Baptiſme is not ſo long as that which is vſed in the Archbiſhoprick of Bragança, but ſeemeth to be about the length of that which is vſed in the Church of Rome.

Rites of Baptiſme.

The baptiſed doe then alſo communicate.

At the time when they wil baptize the Infant with this water, one which is there as a God-father, taketh the Infant out of the hands of the Midwife which beareth the ſame, and he taketh it vnder both the armes, and ſo holdeth it hanging downe, and the Prieſt which baptizeth it hath the pot in his one hand, and ſprinckling the water vpon the child with the other hand, hee waſheth it, ſaying the ſame words that we vſe, to wit: I baptize thee in the Name of the Father, and of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghoſt. They alwayes miniſter this Sacrament on the Saturday, or on the Sunday, and it is done in the morning at the Maſſe, and all that they baptize, as well Males as Females, they cauſe to receiue the Sacrament of the Lords Supper in ſmall quantitie, and by force of water they conſtraine them to ſwallow it. Touching this point, I ſaid, that this Communion was very dangerous and nothing neceſſary. And whereas I haue ſaid, that they powre oile vpon the crowne of the childs head, this is becauſe all the Infants are brought to bee baptized with their heads ſhauen.

The cauſe why they marke themſelues with an Iron in the face. And how they doe it.

And thoſe markes which wee ſee certaine Negro ſlaues to haue on their noſes, and betweene their eyes, or on their eye-browes, are not made with fire nor for any token of Chriſtian Religion, but onely for a brauery, with a cold Iron; and they ſay, that theſe markes are very beautifull to behold. And there are women which are very skilfull in making theſe markes. And they make them in this ſort: they take an head of Garlicke, which is great, cleane waſhed, and ſomewhat ſtale, and they lay it to the eye or to the other part where they will make the marke, and then they cut round about it with a ſharpe knife, to wit, about the ſaid head of Garlicke, and then they widen the ſaid cut, and powre vpon it a little waxe; and vpon the waxe they clap a little dowe, and binde it with a cloth, and ſo bound, they let it alone for one night, and this marke remayneth as long as the partie liues, which ſeemeth to be made with fire, becauſe the colour of that marke is blacker then any part of their bodies.

Their manner of buriall.

No ſeruice for the dead, but the Goſpell of Saint Iohn.

No Dirige or Maſſe for the Dead.

All commers receiue.

When any one dyeth, I haue ſeene them carried, as well perſons of Honour, as them of the middle and pooreſt degree, all after one ſort. Firſt, at the time of their death, they are not accuſtomed to light candles, but after they be dead, they beſtow vpon them much cenſing, and waſh them, and then winde their whole bodies in linnen cloth. And if it be a perſon of Honour, they lay an Oxe-hide ouer the ſtreet, ſpreading it ouer the Litter: and the Prieſt comming to carry him to the buriall, ſaith a ſhort ſeruice, and they take him and carry him to the Church, with a Croſſe, a Cenſer, and holy Water, running as faſt as euer they can, ſo that a man cannot ouertake them: and when they are come to Church, they bring not the dead corps into the ſame, but ſtreight way ſet him downe at the graue, neither ſay they any of our ſeruice for him, that is to ſay, no ſeruice for the dead, nor any Pſalme of Dauid, nor of Iob. And when I inquired what it was which they ſaid, they anſwered me, that it was all the whole Goſpell of Saint Iohn, which being ended, they put the corps into the graue, but firſt they cenſe it and ſprinkle it with holy water. Neither ſay they any Dirige or Maſſe at all for the dead, and much leſſe for deuotion of any man liuing, onely they ſay one Maſſe a day in euery Church, and euery body which commeth thither receiueth the Communion.

§. IIII.

§. IIII.

Of the ſituation of Barua, the chiefe Towne of the Kingdome of Barnagaſſo, and of their Houſes, and of the wild Beaſts, and Fowles. Of his Dominion and Gouernment; of their two Winters, Churches, Church-yards, and Prieſts marriages: their departure to Timei, and qualitie of that place.

23. THis Towne of Barua is a very commodious and pleaſant place, and ſtandeth vpon a very high Rocke, on the ſide whereof runneth a Riuer. The Kings houſes are built vpon the ſaid Rocke, very well made, in forme of a Fortreſſe: all the reſt of the countrey is mightie champion, manured fields, wherein are exceeding many Townes to bee ſeene, and the ſoile is very fertile to reare vp Cattell, to wit, Oxen, Goates, Sheepe, and many other wild beaſts, apt for hunting. Much good fiſh is in the Riuer, many wild Geeſe, and wild Duckes; here are likewiſe great ſtore of wild beaſts of all ſorts, to wit, wild Oxen, and Hares in great number, ſo that euery morning we killed twentie or thirtie of them without Dogs, onely with Nets. Partridges there are of three ſorts, which differ not from ours, but in their bigneſſe, and in the colour of their feet and beacks; for they are as big as Capons, and of the colour that ours are of, but their feet and beaks are yellow. There are other like Hennes, but their feet and beaks are red. There are alſo certaine others, in nature like vnto our Partridges, but haue their feet and beaks gray; which although they differ in colour and greatneſſe from ours, yet all of them taſte like ours, ſauing that they are more delicate. Turtles there are without number, which in flying darken the Sunne, and are very fat and good, and likewiſe Hennes, and wild Geeſe, and infinite numbers of Quailes, and all ſorts of fowles that may bee named or knowne, as Popingayes, and many other kind of birds vnknowne to vs, both great and ſmall, of infinite ſorts and colours. There are likewiſe birds of prey, to wit, royals Eagles, Faulcons, Lenards, Sparrow-hawkes, and great ſtore of Girfaulcons, and Faulcons for the Riuers, and Cranes, and of all ſorts that may be named.

In the mountaines are wild Swine, Stags, Roes, beaſts called Ante, wild Goats, wild Oxen, Lions, Luzerns, Tygres, Foxes, Wolues, Porcupines, and diuers other ſorts of knowne and vnknowne beaſts, and all wild. If any man ſhall aske mee how it is poſſible, that there ſhould be ſo many wild beaſts in this Countrey, and fiſhes in the Riuers, ſeeing the ſame is ſo well peopled: I ſay that no man hunteth, nor fiſheth, nor hath any engine or way to take them, neither delight they to feed vpon them: and therefore it is a very eaſie matter to goe on hunting, and to kill as much game as a man liſt, becauſe the beaſts and the fowles are not moleſted by the people: and the wild beaſts (as it hath beene told me) hurt no perſon, yet the people of the Countrey ſtand in great feare of them. At one time onely, at a place called Camarua, a mile diſtant from Barua, while a man ſlept in the night at the gate of his Oxe-cote, with his little ſon, there came a Lion and killed the ſaid partie, ſo that no man perceiued it, and hurt not the child at all, but eat the mans noſe, and opened his heart. The people of this Towne were greatly amazed hereat, ſaying, this Lion hath begunne to ſauour mans fleſh, he will doe much miſchiefe, and no man ſhall eſcape him: yet (bleſſed be God) it was not perceiued that hee did any more harme; and wee at the ſame time went often on hunting neere the ſame place, and neuer found any Lions. Wee found indeed Panthers, Ounces *, and Tygres, which we hurt not, nor they vs.

24. The authoritie of Barnagaſſo is in manner following. By his title hee is called a King: for, Nagas ſignifieth, a King; and Bar, the Sea: and ſo Bar-nagas ſignifieth King of the Sea. And when they giue him this gouernment, they giue it him with a Crowne of gold vpon his head, and it is giuen according to the will of Prete Ianni, and laſteth as long as it pleaſeth him. For in ſixe yeeres ſpace while we remayned there, I ſaw foure Barnagaſſos. At our comming into the Countrey, Dori was Barnagaſſo, and he died of his naturall death, whoſe Crowne was giuen to his ſonne Bidla, a child of ten or twelue yeeres old, which after hee was made Barnagaſſo, was ſtraightway called to the Court of Prete Ianni, whom he depriued of the gouernment, and gaue the ſame to a noble Lord, called Arraz Annubiata. This man held it two yeeres, and then it was taken from him, and he was made the chiefeſt Lord of the Court, which in their Language is called, Bettude; and he gaue the gouernment of Barnagaſſo, to another Lord, named Adibi, a very gentle perſon, which is now Barnagaſſo. Vnder his gouernment are many great Lords, which are called Xuus, which ſignifieth Captaines, and theſe Xuus are men of great authoritie. And it is ſaid, that two gouernments of this Land was wont to bee the Kingdome of Queene Candace, which in her time had no other dominion, and ſhee was the firſt Chriſtian that this Land had.

Alſo there are two other Gouernments, to wit; Daffila, and Confila. Theſe border vpon Egypt, and theſe Captaines and Lords remaine vpon the Frontiers, and haue Trumpets carried before them, which they call Vgardas, which none can haue but ſuch as are great Lords; and all theſe attend vpon Barnagaſſo to the warres, when he goeth forth, and whereſoeuer he goeth. He hath

hath many other Lords vnder him, which are called Arrazes, which ſignifieth Captains; & one of them we knew, whoſe name was Arraz Aderao, that is to ſay, Head of the men at Armes, whereof he had fifteene thouſand vnder him, which are called Cauas. And I haue ſeene the ſaid Arraz Aderao twice at the Court, and both thoſe times walking before the gate of the King, without any ſhirt, and with a cloth of Silke girt from the middle downwards, and a Lions skin vpon his ſhoulders, and in his right hand a Dagger, and in his left hand a Target. I aſked why ſo great a perſon went on that faſhion; it was told me, that that was thought to be the moſt honourable habite that could be imagined, for him that was Arraz di Caual, that is, Head of the men at Armes. And in the very ſame habite there followed after him twentie or thirtie Foot-men with Daggers and Targets, but alwaies the Arraz marched before.

The tribute.

The ſaid Barnagaſſo hath other two, namely, Arraz Tagale, and Arraz Iacob, Lords of great Countreyes, which I knew, and many other Xums Captaines, and Lords of other Countreyes, but without any titles of honour; and ſo he is Lord of many people, and of many Countreyes. And as well he, as the other Lords are ſubiect vnto Prete Ianni: and he it is that giueth and taketh away their offices, when he ſeeth good, and it pleaſeth him: and to him they pay the Guibre,, that is to ſay, the Tribute of the Countrey. And all theſe Lordſhips are towards the parts of Egypt and of Arabia, from whence come the good Horſes, cloth of Gold, and Silks, whereof they pay him tribute; that is to ſay, all of them pay to Barnagaſſo, and he payeth it ouer againe to Prete Ianni for himſelfe, and for the reſt euery yeere, to wit, one hundred and fiftie Horſes, and a great quantitie of Silke, and cloth of Gold. They pay likewiſe great ſtore of Cotton-cloth of India, for the cuſtomes which are gathered in the Hauen of Ercoco.

How they keep their cattell from the wild beaſts in the night.

Two Winters.

Winter and Summer ſtrangely diſpenſed.

25. The people of this Towne of Barua, and their neighbours round about them haue a cuſtome to encloſe themſelues, ten, twelue, or fifteene of them in a Court all walled and ſtrongly encloſed, which Court hath not paſt one gate, and herein they ſhut vp their Kine, of which they haue their Milke and Butter: they ſhut vp likewiſe their ſmall cattell, as Seepe, Mules, and Aſſes; and beſides the locking vp of their gate in the night, they make fires alſo at the gate, and place men to watch there, for feare of wild beaſts which range about their lodgings. And if they ſhould not take this courſe, no beaſt of theirs ſhould eſcape vndeuoured. And of this Towne of Barua, and the other Townes adioyning, are the men which goe to ſowe Millet vnto the Mountaines of the Viſion, and they goe thither three moneths before the Generall Winter: and the cauſe why they goe thither, are two: the firſt is, becauſe they are neere to the Sea, whereby all victuals are tranſported to Mecca, to Ziden, to Toro, and to all Arabia, and India. And hauing many ſorts of Corne, they ſeeke a fit place for the vent thereof. The ſecond cauſe is, for that in this Countrey there are two Winters, diuided into rainy ſtormes; neither do the Cornes grow, but with abundance of water: therefore they depart from Barua, and goe to ſowe their Corne in the Mountaines of the Viſion, where at that time it is Winter, which laſteth all the time of Februarie, March, and Aprill, and the ſelfe ſame Winter is in another Countrey, which is vnder the gouernment of Barnagaſſo, called Lama, diſtant from the Mountaines of the Viſion, at leaſt eight dayes iourney. At this very time alſo it is Winter in another Countrey, which is called Dobas, being thirtie dayes iourney from this place. And becauſe theſe ſeeds of Millet require much raine, therefore theſe Winters being out of the ordinarie ſeaſon of the places aboue mentioned, they goe to ſowe them where it raineth, and ſo they make their profit of the two foreſaid Winters.

Two great Churches, one for men, and one for women.

In this Towne of Barua are two very great and goodly Churches, wherein are many Prieſts, the one faſt by the other: one is for the men, called Saint Michael; and the other for the women, called, The Church of the Apoſtles, that is, of Saint Peter, and Saint Paul. They ſay that the Church belonging to the men was built by a great Lord that was Barnagaſſo, who gaue it this priuiledge, that no woman ſhould enter therein, ſaue the wife of Barnagaſſo with one maide onely, and that onely when ſhee went to receiue the Communion; and yet might ſhee not enter into the Church, for women come not into the Church, but ſtand at the gate in the circuit before the Church, and there they receiue the Communion with the Lay people; and ſo likewiſe doe the women in the other Church of the Apoſtles, which receiue it in the forme aforeſaid before the gate. And in the womens Church I haue alwaies ſeene the wife of Barnagaſſo goe to communicate with the other women, not vſing the priuiledge granted vnto her, to goe to communicate in the Church of the men.

Church-yards.

No Tithes, but great poſſeſſions.

Theſe two Churches haue the circuit of their Church-yards, which toucheth one another, and are compaſſed about with high walls, and they make the Sacrament, that is to ſay, the Bread, for both of them in one houſe, and both of them ſay their Maſſes at one and the ſelfe ſame time, and the Prieſts that ſerue in one Church doe ſerue in the other, that is to ſay, two parts of the Prieſts in the Church of the men, and the other part in the Church of the women, and being thus diuided, they ſay their Diuine Seruice. Theſe Churches haue no manner of Tithes, onely they haue great poſſeſſions which belong vnto the Prieſts, and they cauſe them to be tilled and manured, the reuenues whereof are diuided among them, and the Barnagaſſo alloweth them whatſoeuer is needfull in the Churches, that is to ſay, Reparations, Ornaments, Waxe, Butter, Incenſe, and all things elſe belonging thereunto. At theſe Churches are twentie Prieſts, and ten or twelue Friers continually reſident, and I neuer ſaw Church of Prieſts where there were not Friers, nor Monaſterie of Friers, where there were any Prieſts, for the Friers are ſo many, that they couer the World: both in the Monaſteries, the Churches on the waies, and in all Markets, and laſtly, in all places are Friers.

Abundance of Friers.

26. The Prieſts marrie with one Wife, and obſerue Matrimonie better then the Laytie. They continue alwaies in Houſe with their Wife and children, and if perhaps their Wife die, they marrie no more; and likewiſe if the Prieſt die, his Wife marrieth not a ſecond Husband, but ſhe may become a Nunne if ſhe will. And if a married Prieſt lie with another woman, hee entreth no more into the Church, neither is he partaker of the Reuenues thereof, but becommeth as it were, a Lay-man, And this I know to bee true, for I ſaw a Prieſt accuſed before the Patriarke, that he had lien with another woman, and I heard him confeſſe the fault, and ſtraight way the Patriarke, commanded, that he ſhould neuer carrie Croſſe more in his hand, nor come any more into the Church, but ſhould become a Lay-man. And if any Prieſt being a Widdower doe marrie againe, he becommeth a Lay-man, as it hapned to Abuquer, whom I mentioned before, which being a Widdower was married to Romana Orque, the Siſter of Prete Ianni. This man hauing beene a Prieſt and principall Chaplaine to Prete Ianni, after hee had beene Widdower many yeares marryed againe, and Marke the Patriarke digraded him, and made him become a Lay-man, and he came no more into the Church, but ſtood at the Church-porch, to receiue the Sacrament, as the Lay-people doe.

Prieſts beſt obſeruers of Matrimonie.

Loſſe of orders, or degradation.

The Prieſts Sonnes for the moſt part become Prieſts, for in this Countrey no Schooles are vſed to teach children to reade or write, neither are there any Schoolemaſters: and the Prieſts teach their children that little which they know, and ſo they make them Prieſts, being admitted into Orders by Abura Marke, that is to ſay, Their Patriarke: for through all Æthiopia there is none other, neither Biſhop nor any bodie elſe that giueth Orders, and Orders are giuen to theſe Prieſts, twice in the yeare, as I will hereafter declare, hauing my ſelfe oftentimes beene preſent at their taking of Orders. In all theſe Countries the Church-yards are encloſed with very ſtrong wals, that beaſts may not come and digge vp the dead bodies. They vſe great reuerence to their Churches: and no man is ſo hardy as to rule on horſe-backe by a Church, but lighteth, and walketh on foot, till he be gone a great way beyond the Church, and the Church-yards.

No Schooles or Schoolemaſters.

No Biſhop.

Reuerence to Churches.

27. We aboad in this Towne of Barua, and could not at the firſt, for many daies ſpace, get any order for our diſpatch: yet at the laſt, we departed the eight and twentieth of Iune, 1520. being verie glad and well appayed of our diſpatch: and the people which carried our ſtuffe would carrie them but two miles onely from the Towne, ſaying, that they were not bound to carrie them any farther, becauſe there ended the limits of their Conntrey. Beeing thus in the wide fields in the moneth of Iune, and in the depth of the Winter of theſe Countries with our ſaid goods, and induring moſt huge raines and ſhowres, the Ambaſſadour with three of vs in his company returned to Barua, to ſpeake with Barnagaſſo. He alwaies gaue vs good words but bad deeds; yet at laſt after foure daies he ſent for the ſaid goods.

Bad people.

28. The next day, a Gentleman came thither from Prete Ianni, whom Barnagaſſo ſo highly intertained, that he forgot vs, and went forth of the Towne to receiue him as far as a little hill without the Suburbs, accompanied with much people, and the ſaid Barnagaſſo was naked from the middle vpward. As ſoone as the Gentleman was come thither, he mounted vp that little hill aboue all the reſt, and the firſt ſpeech that hee vſed was this: The King greets you well; at which words the whole company bowed downe their heads, touching the ground with one of their hands, which is the honour and reuerence that they vſe in this Countrey. Theſe words ended, the Ambaſſage which he brought him from Prete Ianni, followed. After he had ended his ſpeech, Barnagaſſo clad himſelfe in verie rich array, and brought the Gentleman to his Palace. This is the manner of hearing the meſſage which Prete Ianni ſendeth, to wit, abroad without doores, and on foot; and naked from the Girdle vpward, vntill the ſame be ended: And if it be an acceptable meſſage from Prete Ianni, he which receiueth it clotheth himſelfe; but if the meſſage bee ſent in diſpleaſure, then hee which receiueth it abideth ſtill naked, ſhewing himſelfe to bee in diſgrace of his Soueraigne. This Barnagaſſo was Brother to the Mother of Prete Ianni.

Manner of hearing meſſages from the Prince.

After many delayes, the Ambaſſador prayed him to lend him twelue Mules: he anſwered, that he could not lend vs them, and that if he would haue them he muſt buy them; and as we would haue bought them of the Countrey people, which willingly would haue ſold them vnto vs, his Seruants came and threatned them, that if they ſold vs any they would puniſh them, and take the Gold from them: for no other money runneth currant in this Countrey. When we ſought to buy vs Mules, all the Countrey people refuſed to ſell vs any, ſaying, That they were afraid of Barnagaſſo, becauſe he himſelfe would haue the ſelling of their Mules. The Cuſtome of all the Realme of Prete Ianni, is, that there is no other coined money currant, but onely Gold, and it paſſeth from man to man by waight, and the principall waight is an ounce, which maketh ten Pardaos, or ten Cruzados: the next is halfe an ounce; and the leaſt money is a dramme, and ten drammes make an ounce; and the value of a dramme is according to a dramme in the Kingdome of Portugall, or in India. Their Gold differeth in fineneſſe three quarters of a Ducate, ſo that one ounce of Gold is ſometimes worth but ſeuen Ducates and a halfe. Moreouer, the ſaid Barnagaſſo had commanded that none but himſelfe and his Officers, ſhould keepe any Waights to weigh Gold withall; and whoſoeuer would buy and ſell muſt come to intreat them for their Waights, and by this meanes he and his Factors vnderſtood to whoſe hands the Gold came, which Gold afterward he would take from them at his pleaſure, as it was told mee by themſelues.

Faire and rich Church.

Proceſſions.

29. In this Towne of Barua, there is a Church of our Ladie, which is great, new, and verie well painted, and notably furniſhed with many Ornaments, and Cloth of Gold, Cloth of Silke, Crimſon and Veluet of Mecca, and red Chamblets. In this Church the Seruice is the ſelfe-ſame which is vſed in the Church of Barua, before mentioned, ſauing that here it is ſomething more ſolemne, becauſe Barnagaſſo is here reſident, and many more Prieſts, and great numbers of Friers. The Church is gouerned by Prieſts, and one time while I was there, I ſaw a Proceſſion made about the Church in the greateſt Circle which is in the Church-yard, wherein were many Prieſts and Friers, men and women (for in this Church, the women receiue the Commnnion with the Lay-men) in which Proceſſion were the rich Ornaments aforeſaid; and they compaſſed the Church at leaſt thirtie times, ſinging, as it were, Letanies, and ringing many Baſons like vnto Drums and Cymbals.

Their manner of buying and ſelling in this Market by exchange.

Salt precious, alſo Incenſe, Pepper, &c.

No money currant.

Few words vſed in bartering.

Prieſts, Friers and Nunnes, chiefe Chapmen.

Tchir Habit.

Nunnes: their Habit, number, &c.

In this Towne is a great Market, as there is at Barua, and likewiſe, once a weeke, there is a Market kept in al thoſe places which are head-towns. In theſe Markets they vſe to exchange one thing for another; namely, to giue an Aſſe for a Cow, and that which is wanting of the worth, is ſupplyed with two or three meaſures of Corne or Salt. Moreouer, they change Goates for Bread, and for Bread they buy Cloth; and for Cloth, Mules and Kine: but eſpecially they may haue what they will for Salt, for Incenſe, for Pepper, for Myrrhe, and for ſmall Pearles, all which are things much eſteemed and had in price, and make account of them as of Gold, and theſe runne as currant through all the Kingdomes of Prete Ianni, and of the Gentiles: for euery ſmall thing, they change Hens and Capons. To be ſhort, whatſoeuer a man would buy is here to be had in the Market by exchange, for no money is here currant. Neither vſe they many words in their bargaines, but are ſoone agreed, whereat we greatly maruelled.

The greateſt Chapmen in theſe Markets, are Prieſts, Friers, and Nunnes. The Friers goe decently apparelled, with their Habit downe to the ground: ſome weare yellow apparell of courſe Cotton-cloth, others weare Goats-skins dreſt like Chamois. The Nunnes alſo weare the like Habit. Moreouer, the Friers weare Cowles, like the Cowles of the Dominican Friers, made of the ſaid skins or of yellow Cotton-cloth, and alſo weare their haire long. The Nunnes weare neither Cowles nor long haire, but onely a Gowne, and haue all their heads ſhauen, and haue a thong of Leather tyed ſtrait about their heads, and when they be old, they weare a certaine attire vpon their heads and Veiles ouer the ſame. They are not incloſed in Monaſteries, but dwell in certaine ſeuerall Townes; and becauſe all the Monaſteries are of one order, therefore they are obedient vnto the Monaſterie that is next them, from whence they receiue their Habit. Theſe Nunnes enter not into the Church, but doe as other women doe. The number of them is very great, and in a manner, as great as the number of the Friers: they ſay that ſome of them are women of a very holy life. Againe, ſome of them haue children. The Habit which the Prieſts weare, is little differing from the Habit of the people, for it is made all of one Cloth, and they are girded like the common people; their difference is, in that they carrie a Croſſe alwaies in their hands, and their heads are alwaies ſhauen. And contrariwiſe, the Lay-people weare their Lockes long, and the Prieſts ſhaue not their Beards, but the Lay-men are ſhauen vnder the chinne, and cut off their Muſtaches. There are alſo certaine other Prieſts, called Debeteras, which is as much to ſay, as Canons, theſe are Prieſts of great Churches, as a man would ſay, of Cathedrall, or Collegiate Churches: and theſe men goe very well apparelled, ſo that they well declare what manner of men they bee: and theſe goe not vp and downe the Markets as the reſt doe.

Croſſes and ſhauings.

Barnagaſſoes State.

30. The ſtate of this Barnagaſſo (although he be a great Lord, and hath the title of a King) is very poore. Whenſoeuer we ſpake with him, we found him ſitting in a Litter couered with a Quilt, the Teſterne was of Cotton-cloth, which they call Baſuio; it is very good according to that Countrey. There bee ſome verie deare, and behind the ſaid Litter or Couch, the wall was hanged with foure verie rich Swords, faſtned to foure pieces of wood, faſtned to the wall, and two great Bookes likewiſe hanged thereon: before the Litter vpon the ground were ſpread certaine Mats, on which they ſit which come to ſee him. They ſweepe not their Houſes very often. His Wife alwaies ſitteth at his elbow vpon a Mat, which is layed at his beds head. Alſo many people and men of account are alwaies before him, which ſit vpon the ſaid Mats. Ouer againſt him, right before his Litter, ſtand alwaies foure Horſes, one of which is alwaies ſadled, and the reſt are onely couered with Couerings, and there they ſtand eating.

Courts of Iuſtice.

In all his Houſes are two round places incloſed as it were Courts; each circuit hath his gate, and euery gate hath his Porters, with their ſtaues in their hands. In the gate next vnto him ſtand the principall Porters, and betweene theſe two gates is alwayes one of his Alicazi, which ſignifieth an Auditour or Steward of the Houſe; and he it is that miniſtreth Iuſtice when he hath heard both the parties. And if the cauſe be of great importance, he heareth both the parties till they haue made an end of ſpeaking, then he relateth the whole matter to Barnagaſſo, and hee himſelfe decideth the matter: and if it be but a ſmall matter, and the parties agree together, and the ſaid Alicaxi giue ſentence thereof, the cauſe is ſo ended. Moreouer, their muſt needs be there preſent, a man of honour and account, which by his office, is called Mallagana, which ſignifieth the Notary of Prete Ianni, at all ſentences which Barnagaſſo or this Alicaxi giueth. And if any of the parties will appeale to Prete Ianni, or vnto his Auditors, in ſuch caſes they ſend vnto him the ſtate of the cauſe, and by this meanes Prete Ianni vnderſtandeth all the complaints of his ſubiects, as well great as ſmall: and all the Lords of the Dominions of Prete Ianni, haue each of them one Alicaxi, and one Mallagana, placed by himſelfe, and the Captaines ſubiect to Barnagaſſo haue the like.

Appeale.

Manner of comming to him.

The great Lords which remaine in the Court of Barnagaſſo, and others which come vnto him for their affaires, come in this manner. Departing from their houſes, they ride vpon a Mule, with ſeauen or eight men on foote, which goe before him vnto the firſt gate, and there hee lighteth, if he be a greater Lord, he rideth with ſeuen, or eight, or ten Mules, his whole company riding, or with more, according to his quality, and commeth vnto the firſt gate; and being come thither, they all alight, and then they go to the ſecond gate, and if peraduenture they cannot get in, they ſit there without, as Bees doe in the Sunne, all in a cluſter. All theſe honorable perſons, weare Sheepe-skinnes about their necks and ſhoulders, and thoſe which weare Lions, Tygers, or Leopards skinnes, are more honourable, and when they come before Barnagaſſo, they put them off to honour him, as we put off our hats.

Proclamation of war againſt Nubia.

While wee were in this Towne of Barua, on a Market day was a great Proclamation made, that Barnagaſſo would goe to warre againſt the people of Nubia. The order of this Proclamation was in this wiſe: One carried a Cloath like a Banner vpon a Iauelin, and another went crying warre againſt the Nubians, which they ſay are very farre off in the vtmoſt Confines of their Countrey, fiue daies iourney towards Egypt, and border vpon the Countries of Canfila and Daffila, as hath beene before mentioned, being ſubiect to the ſaid Barnagaſſo. Theſe people of Nubia, are neither Mobres, Iewes, nor Chriſtians; but they ſay at ſometimes they were Chriſtians, and that through default of euill Miniſters they loſt their Faith, and are become Iufidels, and without Law.

Nubians, what people.

Moreouer, they told me, that they had ſlaine one of Barnagaſſo his Sonnes not long before, for which cauſe he purpoſed to goe into thoſe parts, to be auenged of them. And it was told me, that in this Countrey of Nubia, is found abundance of fine Gold, and that vpon the Frontiers thereof, are alwaies foure or fiue hundred Horſe-men kept, which are excellent men of Armes, and that their Countrey is very fruitfull, and aboundeth with all ſorts of Victuals and Cattell, and it cannot be otherwiſe; becauſe it lyeth on both ſides of the Riuer of Nilus, which paſſeth farre many miles ſpace through the midſt of the ſame. The Proclamation ſaid, That within fiue daies ſpace, Barnagaſſo would ſet forward, but as yet there was no furniture of Weapons prepared: for in that Countrey there is no great ſtore of them, ſaue onely the Cauas, which are the men of Armes, were there preſent, which carrie a Iauelin, a Target, and a Bow, with ſtore of Arrowes, and perſons of more honour weare an arming Sword, and a Iacke of Male, but not many of them. Vpon this occaſion of going to warre, Barnagaſſo begged a Sword of our Embaſſadour, which gaue him his owne ſword which he weare in that expedition, which was very faire and good, and this notwithſtanding, with great importunitie he begged another, which he knew that he had, being very well garniſhed, and very rich, ſaying; That hee had great need thereof. Our Embaſſadour being not able to ſhift him off, was forced to buy one for him among his Company, which had a Veluet skabberd, and the Hilts gilded, and ſo he gaue it him in exchange for one of his. And in the houſe where we kept our goods, and where wee lodged, which was without gates: the night following, they robbed vs of two Sallets, and one head-piece, you may well thinke, that they pilfered the ſame vpon occaſion of this warre.

31. In this Towne we bought Mules for our iourney, and Barnagaſſo gaue vs three Camels, and with much paine wee departed from thence, through the great Thunders, Tempeſts, and Raines, which terribly troubled vs; for at this ſeaſon is the fury of Winter, which beginneth about the fifteenth of Iune, little more or leſſe, (as we haue ſaid before) and endeth the fifteenth of September, and at the end thereof is their Summer, as it is with vs: and what it taketh of the one, it leaueth of the other. During all this Winter-ſeaſon in ſome of theſe Countries, they trauaile not, but we notwithſtanding proceeded on our iourney, becauſe wee knew not the cuſtome of the Countrey, and much leſſe the danger whereinto we thruſt our ſelues. And ſo we ſet forward on our iourney with part of our goods, becauſe we left the greateſt part at Barua with our Factor, and came to a place called Temei, which is in the Countrey of Maizada, diſtant from the Towne of Barua whence we came, about twelue miles, wee ſpent three daies in this iourney, by reaſon of the cruell Winter and huge raines, our goods which we carried, being ſpoyled with water.

Their departure.

What time their Winter beginneth and endeth.

Temei.

Maizada.

At this place where we arriued, we found a Xuum, that is to ſay, A Captaine, whoſe name was Primo, and hee was one of Barnagaſſo his Brothers, an honourable perſon, and of great worth, who vſed vs very courteouſly. They ſaid, that he was likewiſe Brother to the Mother of Prete Ianni, and that he had in his Xumeta, or gouernment of the Countrey of Maizada, twentie Townes, and not aboue, becauſe it is the leaſt Shire within the Kingdome of Barnagaſſo. This town is ſeated vpon a ſteepe hill, not of Stone, but all of arable ground, with certaine ſmall Villages thereon; and vpon three ſides a man may ſee the Champaine Countrey, for fortie or fiftie miles about; and on the fourth ſide, by the ſpace of three miles, beginneth an huge bottome or downe-fall, which the ground maketh toward a great Riuer, neere vnto which a man may behold moſt goodly champaine fields, all manured and fruitfull, wherein are ſeated aboue one hundred Villages; in ſo much, that I thinke in no part of the world is any Countrey ſo well inhabited, nor ſo full of all ſorts of Graine, as this is. Neither doe the raines in Winter any harme thereunto, for this is the beſt ſeaſon they can wiſh for, for at that time the Corne groweth beſt, and becommeth moſt beautifull. And I thinke there is no Countrey wherein ſuch abundance of Cattell, as well tame as wilde, may be found, and where a man may catch ſuch ſtore of Wilde-fowle, as in theſe champaine fields; but of wilde Beaſts there, none other ſorts but Tygers, Wolues, and Foxes, which alſo are common in all the Countrey. They eate not many ſorts of beaſts, as Hogges, Hares, Wilde-Geeſe, and Ducks, and all becauſe they are not clouen-footed: neither eate they any other kind of Beaſt, if it chanceth to dye, before it be eaten; and by this meanes ſo many beaſts doe multiply, which neither are moleſted nor chaſed, becauſe they haue no Dogges for this purpoſe. And when we went on Hunting without Dogges, we caught ſometimes twentie Hares in our Nets at a time, in the ſpace of an houre, and as many Partridges we droue vnto the ſnares, as though we had driuen Hens into an houſe, becauſe they are not very wilde, nor much afraid of men, for as much as they ſee them all the day long; and in this manner we killed as many of them as we would deſire. Thoſe kinds of Beaſts which they eate not of, we fed vpon in ſecret, that they ſhould not report any euill of vs.

§. V.

Of the infinite number of Locuſts, and of the harme which they do, and how we made a Proceſsion, and the Locuſts dyed. The incredible hurts done by them. Of TIGREMAHON, MARABON, and of CHARVMA, the Queene of Sheba, and the Eunuch. The rare Buildings and Pillers at Caxumo.

32. IN this Countrey, and in all the Dominions of Prete Ianni, is a very great and horrible plague, which is an innumerable company of Locuſts, which eate and conſume all the Corne and Trees, and the number of theſe Creatures is ſo great, as it is incredible, and with their multitude they couer the earth, and fill the ayre in ſuch wiſe, that it is an hard matter to be able to ſee the Sunne. And againe, I ſay, that it is an incredible thing to him which hath not ſeene it. And if the damage which they doe, were generall through all the Prouinces and Realme of Prete Ianni, they would periſh with famine, and it were impoſſible to inhabite the ſame, but one yeare they deſtroy one Prouince. Sometimes in two or three of thoſe Prouinces; and whereſoeuer they goe, the Countrey remaineth more ruinate and deſtroyed, then if it had beene ſet on fire. Theſe Vermine are as great, as a great Graſhopper, and haue yellow wings. We know of their comming a day before, not becauſe wee ſee them, but we know it by the Sunne, which ſheweth his beames of a yellow colour, which is a ſigne that they draw neere the Countrey, and the ground becommeth yellow, through the light which reuerberateth from their wings, whereupon the people become ſuddenly as dead men, ſaying; We are vndone, for the Locuſts come.

Locuſts, like thoſe of Egypt.

The miſchiefe by them.

A ſtrange ſigne of the cōming of Locuſts.

Neither will I omit to declare what I haue ſeene three times, and the firſt time was in the Towne of Barua, where we remained three yeares; and here, oftentimes we heard ſay, Such a Countrey, or ſuch a Realme is deſtroyed with Locuſts. During our abode in this Towne, we ſaw the ſigne of the Sunne, and the ſhadow of the earth, which was all yellow, whereat the people were halfe dead for ſorrow. The next day, the number of theſe Vermine which came, was incredible, which to our iudgement, couered foure and twentie miles in compaſſe, according as we were informed afterward.

Foure and twentie miles compaſſe, couered with Locuſts.

This plague of God being come vpon vs, the Prieſts of this place repaired vnto me, beſeeching mee to giue them ſome remedy to chaſe them away; to whom I anſwered, That I could tell them none other remedie, ſaue only to pray deuoutly to God, that he would chaſe them out of the Countrey. And I went my ſelfe vnto the Embaſſadour, and told him, that peraduenture it would doe well to goe on Proceſſion, and to pray to God to deliuer the Countrey, and that it might be that he would heare vs, for his mercies ſake. This motion highly pleaſed the Embaſſadour.

Through the prayers of the Portugals, the Locuſts were all deſtroyed and killed.

The next day we aſſembled the people of the Towne, and all the Prieſts, and taking a conſecrated ſtone and a Croſſe, according to our cuſtome, all wee Portugals ſung the Letanie, and I commanded thoſe of the towne to cry vnto God like as we did, ſaying, in their language: Zio Marina Chriſtos, that is, Oh Lord God haue mercy vpon vs. And with this our cry, we went through one field, whereas there grew ſtore of Corne, for the ſpace of one mile, vnto a little hill, and there I cauſed them to take vp a quantity of theſe Locuſts, and made of them a coniuration, which I carried with me in writing, which I had made the night before, Requiring them charging them, and excommunicating them, willing them within three houres ſpace to begin to depart toward the Sea, or toward the Land of the Moores, or toward the deſert Mountaines, and to let the Chriſtians alone; and if they obeyed me not, I called and adiured the Fowles of the Heauen, the Beaſts of the field, and all the Tempeſts, to ſcatter, deſtroy, and conſume their bodies. And for this purpoſe I tooke a quantitie of theſe Locuſts, and made this Admonition to them which were preſent, in the name of themſelues, and of thoſe which were abſent; and ſo I let them goe, and gaue them libertie. It pleaſed God to heare vs Sinners; for as we returned homeward, there came ſo many of them behind vs, that it ſeemed they would breake our heads, and our ſhoulders, they ſtrucke vs ſo hard, that they ſeemed to be blowes of ſtones and of ſtaues, and went from this part toward the Sea. The Men, Women, and Children which ſtayed in the Towne, were gotten vp to the roofes of the houſes, praiſing God, becauſe the Locuſts began to depart and fly before vs, and part of them followed after vs. In the meane while, aroſe a great ſtorme and Thunder toward the Sea, which came right againſt them, which laſteth three houres, with an exceeding great ſhower and tempeſt, which filled all the Riuers, and when the water ceaſed, it was a dreadfull thing to behold the dead Locuſts, which we meaſured to be aboue two fathomes high vpon the bankes of the Riuers, and in ſome Riuers there were exceeding great Mountaines of them, in ſuch wiſe, that on the next morning there was not one of them found aliue vpon the ground.

Exorciſing the Locuſts.

Graſhoppers excommunicated.

Incredible ſwarmes of dead Locuſts.

The people of the Townes adioyning, hearing heereof, many men came to make inquiry by what meanes this thing came to paſſe. The Countrey people ſaid: Theſe Portugals are holy men, and by the power of God haue chaſed away, and killed the Locuſts. Others ſaid, (chiefely the Prieſts and Friers of the places adioyning) that we were Witches, and that by witchcraft we had chaſed the ſaid Vermine, and that thereby alſo, we were not afraid of Lyons, or of any other wilde beaſts. Three daies after this acte, comes vnto vs Xuum or Captaine of a place, called Coiberia, with Men, Prieſts, and Friers, beſeeching vs for Gods ſake to helpe them, ſaying, That they were vndone by the Locuſts, and this place was a daies iourney diſtant towards the Sea.

Diuers cenſures.

Another experiment.

They came vnto vs at Euentide, and at that inſtant I and foure Portugals departed with them, we trauailed all night, and came thither an houre after day-breake, where wee found all the people of that place gathered together, with many of the places neere adioyning, and they alſo were troubled with the Locuſts, and ſuddenly vpon our arriuall, we made our Proceſſion round about the Towne, which is ſeated vpon an high hill, from whence wee ſaw many Villages and Townes all yellow with the multitude of Locuſts. Hauing ended our Ceremonies, as in the former place we went to dinner, and the people adioyning beſought vs inſtantly to goe to them, promiſing vnto vs a great rewards. It pleaſed God, that as ſoone as euer we had dined, we ſaw the ground cleane, ſo that one Locuſt appeared not in their ſight, to their great admiration. When they ſaw this, not wholly truſting in the Grace of God receiued, they beſought vs to goe with them to bleſſe their fields, for yet they were afraid leaſt they would returne againe.

The hurt they ſaw done by Locuſts elſewhere.

Their miſchieuous ſpawne.

Hartleſſe people.

33. At another time while we were in a Towne, called Albuguna, Prete Ianni ſent vs to this Towne, that here we might furniſh our ſelues of victuals, which is in the Kingdome of Angote, and is diſtant from the Towne of Barua, where wee abode thirtie daies iourney. When we came hither, I went with the Embaſſadour Zaga Zabo (which afterward came into Portugall) and fiue Genoueſes, to a Towne and a Mountaine, called Agoan, and we trauailed fiue daies iourney through places wholly waſte and deſtroyed, wherein Millet had beene ſowen, which had ſtalkes as great as thoſe which we ſet in our Vineyards, and we ſaw them all broken and beaten downe, as if a Tempeſt had beene there, and this the Locuſts did. The Trees were without leaues, and the Barkes of them were all deuoured, and no Graſſe was there to be ſeene, for they had eaten vp all things, and if we had not beene warned and aduiſed to carrie victuals with vs, we and our Cattell had periſhed. This Countrey was all couered with Locuſts without wings, and they told vs, that thoſe were the ſeede of them which had eaten vp all, and that as ſoone as their wings were growne, they would ſeeke after the old ones. And the number of them was ſo great, that I will not ſpeake of it, becauſe I ſhall not be beleeued: but this I will ſay, That I ſaw Men, Women, and Children, ſit as forlorne and dead among theſe Locuſts; and I ſaid vnto them, Why ſtand yee as dead men, and will not kill theſe Vermine, to be reuenged of the miſchiefe of which their fathers and mothers haue done vnto you, ſeeing that thoſe which you ſhall kill ſhall neuer be able to doe you more harme? They anſwered, that they had not the heart to reſiſt the plague which God ſent vpon them for their ſinnes. And all the people of this Countrey departed, wee found all the wayes full of men and women, trauelling on foot with their children in their armes, and vpon their heads, going into other countries where they might find food, which was a pitifull thing to behold.

Men driuen by Locuſts out of their Habitations.

Hurt to Trees.

While wee abode in the ſaid Signorie of Abuguna, in a place called Aquate, at another time came ſuch an infinite ſwarme of Locuſts, as it is incredible to declare. They began to come about three of the clocke in the after-noone, and ceaſed not til night, and as they came they lighted, and the next day in the morning, they began to depart, ſo that by nine of the clocke there was not one of them left, and the Trees remained without leaues. The ſame day and houre, there came another Squadron of them, and theſe left neither bough nor Tree vnpilled, and ſo they continued for the ſpace of fiue dayes, and they ſaid, they were the yong ones which went to ſeeke the old ones, and they did the like, where wee ſaw them that were without wings, and the compaſſe which theſe Locuſts tooke, was nine miles, wherein was neither leaues nor barke on the Trees.

Dancali.

This Countrey ſeemed not to bee burnt vp, but rather to bee couered with Snow, by reaſon of the whiteneſſe of the Trees, which were all pilled, ſo that all the Countrey remayned bare. It pleaſed God that the Harueſts were alreadie gathered in, but wee could not vnderſtand whether they went afterward, for they came from the Sea-coaſt out of the Kingdome of Dancali, which belongeth to the Moores, which are continually in warre, neither could we learne where at laſt they lighted.

Tigremahon.

Thunders and ſtormes.

The Riuer of Marabo.

34. The next day after our comming to this Towne of Timei, before our goods remayning in Barua, were brought thither our Ambaſſadour, departed with ſixe on Horſe-backe in his company, to goe to the Court of Tigremahon, which hath the title of a King, and vnder his Gouernment and Iuriſdiction, are many great Lords and Townes. The Ambaſſadour requeſted him to giue him aide: and while we here ſtayed two dayes for people to carrie our goods, a Captaine came vnto vs, with many people to carrie the ſame, and hence wee departed the third of Auguſt, with great Thunders and a terrible ſtorme of raine, and trauelled for the ſpace of three miles through manured fields. Then beganne we to deſcend downward, by a very rough craggie, and ſteepe wayes, many miles more, and at euening lodged in a Church-yard, where wee abode in great feare of Tygres, and maruelled much at the Winter and ſtormes. Departing thence the day next following, wee trauelled through craggie Mountaines full of Woods and Trees without fruit, but very greene and faire, and ſuch as wee knew not, and came vnto a Riuer, which becauſe it was Winter, was ſwollen and very dangerous to paſſe, which is callled Marabo: and vpon this Riuer is ſeated the Towne of Barua, as I haue ſaid before, and it runneth towards Nilus: and this Riuer parteth the Iuriſdictions of Barnagaſſo, and Tigremahon, and from this Riuer vnto the place where we lodged, are about ſixe miles, and albeit the Mountaines be craggie and full of Woods, yet are they inhabited with ſtore of people, and haue many places manured in them.

A Captaine of Tigremahon to conuoy them.

Contention.

35. When we were come vnto the Riuer, they which were with vs layed downe our goods, and ſuddenly we heard on the other ſide the Riuer a great noiſe of Drums, and of people. We demanded what the matter was, it was told vs that it was a Captaine of Tigremahon, which came to carrie our goods. And hauing paſſed the Riuer, we found a goodly company which came to meet vs, and they were betweene ſix or ſeuen hundred men. Suddenly we ſaw a great contention fall out betweene theſe people, and thoſe which come thither with vs: for they which belonged to Tigremahon ſaid, that they were not bound to take charge of the goods vntil they were paſt the Riuer: and the others ſaid, that they were not bound to carrie them further then the waters ſide. While they were in this contention, becauſe the Riuer was greatly ſwollen, they agreed all together to tranſport the goods vpon a raft, and that this ſhould be nothing preiudiciall at all, but that, it ſhould remaine free for them as before, and ſo wee paſſed the Riuer with our goods. Theſe people trauelled ſo luſtily with our ſtuffe, that we could not ſtay them back, with our Mules.

Herds of wild Hogges.

During that little part of the day which remayned, wee trauelld ouer moſt craggie Mountaines, and ſaw wilde Hogges in diuers Herds, and they were aboue fiftie in a companie, Partridges innumerable, and other ſorts of Birds of diuers colours moſt beautifull to behold, which couered the Ground and the Trees: and wee were informed, that in theſe places were all kinds of rauenous beaſts, and it cannot bee otherwiſe, as it ſeemeth by the terrible Mountaines.

Fires for feare of beaſts.

High hils.

This night wee lodged abroad in the field in places enuironed with people and many fires, beeing informed, that they made theſe fires for feare of wild beaſts, and here immediately wee found great difference in the People and in the Soyle, and in the Trees, as alſo in the qualitie of the Countrey, and in the Traffique of the Inhabitants: and here wee began to trauell ouer certaine Mountains ſo exceeding high & craggie, that they ſeemed to touch the Skies, & in regard of their heighth they winded a little at the foote, and all of them were porportionably ſituate, and they are diuided one from the other, and ſtretch in length a very great way: and all thoſe which are acceſſible, although there be great danger in trauelling of them, haue Chappels builded on the tops of them, and the moſt part of them are dedicated to our Lady; and on many of the tops of theſe Hills we ſaw Chappels, where wee could not imagine how they could aſcend vp to build them. We lodged at a place, in the midſt of theſe Mountaynes, called Abafacem, whereon ſtandeth a Church, dedicated to our Lady, very well builded, with an Ally in the midſt, mounted higher then the other two, on both ſides, and the windowes thereof aboue the other Allies are vnder the middle Roofe, and the whole Church is vaulted; and in all this Countrey wee haue not ſeene a fairer nor better builded Church then this, which is like vnto thoſe Churches of Badie, ſituate betweene the Riuers of Duoro and Minio in Portugall.

Lady-Chappels.

Abafacem.

Hard by this Church, ſtandeth a mightie, huge, and a goodly Tower, as well for the heighth as the compaſſe thereof, and for the making of the wall, which ſeemed to ſtand as though it would fall; and it is of free ſtone finely hewed, which ſeemed well to bee a Princely worke; neither haue wee ſeene any other the like building, and it is enuironed with moſt beautifull houſes, which are very anſwerable vnto the ſame, as well in regard of their walls, as of their Roofes and Lodgings, which ſeeme to haue belonged to ſome great Princes. They ſay that Queene Candaces dwelt in this place, and that her Houſe was not farre from thence, and this is not vnlike to be true. This Towne, Church, and Tower, are ſeated in the midſt of thoſe craggie Mountaynes, in very beautifull and goodly greene fields, all watered with Fountaynes of water, which fall from the feet of thoſe Mountaynes, and all theſe Fountaynes are made of free ſtone. The Graines which here are watered, are Wheat, Barly, Beanes, Chiches, Lentils, Peaſon, and all the yeere long they haue Garlicke, and exceeding great Leekes, and Muſtardſeede, and Creſſes grow about their houſes; and on thoſe Rockes grow great ſtore of a kind of herbe, called Creſcioni, and certaine other kindes of herbes which they feed on. In the ſaid Church are very many Prieſts, very well apparelled, which ſeeme to be men of vertuous conuerſation.

Candaces, Act.8.27.

36. We lodged in another Towne, which is named, The houſes of Saint Michael, becauſe the Church is called Saint Michael; and comming hither, they would giue vs no lodging, ſaying, that they were priuiledged and exempted from ſuch kinde of moleſtation: and becauſe of the great raine, we lodged in the circuit of the Church as well as we could, and ſet vp our Mules in the other circuit, which ſerueth for a Church-yard, becauſe there was great ſtore of graſſe, which was growne very much, by reaſon of the winter and the ſhowers, which graſſe in Portugall, is called Wild Panick, and it was very long and high, becauſe it was made luſtie by reaſon of the dead bodies there buried. In this Countrey they vſe not to eate but once a day, that is to ſay, at euen-tide; certaine moneths of the yeere when they doe faſt, and ſo is the cuſtome throughout all the Realme of Prete Ianni: and as they refuſed to giue vs lodging, ſo they were ſlow to giue vs food, in which meane ſpace we were almoſt dead for hunger. Our Factor ſeeing this, ſaid, I haue two ſodden Hens, if it pleaſe you, let vs eate them. The Secretarie and I maruelled much, that he wiſhed vs to eate fleſh without bread; howbeit, we were compelled to eate them. Afterward they ſeemed ſo good vnto mee (I thinke by reaſon of mine extreme hunger) that I would oftentimes eate the like againe, to wit, bread without fleſh, and fleſh without bread, and bread dipped onely in Salt, Water, or Pepper. And thus by reaſon of theſe diuers ſorts of dyet, I forgat that, which at the firſt I ſo wondred at. Howbeit, in the euening they brought vs meate after their manner, and wee lodged in the foreſaid circuits. And becauſe we would be more cleane, we got neere to the place where they vſe to receiue the Communion. Here hauing with vs a candle lighted, the Doues began to flie about the ſame, which when we perceiued, we ran to ſhut the gates, becauſe they could eſcape none other way, and ſo running vpon them there eſcaped not one of them, for we tooke them all, euen to the young ones that were in the neſt, ſo that we filled a ſacke with them. And this was the cauſe, that at another time, when after certaine yeeres wee returned thither, they gaue vs lodging, that the ſecond time wee ſhould not take all the Doues of their Church, which by that time were repleniſhed anew.

Church Doues.

The difference of the people of this Countrey from thoſe of Barnagaſſo, is, that the men weare certaine aprons two ſpannes long bound about them, and theſe are of Cloth, or of tanned Leather, full of plights, like vnto thoſe which our women weare, which when they ſtand vp, doe couer their ſecrets; but when they ſit downe, or goe in the wind, they hide nothing. The married women were their aprons much ſhorter, ſo that all their ſecrets are ſeene. Young maides and other vnmarried women, and ſuch as haue no Suters weare girdles of Beades about their middles, and about their priuities, which other women weare about their neckes. They weare alſo many garlands full of Timaquetes, which are a little round kind of fruit of trees, which make a noiſe like vnto Lupines. And ſuch as can get any ſmall Bells weare them vpon their priuities for a brauerie, and ſome weare ſheep-skins about their neckes, wherewith they couer but one part of their bodies, and not the other, becauſe they weare them looſe, and bound onely about their neckes, with one foot hanging before, and another behind, and with neuer ſo little mouing of it, a man may ſee from one ſide of the bodie to the other, whatſoeuer he liſteth. They waſh themſelues euery day once at the leaſt, and ſometimes twice or thrice, and by this meanes they are very cleane, and this manner of attire is for the baſe people, for the wiues of Gentlemen and Lords goe all couered. The way which they trauell in this Countrey of Prete Ianni, is this: he which trauelleth from the red Sea, commeth to Barua; and he which commeth from Egypt, arriueth at Suachen, and ſuddenly turneth his backe to the North, and beginneth to trauell Southward, vntill he come to the gates, called Baba Baxe.

Caxumo.

37. Caxumo, is two dayes iourney diſtant from the Towne of Saint Michael, alwaies trauelling ouer theſe rough Mountaines, in which place wee abode at another time eight moneths, by the commandement of Prete Ianni. This place was in old time, the Citie Chamber, and reſidence of the Queene of Saba, whoſe proper name was Maqueda, and this was ſhee which brought Camels laden with Gold to Salomon, when he was to build the Temple in Ieruſalem. In this Towne is a very noble Church, wherein we found a moſt ancient Chronicle, written in the Abiſſine Tongue; in the beginning whereof it was declared, that firſt it was written in the Hebrew, afterward tranſlated into the Chaldean Tongue, and laſtly out of that, into the the Abiſſine Language. And it began in this manner: Queene Maqueda hearing of the great and rich buildings which Salomon had begun at Ieruſalem, determined to goe and viſite him, and laded certaine Camels with Gold to beſtow vpon his work-men. And being come neere to the Citie of Ieruſalem, and being to paſſe a Lake ouer certaine Bridges, ſuddenly inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, ſhee lighted, and kneeling downe, worſhipped the timber of thoſe Bridges, and ſaid: God forbid, that my feet ſhould touch thoſe beames on which the Sauiour of the World ſhall ſuffer.

Ex vngue leonem. I haue left out the reſt of the Legend of Salomons ſonne by her, his 70. ſaile of ſhips on the Indian Sea, &c. See my Pilgr. lib.7.

38. In this very Towne of Caxumo, was alſo the chiefe reſidence of Queene Candaces, whoſe proper name was Iudith, and from her ſprang the beginning of Chriſtianitie in theſe parts: and from the place where the ſaid Queene was borne vnto Caxumo, are two miles; which is a little Towne, being at this time inhabited with people, which by their trade are Carpenters. The Chriſtian Faith beganne here in this manner. Their bookes in the Abiſſine Tongue ſay, (as alſo is written with vs, in the Acts of the Apoſtles.) And they ſay, that the Propheſie was herein fulfilled, wherein it is ſaid, that Ethiopia ſhall ſtretch out her hands vnto God. And thus they ſay, that they were firſt conuerted vnto the Chriſtian Faith, and that the Eunuch returned ſuddenly to Ethiopia with ioy, vnto the houſe of his Ladie and Miſtreſſe, and conuerted and baptized her with all her houſhold; for he declared vnto her all which had hapned vnto him by the way, and ſo the Queene cauſed all the people of her Kingdome and Dominions to be baptized, and the Faith began in a Kingdome which is now called Burro, being ſituate in the Eaſtern part of the Kingdome of Barnagaſſo, which is now diuided into two Signiories: and in this Towne of Caxumo, ſhe built an exceeding goodly Church, which was the firſt, which is ſaid to haue beene made in Ethiopia, and it is called Saint Marie of Sion, becauſe that from Sion, the conſecrated ſtone of the Altar was ſent; for in theſe Countreyes they call the Churches by no other name, but by the Altar-ſtone, wherein is written the name of the place from whence it was fetched.

Churches named by the Altar ſtone.

The Church.

This Church is very large, and hath fiue allies of ſufficient breadth, and very long, made like a Vault, and aboue the Vault is a Tarraz, and vnder the Vault, and on the walls it is painted, and the Church is built of free ſtone exceeding faire, and ioyned together: it hath ſeuen Chappels, which are all ſituate with their ſhoulders toward the Eaſt, and their Altars very well adorned; it hath a Quire like vnto ours, ſauing onely that it is ſo low, that with the top thereof it reacheth onely to the Vault; and there is another Quire built ouer the Vault, but they vſe it not. This Church hath a great compaſſe builded with very great free-ſtones, as big as the ſtones wherewith we couer graues, which circuit is enuironed with very great walls, and is vncouered, contrarie to the reſt of the Churches of this Countrey. And beſides this circuit, it hath another as great as the compaſſe of a Caſtle or a Towne, within which are goodly houſes of one ſtorie, and each of them hath Fountaines, which ſend forth their water through the Images of certaine Lions, made of ſtone of diuers colours. Within this great circuit are two faire Palaces made of diuers ſtories high, the one on the right hand, the other on the left, which belong to the Two Gouernours of the Church; the other houſes belong to the Canons and the Friers. Within this great circuit, neere vnto the gate which is next vnto the Church, is a ſquare field of ground at this day lying waſte, which in times paſt was full of houſes, wherein in each corner is a ſquare Pillar of free-ſtone, very high, and cunningly carued with diuers workes, and in the ſame are in letters grauen to bee ſeene, but no man vnderſtands them; neither doth any man know of what Tongue they be, and there are many of theſe kinds of Epitaphs, and this place is called, Ambacabete, which ſignifieth, The houſe of Lions, becauſe in times paſt Lions were kept bound there.

Obeliſke, and Hieroglyphikes.

Pharaos Fig-tree.

Before the gate of the great circuit is a great Court, wherein groweth a mightie Tree, which is called, The Fig-tree of Pharao; and from the one end to the other are certaine faire Ciſterns made of free-ſtone, well wrought, and well ſeated, whereunto the Tree doth ſome harme, onely where it reacheth vnto them with his roots. Ouer theſe Ciſterns are twelue Seats of ſtone placed, raiſed in order one behind the other, as well wrought as if they were of wood, with their feet and ſeats beneath, and they are not made of one entire ſtone, but of diuers pieces; which ſeats (they ſaid) ſerued for the twelue Auditors or Iudges of the Law, which at this day are reſident at the Court of Prete Ianni. Without this circuit are many goodly houſes, the like whereof for beautie and greatneſſe are not to be ſeene in all Ethiopia; there are alſo many goodly Wells of water, adorned with very goodly ſtones, and likewiſe in the moſt part of the houſes are antique Images, as of Lions, Dogs, and Birds, and all of them are made of exceeding hard and fine ſtone. Behind the backe of this mightie Church, is a Lake of ſpringing water at the foot of a little Hill, where at this day the Market is kept, and about the ſame are many Chaires, wrought in ſuch ſort as thoſe are which belong to the circuit.

Curious works

This Towne is ſituate vpon the entrance of a faire Medow, betweene two ſmall Hills, and the greateſt part of this Medow is repleniſhed with moſt ancient buildings, wherein are many of thoſe Chaires with many Pillars, which haue letters on them, whoſe Language no man vnderſtandeth; but they are very well ingrauen. At the entrance of the ſaid place are many Ruines of ſtone, part ſtanding vp, and part ouerthrowne to the ground, which are very high and goodly, with faire antique-worke, whereof one ſtandeth as yet vpright, built vpon another beeing wrought like vnto an Altar-ſtone, and as it were carued into the ſame; and this which is built vpon the other is exceeding great, being ſixtie foure yards * in length, and ſixe in breadth, and three in the flankes, and very ſtraight and well wrought, all carued with windowes from the foot to the top, to wit, one window aboue another, and the top of the ſaid ſtone is like vnto an halfe Moone, wherein are fiue nayles in the part which ſtandeth towards the South, nayled into the ſaid ſtone in forme of a Croſſe, the ruſt of which nayles running downe in rainy weather along the ſaid ſtone, a ſpanne diſtance from the ſaid nayles, ſeemeth to bee like vnto freſh bloud. This Pillar of ſtone ſtanding yet ſo high from the ground toward the South, hath the forme of a gate in it, wrought in the very ſtone, with a chaine which ſeemeth to bee lockt, and the ſtone vpon which this ſame is ſeated, is a fathome thicke, and very ſquare, and this ſtone is alſo ſet vpon other great and little ſtones, wherein I could not diſcerne how farre this ſtone entred into them, or whether it went downe into the ground. Neere vnto theſe are a very great number of ſtones, very faire and well wrought, which (as it ſeemeth) were brought hither to be framed in ſome piece of building, and alſo thoſe other which were ſo great, and ſet vpright. Of theſe ſtones, ſome were fortie fathoms * long, and ſome thirtie, and in the moſt part of theſe ſtones, are very mightie letters ingrauen, which none of the Countrey is able to reade. And among the ſtones which lie vpon the ground, there are three very great and very fairely wrought, and one of them is broken into three pieces, and euery piece is aboue eight fathoms long, and ten fathoms broad; neere vnto which, are other ſtones, whereon theſe ſhould haue beene ſet.

39. Neere vnto this Towne of Caxumo ſtandeth a little Hill, from whence deſcendeth a great deale of ground on all ſides. A mile diſtant from the Citie are two houſes builded vnderneath the ground, wherein a man cannot enter without light. Theſe houſes are not made with vaults, but are made of very goodly hewen ſtone, all euen, as well on the ſides as ouer the head, and are twelue fathom high, and the ſaid ſtones are ſo well couched together, that they ſeeme to be all one piece, for the ioynts thereof cannot bee diſcerned. One of theſe houſes is diuided into many roomes. At the entrance of the gates are two holes, wherein they put the poſt wherewith they faſten the gates. In one of the chambers of this houſe are two great Arches of foure fathoms long, and one and an halfe broad, and as much in heigth, to wit, the hollowneſſe within, and albeit they lacked their couer, yet ſeeme they to haue had one. They ſay that theſe were the Chiſts of the treaſure of the Queene of Saba. The other houſe is ſomewhat broader, and hath but one chamber and a porch, and from one gate to the other is the diſtance of a ſtones caſt, and the open field is vpon the top of the houſes. In our companie were certaine Genoueſes and Catalans, which had beene ſlaues vnto the Turkes, who ſware that they had ſeene many goodly buildings, but that they neuer ſaw ſuch huge buildings as theſe of this Towne of Caxumo. And we iudged that Prete Ianni ſent vs hither to ſolace our ſelues of ſet purpoſe, that we ſhould ſee theſe kind of buildings, which are farre greater then I haue written.

In this Towne and in the fields thereof, which are wholly in their ſeaſon ſowed with all kind of Corne, when the ſtormes come with abundance of raine, neither man, woman, nor child, of what age ſoeuer, ſtay within the Towne, but goe out to ſeeke for Gold in the manured fields, which, they ſay, is diſcouered by the raine, whereof they find great ſtore; and likewiſe they goe through all the wayes where the water runneth, turning the earth vp with ſtaues. Hauing heard them ſpeake of ſo much Gold, I purpoſed to make a Table, like thoſe which I haue ſeene made in the Towne of Foz de roca in Portugall, and at the Bridge of Muzella, and ſo I began to waſh the earth, and to lay it vpon Tables; but I found no Gold at all: I wot not whether it fell ſo out, becauſe I knew not how to waſh the earth; or elſe, becauſe I knew not the Gold; or, that there was none at all; but the fame thereof was very great.

Ancienteſt Church in Ethiopia.
150. Canons, and as many Friers.
Two Nebreti.

They ſay, that the Church of this Citie is the moſt ancient Church in all Ethiopia. And it ſeemeth to be no leſſe, for it is more honoured then the reſt, and Diuine Seruice is ſaid therein very ſolemnely after their manner, and there are in it one hundred and fiftie Debeteres or Canons, and as many Friers. And it hath two principall Gouernours, which in their Language are called Nebreti, that is to ſay, Maſters of inſtruction, one of which two is ouer the Canons, and the other ouer the Friers, and theſe two are lodged in the Palaces which are within the circuit of the Church, and the Nebret of the Canons lodgeth in the Palace on the right hand, and this is the greater and more honorable of the two, and hath authoritie to execute iuſtice, not only vpon the Canons, but alſo vpon the Lay-men of the Countrey, and the Nebret of the Friers executeth iuſtice vpon the Friers only, and both of theſe haue Trumpetters in their Courts, and others which play vpon certaine Inſtruments like vnto Drums, and haue exceeding great Reuenues. Beſides theſe, there is giuen them daily out of the Countrey a portion of Bread, and a portion of the Countrey-wine, called Mambar, which is giuen vnto them when Maſſe is ended; and they giue it vnto them in two parts; to wit, one vnto the Friers, and another to the Canons, and this their portion is ſo great, that ſeldome the Friers eate any more then this, for this ſufficeth them for all the day. And hereof they faile not euery day, except Good-friday; for, on that day they neither eate nor drinke. The Canons receiue not their portion in the circuit of the Church, and ſeldome times they ſtay in it, ſauing onely when they ſay Diuine Seruice; as alſo the Nebreti ſtay not in their Palaces, ſaue onely when they giue audience to the people: and thus they doe becauſe they bee married, and liue with their wiues and children in their houſes, which houſes be very good, and are without the circuit of the Church, whereinto women are not ſuffered to enter, neither may the Lay-people come into the Churches. But there is another very faire Church, whereunto the Lay-people and women repaire to receiue the Communion.

A ſtrange Mountaine.

40. There is an high Mountaine, and ſmall as well at the bottome as at the top, which ſeemeth to reach vp to Heauen, which hath three hundred ſteppes to the top, and vpon the ſame ſtands a very holy and faire Chappell, which hath about it a circuit of ſtone, wrought very well, as high as the breaſt of a man, from whence a man would be afraid to looke downe. The circuit of this Church is ſo broad, that three may walke in it together in a ranke, and is called by the name of Abbot Pantaleon, which was a moſt deuout and holy man, and there lies his bodie; and this Church hath great reuenues, and hath in it fiftie Canons all honourable perſons, and well apparelled, and their chiefe Gouernour is called, Nebret.

Torrate.
Monaſterie of Alleluia.
A Frier, a lyer.

41. From this Citie of Caxumo Weſtward men trauell toward Nilus, where there are great Cities and Lordſhips: and they ſay that toward this part is the Citie of Sabaim, of which the Queene of Saba tooke her name, from whence ſhee had that blacke wood which ſhee ſent to Salomon, to poliſh the works of the Temple. And from this Towne of Caxumo, vnto the beginning of the Townes of Sabaim, are two dayes iourney; and this Signiorie is ſubiect to the Kingdome of Tigremahon: and the Lord and Captaine of the ſame is Couſin to Prete Ianni; and it is reported to bee a good and large Signiorie. Toward the North is a Countrey, called Torrate, all full of Mountaines, toward which within the ſpace of twelue miles, is an high Mountaine, which is great at the bottome, on which is a Plaine of two miles long, full of Woods of exceeding ſtraight and beautifull Trees, neere vnto which Woods, there is a Monaſterie which hath large reuenues, and great number of Monks, which is called, The Monaſterie of Alleluiah, and the cauſe of this name is ſaid to be this, that at the firſt building thereof, there liued a Frier of moſt holy life, which ſpent the moſt part of the night in prayers, and hauing heard the Angels in Heauen ſing Alleluiah, Alleluiah, he told the ſame vnto his Superiour, and thus was this Monaſterie called by that name. And as this Frier was very holy and good, ſo the report is, that they which liue there at this preſent are as bad and wicked.

Now he returneth to his Voyage.

About this Hill whereon this Monaſterie is ſeated, are Riuers to be ſeene, which are dried vp, which run not, but in the time of great tempeſts & thunders. But now to returne to our voyage, about eight miles diſtant from Caxumo, is another Monaſterie on a Mountaine, which is called, The Monaſterie of Saint Iohn: and ſixe miles beyond this is another, which is called, Abba-Gariman, whom they report to haue beene King of Grecia, and that forſaking his Kingdome and Gouernment, he came hither to doe penance, and here he ended his life deuoutly, and yet, they ſay, hee doeth many Miracles, and wee were there preſent on the day of his ſolemnitie, where wee ſaw about three thouſand perſons, ſome blind, ſome lame, and ſome ſicke of the French Poxe.

Departure from Saint Michael, to a place called Bacinete: Their viſiting Tigremahon. Of diuers Monaſteries, and other places in the way which they paſſed.

42. WE departed from the Church of Saint Michael, with the people of the Countrey, which carried our ſtuffe, and came to our lodging in a Towne, called Angeba, in a Betenegus, which is an houſe of the King, wherein before in other places we had oftentimes beene lodged, which no body elſe may vſe, but ſuch Noblemen as repreſent the Kings perſon, and they vſe ſuch reuerence to theſe houſes, that the gates thereof ſtand alwaies open, and no man dare preſume to enter, or to touch them, ſaue onely when the Gouernour is within, and when he is gone out, they leaue the gates open, and the beds whereon they ſleepe, and their prouiſion to make their fire, and their Kitchin. Departing from this place, we trauailed about fifteene miles, and lodged vpon an high Mountaine, which ſtandeth neere vnto a great Riuer, called Bacinete, and ſo likewiſe is the Towne and Territorie called, whereof the Grand-mother of Prete Ianni was then Gouerneſſe; and at the time when we were there, it was taken from her, becauſe ſhe had done wrong vnto the Inhabitants, and Prete Ianni beareth as great affection and reſpect vnto his Subiects, as to his Kinsfolkes, and this Countrey is ſubiect to the Kingdome of Tigremahon, and in euery part is very well peopled, and manured in all parts: but eſpecially it is full of fruitfull Mountaines, and Riuers which runne continually towards Nilus. All their habitations are ſeated and built vpon high places, and out of the way, and this they doe, becauſe of the Trauailers, which take away ſuch things as they haue perforce. They which carried our goods for feare of wilde beaſts, made a hedge with Fagots of Thornes very ſtrong, and lay within the ſame, and we with our Mules, and that night we had no harme.

Prouiſion againſt wilde beaſts.

We departed from Bacinete, and trauailed ſixe miles vnto our lodging, vnto a place called Malue, which is compaſſed with many goodly manured fields, full of Wheate, Barley, and Millet, and Pulſe of all ſorts, the like whereof, ſo faire and ſo thicke, we had not ſeene in any place together. Neere vnto this Towne, is an exceeding high Mountaine, but at the foote not very great, for it is as great in a manner at the top as beneath, becauſe it is as ſteepe as a Wall or fortreſſe right vp, all bare without Graſſe, or any greene thing; and it is diuided into two parts, to wit, the two outward ſides are ſharpe, and the midſt is plaine, and on one of thoſe ſharpe tops, trauailing vp into the ſame, aboue two miles, there is a Monaſterie of Friers of our Ladie, called Abba Mata, and they are men of an holy life. The order of Friers heere, is all one, becauſe through the Realme of Prete Ianni they are all of one order; namely, of the order of Saint Anthonie the Hermite, and out of this order is ſprung another, which is called Eſtefarruz, which is taken rather to be an Hebrew, then a Chriſtian order: and they ſay, that oftentimes they burne ſome of them, becauſe there are many hereſies among them; namely, becauſe they will not worſhip the Croſſes which they themſelues make, becauſe all the Prieſts and Friers carry Croſſes in their hands, and the Laity at their neckes: and the cauſe why they will not worſhip them, is, becauſe they ſay, That Croſſe is onely to be worſhipped, whereon Chriſt dyed for vs, but that thoſe which they and other men make, are not to be worſhipped, becauſe they are the workes of mens hands: and for other like hereſies, which they ſay, hold, and maintaine, they are greatly perſecuted. The place where this Abba Mata is, ſeemeth to be three miles diſtant from Malue, I would haue gone thither, but I was wiſhed not to goe; for though it be but a daies iourney thither, yet I ſhould be driuen to ſpend foure daies in the ſame, and to climbe vp thither vpon my hands and my feete, for otherwiſe a man cannot come thither.

All Friers of the order of S. Anthony in Ethiopia.

The order Eſtefarruz will not worſhip the Croſſe. It ſeemes the ſuperſtitious Abaſſens and this Author ſpake the worſt of them, for not admitting their ſuperſtitions.

In the midſt of this Mountaine, which is as flat as a Table, ſtandeth another Church of our Lady, wherein very great deuotion is vſed; and on another ſharpe Mountaine, is another little Church, called Saint Croſſes. And beyond theſe, foure miles and an halfe, there is another Mountaine, like vnto that of Abba Mata, and there is another Monaſterie, called Saint Iohn. The young Women are much out of order, and if they be twentie, or fiue and twentie yeares of age, they haue their breaſts ſo long, that they reach downe vnto their waſte, and this they take for a goodly thing, and they goe naked, and from the girdle vpwards they weare Cordans of Beads for a brauery. Others more in yeares, weare Sheepe-skinnes tyed about their neckes, which couer but one ſide of their bodies: and becauſe this is the cuſtome of their Countrey, a man is no more aſhamed to ſhew his ſecrets, then if yee ſaw his hands and his feete; and this is vſed among the baſer ſort, for the Gentlewomen are all couered.

Tigremahon, was about two miles diſtant from this place in a Betenegus, or houſe of the King. The ſame day that we came thither, Tigremahon ſent for the Embaſſadour, which went thither with his Company, but when we were come vnto his Palace, it was told vs that he was gone to the Church with his Wife to receiue the Communion, and this was about halfe an houre paſt two and twentie * of the clocke; for about that time they ſay Maſſe in this Countrey, except it be Saturday or Sunday. And we went to meet him as he came from Church with his Wife, who rode vpon two Mules richly furniſhed, as is requiſite for perſons of great Eſtate, and ſuch as are accompanied with men of great Nobilitie.

This Tigremahon is an old man, of a goodly pretence, and his Wife was wholly couered with Blue Cotten-cloath, and that in ſuch ſort, that we could ſee neither her face, nor any other part of her body. When we came neere vnto him, he prayed me to giue him a Croſſe which I had in my hand, which he kiſſed, and gaue vnto his Wife to kiſſe, and ſhe not vncouering her face, kiſſed it vpon her veile, and he made vs good cheare, and vſed vs with great courteſie. This man hath a great Court of men and women alwaies with him, and greater furniture then Barnagaſſo had.

Abſolute Soueraignty of the Negus.

In this Kingdome Prete Ianni placeth and diſplaceth, when it ſeemeth good vnto him, and when he pleaſeth, with cauſe or without cauſe the Kings, and thoſe which are vnder the Kings, and therefore when they are depriued of their gouernment, they make no ſhew of melancholy or ſadneſſe, and if they take it euill, they keepe it ſecret. While I was in theſe parts, I ſaw great Lords depriued of their States, and they which were placed in their roomes, oftentimes talking and conferring with them as good friends, but God knowes the heart. In this Country, whatſoeuer thing happen vnto them, whether proſperitie or aduerſitie, they ſay, That God ſends it. Theſe Lords which are as Kings, pay tribute vnto Prete Ianni, which tribute is in Horſes, in Gold, in Silke, in Imbroidered Cloath, and in Cotton-cloath, according to the abilitie of the Countries. And theſe Countries are ſo greatly inhabited and peopled, that their reuenues muſt needs be great, and when the Noblemen liue in the Townes, they liue at the common charges of the poore people.

After the deliuerie of Preſents, Tigremahon ſuddenly tooke order for the carriage of our goods before denyed, and that through all his Dominions they ſhould furniſh vs of Bread, Wine, and Fleſh, on free coſt. Hauing receiued this newes vpon the ninth of Auguſt, we departed, and came to our lodging in certaine ſmall Villages, encloſed as the former, for feare of Tygers. And that night which we lodged there, being about two of the clocke in the night, two men went out of the Towne to goe to a certaine ſtall of Kine, and on the way they were aſſaulted by Tygers, and one of them was wounded on the leg. It pleaſed God that we heard them cry, and ran out to ſuccour them, for otherwiſe they would haue ſlaine them. In this Country are diuers Villages, inhabited by Moores, diuided from thoſe of the Chriſtians, who (as they ſay) pay great tribute of Cloath, of Silke, and of Gold, to the Lords of the Countrey, but they are not put to other troubles which the Chriſtians are put too; and theſe Moores haue no Church at all, for they will not ſuffer them to vſe any. All theſe Countries ar fertill, as well in Paſture, as in Wheate, and other Corne.

Saint Georges Church painted.

Iewiſh Sabbatiſing.

Neere vnto our lodging was a Church of Saint George, very well gouerned, after the manner of our Churches, it was vaulted, and well painted with their pictures; to wit, with the Apoſtles, Patriarks, Noah, and Elias, wherein ſerue ten Prieſts, and ten Friers. And till wee came hither, we ſaw no Church gouerned by Prieſts, without hauing Friers with them, but where the Friers be the chiefe, there are no Prieſts. Three miles diſtant, is the Monaſterie of the Holy Ghoſt, where the Friers were grieued, becauſe it was Saturday, whereon they might not gather fruits to giue vnto vs as they deſired, and prayed vs to excuſe them, and ſaid; They would giue vs ſuch things as they had in the Couert, and ſo going into the houſe, they gaue vs dryed Garlick & Limons, and at laſt prepared for vs in the Refectorie, Cabbages cut in manner of a Salet, and mingled with Garlick. Behind the Towne where we lodged, for the ſpace of ſix miles, is a Towne called, Agro, wherein Tigremahon hath a Palace, where we were oftentimes lodged, and here is a Church of our Ladie digged out of a Rock by force of mans hand, very well made, with three Iles or Allies, and with pillers hewed out of the ſaid Rocke, and the great Chapell, the Veſtry, and the Altar, are all likewiſe of the ſame Rocke, and the principall Porch, with the Pillers thereof, as though it were made of ſundry pieces, it cannot be fairer then it is. In the ſides it hath no gate, for on each ſide is the mightie and terrible Rocke, and it is very pleaſant to heare them ſing Diuine Seruice, for the voyces of them which ſing, make a wonderfull reſounding.

Angugui.

45. On the thirteenth of Auguſt, we departed from this place, where wee reſted all Saturday and Sunday, and came to a place, called Angugui, where there is a Church like a Biſhoppes See, very great and faire with Allies, and with Pillars of ſtone very faire and well wrought, and it is called Chercos, that is to ſay, Saint Quirico. The place is very faire vpon a very goodly Riuer: the Inhabitants haue a priuiledge, that none may enter the Towne on horſe-backe, but onely on Mules.

* Bellette, where ſtands a Betenegus, a very good Lodging. The ſituation of the place is very pleaſant, and hath abundance of good waters, and wee were lodged in the ſaid Palace. During our abode here, there came vnto vs a great Lord, named Robel, beeing Gouernour of a Prouince, named Balgada, wherof taking his name, he is called Balgada Robel. This Nobleman had with him a great train all on horſe-back, and many other Horſes and Mules led by hand, which they vſe to do for authority and reputation, and there were many Drums in his company: it is ſaid that he is ſubiect to Tigremahon. And comming to the Palace where our Ambaſſador was, he ſent to requeſt him to come out and ſpeake with him, becauſe he might not enter into the houſe in Tigremahons abſence. The Ambaſſador hearing this requeſt, ſent him word backe againe, that he had trauelled aboue fifteene miles, and that if he would ſee him or ſpeake with him, he ſhould come into the houſe, for he would not come forth. Then this Nobleman ſent him an Oxe, a Sheepe, a Veſſell of Honey as white as Snow, and hard as a ſtone, and a Horne full of very good Wine. And ſent him word, that he would come and ſee him although the penalties were very dangerous, and that he hoped that he ſhould be pardoned of the penaltie, becauſe Chriſtians were lodged in that Betenegus.

Balgada.

Honey, white and hard.

As he was come neere vnto the Palace, there fell ſuch ſtore of raine, that hee was conſtrained to enter into it, and there he talked with the Ambaſſadour and vs, enquiring of the ſtate of our Voyage, and of our Countries, which till that time he had neuer knowne nor heard off, and then diſcourſed of the Warres which he made againſt the Moores, which ioyne vpon his Countries toward the Sea-coaſt, ſaying, that he neuer ceaſed to warre with them, and he gaue a very good Mule for a Rapier to one of our company. The Ambaſſadour ſeeing his courteſie, gaue him an Helmet.

And they ſay, that his gouernment is very great, and that he hath the beſt commoditie in all Æthiopia, to wit, Salt, which goes currant in ſtead of mony, as well in the Kingdomes of Prete Ianni, as in the Dominions of the Moores and Gentiles, and they ſay, that it paſſeth from thence as farre as Congo, vpon the Weſt Sea. And this Salt they digge out of Mountaines, as it is reported, as it were out of Quarries; the length of euery ſtone is a handfull and an halfe, the breadth foure fingers, the thickneſſe three, and ſo they carie them in little Carts, and vpon beaſts backes, like ſhort cliffes of Wood. In the place where they digge this Salt, one hundred or one hundred and twentie of theſe ſtones are worth a dramme of Gold, which dram (in my iudgement) is worth three hundred Reais, which are three quarters of a Ducate in Gold. And as ſoone as it commeth vnto a certaine Faire which is in our way, in a Towne, called Corcora, a dayes iourney diſtant from the place where the Salt is digged, fiue or ſixe ſtones leſſe make a dramme; And ſo it diminiſheth in paſſing from Faire to Faire. And when it commeth to the Court, ſixe or ſeuen ſtones onely make a dramme: and I haue alſo ſeene them in the Winter time buy fiue for a dramme. Great bargaines are made with this Salt, and it is very deere in the Court. They ſay, by that time it commeth to the Kingdome of Damute, they buy a good ſlaue for three or foure ſtones, and paſſing farther into the Countries of the Moores, they ſay, that they may buy a ſlaue for one ſtone, and in a manner, waight for waight in Gold. Wee found in this way, three or foure hundred beaſts in a company, laden with Salt, and as many more emptie which went to fetch Salt, and they ſaid that theſe belonged to Noblemen, which ſend thither euery yeare for their neceſſarie expenſes in the Court, and other twentie or thirtie beaſts laden, which belong to driuers of Mules. Alſo we met men laden with the ſaid Salt, who carried the ſame from Faire to Faire, which valueth, and runneth currant for money, and whoſoeuer hath it, may haue by way of trucke, whatſoeuer he needeth.

Through all Æthiopia, Salt runneth as a principal Merchandize. Salt-money.

46. Departing from this Betenegus, we lodged in certaine poore and ill-prouided Villages in a Countrey, called Bunace. And the next day wee departed from thence following our ſtuffe, which was ſent before vs, which we found vnladen in the midſt of a Medow, which was full of water, and ſeeing the ſame ſo badly conueyed, wee maruelled greatly: and while wee were in this muſe, there met vs fiue or ſixe riding vpon Mules, hauing tenne or twelue foot-men with them, among whom was a Frier; which comming to the place, caught the Captaine of Tigremahon, who conducted our goods by the haire of the head, and beat him with a Cudgell, whereupon all of vs ranne to him to know wherefore hee did ſo. Our Ambaſſadour ſeeing the Captaine ſo beaten and hardly handled, falling into Choler with the Frier, tooke him by the breſt to ſtab him, but I know not whether he hurt him or no, and all of vs likewiſe came vpon his back. The poore Frier began to ſpeake a little Italian, which George de Breu one of our company vnderſtood, which if he had not done, it had gone hard with the Frier. When euery one was pacified, the Frier ſaid, that he was come thither by the Commiſſion of Prete Ianni, to ſee our goods conueyed, and whereas he had beaten him, he did it for the negligence which hee vſed in conueyance of them.

A ſtout Frier.

The Ambaſſadour anſwered, that it was no time to make any tumult, eſpecially in his preſence, for hee tooke it as if hee had done the ſame to his owne perſon. And thus being pacified, the Frier ſaid, that he would goe to Signior Balgada Robel, which dwelt behind vs, and that from thence he would bring vs Mules and Camels to carrie our ſtuffe, and that wee ſhould goe before, and ſtay for him in a Betenegus, halfe a daies iournie diſtant from this place. This was the ſame Frier which was afterward ſent by Prete Ianni, as his Ambaſſador into Portugal with vs. And ſo we departed, each man his way, he forward, and we toward the ſaid Betenegus, and that night night we lodged in a little Village, where was a goodly Church, called Saint Quiricus, and that night we feared leaſt we ſhould haue beene deuoured of Tygres. The day following, wee trauelled about two miles, and found the Betenegus which the Frier told vs of, which is in a Town, called Corcora, hauing good Lodgings, and in that place there is a very faire Church, and here wee ſtayed all Saturday and Sunday, wayting for the Frier vntill the Munday. Eaſtward of this place, they ſay, there is a faire and rich Monaſtery, called Nazareth, which hath great Reuenues and many Friers. And Weſt-ward towards the Riuer of Nilus, they ſay there are many Mines of Siluer, but they know not how to digge it, nor to take any profit of the ſame.

A goodly Countrey.

Cypreſſes.

47. ON Tueſday morning, ſeeing the Frier came not, wee went forward on our iourney along the banke of a paſſing goodly Riuer, for the ſpace of ſixe miles, through a very pleaſant and goodly Countrey, and full of greene Herbs, and Trees fruitfull and fruitleſſe, and on both ſides were Ridges of Mountaines exceeding ſteepe, which are all ſowed with Wheat and Barley, and repleniſhed with wild Oliue Trees, which ſhew like yong Oliues, for they often cut them, that they may the better ſow their Corne. In the midſt of this Valley is a paſſing faire Church of our Ladie, about which are many Houſes, Lodgings and Habitations of Prieſts. There are alſo infinite abundance of Cypreſſe Trees ſo tall and great, as it is ſtrange to ſpeake of, and many Thickets of Trees of ſundry ſorts which we knew not.

A field ſowne euery moneth, and in the ſame field harueſt in Seed-time.

* Roueia.

Neere vnto the principall gate of the Church, was a very goodly and cleere Fountaine, which enuironed the Church, and afterward ſpread it ſelfe into a great Champaigne field, which may be watered throughout with the ſtreames thereof, and therefore is ſowed euery moneth of the yeare, with all kind of Seeds: as Barley, Millet, Lentils, Fitches, * Beanes, Chiches, Taffo di Guza, which is very good, and withall other Pulſe, which are in this Countrey, and at the veſame inſtant ſome Seeds are ſowen, others are ſprung vp in the blade, ſome are full ripe, ſome are new cut downe, and ſome threſhed, a thing not ſeene in our parts of Europe. At the head of this Valley, there is a great aſcent, and ſo craggie a Mountaine, that ſixtie miles beyond the ſame, there is none other paſſage, and it ſeemeth verie likely to be ſo, by the great ſtore of people that alwayes paſſe that way.

Fertilitie.

They loſe each other.

Danger by Tygres.

Hauing gotten vp to the top of that Mountaine, wee deſcended into a goodly Champaigne Countrey, full of all kind of Cornes, which they ſow all the yeare long, as that was which I ſpake of before, and there is a World of Medowes for paſture. This Champaigne and Valley, may be in length about ſixe miles, and in breadth two, and it hath on euery ſide high Mountaines, and at the foot of euery Mountaine, are many Townes and Churches to bee ſeene, howbeit, they be but ſmal, among which there is one, named Saint Croſſes, and another Saint Iohn, and each of them hath twentie Friers. When we had paſſed this Valley, we beganne to change the ſoile, and entred into certaine rough Mountaines not very high, but very ſteepe, the greater part whereof we paſſed by night, by meanes whereof we loſt one another, and the Ambaſſadour remained with foure onely in his company, and my ſelfe with fiue, and another of our number, with two, and our ſtuffe was left in theſe wild places with one man onely, as it pleaſeth God. And in that part where I was, we ſaw a fire, which becauſe it was night, ſeemed neere vnto vs, but was aboue three miles diſtant from vs. And while wee ſought to goe that way, there followed vs ſuch a ſort of Tygres, as was wonderfull, and if we entred into any Thicket, they came ſo neere vs, that wee might haue thruſt them through with a Pike, and none but one in our companie had a Pike, the reſt had Rapiers. At length wee concluded, to ſtay in certaine Corne-fields for our more ſecuritie, and here wee tyed our Mules together, and kept watch and ward all night with our naked Rapiers.

Manadeli, a Towne of one thouſand houſholds.

Dobba.

The next day about noone-tyde, wee met with our Ambaſſadour in a Towne well-peopled, diſtant from that where we lodged, aboue ſixe miles, and it is called Manadeli, which hath one thouſand Houſholds in it, and the Inhabitants thereof are Moores, Tributaries to Prete Ianni, and among them are fifteene or twentie Families of Chriſtians, which dwell there with their wiues, and take vp the Tributes. Whereas I ſaid before, that wee beganne to change the ſoile of the Countrey, it is to be vnderſtood; that vnto this time, which is two monethes ſpace ſince we begin to trauell, it was alwayes Winter, and when wee entred into the Valleyes betweene theſe Mountaines, it was not Winter but very hot at that ſeaſon, and the Countrey is called Dobba, and it was Summer there, and this is one of the Countries, which I ſpake of before, where I ſaid it was Winter in Februarie, March and Aprill, contrarie to the other. The like is alſo from the Monaſtery of Viſion vnto the Sea, and in another Countrey of the Realme of Barnagaſſo, called Carna. Theſe Countries which haue the Winter altered, are very low, and lye vnder the Mountaines: and the length of this Territorie is about fifteene dayes iourney, the breadth is vnknowne, becauſe it entreth into the Countrey of the Moores. The generall and common Winter is from the midſt of Iune, to the midſt of September. There are very goodly Oxen in this Countrey of Dobba, and in ſuch multitudes that they cannot well be numbred, they are of greater ſtature then Oxen of any other place. But many miles before wee came to this Towne Manadeli, we met many Chriſtian people in the fields with their Tents ſet vp, which ſaid vnto vs, that they were come thither to pray to God for water from Heauen for their Catle, which dyed for thirſt, and to ſow their Millet and their Corne, which had indured great want of water. Their Cry and Prayer was this: Zio Marina Chriſtos, which is, Oh, Chriſt, haue mercie vpon vs.

Winter and Summer neere Neighbours.

Winter particular and common.

Great drought

Now, to returne to this Towne of Manadeli, I ſay, that there is Traffique vſed as it were in a great Citie, and there are infinite ſorts of Merchandize, and a wonderfull number of Merchants, and there be Moores of all Languages, as namely, of Giadra, of Marocco, of Fez, of Bugia, of Tunis, of Turkie, of Rumes, that is to ſay, White Men of Grecia, * Moores of India, which are heere as free Denizens of Ormuz, and of Cairo, which from all the Countries aboue-named, bring Merchandize of all ſorts. While we were here, the Moores of the Towne complayned, ſaying, that Prete Ianni, had taken from them one thouſand ounces of Gold perforce, adding, that Tigremahon alſo, as Lord of the Countrey, ſought alſo to draw his maintenance from them, ſo that they were no longer able to hold out. In this Towne euery Tueſday is a Market.

Manadeli, a Town of wonderfull traffick.

* Or rather Turkes of C. neere Conſtantinople, called new Rome.

48. Aſſoone as the Frier was arriued, wee departed, and the ſame euening wee went two miles from thence to a Betenegus, ſeated on a Hill. The next day wee came to a great Towne inhabited by Chriſtians, and contayning one thouſand Families, which is called Dofarſo. And there is a Church, wherein are aboue one hundred Prieſts and Friers, and as many Nunnes, which haue no Monaſterie, but dwell in priuate houſes like Lay-women, ſauing, that the Friers dwell alone by themſelues in two Courts ſeperated one from another, wherein are many Cottages of little value. And the number of theſe Prieſts, Friers and Monkes is ſo great, that the reſt of the Laytie cannot ſtand in the Church, for which cauſe they haue ſet vp a Tent of Silke before the Church, wherein the Lay-people receiue the Communion: and heere they vſe thoſe Solemnities, which they cannot in the Church, as ſounding of their Drummes and Cymbals, during the time of miniſtring the Communion. While we lodged here two nights, the Nunnes came and waſhed our feet, and after they had waſhed them, dranke off that water, and waſhed their faces with part of it, ſaying, that we were holy Chriſtians of Ieruſalem.

Dofarſo, a Towne of one thouſand Chriſtian houſholds.

In this place, the Maſter of the houſe ſaid vnto me, that yeare wherein we gather but a ſmal crop of Corne, ſufficeth vs for three yeares. And farther he told me, if it were not for the Locuſts and the Tempeſts which ſometimes doe them harme, they would not ſow halfe ſo much Seed as they doe. We ſaw great Herds of Oxen comming toward the Towne, and thoſe of our company iudged them to be aboue fiftie thouſand. The Tongue of this Countrey differeth from the Tongue of the other Countrey which we had paſſed, for here beginneth the Tongue of the Kingdome of Angote, the Towne is called Angotina.

Exceeding plentie.

The Kingdome of Angote, and the Towne of Angotina.

In all this Countrey they make bread of all ſorts of Graine, namely, of Wheat, Barley, Millet, Chiches, Peaſon, Fitches of diuers colours, of Beanes, of Lin-ſeed, and of Taffo di Aguzza. Likewiſe they make Wine * of theſe Seeds, but the Wine made of Honey is better then any of the reſt. This people after the Frier was come vnto vs gaue vs victuals, and defrayed our charges of this kind of bread, by the commandement of Prete Ianni, but we could eat none of it, but that which was made of Wheate, and they brought vs theſe their victuals out of due ſeaſon, that is to ſay, (according to their cuſtome) at Euen-tyde, for they eate but once a day, and that in the Euening, and their Dyet is raw fleſh, and a certaine ſawce made of the Gall of the Cow, which we could not looke vpon, and much leſſe feed vpon, but we ate that little which our ſlaues dreſſed for vs, and wheaten bread, and ſo we continued vntill the Frier vnderſtanding our Dyet and cuſtome, cauſed them to ſend vs fleſh, which was roſted and ſodden by our ſlaues, to wit, Hens, Partridges, Mutton, Beefe, and ſuch like.

* Beere or Ale.

Raw fleſh.

49. Departing from this Towne, we trauelled through the midſt of certaine fields of Millet growing high, and hauing ſtalkes as bigge as ſmall Canes. Towards the Sea-coaſt, all the Inhabitants are Moores, called Dobas, and it is no Kingdome, but this Prouince is diuided vnder foure and twentie Captaines, and ſometimes the one halfe is in peace, and the other halfe in warre, and the ſame time while wee were in thoſe Countries, they were all in a manner at continuall warres: yet we ſaw twelue of them in the Court of Prete Ianni, which came to craue pardon for a new Rebellion moued by them.

And when they came neere the Pauilion of Prete Ianni, which liueth alwayes in the field, euery one of theſe Captaines carried a great ſtone vpon their heads, laying both their hands vpon the ſame, which Ceremonie is a ſigne of peace, and of comming to craue mercie. Whom

Signe of peace

Prete Ianni curteouſly receiued, and ſhewed them good countenance, and they brought with them aboue one hundred Horſes, and faire Mules, which they led in their hands, but they came into the Court on foot, with ſtones on their heads, where they ſtayed aboue two moneths without their diſpatch; and they had daily giuen them Oxen, Sheepe, Honey, and Butter. At length Prete Ianni ſent them aboue three hundred miles from their Countrey, namely, into the Kingdome of Damute, with a very great Guard. As ſoone as the people of theſe Captaines vnderſtood, that they were baniſhed into thoſe Countreyes, they roſe vp in Armes, and made as many moe new Captaines, beginning to make warre and breake the peace.

Damute.

Cauſe of the Warre.

The Pretes many wiues.

This warre and contention (they ſay) beganne with this Prete Ianni, which now raigneth, more then with his Predeceſſors, both becauſe theſe Moores were of ancient time Tributaries to the former Prete Ianni, and alſo becauſe the Anceſtors of him, which now raigneth haue alwaies had fiue or ſixe wiues, the daughters of the Mooriſh Kings, his neighbours; and not the daughters of the Pagan Kings, and alſo one or two wiues of the Signiories of the ſaid People called Dobas. If they were of age, and one of the daughters of the King of Dancali, and another of the King of Adel, and another of the King of Adea. And this preſent Prete, hauing promiſed to take for wife a daughter of the King of Adea, when hee ſaw that her fore-teeth were very great, he would none of her; neither would he deliuer her to her father, becauſe ſhee was now become a Chriſtian, but married her vnto a great Lord of his Court: and they ſay, that ſince that time vntill this preſent day, he would neuer take wiues of this Mooriſh Kings race; and he married a daughter of a Chriſtian, and would marrie but one wife, ſaying, that he would liue according to the commandement of the Goſpell, and ſtill he requireth the tribute, which theſe Moores are bound to pay him: and they, becauſe they payed it not before, in regard of the marriages which they made with his Predeceſſors, therefore they will not now pay it to him, and hereupon theſe warres ariſe.

Deuilliſh Law of Dobas.

Weekly Carouans to Faires.

Theſe Moores of Dobas are very valiant men, and haue a Law among them, that none of them may marrie, vnleſſe he can proue that he hath killed twelue Chriſtians; and for this cauſe, no man trauelleth alone this way but in Carouan, which they call Nagada, and firſt one great companie aſſembleth together, which paſſeth that way twiſe a weeke, for one halfe of them goe, and another come, and none of theſe companies are fewer then one thouſand perſons with their Captaine; and theſe Carouans goe from two Faires, to wit, of Manadeli, and Corcora, vnto Angote; and though they goe in great companies, yet notwithſtanding the Moores aſſault them, and ſometimes murther many of them.

A remarkable ſtorie.

An exceeding ſudden and perillous ſtorme.

Violent things not permanent.

50. Departing from hence wee trauelled through the ſaid Plaine along by certaine Mountaines, which belong vnto the Chriſtians, all inhabited by theſe Giannamori: and wee paſſed ouer certaine Riuers which fall from thoſe Mountaines, hard by which Riuers wee found certaine very ſhadie places, by reaſon of the abundance of Willowes which were there, being very pleaſant to reſt vnder at mid-day, and ſo we reſted a little, becauſe it was exceeding hot, and a very cleere day, and this Riuer had not ſo much water in it as might driue a Mill, and we ſtood talking, one part on the one ſide of the water, and another part on the other; and while wee were thus reaſoning, ſuddenly we heard a great thunder, and it ſeemed to be farre off, and they told vs, that it was ſo drie, as ſometimes it was wont to bee in India. And being thus out of feare of raine or wind, and that the thunder was ceaſed, wee began to ſet our ſtuffe in order, to ſet forward on our Voyage, and had newly lapped vp a Tent wherein we dined, and Maſter Iohn going vpward the Riuer about ſome buſineſſe, began to cry vnto vs, take heed, take heed, and as we turned our ſelues about, we beheld the water comming as high as a Lance, with exceeding great furie, which carried away part of our goods, and if by good fortune wee had not taken downe our Tent, it had carried the ſame and vs quite away, and many of vs were conſtrained to climbe vp into the Willowes. And this furious ſtreame of water came running downe betweene certaine Mountaines, where it had thundred; and it brought downe with it exceeding great ſtones, and the noiſe and furie of the water was ſo great, and the cluttering of the ſtones which beat one againſt another, that the Earth trembled, and the Skie ſeemed to be readie to fall. And as it was ſudden in comming, ſo it ſuddenly paſſed away; for we paſſed the ſame that very day, and we ſaw a great number of other exceeding great ſtones, tumbled vpon thoſe ſtones which were there before, which came downe with the water from thoſe Mountaines. Departing from hence, wee tooke vp our lodging in certaine poore Cottages; when wee came neere them, we ſaw our ſelues conſtrained to lodge without doores, and that without our ſupper, and that night about the breake of day, we heard of exceeding great thunders and raines in that Plaine, as it fell out the day before vpon the Mountaines.

The Riuer Sabalette.

Angote.

Saint Peters Church.

51. Wee departed all from this place for want of food. And thus wee trauelled without our ſtuffe all that day, and came at night vnto a great Riuer, called Sabalette, which endeth the Kingdome of Tigremahon, and is the beginning of the Kingdome of Angote. And in a very high Mountaine Weſtward, out of which this Riuer ſpringeth, is a Church, called Saint Peter of Angote; and they ſay, it is the chiefe of this Realme, and the Church of the Kings, and that when this Kingdome is newly giuen to any, they goe thither to take poſſeſſion thereof, and toward the Eaſt, in another exceeding high Mountaine ſixe miles out of the way, there is a very great Monaſterie with many Friers, whereof we ſaw nothing but the high Trees which are about the ſame, and here endeth the Countrey of the Moores. And on Saturday, we reſted by this Riuer, and on Sunday at night about our firſt ſleepe the Tygres aſſaulted vs, although wee had made great fires, ſo that the greateſt part of our Mules brake looſe for feare. On Tueſday, deſcending downe from the top of the Mountaines, we came into the way where our ſtuffe was, neere vnto a Church called, Our Ladie, enuironed wholly with ſhade of moſt pleaſant and ſtately Trees, (and here by reaſon of the heate wee reſted about noone) which Church hath many Prieſts, Friers, and Nuns, and is gouerned by Prieſts: and the Towne is called, Corcora, of Angote. With much trauell we paſſed that night a very high Mountaine, where ſometimes wee were faine to goe on foot, and ſometimes we were faine to crawle vpon our hands and feet, and hauing paſſed this bad way on the top of the Mountaine, we found certaine other Mountaines, and Hills, which make valleys, where ſmall ſtreames runne; but among the reſt there is one Hill very great, on both ſides full of Paſtures, and of Corne-fields, wherein all the yeere long they ſowe and reape all kind of ſeeds; for at all times when wee walked that way, we found them at that inſtant ſowing of Corne, and ſome newly ſprouted, and ſome in graſſe, ſome eared, ſome ripe, and ſome cut downe, and that which I ſpeake of Wheat, is alſo to be vnderſtood all kind of Corne and Pulſe. In this Countrey they conuay not ſtreames to water the ſame, becauſe it aboundeth with Riuers, and is as it were a Mariſh, and all Countreys which are like vnto this, or which may bee watered beare fruit as this doth, that is to ſay, they are ſowed in all moneths of the yeere, and yeeld their harueſt. This Countrey round about is peopled, and full of Villages, becauſe it is exceeding fat and fruitfull, and in euery Towne there is a Church, which hath about it great ſtore of Trees.

52. On Wedneſday the fiſt of September, we trauelled but a little way, but that we began to deſcend into a pleaſant and wide Valley full of exceeding great Millet, and abundance of Beanes, through the midſt whereof paſſed a great Riuer, the fields on both ſides being ſowed. And this Riuer is called, The Riuer of Ancona; and in the higheſt part of this Valley is a beautifull Church, called Saint Marie of Ancona, which hath exceeding great reuenues, wherein are many Canons, whoſe head is called Licanate, and beſides the Canons there are many Prieſts and Friers, and in all great Churches from this place forward, which are called the Kings Churches, there are Canons, and their Head is called Licanate. This Church hath two Bells of Iron badly made, and hanging low neere the ground: and in this Countrey wee ſaw no more but theſe two. Wee ſtayed in this place vntill Thurſday, for on that day here is kept a great Market, which they call Gabeia. In this Towne, and in all the Kingdome of Angote, Iron runneth currant for money, which is in faſhion of Bullets, and it cannot be wrought ſo round in any thing, but they breake them as they haue need, and giue ten, eleuen, and twelue, of them for a dram, which dram amounteth to three quarters of a Ducat in gold. Moreouer, Salt in this place runneth currant for money, as it doth through all the Countrey, and here they giue ſixe or ſeuen ſtones of Salt for one piece of this Iron.

Here beginneth towards the Weſt a Countrey called, Bugana, which is a very cold Countrey, by reaſon of the exceeding high Mountaines which are there, whereupon groweth great ſtore of that herbe whereof they make ropes, that is to ſay, Hempe, whereof at one time I brought a certaine quantitie to certaine Genoueſes which were here with vs, who told me, that they had neuer ſeene any ſo good, and that it was better then that of Alicante. The food of theſe Mountaines is great ſtore of Barley, and in the Valleys is abundance of Wheat, the faireſt that euer I haue ſeene in any place. The Cattell are ſmall of ſtature, like thoſe which are in the Countrey of Maia, betweene the Riuers of Minius and Dorius in Portugall. The Lord of this Land is called, Abunaraz; the Countrey is ſixe dayes iourney in length, and three in breadth. They ſay, that after the Land of Caxumo was conuerted vnto the Chriſtian Faith, this was the ſecond, and that the Kings here kept their Court, as the Queenes kept theirs in Caxumo, although the ſame be barren by reaſon of the Mountaines. The buildings which I ſaw, are theſe: firſt, in an high Mountaine there is an exceeding mightie Caue, wherein is builded a very goodly Monaſterie and Church of our Ladie, not ſo much for the greatneſſe thereof, as for the goodly proportion which it hath, which is called, Icono Amelaca, which is as much to ſay, as, God be praiſed. The ſeat of the Countrey where it is builded, is called Acate. It hath poore reuenues, but many Friers and Nuns, the Friers dwell in an Hill aboue the Caue, which Hill is encloſed. They haue but one way to come to their Church. The Nuns dwell beneath in the ſide of the Caue, and are not encloſed: they till and digge the fields, and ſowe them with Barley and Wheat, for the Monaſterie affordeth them little ſuſtenance. The faire proportion of this Monaſterie cauſeth it to be inhabited, becauſe it is builded in this great concauitie or caue of the Hill, and it is made like a croſſe, and is well compaſſed about, and they may goe on Proceſſion round about it, and all the Friers may goe afront in this circuit, if they were more then they bee; before the gate of which Monaſterie there is a place encloſed with a wall, as high as the brimme of the Caue, which is not a Church, and here ſtand the Nuns to ſay Diuine Seruice, and here likewiſe they receiue the Communion. This Roome for the Nunnes looked toward the South, becauſe the Church ſtandeth Eaſt and Weſt; and toward the right ſide ouer this Caue falleth a Brooke, made of diuers Springs, downe from the Mountayne, which runneth continually, and when it commeth to the top of the Caue, is diuided into three branches; and one falleth right vpon the midſt thereof, which is a goodly ſight; the other two branches runne in Gutters, made by hand, on both ſides of the Caue, and ioyne themſelues toward the place of the Nunnes, hard vnto a Wall which ſtoppeth them, and theſe branches water their Gardens. The body of this Church hath three Gates, one which is principall, and two on the ſides, as though it were builded vpon a Plaine: and becauſe the mouth of the Caue is great, therefore there is light enough.

In all the Kingdome of Angote, graine and ſalt runne currant for money.

The ſtore of Canons and Reuenues.

53. As we departed from this Monaſterie or Church before mentioned, trauelling toward the Weſt two dayes iourney, there is another great and rich Church, made in another Caue, wherein, to my iudgement, three great Ships with their Maſts may ſtand vp-right, but the entrance is no bigger then the ſpace whereby two Carts may enter with their Ladders, and it is ſixe good miles to the top of the Mountayne: and I would needs goe thither, for the deſire I had to ſee that Church: but ſurely, I thought, I ſhould haue died, the way was ſo hard and rough; but God aſſiſted me, for it was very coole, and I had with me one of my Slaues; which holpe me to goe, and drew me vpward with a cord, and another behind which led our Mules by hand, leſt they ſhould fall and caſt vs backward. I ſet forward from the bottome of the Mountayne before day, and could not get vp to the top before noone. The Woods and Trees, which I ſaw, are of ſundrie ſorts, which I knew not, ſauing ſtore of Broome, whoſe yellow flowers made a goodly ſhew, and great ſtore of Hempe to make Ropes withall. The Church which is within this Caue, is as great as a Biſhops Sea, and hath goodly Allies well adorned and wrought, and all are vaulted; it hath three Chappels exceeding faire and ſtately adorned. The entrance of this Caue is towards the Eaſt, and the Chappels are vaulted towards the ſame entrance, and when you be paſſed the third Chappell, there is no light, and they ſay ſeruice by candle-light. The Church hath two hundred Canons, and there be no Friers, but it hath a Licanate, and very great Reuenues and Poſſeſſions, and they liue like honorable Gentlemen by reaſon of their wealth; and this Church is called Imbra Chriſtos, that is to ſay, The way of Chriſt.

Three Tombs:

One of a King.

One of a Patriarke.

The King a Prieſt.

Legends, fabulous.

As you enter into this Caue, the ſaid Chappels are right before you: and on the right ſide are two little Chambers finely painted, which, they ſay, a King cauſed to be built, which ended his life in that place, and cauſed the ſame Church to be builded. As you enter in on the left hand, are three moſt honorable and ſtately Tombs, neither haue I ſeene the like in all Ethiopia, whereof one is chiefe and very high, aud hath fiue ſteps round about it, and is all ouer-caſt with white chalke, which was couered ouer with a great cloth of Gold, and of Veluet of Mecca, to wit, part thereof of Gold, and part of Veluet, and it was ſo large, that on euery ſide it touched the ground, which cloth the ſame day they had layed vpon the ſaid Tombe, becauſe it was a feſtiuall day: and this was the Tombe of that King which dwelt there, whoſe name was Abraham. The reſt are like vnto this ſame, ſauing that the one hath three and the other hath foure ſteps, all of them are in the midſt of the ſaid Caue. The greateſt is the Tombe of a Patriarke, which came from Ieruſalem, to viſite the ſaid King for his holineſſe, and after his death was buried here. The leaſt is a Daughters of the ſaid King, who, they ſay, was aboue fortie yeeres a Prieſt of the Maſſe, which euery day did miniſter the ſame, which thing I found written in a Booke of this Church, wherein the life of this King was recorded. Among other miracles, they ſay, that when he miniſtred the Communion, the Angels brought him Bread and Wine, and in the beginning of the Booke, the King is painted like a Prieſt apparelled at the Altar, and it ſeemeth that one hand reacheth out of a Window, with an Hoſt and with a Chalice of Wine, and after the ſame ſort he is painted in the greateſt Chappell.

The bountie and holineſſe of Abraham Prete Ianni.

Twentie thouſand Communicants at one Church, at one time.

When I came to the top I found a quarrie of the like blacke ſtones, and the place where-hence they were digged, and I was much aſtonied, conſidering how ſo many of them ſhould bee digged vp by them of ſo hard a graine, which haue no kinde of meanes nor skill to cut and poliſh them. In the ſame Booke was alſo written, that the ſaid King neuer tooke money nor Tribute of his Subiects, and if they brought him any, he cauſed the ſame to be diſtributed to the poore, and maintaine himſelfe of the Reuenues of his Lands, which he cauſed to be tilled. Likewiſe, that it was reuealed vnto him, that if he would keepe his Kingdom in quiet, all his ſonnes ſhould be ſhut vp, ſauing his firſt borne, as hereafter ſhall be declared. This day being the day of his Feaſt, I was deſirous to goe to the ſaid Church to ſee, if that which was told mee were true: and I ſaw twentie thouſand perſons, who all come thither for deuotion, and to receiue the Communion; and this Feaſt was kept vpon the Sunday, and they ſaid Maſſe very early, and Maſſe being ſaid, they began to giue the Communion in all three Porches of the Church, and it continued vntill the Aue Maria, which thing I ſaw, for I was there from the beginning, and afterward going to dinner, I returned, and found that it continued vntill that houre.

54. A Dayes iourney diſtant from this Church, are ſuch kind of building, that in my iudgement, I beleeue, the like are not to be found in all the World, which are Churches all hewen in free-ſtone out of ſote Mountaynes, very well wrought: and the names of the Churches, are theſe: Emanuel, Saint Sauiour, Saint Mary, Holy Croſſe, Saint George, Golgota, Bethlehem, Marcorius, and The Martyr. And the principal, is called Lulibella: and they ſay, that this was the name of a King of this Countrey, which reigned before Abraham the aforeſaid King, about eightie yeeres, and cauſed the ſaid building to be erected. His Sepulture is not in the Church of his name, but in that of Golgota, which is of leſſe capacitie, being wholly hewen out of a mayne Rocke, being one hundred and twentie ſpannes in length, and ſixtie in breadth, the Roofe is built vpon fiue Pillars, two on each ſide, and one in the midſt, as it were, in a ſquare, which Roofe is flat and ſmooth as the floore beneath; on both ſides it is well wrought, the Windowes and Gates are moſt excellently engrauen, ſo cunningly, that no Siluer-ſmith could make them more faire. The Kings Tombe is like vnto the Sepulchre of Saint Iames of Galicia, in Compoſtella. This Church hath another body vnderneath it, hewen out of ſtone, as bigge as all the floore aboue, and of the heighth of a Speare or Launce. The Kings Tombe is directly before the Altar of the vpper Church: In the floore whereof is the entrie to goe downe beneath, which is ſhut with a ſtone, made like vnto a Graueſtone, layed in very euen and cloſely, but no man goeth into it, becauſe (mee thinkes) the ſaid ſtone cannot be remooued, which ſtone is bored through the midſt, with a hole that paſſeth quite through, of three handfulls wide, wherein the Pilgrimes (which in exceeding great number come thither for deuotion) doe put their hands, and ſay, that there are ſeene many miracles.

Pilgrimage and Miracles.

About this Church is a way like a Cloyſter, but fiue ſteps lower then the Church, wherein toward the Eaſt are three Windowes, which giue light to the Church that is beneath, which Windowes are as high as the floore of the vpper Church, which is higher then that Way or Cloyſter, by as much as the fiue ſteps doe contayne, and if you looke through the ſaid Windowes, you may ſee the ſaid Tombe placed right before the Altar, as I haue ſaid. Before the great Chappell is a Tombe hewen out of the ſame ſtone which the Church is of, and they ſay, it is like vnto the Tombe of Chriſt in Ieruſalem, whereunto they doe great honour and reuerence: and in the ſame ſtone, on the right hand, are two Images carued and engrauen out of the ſame ſtone, ſo well made that they ſeeme to haue life: one is of Saint Iohn, and the other of Saint Peter, which they ſhewed me as a rare thing, and I tooke great delight to behold them, whereunto they doe great reuerence.

The holy Sepulchre reſembled.

This Church hath alſo on the left hand a Chappell, made after their manner, which ſeemeth to be a Church, becauſe it hath Allies. It hath ſixe Pillars about it, cut out of the ſame Rocke, well and finely made; and the middle Ally is very well arched or vaulted. The Gates and Windowes are very well wrought, to wit, the principall Gate, and one ſide-gate, for the other ſerueth for the great Church. This Chappell is as long as it is broad, to wit, two and fiftie ſpans euery way; and on the right ſide, it hath hard vnto it another ſmall Chappell very high, but narrow, after the manner of a Bell, with very faire Windowes: and the ſaid ſmall Chappell is ſixe and thirtie ſpannes high, and twelue broad. All the Altars of the ſaid Churches haue their clothes of ſilke, and their Pillars made out of the ſaid Rocke. There is about the Church a very great circuit, hewen out of the ſelfe ſame Rocke of the Mountayne by force of Maſonrie, which is ſquare, and all the walls thereof haue holes in them, as bigge as a Cube, and all theſe holes are ſtopped with ſmall ſtones, and they are burials, for a man may ſee that they are but newly ſtopped. The entrance of the circuit is thirteene ſpannes deepe beneath the Mountaine, and all made by force of Maſonrie.

The open circuit of the Church which is the Cloyſter, is all hewen out of the ſame Rocke, and is ſixtie ſpans broad in euery part, and in the front of the principall Porch, it is one hundred fathome wide, and aboue the Church, where it ſhould be couered, where nine great Arches ſtand on each ſide, they all reach from the top vnto the ground, where the Tombes are on each ſide, placed like thoſe in the other Church. The entry to paſſe into the circuit or Cloyſter of the ſaid Church, is hewen vnder the Rocke, the ſpace of eightie ſpans, wrought artificially, ſo broad, that ten men may goe ſide by ſide, and is a Lance high, and it aſcendeth by little and lit-

The deſcription of the other Churches, is for breuitie omitted.

The excellency of theſe Churches, which the Author went twice to ſee.

I take God to witneſſe, in whoſe hands I am, that all that I haue written is moſt true, without adding any thing thereunto: for hauing heard report of the maruels of theſe Churches, I would needs goe thither twice, to ſee them and deſcribe them, ſo great was my deſire to make the excellency of them knowne vnto the world.

Great aſcent.

Theſe Vaulted churches made by White men.

Bal.lela.

This place is ſeated on the ſide of a Mountaine, and to go vp to the top thereof is a very great aſcent, which I thinke cannot be performed in a day and a halfe, ſuch is the height thereof, and yet notwithſtanding, aboue the ſame, there ſeemeth to be another Mountaine, and that this hill is ſeparated from the other. And to goe downe from this place into the plaine, is about fifteene miles ſpace, and in the way are mightie fields, which ſeame to continue a good daies iourney and more, all which ſtretch toward the Riuer Nilus, wherein are as great ſtore of habitations as in the Towne of Caxumo, built exceeding ſtately with ſquare ſtones, for here they ſay, the Kings were wont to haue their dwellings: and that the worke of theſe Churches cut into the hils, was made by Gibetes, that is to ſay, White men: for they know well, that themſelues cannot turne their hands to make any ſuch worke: and that the firſt King which cauſed them to be made, was called Balibela, which ſignifieth a Miracle: becauſe at his birth he was couered with Bees, which made him cleane, without doing him any hurt: and he was the Sonne of the Siſter of a King, which King dyed without heire, and therefore his Nephew was made King, and that he was a Saint; and their deuotion is ſo great, that all Ethiopia hath concourſe hither, and here they ſee very many miracles.

Tributes.

This Signiory of Abugana, where theſe buildings are, before our departure the Prete Ianni beſtowed vpon the Frier, which afterward came with vs as Embaſſadour into Portugall: and therefore I ſay, that I was twice to view theſe Churches and buildings; and the ſecond time that I came thither, was when the Embaſſadour came to take poſſeſſion of the ſame Lordſhip. During whoſe aboade in that place, there came thither two Calacenes, that is, Meſſages or Commandements of the King, and they told the ſaid Embaſſadour or Captaine, that the Preto Ianni ſent him word, that he ſhould ſend him certaine tributes, which his Predeceſſour ought to haue paied him; which was one hundred and fiftie Oxen for the Plough, thirtie Dogges, thirtie Ianelins, and thirtie Targets. He anſwered them, that hee would ſee what goods there remained of his Predeceſſour, and that he would pay it all very willingly, although he found none at all.

Ingabela.

Olaby.

Pepper preferred to Hens.

Tygers.

Returning now vnto our Voyage, we departed from the Church and faire of Ancona, and hauing trauailed nine miles, we came with our goods to certaine Villages, where they would not lodge vs, ſaying; That they were places which belonged to the Mother of Prete Ianni, and were ſubiect to no body elſe but to her. And they would haue beaten the Frier which guided vs. They baſted well a Seruant of his. Leauing our ſtuffe here, wee came to our lodging at a place called Ingabela, which is great, and repleniſhed with goodly houſes, and ſituate vpon a little hill, in the midſt of a field, enuironed round about with Mountaines, at the bottome of which Mountaines there are ſo many peopled Townes, that I haue not ſeene the like in any place; there are alſo great ſtore of Fountaines and Brookes, which runne downe on euery ſide, which water a great part of the Countrey, which is called Olaby. And while we were heere, I ſaw them building a moſt beautifull Church, wee found heere exceeding great abundance of Hennes, whereof we might haue had an infinite number in exchange, of a few Graines of Pepper, ſo ſmall account they make of Hennes, and ſo highly they eſteeme of Pepper. In this place were infinite ſtore of Limons, Citrons, and Orenges. We abode here Saturday and Sunday, on which day the Tygres aſſailed vs, and we could not ſo well defend our ſelues, but they deuoured an Aſſe of ours.

Angoteraz.

Enemies.

56. On Thurſday, the foureteenth of September, we went with our goods to a dry Riuer, three miles off where the Lord of this Kingdome of Angote had his reſidence, which is called Angoteraz. Before we came thither, we ſaw much people aſſembled together, and we ſuppoſed that they were aſſembled to carrie our goods: but they came to doe vs ſmall pleaſure, for they encloſed vs betweene them, getting vp into three ſmall hils, and we were in the bottome, and vpon euery top of the ſaid hils, were about two hundred perſons aſſembled, the greateſt part with ſlings to fling ſtones, the reſt flung at vs with their hands, ſo that the number of the ſtones was ſuch, as it ſeemed to raine ſtones, and we ſtood in great feare of our liues. And all of vs which were in company with the Frier, were aboue fortie perſons; to wit, the Captaines which waighted vpon him, with certaine of their Men, and ſome of our Slaues; and all ſaue my ſelfe, and a young man which was with vs, which was ſicke of the Meaſels, were very ſhrewdly ſtoned and wounded: but God of his Grace vouchſafed to preſerue him and me. They tooke ſome of vs alſo Priſoners, and wee which fled in the Euening, came to our lodging where our ſtuffe was, without our Suppers.

On Saturday Angoteraz ſent for vs to his houſe, where at our entrance wee found no hinderance at all of guard, but entred freely, and found him with his Wife, and certaine of his familiar friends, and he gaue vs good intertainment as well in countenance as in ſpeach. Foure Iarres of excellent Wine made of Hony were ſtanding by him, and by euery Iarre was ſet a Cup of Cryſtall-Glaſſe, and ſo we began to drinke, and his Wife and two other Women in the company inuited vs.

Cryſtal glaſſes.

On Sunday next wee went to Church, where we found Angoteraz, which came to meete vs with great courteſie, and then he beganne to ſpeake of matters concerning our Faith, and called vnto him two Friers, beſides the Interpreter and the Frier that conducted vs; And his firſt queſtion was, Where Chriſt was borne, and which way he went, when he went into Egypt, and how many yeares he abode there, and how old he was when our Lady loſt him, and found him in the Temple, and where he made of Water, Wine. It pleaſed God to helpe me, ſo that I anſwered him according to the truth, better then I knew. The Interpreter told me, that the Frier which guided vs, informed the other two Friers, that I was a man that vnderſtood much, vpon which ſpeaches they fell downe vpon the ground, and whither I would or no, would needs kiſſe my feet, & Angoteraz embraced me, and kiſſed me on the face, who, as I was informed afterwards, is one of the beſt, and moſt learned Prieſts in all Ethiopia: and at our returne, wee ſaw him honoured with the Title of Barnagaſſo. Afterward, he deſired vs to heare Maſſe with them, which being ended, he inuited vs to dinner, but the Embaſſadour hauing vnderſtood before hand what meate they would ſet before vs, thought good to ſend for our owne dinner, which was certaine fat roſted Hens, and fat Beefe, and freſh Fiſh.

Queſtions of Religion.

Reuerence to Aluarez.

Angoteraz a Prieſt.

The houſe where we dined, was great, and made with earth, which is (as wee haue ſaid) a Betenegus. Before the bed, whereat Angoteraz ſate, many Mats were ſpread vpon the ground, and he came downe from his bed and ſate downe vpon them, where many skins of blacke ſheepe were ſpread, and two great platters of exceeding white wood, with low brims, like thoſe which we vſe to picke Wheate in, which they call Ganetus, and they were very faire, great, and large, with a brim of two fingers broad, the greateſt was about eighteene ſpans in compaſſe, and the leſſer foureteene, and theſe be the Tables of great Lords. And heere wee ſate round about with the ſaid Angoteraz: we had water brought vs, and waſhed our hands, but they brought vs no Towell to dry them with, much leſſe to ſet our bread vpon: but in the ſaid platters were loaues brought, made of ſundry ſorts of Corne, to wit, of Wheate, of Barley, of Millet, of Fitches, and of Taffo. Before we beganne to eate, Angoteraz commanded one to bring him a great piece of the courſeſt bread, and with his owne hand laying a piece of raw Beefe vpon the ſame, he ſent it to the poore which ſtood without the gate, waiting for an almes. Wee indeed ſaid Grace after our manner, whereat he ſeemed to take great delight.

The dyet of the Noblemen of Ethiopia.

Then came there in the Imbandigioni, whereof I dare not in a manner ſpeake, but yet they are ordinary diſhes in that Countrey, and theſe were their ſauces or broaths, wherein were certain pieces of raw fleſh with warme bloud, which in this Country is eſteemed for a moſt delicate diſh, and none but great perſonages eate thereof. Theſe ſauces were brought in certaine little diſhes, very finely made of blacke earth, and they ſtrewed vpon them certaine crums of bread, and alwaies powred butter vpon them. We would not taſte at any hand of theſe their meats, but fed of that, which our Ambaſſadour had cauſed to be brought for vs, as I ſaid before. And like as we could not eate of their meats, ſo neither would they taſte of ours. But as for their wine, in truth it walked about with great furie, and the wife of Angoteraz dined hard by vs, vpon ſuch a Table as we vſed, and we ſent vnto her of our meats, and we could not ſee whether ſhe taſted thereof, becauſe there was a Curtaine betweene her and vs, but in drinking ſhe brauely ſeconded vs. After al other diſhes, a breaſt of Raw Beefe was brought to the boord, which we did not once touch, but Angoteraz fed thereof, as if he had eaten Marchpane or Comfits after dinner. After we had dined, and giuen thankes vnto Angoteraz, we returned home vnto our lodging.

Raw Beefe.

57. On Munday morning, we went to take our leaue of Angoteraz, & the Frier led vs through a mightie thicke Wood, ſo that we knew not whither we went, but wee came to the place where we were ſtoned: and hither he would needs goe to ſee Iuſtice done. We were eight vpon Mules, and fifteene on foote, and comes to our lodging in the houſe of one of them, which were the principall that made the aſſault, and we found them all fled vnto a Mountaine neere adioyning, but there was good prouiſion for our ſelues, and for our Mules. This night the Frier returned, and brought with him a couple of Mules, one Oxe, and eight pieces of Cloath, which they had giuen him, in recompenſe of the blood which they had ſhed. And the Iuſtice vſed in this Countrey, is to take the goods of Malefactors; as namely, their Oxen, and their Mules. Theſe places are called, Angua, and Maſtano, and belong to the Patriarke Abuna Marke.

Heere we began to enter into a pleaſant and delectable Countrey, lying among very high Mountaines, but infinitely peopled, at the foote thereof, with great Townes, and very Noble Churches, which was tilled and ſowed with all kind of Corne. Here we ſaw infinite ſtore of Indian Figges, Limons, Orenges, and Citrons, without number, and Paſtures with an incredible multitude of Cattle. And becauſe I trauailed another time this way with the foreſaid Frier, which then was called the Embaſſadour, and ſtayed a Saturday and a Sunday, in the houſe of an honourable Canon, and euery day went to Church with him, where wee ſaw very great number of Canons, We asked him, how many Canons there were in all; He told vs, aboue eight hundred. We inquired farther, what reuenues they had? He told vs, very little among ſo many: We replyed vnto him, Why are you ſo many, ſeeing your reuenue is ſo ſmall? He anſwered vs, that at the beginning when theſe Churches were firſt founded, they were not many, but that in proceſſe of time they were increaſed: becauſe that all the ſonnes of the Canons, as many as doe deſcend of them, become all Canons: and this cuſtome is obſerued in the Kings Churches: and that the Prete Ianni, as often as he buildeth any new Church, ſendeth for Canons hither, and ſo he diminiſheth their number, as hee did when he built the Church, called Machan Celacem, when he tooke away two hundred, and that in this ſame Signiory there were eight Churches, wherein were about foure thouſand Canons: and that if the Prete Ianni ſhould not take them away for the furniſhing of theſe new Churches, and thoſe of his Court, they ſhould be driuen to eate one another.

A fertile and populous Countrey.

Foure thouſand Canons in eight Churches.

§. IX.

Of the exceeding huge Mountaine, whereupon the Sonnes of PRETE IANNI are kept, where we were almoſt ſtoned to death: The greatneſſe, guard, manner of ſending, puniſhments; Of the PRETES Kindred.

The hill, by ſome called Amara.

Thus ancient Law-giuers, as Numa, &c. aſcribed their deuiſes to Deity, as Abraham, heere likewiſe, to ſecure himſelfe, perhaps dreamed waking.

58. THE foreſaid Valley, reacheth vnto a moſt huge Mountaine, whereon the Sonnes of Prete Ianni are continually kept, as it were in priſon. And they haue accorded in their old Bookes, that in the daies of a King of Ethiopia, called Abraham, it was reuealed vnto him one night in a dreame, That if he deſired to keepe his Realme in quiet and obedience, he ſhould ſhut vp his Sonnes, which were many, in a Mountain, and ſuffer none of them to come abroad, ſauing him which he would haue to be his Succeſſour, and that this order ſhould alwaies be obſerued, as a thing which came from God, otherwiſe Ethiopia being large and great, ſome part thereof would fall to inſurrection, and would bee diſobedient vnto the heire, or elſe perchance would kill him. The King ſtanding doubtfull concerning this relation, where ſuch a Mountaine might be found; it was againe reuealed vnto him, That he ſhould ſend to ſearch out all the Countrey, till he found a place where they ſhould finde Goates vpon the cragges and cliffes of Rockes, ſo high, that it ſhould ſeeme they would fall downe, and that in this place he ſhould ſhut them vp. Which being done, this Mountaine was found out, which is ſo huge, that they ſay a man muſt ſpend many daies in compaſſing the foote thereof.

This Mountaine is exceeding ſteepe, round about from the top to the bottome, ſo that it ſeemeth to be a wall that riſeth vpright, and to a man that looketh vpward, the sky ſeemeth to reſt vpon it. It hath onely three entrances or gates, and no more, whereby a man may aſcend vp to it, and of theſe I ſaw one, vpon this occaſion. We came from the Sea vpon a time, to goe to the Court, and one of thoſe Seruants of Prete Ianni, whom they call Calacem, was our guide, which was not very well acquainted with the Countrey, and when we ſought to lodge in a Village the Inhabitants would not receiue vs, becauſe they ſaid, It belonged to a Siſter of Prete Ianni, and we were inforced to trauaile forward: the night was farre ſpent, and this guide began to ride a great pace, and haſted vs forward, ſaying; That he would bring vs to a good lodging. I cauſed Lopez de Gama, which had a good Mule, to ride in ſight of the ſaid Calacem, and my ſelfe followed him, and the Embaſſadour and the reſt kept me in ſight. And hauing trauailed aboue three miles out of our way, toward the Mountaine where the Sonnes of Prete Ianni are kept, as ſoone as we were perceiued by the trotting of our horſes, in a moment there aſſembled ſo great a multitude of the people of all thoſe Townes, that they had almoſt killed vs with ſtones, and we were inforced to diuide our ſelues. The Embaſſadour ſtayed behind, and I went forward, becauſe I could not otherwiſe chooſe, to a place where it rained ſtones on all ſides, and the night was exceeding darke, and becauſe they ſhould not perceiue me, I alighted, and gaue my Mule to a Slaue of mine.

The Portugals danger by approaching this place.

It was my chance, that a Warder of this Mountaine, a very honeſt man, rode next vnto mee, who enquired of me what I was, I told him I was a Gaxia Negu, that is to ſay, a ſtranger of the King. This man cauſing me ſtrait-way to ride neere him, held one of his armes ouer my head, ſaying vnto me, Ate fra, Ate fra; that is to ſay, Feare not, feare not; and brought me into an Orch-yard neere vnto his houſe, where ſtood many long pieces of Timber ſet vp againſt certaine Trees, vnder which he cauſed me to goe, becauſe they were in manner of a Cabin, where being as I thought in ſecuritie, I cauſed a Candle to be lighted, and immediatly they beganne to raine ſtones, whereupon I ſuddenly cauſed it to bee blowne out. This honeſt man afterward brought me to his houſe, and gaue me a very good Supper, to wit, roſted Hennes, and Bread and Wine; and on the morning taking me by the hand, he led me to ſhew me the way whereby they goe vp into the Mountaine and Rockes, which were rent on euery ſide, and there ſtood a verie high gate, which is kept ſhut, within the which is a very great Garriſon of Souldiers. And hee told mee, that if any man ſhould preſume to enter, hee ſhould ſuddenly haue his hands and his feet cut off, and his eyes bored out, and that wee were not in fault for comming ſo neere vnto that gate, but that they which were our guides deſerued to be puniſhed.

Penaltie of entring the gate.

59. The manner of the ſending of the Sonnes of the Prete into this Mountaine, is this: that whereas all the Prete Ianni, the Predeceſſors of this Dauid were wont to haue fiue or ſixe Wiues, and many Sonnes by them, at their death the firſt-borne did inherit. Others ſay, that he inherited which ſeemed to be moſt fit, and of moſt vnderſtanding: and others, hee which had moſt Followers, and greateſt authoritie. Touching this point, I will ſay, that which I haue heard ſpoken by many Courtiers of experience and wiſdome. King Alexander, the Grand-father of this preſent King Dauid, dyed without Sonnes, and although hee had Daughters, yet notwithſtanding the great men of the Court went vnto this Mountaine, and fetcht from thence Nahu his Brother, which was the Father of this Dauid. This Nahu brought with him from the Mountaine a lawfull Sonne of his, which was a very noble and valiant Prince, but he was ſomething head-ſtrong and proud. After he was ſetled in the Kingdome he had other Wiues, and Sonnes, and Daughters, and after his death they would haue made his eldeſt Sonne King, which came from the Mountaine with his Father, but it was obiected, that becauſe he was ſo proud and obſtinate, he would intreat all the people badly.

Manner of ſending the Pretes Sonnes.

King Alexander

Others were of opinion, that he could not inherite, being borne in captiuitie, where he had no right of ſucceſſion, and ſo they made this Dauid King, which was the firſt borne, after his father was made King, and was eleuen yeares old. The Patriarke Abuna Mark did tell mee, that he and Queene Helena made him King, becauſe they had at their commandement, all the great Lords of the Court; and ſo alſo it ſeemeth vnto me, that next after the Title of firſt borne, the adherences, friendſhips, and treaſures may doe much. The reſt of the ſonnes of Nahu, the Brethren of the ſaid Dauid, which were young, were ſent to bee kept in the ſaid Mountaine with that eldeſt Sonne of his, which was brought with him from thence: and ſo all the Sonnes of the Prete haue beene vſed from the time of that King Abraham vnto this preſent day. They ſay it is very cold on the top of this Mountaine, and that it is round, and that it cannot be compaſſed about in leſſe then fifteene dayes. And in my iudgement, it appeareth ſo to be. In this part where our way lay we trauelled almoſt two dayes, and then we left it, which reacheth vnto the Kingdome of Amara, and Bogamidri, which confineth vpon Nilus, which Kingdome is very farre from hence.

Dauid, the preſent Prete Ianni ſucceeded in the Kingdome.

The coldneſſe and greatneſſe of this Mountaine.

Amara, & Bagamidri.

Vpon this Mountaine are other Mountaines which make certaine Vallies, wherein are very many Riuers and Fountaines, and Fields which are manured by the Inhabitants. There is alſo a Valley betweene two Mountaines, which is very ſtrong, ſo that by no meanes a man can goe out of the ſame, becauſe the paſſage is cloſed vp with exceeding ſtrong gates, and in this Valley which is very great, and hath many Townes and Dwellings in it, they keepe thoſe which are of the Bloud-Royall, and it is but lately ſince they haue found this meanes to keepe them in the ſaid Valley, thinking that they be ſafer here: but the Kings Grand-children and Nephewes, and ſuch as are almoſt forgotten are not kept with ſo great a Guard, notwithſtanding, this Mountaine is guarded round about with exceeding great Garriſons, and grand Captaines; and the fourth part of the people which come vnto the Court are of the Captaines and Garriſons of this Mountaine, which haue their Lodging ſeparate from all others, neither doe they come to any other, nor others vnto them, becauſe they will not haue any bodie elſe to know the ſecrets of the ſaid Mountaine. And when they come to the Court of the Prete, immediately hee ſendeth his meſſage to them, and euery man with-draweth himſelfe, and all other buſineſſe whatſoeuer ceaſeth, while theſe Affaires are handled.

60. Touching the ſtate of theſe Sons of the Prete, I ſaw a Frier of thirtie yeares of age, which was brought vnto the preſence of the Prete, and aboue two hundred men with him, who was ſaid to haue brought a Letter to Prete Ianni, from thoſe of the Mountaine; and theſe two hundred men were part of the Garriſons of the ſame. They beat this Frier euery other day, and in like ſort they beate theſe men, diuided into two parts; and that day when they beate the Frier, they beate the one halfe of them, and alwayes they begun with the Frier, and all the reſt were continually preſent, and ſtill they inquired of the Frier who gaue him that Letter, and for what cauſe, and whether hee had euer carryed any more Letters, and of what Monaſtery he was, and where he was made Frier. The naughtie wretch anſwered, that ſixteene yeares paſt he came out of the Mountaine, and that then the Letter was deliuered vnto him, and that he neuer after returned thither, and that he neuer durſt deliuer the ſame till now, that the Deuill had prouoked him thereunto. And this might be true, ſeeing it is not the manner in this Countrey, to put any date vnto their Letters, neither of yeare, nor moneth, nor day. The men were demanded nought elſe, but how they had let the ſaid Frier get out.

Seueritie on a Frier, and 200. men, for a meſſage form this mountain.

In this Countrey they vſe not to write vpon their letters, neither day nor moneth.

Manner of beating and crueltie.

The manner of beating them was after this ſort, they throw the Malefactor on the ground vpon his belly, and bind his hands vnto two ſtakes,and a cord about both his legs, and two men hold this cord and draw it out ſtrait, and two Miniſters of Iuſtice ſtand by, one at the head, and another at the feet, neither do they alwayes ſtrike them, but betweene whiles, for if they ſhould beat them continually, they would die, they lay on ſo cruelly. I ſaw them carrie one away,and before they could couer him with a cloth, he gaue vp the ghoſt; whereof the Prete being informed (becauſe this execution was done before his Tents) he commanded that the dead man ſhould be carryed backe vnto the place where he was beaten, and that they which were beaten, ſhould lay their heads vpon the feet of the dead corps. This execution laſted a fortnight, wherein this order of beating the Frier, and halfe of the Guard from two dayes, to two dayes neuer ceaſed, ſauing onely vpon Saturday and Sunday, whereon they puniſh no Malefactors.

Saturday and Sunday free from executions.

Eſcape of the Pretes Brother, and what followed.

During the time of our abode in this Country,a Brother of the Prete,of ſixteene yeares of age, fled out of the Mountaine, and came at length to his Mothers houſe, which was Queene Helena, and was Wife to the Father of this King. And becauſe no man might receiue any that came out of the Mountaine vpon paine of life, the Mother would not harbour her Sonne, but tooke him and brought him to Prete Ianni, who asked him why hee fled away, which anſwered, becauſe that he was ſtarued for hunger; and that he came thither for nothing elſe, but onely to giue him witting thereof, becauſe no bodie elſe would bring him this meſſage.It was giuen out, that the Prete apparelled him in rich array, and gaue him much Gold and cloth of Silke, and ſent him backe into the Mountaine. It was alſo giuen out through all the Court, that this yong man fled, thinking to eſcape away with the Portugals. This Nobleman which fled and was ſent backe againe into the Mountaine, while we abode with the Ambaſſadour of Prete Ianni, which came into Portugall, in the Countrey of Lalibella, (where the Churches are which are hewen into the Rockes) paſſed that way with a Calazen, and with a great traine of people, which conducted him vpon a Mule, and he rode all couered ouer with blacke clothes,ſo that no part of him might be ſeene, neither could any part of the Mule bee ſeene, ſaue her eyes and eares. It was reported, that he fled away the ſecond time in a Friers Weed with another Frier, and that this Frier his companion diſcouered him the ſame day, that they ſhould haue departed out of the Countrey of Prete Ianni, and ſo they led him away Priſoner with the Frier, neither would they ſuffer them to ſpeake to any bodie, and two men alwayes went hard by his Mule. Euery bodie reported, that hee ſhould bee put to death, or haue his eyes put out. I know not what became of him.

A Sonne of Prete Ianni had his eyes put out, for flying out of the Mountaine.

We heard reported of another, which would haue fled out of the Mountaine, and hid himſelfe vnder many boughes and leaues of trees, and certaine Husbandmen which paſſed that way, ſeeing the ſaid boughes ſtirre, went to behold what the matter was, and laid hold on him, and the Guard, aſſoone as they had him in their clutches put out his eyes, and yet he liueth till this preſent, and is great Vncle to this Prete Ianni. It is reported, that there are great numbers of the Bloud-Royall in this Mountaine, whom they call Iſraelites, or the Sonnes of Dauid, for they are all of the ſame Kindred and Bloud that Prete Ianni is of. In the ſame Mountaine are many Churches and Monaſteries builded hauing many Prieſts and Friers in them, and many Inhabitants which neuer come downe out of that place.

No Kindred to the Prete. This commeth neere to the Ottoman policie: here ciuilly to kill all but one, as they doe really. No honour to the Females of Pretes bloud, nor to their iſſue.

61. The Prete Ianni hath no Kinsfolkes at all,for thoſe which came of the Mothers ſide,are not taken nor named for his Kinsfolkes, and thoſe of the Fathers ſide are ſhut vp in the ſaid Mountaine, and held as dead men. And although they marrie, and haue great ſtore of children there, yet none of the male-children may come forth, except (as I haue ſaid before) the Prete die without heire: then they fetch out of that place the next of Kindred, and fitteſt to gouerne. Some of the Females come out to be married, but are not eſteemed as the Kinſwomen, Daughters, or Siſters of the Prete, but are honoured during the life of their Father or Brother, and as ſoone as he dyeth, they become like to any other Ladie. All of vs ſaw a Ladie in the Court, which was the Daughter of a Prete, which albeit, when ſhee went abroad, had a Canopie carried ouer her, yet notwithſtanding, ſhe had a very ſimple Traine. We knew alſo a Sonne of hers, which was in as meane a caſe as any poore foot-man, ſo that in a very ſhort ſpace the fame of his Parentage was extinguiſhed.

Charges of this Royall Priſon. Bountie of Prete Dauid.

This King Dauid which now liueth, at our departure had two ſonnes, and three daughters, to whom he allotted out great reuenues, which he intended to beſtow vpon them, and the place was ſhewed me, where one of them poſſeſſed theſe reuenues: but the report was generall, that as ſoone as the father ſhould deceaſe, and that one of them was made King, the other ſhould be ſent vnto the Mountaine, whither hee ſhould carrie nothing but his perſon with him, And it was told me, that the third part of the charges which the Prete is at, is ſpent in the keeping of theſe Iſraelites, to whom he maketh better allowance, then any of his predeceſſors haue done. And beſides the great reuenues which belong vnto them, he ſendeth them much Gold, cloth of Silke, and fine clothes, and much Salt, which runneth for currant money in theſe Kingdomes. And at our comming thither, hauing preſented him with our Pepper, wee vnderſtood of a certaintie, that he ſent the one halfe thereof vnto them, willing them to reioyce and be merrie, becauſe the King of Portugall, his father, had ſent to viſite him, and had ſent him that Pepper.

Wee vnderſtood alſo of a ſuretie, and as eye-witneſſes in many places, that Prete Ianni hath great lands and poſſeſſions, manured by his owne ſlaues and Oxen; and that theſe Slaues are apparelled by the King, and are exempted from other people, and marrie together, and are alwaies Slaues. The whole reuenues of theſe Poſſeſſions which are about the Mountaine are carried vp into it, the reuenues of other places goe vnto the Monaſteries, Churches, and the poore, and ſpecially to certaine poore and aged Gentlemen, which in times paſt haue beene in gouernment, and at this preſent are out of authoritie. Twiſe alſo hee ſent of this Wheat vnto our companie, to wit, once fiue hundred burthens in Caxumo, and fiue hundred more in Aquate, neither keepeth hee any part of theſe poſſeſſions vnto himſelfe, but beſtoweth all in manner aboueſaid.

Generation of ſlaues.

Of the end of the Kingdome of Angote, and of the beginning of the Kingdome of Amara, and of diuers Lakes; the Church Machan Celacen; Endowments of Churches: Of ABRAHAM. Strange trenches and gates in the entrance to Xoa: and what hapned before the PRETE called for them.

62. Returning to our Voyage, I ſay, that wee went along the foot of this Mountaine by a Riuers ſide, and the Countrey is very goodly and faire, ſowed with much Mill and other Corne of the Countrey, but there is very little Wheat. There are many Villages on both ſides of this Riuer, and on the ſide of the Mountaine, and at the end of the Valley we left this Riuer, and began to find a wooddie Country full of ſtones. Here are no Mountaines, but certaine ſmall Valles ſowed with Wheat and Barley, and Pulſe of the Country: and here endeth the Kingdome of Angote, and the Kingdome of Amara beginneth. In the beginning whereof towards the Eaſt, is a great Lake, whereby we lodged, which is eight miles long, and three miles broad. It hath a little Iland in the middeſt, and a Monaſterie of Saint Stephan with many Friers, wherein are many Limons, Oranges, and Citrons, and to paſſe ouer to the Monaſterie, they vſe a raft made of Timber and Bull-ruſhes, with foure great Gourds, and they make it in this former: They take foure Poles of wood, and lay Bull-ruſhes vpon them, ſtanding vpon theſe Bull-ruſhes, being very well bound together, and vpon theſe they lay other foure Poles well bound and faſtened, and at euery corner there is a great Gourd, and in this manner they paſſe ouer to the Ile. This Lake runneth not but in Winter time, when the water ouerfloweth, and it iſſueth out at two places. There are in this Lake certaine great beaſts which they call Gomarae, which are Sea-horſes, and alſo a fiſh like vnto a Congre, which is very great and long, and hath the moſt mis-ſhapen head that may be imagined, made after the manner of a Toad, and the skinne vpon the head thereof ſeemeth to be like the skinne of a Snake, and all the reſt of the bodie is ſmooth like a Congre, and it is the fatteſt and moſt delicate fiſh that is in the world. There are great ſtore of Villages about this Lake, which reach downe to the brinke of the water, and there are fifteene Xumetes or Captainſhips, and moſt pleaſant fields of Wheat and Barley. We haue ſeene many Lakes in theſe Countreys, but this is the greateſt of all that I haue ſeene. The Countrey is very faire and fruitfull.

The Ieſuites call this Lake Aicha.

A Monaſterie in a Lake.

Sea-horſes.

Ill ſhaped, well taſted fiſh.

Many Lakes.

Wee trauelled from hence aboue ſixteene miles, through a Countrey very well ſowed with Millet, and repleniſhed with Fountaines. The three and twentieth of September, wee went from thence to a Towne, called Azzel, which is ſeated vpon a ſmall Hill, betweene two Riuers, and all the field was ſowed with Wheat, Millet, and all kind of pulſe, and it is a place wherein a great Faire is kept. Beyond one of theſe Riuers there is a Towne of Moores, rich and of great trafficke, as of Slaues, cloth of Silke, and of all other ſorts of merchandiſe, as it is in the Towne of Manadeli vpon the Confines of Tigremahon. Theſe Moores pay great tribute to the Prete, and here the Chriſtians and the Moores are very familiar together, for they bring them water, they waſh their cloth, and daily in this place the Chriſtian women keepe companie with the Moores, of which their doing we thought not well. Wee ſtayed all Saturday and Sunday at the foot of this Towne, where all night our men fought with their Lances againſt the Tygres, which would haue carried away our Mules, and ſlept not a winke. The next day, we trauelled through a plaine Countrey, well peopled, and well manured for the ſpace of ſixe miles. Then wee aſcended vp an high Mountaine, without all kind of Rockes and Woods, but was all plowed and ſowen, and reſted our ſelues about noon-tide. While I ſtayed here, ten or twelue men of account, and our Interpreter were with me, and wee began to diſcourſe of the heighth of this Mountaine whereon we ſtood, and the waſte Countrey which we viewed with our eyes. They ſhewed me the Mountaine where the Sonnes of the Prete are kept, which ſeemed not paſt twelue miles from vs, and we might ſee the Rocke which was all ragged on euery ſide, which ſtretcheth ſo farre toward the Riuer Nilus, that wee could not diſcerne the end thereof, and it was ſo high, that the Mountaine where we were, ſeemed to bee vnder the foot thereof. Heere they informed me particularly of the great Garriſons, which were maintained for the keeping of the Kings Sonnes, and of the abundance of victuals and apparell which they had. They told me moreouer, that this high Mountaine whereon we ſtood, diuided the Countrey where the Millet growes, from that where the Wheate groweth, and that from hence forward we ſhould find no more Millet, but Wheate and Barley.

Another Lake.
Great hurtfull Flies.
Want of skill and induſtrie.

63. We trauelled ouer the top of this Mountaine, hauing a plaine way aboue nine miles, and on euery ſide were fields ſowed with Wheat and Barley. Here wee found another Lake but not ſo great, it might be ſome three miles long, and two miles abroad. Wee lodged in a field all full of goodly paſture, where we found ſuch a multitude of Flies, which were very great, that we thought they would haue killed vs. This field was not ſowed, becauſe it was halfe ouer-flowne with water, for they know no meanes to conueigh away the water, and cauſe it to paſſe downe from the Mountaine.

Coldnights.
Nakedneſſe.
Trumpetters Land.
Rich Church.

We began afterward to enter into a Countrey, wherein the day time it was very hot, and in the night exceeding cold, and we ſaw the Inhabitants weare about them before their priuities, a piece of an Oxe-hide. The women likewiſe weare a piece of cloth twice as bigge as the mens was, and couered as much as they could therewith, yet the greater part was ſeene neuertheleſſe, the reſt of their bodie was all naked. Their haire was diuided in two parts, the one hanging downe to their ſhoulders, and the other to their eares, and they ſay, that theſe Lands belong vnto the Trumpetters of Prete Ianni. A little out of the way is a great Wood of Trees vnknowne to vs, but exceeding high, neere vnto which there is a Church of many Canons, built by a King that lyes there buried. Hauing paſſed this day ouer very huge Mountaines, we came to our lodging being gotten out of them, at the enterance of a paſſing goodly field.

Machan Ca'acen.
Inhoſpitall holineſſe.

The ſixe and twentieth of September, in the morning we trauelled through the ſaid Champaigne field, deſcending ſtill for the ſpace of ſix miles, and came to a faire and mightie Church, called Machan Celacen, which ſignifieth, The Trinitie, which we ſaw afterward with Prete Ianni, when he remoued his Fathers bones. This Church hath two great circuits, one compaſſed about with an high wall of plankes, and the other paled round about, and the paled circuit, contained aboue two miles in compaſſe. We went thither very ioyfull, thinking to haue ſeene the ſaid Church, but when we came neere it within a Croſſe-bow-ſhoot, two men came vnto vs to cauſe vs to light: for this is the cuſtome when any man commeth neere to a Church. And when we were come to the gate of this circuit, they would neither ſuffer vs to enter, nor yet the Frier that was our giude, and with their fiſts they thruſt him in the breſt, telling him, that he had no authoritie to bring vs in.

Goodly countrey.
Churches Royall and vulgar.

This Champaigne field, and the ſituation of the Church are very beautifull: for all the Countrey is manured for the ſpace of ten or twelue miles, neither is there any one ſpanne of ground, which is not manured and full of all kind of Corne, except Millet: and in all monethes of the yeare here Corne is reaped and ſowed, ſo that alwayes here is ſome Corne ripe, and ſome greene. On both ſides of this Church, runneth an exceeding faire Riuer, without any Trees growing on the bankes, and they fetch water out of the ſame to water the fields, and out of certaine hils adioyning, deſcend alſo many Fountaines of water, which water all the Countrey. There are likewiſe many Houſes and Towns, the one ſeparated from the other with their Churches; for whereſoeuer the King hath a Church, there alſo muſt be Churches for the Hubandmen.

Taffila.

64. After we were paſſed through theſe Champions, we trauelled in greater fields about thirtie ſix miles Eaſtward, where they ſhewed vs a Church of S. George, wherein the Grandfather of this Prete Ianni lyeth buried. Heere they informed vs, that the ancient Kings which came out of the Kingdomes of Barnagaſſo and Tigremahon, when they had their firſt beginning, enlarged their Kingdomes through theſe Countries of the Moores and Gentiles, and paſſing through the Countrey of Tigrai, and ſo through Angote they came into the Kingdome of Amara, but before they came thither is the Kingdome of Xoa, wherin are certaine exceeding great trenches, and here they dwelt a long time, & builded many Churches and houſes, endowing the ſame with great Reuenues, neither is there any ſpan of ground which belongeth not to the Churches. And Nabu the Father of this Prete began the Church of Machan Celacen, and his Sonne afterward furniſhed and endowed it. This Realme hath no more the name of a Signiorie, for the title thereof was Amara Taffila, which ſignifieth King of Amara, as Xoa Taſila, King of Xoa.

All Churches no Monaſteries.
Prieſts ſerue the King, and Iuſtice executed on them.

And when the bones of this Nabu was remoued, into the ſaid Church of Machan Celacen, at which Tranſlation we Portugals were preſent. This preſent Prete finiſhed, and confirmed the Donations made of all this Signiory vnto this Church. There is neuer a Monaſtery in all this Kingdome, but all are Churches. The Canons and Prieſts of which, and thoſe of the other Churches of the reſt of the Kingdomes before ſpoken of, ſerue the Prete in all ſeruices, ſauing in war. And in theſe Countries Iuſtice is executed vniuerſally, vpon the Canons, Prieſts, and Friers. And the Frier which guided vs for the conueiance of our ſtuffe, if he were not obeyed, cauſed both Friers and Prieſts to be beaten. As we trauelled through theſe mightie Champaine fields, we thought wee paſſed through a Sea, being not able to ſee any Mountaine at all. The laſt of September, we came to a ſmall Village, where was a Church of our Ladie. Heere toward the Eaſt, beginne certaine ragged and ſtrong Mountaines, with certaine Vallies ſo wonderfull deepe, that a man would thinke they deſcend downe to Hell, neither would any man eaſily beleeue how deepe they be. And euen as the Mountaines, where the Sonnes of the Prete are kept, are craggy from the foote vnto the top, ſo theſe are craggy, for a very great depth, in ſome places twelue miles downe; in others fifteene, and in others leſſe, about nine miles: and it is ſaid, that theſe Vallies ſtretch vnto Nilus, which is very farre from this place toward the Weſt. Wee knew perfectly, that they ſtretch vnto the Countries of the Moores, where they bee not ſo rough and wilde as they be here. In the bottome of theſe Vallies, are great Townes and places manured, and infinite number of great Apes are there, which are hairy on the fore-part of their breaſts, like Lyons.

65. The firſt of October, 1520. we trauelled ſtill through a plaine Countrey, till we came to theſe Vallies, in which our trauell wee found an infinite number of ſmall Lakes and Fountaines, for the ſpace of twelue miles, and came to our lodging in a certaine place, where wee were to paſſe ouer theſe low bottomes. The third of October, hauing trauelled two miles, we came to certaine gates vpon a craggy Rocke, leauing one of them on the right ſide; and the other on the left, and it was ſo narrow, hard by theſe gates, that with much adoe a Cart could paſſe vpon the paſſages which the Mountaine made, and they are ſtopped vp, where theſe Gates are ſo ſtreight in euery Valley: and paſſing through this gate, you deſcend downe a Speares length through a narrow way, made as ſteepe as a Dart in the midſt, ſo that you can paſſe it neither on foote, nor on horſe-back, and this way is ſo ſteepe and down-right, that a man cannot go downe vnleſſe it be on all foure: and it may eaſily bee perceiued, that it was made by arte of man, for the ſafe keeping of that paſſage, and after we were paſſed through this narrow way, wee trauelled for a certaine ſpace, by a way made almoſt as ſteepe as a Dart, for the ſpace of ſix ſpans, and on both ſides are exceeding great downe-fals, and if I had not ſeene our Mules and people paſſe before me, I would haue ſworne that Goates could not haue paſſed that way: and ſo wee put our Mules before vs, as thinking them loſt, and wee came after them. This rough way laſteth the ſpace of a Croſſe-bow ſhot, and this place is called Aquiſagi, which ſignifieth, The death of Aſſes. They pay Toll there. Many times afterward we paſſed by theſe gates, and neuer came that way, but we found Mules and Oxen dead. Beſides this paſſage, there are ſixe miles more of very bad way, all of Rocke, deſcending downe-ward. In the midſt whereof is a Caue digged into the Rocke, out of the top whereof, water continually droppeth, which continuall dropping, maketh proportions in the ſtone of diuers formes.

Aquiſagi, or Death of Aſſes.

At the end of theſe ſixe miles, we found a great Riuer, which is called Anecheta, wherein, as they ſay, is ſtore of great and goodly Fiſh. Afterward we trauelled ſtill vp the hill for three miles ſpace, vntill we come to a little gate, which when we had paſſed, we found another Riuer, where are certaine other gates, which are not vſed. And they which paſſe theſe bottomes and deep Vallies, come hither to their lodging, becauſe they cannot paſſe in one day from one end to the other. Heere the Frier which guided vs, vſed ſuch crueltie towards a Xuum or Captaine, as a man would not haue vſed to a Moore. This Captaine ſent not his men to carrie our ſtuffe ſo ſo ſoone as he ſhould, therefore he deſtroyeth certaine fields of Beanes, and vtterly ſpoyled them, of which Beanes they liue in theſe Vallies, becauſe here groweth nothing but Millet and Beanes. And becauſe we ſpake againſt his doing, he ſaid; That this was the Law of the Countrey, and daily he cauſed many of them which carried our ſtuffe to be beaten, and ſometimes he tooke away their Mules, Oxen, and pieces of Cloath, ſaying, That whoſoeuer ſerued badly, was ſo to be vſed.

The fourth of October, we trauelled ſtill by theſe bad waies, and came to a Riuer, by which we lodged, which is very great and faire, and is called Gemma, and aboundeth with Fiſh, as the Countrey people ſay: and theſe Riuers ioyne together, and fall into Nilus. Wee deſcended downe this Mountaine for ſixe miles ſpace, at the end whereof we found other gates, where we alſo payed for our paſſage. From theſe gates we came to our lodging in a Champaine field, where we found no Vallies nor any thing elſe, but all was plaine & euen ground. The diſtance between both the gates aforeſaid, is aboue fifteene miles, and here is the diuiſion of the Kingdomes of Amara and Xoa. And theſe gates are called Baba Baſſa, which ſignifieth, The new Land. In theſe Vallies and rough grounds, are infinite numbers of all ſorts of Fowles.

66 The fifth of October, wee trauelled through Champaines, not farre diſtant from the ſaid Rockes and deepe Vallies, and we lodged in the mid-way towards a Monaſterie, called Bilibranos, whereof I will ſpeake that which I ſaw Prete Ianni doe three times. The firſt was, when he came to performe a yearely ſolemnitie for a Prelate of that Monaſterie, which was deceaſed, whoſe name was Gianes, and was taken for a Saint. His Title was Icbee, and he is the chiefeſt Prelate of all Ethiopia, ſauing the Patriarke Abuna Marke. The ſecond time, hee came to the election of another Icbee, whoſe name was Iacob, a man of wonderfull holy life, which ſometimes had beene a Moore. This Ichee was our great friend, and he told vs, that he was admoniſhed in a night by a Viſion, that he was not in the right way, and that hee ſhould repaire vnto the Patriarke Abuna Marke, who receiued him graciouſly, and made him a Chriſtian, and inſtructed him in all points of our Faith, as if he had beene his Sonne. Ichee, in the tongue of Tigrai, ſignifieth an Abbot, which is vſed in the Kingdome of Barnagaſſo, and Tigremahon. In this Champaine through which we trauailed, were certaine ſmall houſes, made almoſt vnder-ground, and ſo were the yards likewiſe round about them, where they keep their Cattel, & they ſaid they builded their houſes ſo low, becauſe of the huge Winds, which are riſe in thoſe parts. Heere wee ſaw the people badly apparelled, but ſuch ſtore of Oxen, Mules, and Mares, as it is incredible.

Huge winds.

67. The Wedneſday following, we found a better Countrey, ſowed with Wheate and Barley, and in ſome of theſe fields wee ſaw ſome Corne ripe, ſome newly cut downe, and other which ſeemed newly to be ſowne. This Countrey is called Tabagun, and is very well peopled, with many great Townes, and hath infinite heards of all kinds of Cattell, to wit, of Oxen, Horſes, Mules, and Sheepe. In theſe Countries many are ſicke of Agues, vnto whom, as wee perceiued, they miniſtred no remedy, expecting onely the helpe of Nature, and if any man hath paine in his head, they let him bloud in the head; and if he be ſicke in his breaſt, ſides, or ſhoulders, they ſeare him with a red-hot Iron, as we vſe to ſeare our Cattell.

On Wedneſday, to our great comfort, we began to behold a farre off, the Campe and Pauilions of Prete Ianni, which ſeemed to be infinite, and to couer all the fields, and heere we lodged. On Thurſday, we made no great iourney. From Friday at noone, we reſted all Saturday and Sunday in a little Towne, where there was a new Church, which was not yet painted, (for they paint all their Churches) neither was it very curiouſly wrought, which was called Auriata, that is to ſay, The Church of the Apoſtles, and they ſaid it belonged to the King, vnto whoſe Tents was ſome three miles diſtance: and from this place vnto the Church where Abuna Marke was lodged, is a mile and a halfe, which Abuna Marke is his great Patriarke.

Prete Iannies Campe.
Adrugaz.

68. There came vnto vs a great Lord, who by his office was called Adrugaz, that is to ſay, Great Maſter of the Houſhold, who told vs, that the Prete Ianni vnderſtanding of our comming, had ſent him to guard vs, and prouide vs of all things that wee ſtood in need of, and ſtreight-way willed vs to take Horſe and goe with him, and ſuppoſing hee would haue led vs to the Court, we prepared our ſelues. He cauſed vs to goe backe againe, not the ſame way which we came, but made vs compaſſe certaine ſmall hils, and turned vs backe againe aboue three miles, willing vs not to take it in ill part, becauſe Prete Ianni came that way whether we went, as indeed hee did: we ſaw alſo ſixe or ſeuen men, mounted vpon very goodly Horſes, ride skirmiſhing and playing before vs, hauing their faces wholly couered, ſo that one could not bee diſcerned from the other, and many followed after them vpon Mules, and wee iudged that this Caualcada was made of purpoſe for our ſakes, becauſe the Prete was deſirous to ſee vs, and they led vs on the backe-ſide of certaine ſmall hils, where this Gentleman was lodged in his Tent, and cauſed vs alſo to be placed hard by him, in another goodly Tent, and ſaw vs plentifully prouided of all things, which we ſtood in need of. We were not farre diſtant from the place, where Prete Ianni himſelfe was lodged, the Frier alſo came and lodged neere vs. On Wedneſday, in the morning, they brought vs another goodly great Tent, which was white and round, ſaying, That Prete Ianni ſent vs the ſame, and that no man might haue the like Tent, ſauing the Prete and the Churches, and that himſelfe lodged in the ſame when he trauailed: and ſo we ſtayed vntill Friday, without vnderſtanding what we ſhould doe, but were alwaies well prouided of victuals. The Gentleman which guarded vs, and the Frier likewiſe admoniſhed vs to haue a good eye vnto our ſtuffe, becauſe in that Countrey there were many Theeues; and the Frankes, that is, The White men, which were in the Court, gaue vs the like warning, and told vs that there were Captaines, and others like Toll-maſters ouer the ſaid Theeues, which payed a Tribute to Prete Ianni, of ſuch goods as were ſtolne.

§. XI.

How the Embaſſadour and we were called for by the Commandement of PRETE IANNI, and of the order which we found, and of the State and Maieſtie of PRETE IANNI. His conference, allowance, remoue; The Embaſſadours Audience.

69. ON Friday, the twentieth of October, about three of the clocke, the Frier came vnto vs, and told vs in great haſte, that the Prete Ianni had called for vs. The Embaſſadour commanded all the goods to be laden, which the Captaine Generall had ſent, and charged vs to put our ſelues in order, which we did in very good ſort by the help of God, and many people as well on foote as on horſe-backe, came to waite vpon vs, with whom we came in good order vnto a Gate, from whence we beheld on all ſides, an infinite number of Pauilions and Tents, like vnto a Citie, and thoſe which belonged to Prete Ianni, were ſet vp in a wide field, all White, (as I haue ſaid, it is their generall vſe) and before the ſame was a very faire Red Tent, which they ſay, is neuer ſet vp, but on daies of great Feaſts, or of ſome great audience. Before the ſaid Red Tent, were two rankes of Arches erected, couered with White and Red Cloath of Silke, to wit; one arch couered with Red, and another with Silke, and they were not couered, but had the Cloath of Silke round about them, as it were a piece of Wood, which ſupporteth a Croſſe, hauing a Stole wrapped about it: and ſo theſe Arches ſtood on one front, and were about twentie: their bigneſſe and breadth was like vnto the arch of a little Cloyſter, and one ranke was diſtant from another, about a ſtones caſt.

The Red Feaſtiuall Tent.

Fortie thouſand perſons.

Canons and Church-men.

The great pompe and magnificence of Prete Ianni.

Here were an infinite number of people placed together, which to my iudgement ſeemed to be aboue fortie thouſand perſons, and all of them ſtood in good order on either ſides without ſtirring, and the people which were beſt apparelled, were next vnto the arches, among whom were certaine Canons and Church-men very honourable, with great hoods on their heads, not like vnto Miters, but with certaine ſharpe points on the top, painted with Colours, and were of Cloath of Silke, and Crimzon, and other people in very rich array, before whom ſtood foure Horſes, to wit, two on the one ſide, and two on the other, which were ſadled, and richly couered with Embroydered Cloath downe to the ground: the Armour which they ware vnder the ſame, was not to bee ſeene: Theſe Horſes had high Crownes vpon their heads, which mounted aboue their eares, and went downe to the Bits of their Bridle, with great Plumes of Feathers of ſundry Colours, and vnder the ſaid Horſes ſtood many other good Horſes, ſadled and couered with Silke and Veluet, and the head of each one was equall, and as it were in order with the people: next vnto theſe Horſes, behind them (becauſe the throng of people was ſo great) ſtood many honourable perſons, which were apparelled onely from the girdle downe-ward, with very fine and White Cotton cloath. The reſt of the people which were baſely apparelled, ſtood betweene them and the reſt.

One hundred vnder Marſhals.

Reuerence, how done.

It is a Cuſtome, that before the King and great men of Commaundement, there alwaies goe men which carrie Whips, that is, A little ſtaffe with a large Thong of Leather, and when they laſh in the Ayre, they make a great noyſe, to make the people giue backe. Aboue one hundred of theſe Fellowes came to meete vs, all apparelled in certaine ſmall Iackets of Silke, which made ſuch a noyſe with laſhing, that one man could not heare another. The men on Horſe-backe, and vpon Mules which were with vs, lighted a farre off, and wee were led on Horſe-backe yet a great way farther, and lighted within a Croſſe-bow ſhot of the great Tent, and here they which conducted vs, beganne to doe their accuſtomed reuerence, and we likewiſe, becauſe wee were ſo inſtructed, which is, to ſtoope downe with the right hand vnto the ground.

Meſſengers.

Likewiſe, in this place, within a Croſſe-bow ſhoote, there met vs at leaſt ſixtie men, which were, as it were, Porters with Maces, and they came halfe running, for ſo they are wont to runne with all Meſſages which the Prete ſendeth. They were apparelled in white Iackets, of good Cloath of Silke, and vpon their ſhoulders they had certaine skinnes, of Roane or Tawny colour, very hairie, which they ſaid, were Lyons skinnes, and reached downe to the ground. And vpon thoſe skinnes they had certaine Chaines of Gold, rudely wrought, with Iewels ſet in them, and likewiſe other Iewels about their neckes. They weare certaine Silke Girdles of diuers Colours, in breadth and making, like to the Girts of Horſes, ſauing that they were long with Flakes and Taſſels downe to the ground, and they went halfe on the one ſide, and halfe on the other, and waited vpon vs to the firſt ranke of the arches, where we ſtayed.

Foure Lyons.

Foure Lords.

The Betudete.

But before we came to the ſaid Arches, there ſtood foure great Lyons, tyed with their Chaines in the way which wee were to paſſe, and hauing paſſed them in the midſt of the fields: vnder the ſhadow of the ſaid Arches, ſtood foure men of Honour, among which, was one of the two greateſt Lords which are in the Court of Prete Ianni, which is called Betudete, that is to ſay, The Grand Captaine, and there are two of them, whereof one waiteth on his right hand, and the other on his left. He which waited on his right hand, was (as they ſaid) in warre againſt the Moores; and hee that waited on his left hand, was the ſame which ſtood there; the other three were great Perſonages. When wee came vnto them, we ſtood a great while without ſpeaking any word, neither we to them, nor they to vs. In the meane while there came an old Prieſt, which was (as they ſay) the Kinſman and Confeſſor of Prete Ianni, wearing a white Bonet, like vnto a Bernuſſo, and a great hood of Silke.

This man by his Office, is called Cabeata, and is the ſecond perſon in theſe Kingdomes; and he came out of the Prete his Tent, from whence we were diſtant two ſtones caſt. Three of the foure that ſtayed with vs, went halfe way to meete him, and the Betudete ſtayed with vs, and when they drew nigh vnto vs, the Betudete moued three or foure ſteppes toward them, and ſo all fiue of them came vnto vs.

Three, a remarkable number.

The Ambaſſadors ſpeech.

The Cabeata being arriued, demaunded of the Ambaſſadour, what hee would haue, and whence he came: The Ambaſſadour anſwered, That he came from India, and brought an Ambaſſage vnto Prete Ianni, from the Grand Captaine and Gouernour of the Indies, vnder the King of Portugall. Herewithall, hee returned to the Prete from whom he came, and returned three times with the very ſelfe-ſame Queſtions and Anſweres. To all their demaunds, the Ambaſſadour anſwered after one ſort. The fourth time, the Cabeata ſaid, Say what you will, and I will declare the ſame to the King. To whom the Ambaſſadour anſwered, That He and his whole Companie kiſſed his Highneſſe hands, and greatly thanked God, which had fulfilled their holy deſires, in ioyning Chriſtians together with Chriſtians, and that they were the firſt which had performed the ſame. With this anſwere, the Cabeata departed hence, and ſtraightway returned with another Meſſage, and alwaies the foreſaid foure Honourable perſons went to meete him, in ſuch ſort, as we haue before already declared, and comming vnto vs, he ſaid, That we were right welcome to Prete Ianni, and that we ſhould go to our lodging and reſt our ſelues.

Policy of State

Silence.

At this firſt Audience, he vſeth no other words, neither in his Maieſtie to bee ſeene, for the better maintaining of his reputation. Then the Ambaſſadour deliuered out by ſeuerall parcels, all the Preſents which the Grand Captaine ſent vnto his Highneſſe, and ouer and beſides the ſame, foure bagges of Pepper, which we brought to defray our charges. All the particulars were forth-with conueyed to the Tent of the Prete, and afterward brought backe againe to the Arches where wee ſtood, and they hanged vp the Cloathes of Arras which we gaue them, vpon the Arches: and likewiſe, euery parcell of the reſt of the goods and things; and while they hung vp in the ſight of all men, all men were commaunded to keepe ſilence, and one which is called the Lord Chiefe Iuſtice of the Court, ſpake with a lowd voyce, and declared piece by piece, what the things were which the Grand Captaine had ſent to Prete Ianni, and willed all men, To giue thankes vnto the Lord God, for hauing cauſed Chriſtians to meete together, and that if any Man were there that were grieued thereat, hee might weepe and howle; and whoſoeuer reioyced thereat, might ſing. Then all the people that were there aſſembled, gaue a mightie ſhoute in manner of praiſing God, which continued for a great ſpace. This beeing ended, they licenſed vs to depart, and brought vs to our lodging, a great Croſſe-bow ſhoote diſtant from the Tents of the Prete, where our Pauillion, which hee had ſent vs, was ſet vp, and where the reſt of our ſtuffe remained.

Baſe Theeuery attending the Court.

Prouiſion ſent them.

A calfe whole in Paſte.

70. In the remoouing of theſe our goods, we beganne to ſee by experience, the aduiſe which was giuen vs concerning the Theeues, for ſuddenly on the way, they tooke by force from one of our Seruants, foure Baſons of Latton, and foure Diſhes of Porcellan, and certaine other ſmall things belonging to our Kitchin, and becauſe the Seruant would haue defended himſelfe, they gaue him a great wound on the Legge. The Ambaſſadour could doe no more, but cauſe him to be healed, and of theſe goods could neuer after recouer any whit. As ſoone as wee were lodged, Prete Ianni ſent vs three hundred great White Loaues of Wheate, and many Iarres of Wine of Hony, and tenne Oxen, and the Meſſengers which brought theſe things, ſaid; That Prete Ianni had commaunded, that wee ſhould haue fiftie Oxen giuen vs, and as many Iarres of Wine. The Saturday following, which was the one and twentieth of October, he ſent vs great ſtore of Bread and Wine, and many Haggaſſes of Fleſh, of diuers ſorts, which were very well made and dreſſed, and the like was done vpon the Sunday, whereon among other many and ſundry Haggaſſes, a young Calfe was brought vnto vs, all whole laid in Paſte, ſo well dreſſed and ſeaſoned, with Spices and Fruits put in the belly thereof, that we could neuer ſatisfie our ſelues with feeding thereon.

Pepper is the beſt merchandize in Ethiopia

On Munday following, there was a rumour ſpread through all the Court, that wee had kept backe many bagges of Pepper, which the Grand Captaine had ſent vnto the Prete, which was vntrue; and becauſe they make exceeding great account of Pepper, and that it is the greateſt merchandize that runneth through Ethiopia, therefore the Frier came vnto vs, with a cunning, ſaying vnto vs, That if the Ambaſſadour would giue all his Pepper to Prete Ianni, that he would giue order, that our charges ſhould be defrayed during our abode there, and vntill our returne vnto Maczua: and thus they ceaſed to giue vs Victuals, neither were the fiftie Oxen ſent vnto vs, nor the Iarres of Wine. Likewiſe, they forbade all the Frankes in the Court, that they ſhould not ſpeake with vs.

They willed vs alſo, not to depart out of our Tent, becauſe it was the Cuſtome, that all they which come vnto this Court, ſhould ſpeake with no man, till they had talked with the King, and that for breaking this order, they had caſt in priſon a Portugall of Acugna, which came to ſpeake with vs on the way with another Franke; laying to their charge, that they came to reueale vnto vs the ſecrets of the Court. This Portugall fled on a night with his manacles on his hands from an Eunuch, which kept him, and came to our Tent to ſaue himſelfe. The next morning with ſpeed they came to ſeeke him, but the Ambaſſador would not deliuer him, but ſent his Factor and the Interpreter to ſpeake with the Betudete on his behalfe, and to aske him, why hee caſt the Portugalls into fetters, and handled them ſo badly by Eunuchs which were Slaues. The Betudete anſwered nothing to the purpoſe, ſaying: Who ſent for you hither? and added further, That Matthew went not into Portugall by Prete Ianni his commandement, nor by the commandement of the Queene Helena. And that if this Slaue had put the Portugalls into fetters, the Portugalls likewiſe might put this Slaue againe into fetters, for ſuch is the iuſtice in thoſe countries.

71. On Tueſday, the foure and twentieth of October, wayting, while the Prete would ſend for vs to ſpeake with him, hee departed with all his Court toward the ſame place from whence hee came, which was about ſixe miles off. In the meane ſeaſon the Frier came vnto vs, and wiſhed vs if wee would goe to the place where the King lay, that wee ſhould buy our ſelues Mules to carry our ſtuffe, and told the Ambaſſador, that if hee would buy or ſell hee might ſo doe. The Ambaſſador anſwered him, That wee were not come thither to play the Merchants, but onely to ſerue God and both the Kings, and to vnite one Chriſtian people with another, and this they did onely to ſift out what our iutention and purpoſe was. Vntill this preſent they had forbidden all Chriſtians in the Court to ſpeake with vs, or to come vnto our Tents, and if they came thither they came very ſecretly, becauſe the Frier was alwayes with vs as our Guardian.

Remooue of the Court.

Other their tricks are here omitted.

72. When Lopez Suarez, grand Captaine and Gouernour of India, came with his Fleet to the Hauen of Ziden; in which Fleet I my ſelfe was, wee found in the ſame place ſixtie Chriſtian men, which were Slaues vnto the Turkes, and they were of diuers Nations, who were part of theſe which at this preſent we found in this Court, who ſay, that they wayted for the grace of God, to wit, while the Portugalls ſhould come into this Hauen of Ziden, that they might eſcape away with vs; and becauſe the people of our Fleet could not goe on Land, therefore they ſtayed behinde; and few dayes after, fifteene of theſe white men, with as many more Abiſsines of the Countrey of Prete Ianni, which likewiſe were Slaues, found two Brigandines, and fled away to get vnto our Fleet; and being not able to come vnto the Ile of Camaran, they came to the Ile of Maezua, which is neere vnto Ercoco, a Towne of Prete Ianni. And comming on land they ſunke the Brigandines, and came vnto the Court of the Prete, whom wee ſaw more honorably and courteouſly vſed then our ſelues, till this preſent. And they haue giuen them Lands and Slaues which ſerue them and maintayne them. Theſe are the Frankes, the greateſt part whereof were Genoueſes, two Catalanians, one of Sio, one a Biſcaien, and one an high German, which afterward came all into Portugall, and they call vs Portugalls alſo Frankes. All other white people, to wit, thoſe of Syria, of Grecia, and of Cairo, they call Gibetes. Theſe Frankes preuailed with vs to giue foure bags of Pepper, and foure Cheſts couered with leather, for a preſent to the Prete, which wee carried the thirtieth of October, which was but colluſion of the Courtiers for their owne aduantage. The Frankes which were in the Court came after to our Tent and told vs, that the great men of the Court were our enemies, and that this Frier had put into their heads, to counſell Prete Ianni to ſuffer vs not to returne, nor to depart out of his Kingdome. Becauſe wee reported euill of the Countrey, and that wee would ſpeake much worſe when wee were departed out of the ſame, and that was alwayes the cuſtome of theſe Kingdomes, not to ſuffer Strangers to depart which came into the ſame. Wee ſuſpected thus much by that which wee had heard, and they confirmed the ſame. For wee knew very well, that Iohn Gomez, and Iohn Prete, Portugalls, (which were ſent hither by Triſtan de Acunna, Lord Gouernour of India, together with a Moore, which yet liueth and dwelleth in Manadeli) were not ſuffered to depart; becauſe they threatned to kill them, if they departed: and likewiſe one Peter de Couillan a Portugall, and two Venetians.

Eaſtern Chriſtians called Ghibetes: the Weſtern Franks both in Africa and Aſia, euer ſince the Expeditions into the holy Land, wherein the Franks were firſt and moſt, beginning at the Councell of Claremont in France.

The old cuſtome of Ethiopia, not to ſuffer ſtrangers to depart.

Chriſtians detayned.

On Tueſday, the laſt of October, Prete Ianni came downe from the Tents where hee lay, toward this Circuit where wee aboad; and when hee paſſed by hee ſaw our Tent, not farre diſtant from his, and ſent a man to the Ambaſſador, to wiſh him to remooue his Tent, becauſe the ayre was bad where the ſame ſtood, and yet our Tent ſtood in the ſame place which they had appointed vs the day before. The Ambaſſador ſent him word, that he had no people to remooue his Tent nor his ſtuffe, and that if he might haue people, he would cauſe it to be remooued, whither ſoeuer it pleaſed his Highneſſe. This day at euening came a meſſage from the Prete, ſaying, That if the Ambaſſador or his companie, had any Croſſe of gold or of ſiluer, that hee ſhould ſend it him, for hee deſired to ſee it. The Ambaſſador ſent him word, that neither hee nor his companie had any, and that one which he had brought with him he had giuen to Barnagaſſo, herewithall the Page departed, but ſuddenly returned againe, ſaying, That we ſhould ſend him any that we had.

Croſſe demanded.

Wee ſent him a Woodden Croſſe of mine, with a painted Crucifixe, which by the way I carried in my hand, according to the cuſtome of the Countrey. Immediatly he ſent it backe vnto vs, ſaying; That he tooke great pleaſure in beholding of it, becauſe he perceiued that wee were good Chriſtians.

The Ambaſſadour ſent word vnto the Prete by the ſaid Page, that he had yet a little Pepper, to defray his owne and his companies charges, which hee deſired to beſtow vpon his Highneſſe, and alſo foure Cheſts to keepe apparell in, and that when it pleaſed him, he might ſend for them. The Page departing with this meſſage, returned ſuddenly, ſaying; That the King deſired no Pepper nor Cheſts, and that the Cloathes which he had giuen him, were beſtowed vpon Churches, and that the Pepper was giuen to the poore. For ſo it had beene told him, that the Grand Captaine of India had done, in giuing all the cloathes ſent him by the King of Portugall, vnto Churches. The Ambaſſadour anſwered, That whoſoeuer had told him any ſuch thing, had not told the truth, becauſe it was all laid vp together, and kept in ſafetie. This anſwere beeing ſent, there came another meſſage, ſaying; That Prete Ianni commanded, that the Ambaſſadour without all delay, with his whole Company ſhould come vnto him, and it was three houres at leaſt within night. Forthwith we all beganne to put on our beſt Apparell, to goe whither we were ſent for. When we were ready, another came which brought vs word, that wee muſt not go; and thus we ſtayed at home in our dumps.

Going to the court by night.

74. On Wedneſday the firſt of Nouember, two houres within night, Prete Ianni ſent for vs by a Page, and hauing put our ſelues in order, we went our way, and comming to the gate or entry of the firſt circuit or hedge, we found Porters, which cauſed vs to waite there a good houre, in the cold and dry winde. From the place where we ſtood, we ſaw many lighted Torches, ſtanding before the other part of the circuit of the hedge, and men held them in their hands. While wee ſtayed thus in this entry (for they would not ſuffer vs to paſſe) our men ſhot off two Harquebuſſes, and ſuddenly there came a word from the King; demanding, why we had not brought many Harquebuſſes from the Sea. The Ambaſſadour anſwered, that we came not as Warriors, and that therefore wee brought not the ſaid Armour with vs; but that we brought onely theſe three or foure Harquebuſſes, to ſhew pleaſure and paſtime. While we waited heere, fiue principall men came vnto vs, among whom was one called Adrugas, to whom we were appointed at our firſt comming to the Court. As ſoone as they were come with the word of the Prete, forthwith they did their wonted reuerence, and we in like manner, and began to ſet forward, and hauing gone fiue or ſix paces, but we and they ſtood ſtill. They went on the ſide of vs, as if they had led vs by the hand, & on the one ſide of them, went two men with two Torches lighted in their hands, & two before them on the other ſide, and as they guided vs, each of them in his courſe began to cry with an high voyce, Hurcha, Hiale, Huchia, Abeton, which ſignifieth; Him which you haue commanded me (Sir) heere I bring vnto you. And when one had made an end, another beganne, and ſo they followed one after another, and vſed this ſpeech ſo long, vntill we heard a voice from within, vttered by diuers, which was, Caſacinelet, that is to ſay, Come yee in?

The Rites of admitting to preſence. Strange Ceremonies of State. Ten pauſes.

The preſence.

We went a little farther, and they began againe to ſtay, and vttered the foreſaid words againe, vntill they heard an anſwere from within, as at the firſt. They made aboue ten of theſe pauſes, from the firſt entrance vnto the ſecond, and euery time when they ſaid within Caſacinelet, becauſe it is the word of the King, they which were our guides, and wee with them, bowed downe our heads and our hands to the ground. And hauing paſſed the ſecond entry, they began to make another ſong, which was this; Caphan, Hiam, Caynba, Afrangues, Abeton, which ſignifieth; The Frankes which you commanded me here, I bring them, my Lord. And theſe he vttered as often as the other words before, and attended an anſwer from within the houſe, which was like vnto the former, and ſo from pauſe to pauſe, we came vnto a Bed or Table, before which ſtood many burning Torches, which we ſaw in the firſt entry, and told them to bee eightie on euery ſide, in euen ranke, and that no man might goe out of the ranke: Thoſe which held them, had before them certaine long Canes in their hands, which went ouer-thwart breaſt-high, and the ſaid Torches ſtood all equall.

This Bed was placed within the entrance of a great houſe of earth, whereof we ſpake before, which is built vpon very great Pillers of Cipreſſe; the roofe ſtanding vpon theſe Pillers, was Painted with certaine goodly colours, and it was Wainſcoted directly downe from the top to the bottome. The couering of the roofe, was of the Graſſe of the Countrey, which laſteth (as they ſay) the life of a man. In the entry of the houſe, that is to ſay, at the vpper part thereof, were fiue Curtaines prepared, which hung before the ſaid bed, and the middlemoſt of them was embroidered with Gold, and the others were of fine Silke. Before theſe Curtaines, on the floore was laid a great and rich Carpet, and neere vnto it, two great cloaths of ſhaggy Cotton, like Carpets which they call Baſutos: all the reſt was couered with painted Mats, ſo that no part of the bare floore could be ſeene. And likewiſe from the one end vnto the other, the whole roome was full of lighted Torches, like thoſe which we had ſeene while wee were without.

Manner of audience.

While wee thus ſtood ſtill from behind the Curtaines, there came a word from Prete Ianni, ſaying, abruptly, that he ſent not Matthew into Portugall, though it were granted that hee went thither with his Licence, ſeeing the King of Portugall, had ſent him many things, what was become of them, and wherefore were they not brought as the King had ſent them? And that thoſe things which the Grand Captaine had ſent him from India, were alreadie deliuered? The Ambaſſadour anſwered, that if it pleaſed his Highneſſe to vouchſafe to heare him, he would ſatisfie him in all points; and ſuddenly he began to ſay, thoſe things which the Grand Captaine ſent him were alreadie preſented, and ouer and aboue, that he had giuen him part of that Pepper which he brought with him for his expenſes. Touching the goods ſent vnto him by the King of Portugall, the cauſe why they were not brought vnto his Maieſtie was, becauſe the Ambaſſadour which brought them, named Edward Galuan, deceaſed in Camaran, and beſides that certaine Portugals deceaſed in the Ile of Delaca, among whom were the Factor and Interpreter, that ſhould haue deliuered the ſame; and finally, the Grand Captaine, being not able to recouer the Hauen of Maczua, through contrary winds, returned into India, and from thence departed home vnto Portugall; to the Captaine which ſucceeded in his place. The King of Portugall not knowing of the death of the ſaid Edward, but thinking he had beene come to the Court of your Highneſſe, gaue no further Commiſſion, but only to come into the Red Sea to deſtroy the Moores, and to harken after his Ambaſſadour; which Grand Captaine, doubting that he ſhould bee able to recouer no Hauen, as at other times they could not, would not bring the goods which the King of Portugall had ſent him which are preſerued in India, layed vp together, and that hee deſired onely to conduct Matthew thither with him, that if it were his chance to recouer any Hauen on the Coaſt of the Abiſſini, hee might there put him on ſhoare, and afterward ſend him thoſe goods. And becauſe it pleaſed God, that they arriued at the foreſaid Hauen of Maczua, which is in his Territories, although it bee in the hands of the Moores, the Grand Captaine determined to ſend vnto him himſelfe, Don Roderigo with theſe goods and Peeces wherewith he had preſerued him, and that he ſhould come in company with Matthew, onely to ſee him, and to learne the way againſt another time, when it ſhould pleaſe him to ſend the Ambaſſador of the King of Portugall, and that Matthew was departed out of this life at the Monaſterie of the Viſion. At the end of this Anſwere, returned another Meſſage; ſaying, If three were ſlaine in Delaca, how eſcaped Matthew? Hereunto it was anſwered, that Matthew eſcaped becauſe hee would not ſtirre out of the ſhip. And the Ambaſſadour beſought him very humbly, to vouchſafe to giue him audience, becauſe he ſhould vnderſtand the truth, and that likewiſe, hee would deliuer him in writing, that which the Grand Captaine had ſent him by word of mouth, beſides the Letters, and that by this meanes he ſhould vnderſtand the whole matter. Queſtions and Anſweres paſſed too and fro, without any concluſion, and ſo they diſmiſſed vs. The next day hee ſent vs great ſtore of Bread, Wine and Fleſh, and two men which ſaid, that they had charge to giue vs euery day our dyet and other neceſſaries.

Italian and Bohemian and other clockes, begin at euening, the reckoning of 24. houres; as wee of 12. at midday and midnight.

75. On Saturday the third of Nouember, the Prete Ianni ſent for vs, and we went at twentie foure of the clocke, and comming to the firſt gate or entrance, while we ſtayed a while, there came a meſſage, that we ſhould ſhoot off our Peeces, but without Bullets for hurting no bodie, and within awhile after, they let vs come in, and we vſed the like reſpite that we did before, and comming in betweene the Gates and the Curtaines, where we ſtood at the firſt, we ſaw the place of the Bed very richly trimmed, and decked as before, and all behind and before, was couered with embroydered cloth, and the people were more richly arrayed, and ſtood on both ſides all in a ranke with their naked Swords and Daggers in their hands, and placed, as though they had bin to fight one with another. There were two hundred Torches lighted on both ſides ſtanding in a ranke, as they did the other day, and when wee were come in; he began to aske vs queſtions, and ſend vs Anſweres by the Cabeata, and by a Page called Abdenago, which is Captaine of all the Pages, with theſe his Meſſages he carryed his naked Sword in his hand, and the firſt which he brought was this, How many we were, and how many Harquebuſſes wee had brought? and ſtrait way there came another; demanding, Who had taught the Moores to make Hand-gunnes, and great Ordnance, and whether they ſhot at the Portugals with them, or the Portugals at them, and who were moſt afraid of the Moores or the Portugals?

Diuers Queſtions and Anſweres.

Each of theſe Queſtions came at ſeuerall times, and we made a ſeuerall Anſwere vnto each of them. And touching the feare of the great Ordnance, wee ſaid, that the Portugals were ſo well armed in the Faith of Ieſus Chriſt, that they were not afraid of the Moores, and had they feared them, they would not haue come ſo farre off, without any neceſſitie to ſeeke them. Touching the making of Calieuers, and great Ordnance, they ſaid, that the Moores were men, and that they had wit and vnderſtanding as well as any of vs.

He ſent to enquire whether the Turkes had good Artillery? The Ambaſſador anſwered, that their great Ordnance was as good as ours, but that wee were not one whit afraid of them, becauſe wee fought for the faith of Ieſus Chriſt, and they againſt the ſame. Then he demanded who had taught the Turkes to make great Ordnance? Wee anſwered him as before, to wit, that the Turkes were men, and had vnderſtanding and capacitie of men in all perfection, ſauing in the Faith. Then hee ſent to know, whether there were any in our company that could play at Rapier and Dagger, for that he would gladly ſee them play. The Ambaſſador appointed George de Breu and another tall fellow to play, which both did very well, and performed as much as was to bee expected, of men exerciſed and trained vp in Armes, and the Prete might very well behold them from behind the Curtaines, and tooke great pleaſure at them, as we were informed.

When they had done, the Ambaſſadour ſent to Prete Ianni, beſeeching him to giue him audience, and to vnderſtand the meſſage which the Grand Captaine of the King of Portugall had ſent vnto him, and that he would diſpatch him, that he might returne to their Fleet againſt the time of their arriuall, and not to put him to any more expenſes without profit. An anſwere was returned, that wee were but newly come thither, and had not ſeene one third part of his Lands and Dominions, and that we ſhould take our pleaſures: For aſſoone as the Grand Captaine ſhould come to Maczua, he would ſend to ſpeake with him, and then we ſhould depart, and if the ſaid Captaine would build a Fortreſſe in Maczua, or in Suachen, or in Zeila, that hee would ſee the ſame forth-with furniſhed all things neceſſary. And becauſe the Turkes are many and we few, when ſuch a Fortreſſe were builded with on the Red Sea, wee might very well finde out a way whereby wee might paſſe to Ieruſalem, and the Holy Land with an Armie. The Ambaſſadour anſwered, that all theſe were the very things which the King of Portugall deſired, and that ſtill hee beſought him to giue him Audience, and if hee were minded not to giue him audience, that hee might ſend him to the Grand Captaines Letters, and all the whole Meſſage in writing, which he ſent him to deliuer by word mouth. He tooke order that all things ſhould be interpreted and written in the Abiſſin Tongue, and ſent vnto him: which the Ambaſſadour did, requeſting him inſtantly to giue him his diſpatch. After this, the Prete Ianni ſent him word, that Seeing hee had brought him a paire of Organes, he ſhould ſend him one to play thereon, and to ſing, and ſo hee did. Then hee deſired that we ſhould dance before him after our manner. When the Dance was done, wee ſignified vnto him that we were Chriſtians, & prayed him to giue vs leaue to ſing Maſſe after our cuſtome, according to the Church of Rome. Suddenly we receiued an Anſwere, that He knew well that we were Chriſtians, and that ſince the Moores which were wicked and trecherous had their Prayers after their manner; wherefore ſhould not we haue the ſame after ours? And that hee would ſend vs all things neceſſarie thereunto. Aſſoone as wee were come to our Lodging, they brought vs three hundred great Loaues of Bread, and twentie foure Iarres of Wine, and the Bearer told vs, that there were hirtie Iarres appointed for vs, but that the Porters on the way had broken ſixe of them.

Playing, ſinging and dancing.

§. XII.

Of the Queſtions moued to the Ambaſſadour, by the appointment of PRETE IANNI, at ſeuerall times by Interlocutors, and laſtly, in preſence: wherein many points of their Religion are opened.

76. THe Sunday following many Queſtions came vnto our Tent from Prete Ianni, to the Ambaſſadour, and all of them were concerning the Armour which hee vnderſtood, that the King of Portugall had ſent him, and whether it ſhonld bee ſent him out of India. The Ambaſſadour ſaid, that the Armour and all things elſe which the King had ſent him, ſhould come the yeare following, and that the Grand Captaine would either ſend them or bring them himſelfe, and ſo hee ſent him word, and wrote him his Letters. Then he willed our men to ſhoot with their Calieuers, within the great hedge, and that certaine of his people ſhould ſhoot alſo, and whether any of vs could make Gun-powder? It was told him, that there was none that could make the ſame, but that the Grand Captaine would ſend men with their Inſtruments to make Salt-peeter, and that hee would bring Brimſtone with him in his ſhippes. Hee ſaid that Brimſtome might bee found in his Kingdome, ſo that there were Maſters to make Salt-peeter, and that his Armies wanted nothing elſe, but the vſe of Artillerie, and men to teach them to make the ſame, becauſe hee was able to bring vnto the field an infinite number of Harquebuſſes, wherewith hee might ſubdue all the Mooriſh Kings about him.

And to this purpoſe a certaine Genoues which liued in the Court, told me, that hee had conſidered, that more Salt-peeter might be made in theſe Kingdomes, then in any other place of the World, by reaſon of the infinite number of Cattell which were there, and that heere bee alſo Mountaines that yeeld Brimſtone. He ſent vs word afterward, that he would haue vs ſhew him how we did put on thoſe white Armours, which the Grand Captaine had ſent him. Our men forth-with armed one of the company, where he might well ſee him. Then he ſent for the Swords and Curaſſes, which the Ambaſſador and his company had brought, that hee might view them.

Sight of the Hoſt.

77. On Munday at Euening, he ſent for me, Francis Aluarez, to bring the Hoſts vnto him, which he deſired to ſee. I brought him eleuen of them very well made, not in boxes or pixes, becauſe I knew the great reuerence which they vſe to their Hoſts, which is one Cake onely. And theſe Hoſts had a Crucifixe vpon them, and therefore I carryed them in a very faire Diſh of Porcellan couered with Taffata. I brought him the Surplice, the Chalice, the Altar-ſtone, the Ampull; and he viewed all, piece by piece, and willed me to open the Cloth wherein the Altar-ſtone was (which was ſewed in a white Cloth) and ſo he did: which when hee had ſeene he willed to be couered. This ſtone on the vpper ſide was very ſmooth, ſquare, and well made, and on the nether ſide was ſomewhat vneuen, according to the nature, and proportion of ſtones. He ſent me word, that ſeeing in Portugall there were ſo good Maſons, why had they not poliſhed it on that ſide alſo; ſayng, that the things which belonged vnto Gods Seruice, ought to be perfect and not imperfect.

The night being come, he ſent for me that I ſhould come to his Tent, and willed I ſhould come in, and ſo I did. They ſet me in the midſt thereof, which was all ſpread on the ground with exceeding fine Carpets. I ſtood foure yards diſtant from Prete Ianni, which ſate behind thoſe Curtaines: he commanded me to apparell my ſelfe, as if I ſhould ſay Maſſe, which I did. When I was apparelled, he cauſed me to be asked, Who gaue vs that apparell, whether they were the Apoſtle, or ſome other Saints? I anſwered him, that the Church had taken it out of the Paſſion of Chriſt. He willed me to tell him what euery one of thoſe pieces ſignified; and ſo I beganne with euery part, to ſhew him what they ſignified, according to the Paſſion of our Lord. And when I came to the Manipulum, I told him, that it was a little Cord, wherewith they bound the hands of Ieſus Chriſt. Then comming to the Stole, I told him, that that ſignified the great Cord, which they caſt about his necke to lead him this way and that way, and that the Planet ſignified the apparell which they put vpon him, for to mocke him * withall; Which when I had ended, he ſaid againe with a very loud voyce, that we were true Chriſtians, becauſe we knew the Paſſion of Chriſt ſo perfectly. And whereas I had ſaid, that the Church had taken this out of the Paſſion of Chriſt, he demanded, which was that Church? Becauſe we held two head Churches in Chriſtendome, the firſt of Conſtantinople in Greece, and the ſecond of Rome in France. [a] I anſwered him, there was but one Church: and though it were granted, that Conſtantinople was the head in the beginning, yet it ceaſed now to be, becauſe the Head of the Church [b] is there where Saint Peter was; becauſe Ieſus Chriſt ſaid; Thou art Peter, and vpon this Rocke I will build my Church. And when S. Peter was at Antiochia, the Church was there, becauſe the Head was there, and when hee came to Rome hee abode ſtill there, and there the Head ſhall alwayes bee: and this Church ruled by the Holy Ghoſt hath ordayned things neceſſary to ſay Maſſe. Moreouer, I proued this Church vnto him, telling him, that in the Articles of our Faith, which the Apoſtles made, the Apoſtle Simon [c] ſaith: I beleeue in [d] the holy Catholike Church. But in the great Creed which was made in the Nicene Councell by three hundred and eighteene Biſhops, againſt the Hereſie of Arrius, they ſay: I beleeue in one Catholike and Apoſtolike Church; and this is the holy Roman Church, wherein Saint Peter ſate, vpon whom God founded his Church, as he ſaith. And Saint Paul, a choſen Veſſell and Doctor of the Gentiles, calleth it Catholike and Apoſtolike, [e] becauſe in it are all the Apoſtolike powers, which God gaue to Saint Peter, and to all the reſt of the Apoſtles of binding and looſing. They anſwered mee, that I gaue a good reaſon for the Church of Rome; but what could I ſay for the Church of Conſtantinople, which belonged to Saint Marke, and for the Cherch of Greece, which belonged to Saint Iohn the Patriarke of Alexandria? Hereunto I anſwered them, that their reaſon ſtrengthened mine, becauſe Saint Peter was Saint Markes Maſter, and he ſent him into thoſe parts, and ſo that neither Marke nor Iohn [f] could plant any Churches, but onely in the name of him which had ſent them, which Churches were members of the Head, which ſent thoſe Preachers, to which Head all Authorities were giuen. And many yeares after, when Saint Ierome, and many other holy men had ſeparated themſelues, they ordaind Monaſteries of auſtere and holy life, wherein they might ſerue God, and that the ſaid Monaſteries could not be eſtabliſhed without the Authoritie of the Apoſtolike Church, which is that of Rome; and how can they make Churches in preiudice of the chiefe Head, if they were not builded, and made by our Lord Ieſus Chriſt? They yeelded hereunto, and the Interpreter ſaid that Prete Ianni tooke exceeding great pleaſure hereat.

Then they asked me whether in Portugall, the Prieſts were marryed? I told them, no. They demanded, whether we held the Councell of Pope Leo [g] which was made at Nice? I told them, yea, and that I had alreadie declared, that the great Creed was made there. They asked me againe, how many Biſhops were then with the Pope? I anſwered, that I had alreadie told them, that there were three hundred and eighteene. They replyed againe vnto mee, that it was ordained in this Councell, that Prieſts might marrie, and if this Councell were ſworne and confirmed, wherefore were they not marryed? I told them that I knew nothing elſe of that Councell, but that the Creed was made there, and that our Lady might be called the Mother of God.

Afterward, they told me many other things which there were ordained and ſworne, which Pope Leo brake, and prayed me to tell them what they were: I anſwered them, that I knew them not, but that in mine opinion if he had broken any of them, they might be ſome of thoſe, which concerned Hereſie, which at that time was very great, but that he had approued things neceſſarie and pro-

This Frier had beene ſometimes in Italy, and vnderſtood a little Latine. The Prete Ianni cauſed him to be asked, whether he vnderſtood that which I ſpake? He anſwered him, yea, and that I had ſaid, Gloria in excelſis, and the Creed, as they ſay it.

78. The night that I ſtayed ſo long with the Prete, before morning, the Ambaſſadour was robbed in the Tent where wee lodged, and they ſtole away two Cloakes of cloath, two rich Hats, ſeuen fine Shirts, &c. In the morning, the Ambaſſadour willed me and the Secretary to go to the Tent of Prete, to complaine and craue Iuſtice for this robbery, and ſo I did. But becauſe the Ambaſſadour had taken two Theeues, therefore while we were before the Tent of the Prete, a Woman came crying and crauing Iuſtice, and ſaid; That the Ambaſſadour and his Company, the laſt night, by meanes of an Arabian, that knew the language of the Countrey, had taken away her Daughter by force, and led her to their Tent, of whom they had had their pleaſure. And becauſe her Sonne complained for the forcing of his Siſter, they had taken him with the Arabian, which had deceiued the Maid, and laid to their charge that they were robbed. When they had heard vs and this woman, they made vs both all one anſwer, that is, that Iuſtice ſhould be done, and ſo they diſmiſſed vs. The ſame day, the Frier which was with me before the Prete, the night paſt, came with a rich Tent, but halfe worne, ſaying; That the Prete had ſent vs it to ſay Maſſe in, and that immediatly it ſhould be ſet vp, becauſe the next day was the Feaſt of the Angell Raphael, and that we ſhould ſay Maſſe in it euery day, and pray to God for him. This Tent was Embroidered, and of Veluet of Mecca, lined within with very fine Cloath of Chaut. They told me, that foure yeares before the Prete had wonne it in the warre, which he made againſt the King of Adel, who was a Moore, and Lord of Zeila, and Barbora: and the Prete ſent vs word, that we ſhould hallow the ſame before wee ſaid Maſſe in it, becauſe of the ſinnes committed therein by the Moores. The ſame night it was preſently ſet vp, and on the morrow, we ſaid Maſſe therein, and all the Frankes which were in the Court, for fortie yeares ſpace, came thither to heare it, as alſo many people of the Countrey.

79. The eight of Nouember, the Prete ſent for vs, and forthwith we repaired thither, the Ambaſſadour would needs carrie the Cheſts and bagges of Pepper, which hee had promiſed him. When we were come vnto the entry of the firſt hedge, they held vs with certaine friuolous queſtions, cõcerning the Negroes which we had taken, for the goods which they had ſtolne from vs: and the demands continued ſo long, that in the meane while they ſent to looſe the ſaid Negroes, without any concluſion or remedy for the theft, and the Prete ſent vs three hundred Loaues, and thirtie Iarres of Wine, and certaine victuals of fleſh from his owne Table, and ſo we returned to our Tent. They ſent another time for vs, and when we were come, we ſtood a great while vpon certaine queſtions, why we tooke not our way from the Sea coaſt, toward the Kingdome of Dancute, which is farre the neerer way: and ſeeing we were Seruants to the King of Portugall, why wee had not Croſſes marked in our fleſh vpon our ſhoulder, becauſe ſuch is their cuſtome, that all the Seruants of the Prete haue a croſſe marked vpon their right ſhoulders? They asked farther: ſeeing we had giuen away our Pepper, wherewith we would buy our Victuals for our iourney, &c.

80 The twelfth of Nouember, the Prete ſent vs fiue very great and goodly Horſes to our Tent, praying the Ambaſſadour to come with foure others of his company vpon the ſaid Horſes, to skirmiſh before his Tent: and it was very late, and the Ambaſſrdour was not very well pleaſed that it was ſo late and darke: but ſtreight-way there were ſo many Torches lighted, that it was as light as day. And here they skirmiſhed in ſuch ſort, that they delighted the Prete very much, which skirmiſh being ended, wee returned to our Tent; whither ſuddenly the Prete ſent vs three Iarres of Wine, much better then any he had ſent vs before. The next day, he ſent to the Ambaſſadour a Cup of Siluer, very curiouſly gilt, and made after our manner, as well in the foot, as in the Bowle. On the foote were the Apoſtles grauen, ſtanding vpright, and in the Bowle were certaine Latine letters, containing theſe words: Hic eſt calix noui Teſtamenti: A cloath of Gold for the Altar of our Church, and a Baſon and Ewer made of blackwood, with red and white veines, as faire as euer we ſaw, to powre water vpon our hands, and Skirmiſh on horſebacke.

Gifts.

ſent vs word, that we ſhould ſend him all our names in writing. They were ſuddenly carried him: he ſent backe to know, what Roderigo ſignified, and what Lima ſignified, and likewiſe what was the ſignification of all the other names. The cauſe of this demand was, becauſe in this Countrey they neuer giue any proper name, which hath not ſome ſignification. The next morning, in the Tent of the Ambaſſadour, there was another theft committed; for while George de Breu was a ſleepe, he had a Cloake ſtolne that coſt him twentie duckats, and from vs alſo were ſtolne certaine bagges of ſtuffe, neither vſe they any diligence to cauſe theſe things to bee reſtored vnto vs, becauſe (as wee haue ſaid) there is a Captaine of the Theeues, which for the ſetting of the Prete his Tents, hath no other reward, but ſuch things as they ſteale. This day the Prete ſent vs a Saddle for a Horſe, wholly beſet with ſtones of Cornallin, (this Saddle, beſides that it was very heauy, was alſo very badly made) ſaying, That the Ambaſſadour ſhould ride thereon.

Theeuery.

81. The Saturday following, the Prete commanded all the Lords and great men of his Court, to goe and heare our Maſſe, which they alſo did the Sunday following; but there were farre more on the Saturday; for beſides our Maſſe, we baptized alſo: and as farre as we could gather by their geſtures, and as the Frankes told vs which we found in this Countrey and the Interpreters which were with vs, they marueiled much, and greatly praiſed our ſeruice; ſaying, That they could not ſpeake againſt it, but onely becauſe we gaue not the Communion to all thoſe that were preſent at the ſame, and likewiſe to thoſe which were baptized. The eighteenth of the ſaid moneth, the Prete ſent for me, and moued many queſtions vnto me, and among others, how many Prophets had propheſied of the comming of Chriſt. I anſwered him, that in my iudgement all of them had ſpoken of the ſame, to wit; one of his comming, another of his Incarnation, another of his Paſſion and Reſurrection; all which concerned Chriſt. Likewiſe, how many bookes Saint Paul had made? I anſwered him, That it was one Booke onely, diuided into many parts, that is to ſay, Into many Epiſtles. Hee asked me likewiſe, how many Bookes the Euangeliſts had made? And I made him the ſame anſwer. Alſo, he asked, whither we had a Booke diuided into eight parts, which all the Apoſtles, being gathered together at Ieruſalem, had written, which they call Manda and Abetilis? I anſwered, that I neuer had heard of any ſuch Booke, and that it was not to be found amongſt vs. Hee ſaid, That they obſerued all the Commandements written therein.

A ſtrange Booke fathered vpon all the Apoſtles.

82. On a Tueſday, we were ſent for vnto the Prete, and it was the nineteenth of Nouember, and being come to the firſt gate or entry, we ſtayed a great while, the weather being verie cold, and the night well ſpent. Then we entred with the like pauſes and ſtayes, as we had vſed twice before, and there was a farre greater aſſembly then before. And the greateſt part had their weapons. There were alſo a great number of Candles and Torches light before the gates, ſo that it ſeemed as light as day, neither made they vs to waite any long while, but that the Ambaſſadour and nine of vs Portugals went ſuddenly in, euen hard vnto the firſt Curtaines: which when we had paſſed, we found others farre richer, and thoſe alſo we paſſed, where wee found certaine rich and great Thrones, couered ouer with rich Tapiſtry. Before theſe Thrones, hung other Curtaines of farre greater riches, which they opened on both ſides, wee ſtanding neere vnto them. And heere we ſaw the Prete Ianni ſitting vpon a skaffold, very richly adorned with ſixe ſteps to aſcend thereunto. He had vpon his head an high Crowne of Gold and Siluer, that is to ſay; One piece of Gold, and another piece of Siluer, and a Croſſe of Siluer in his hand. His face was couered with a piece of Blew Taffata, which was to bee mooued vp and downe, ſo that ſometimes all his face was ſeene, and ſometimes all couered. On his right hand ſtood a Page, cloathed in Silke, with a Croſſe of Siluer in his hand, whereon certaine Pictures were engrauen, ſtanding vpright, which from the place where we ſtood, we could not perfectly diſcerne: but afterward I had this Croſſe in my hand, and ſaw thoſe Images. The Prete was apparelled with a rich garment, Embroydered with Gold, and his Shirt was of Silke, with wide ſleeues, which were like vnto a Surplice. Before him downeward, hee was girded with a rich cloath of Silke and Gold, like the Rochet of a Biſhop ſpread abroad, and he ſate in Maieſtie, after the manner that they paint God the Father vpon the wals. Beſides the Page which held the Croſſe, there ſtood on each ſide another Page in like apparell, each of them holding a naked ſword in their hands.

Admitted to the ſight of the Prete.

The habite and ſtature of Prete Ianni.

In his age, colour, and ſtature, he ſeemeth to be young. Hee is not very blacke, but of the colour of a Cheſt-nut, or of ruddy Apples, which are not very Tawny, and ſheweth a great grace in his colour and countenance, and is of a meane ſtature, and is ſaid to be three and twentie yeares old, and ſo he ſeemeth to be. Hee hath a round viſage, great eyes, an Hawkes noſe, and his beard began to bud. In his preſence and pompe, he ſeemeth to be a great Lord, as in very deed he is. We ſtood the ſpace of two ſpeares length from him: queſtions and anſweres paſſed too and fro, and all by the Cabeata. On euery ſide of this Throne, ſtood foure Pages in rich array, euery one holding a burning Torch in his hand. When theſe queſtions and anſwers were ended, the Ambaſſadour deliuered the Grand Captaines Letters to the Cabeata, which were tranſlated into the Abyſſin tongue, and he preſented them to the Prete, who read them very readily, dily, and when he had read them, he ſaid : As theſe be the Letters of the Grand Captaine, ſo would to God they had beene the Letters of the King of Portugall his Father ; howbeit , that theſe Letters were moſt welcome vnto him, and that he gaue God moſt hearty thankes, for hauing granted that great gift vnto him, to behold that which his Anceſtors had neuer ſeene, neither did he thinke he ſhould haue ſeene himſelfe, and that his deſires ſhould be fully accompliſhed, if the King of Portugall would build Fortreſſes vpon the Ile of Maczua, and in the Towne of Suachen ; becauſe he doubted greatly, that the Turkes our enemies would fortifie in them, which if it came to paſſe, they would greatly diſturbe both him and vs Portugals : and for this purpoſe he would giue vs all things neceſſarie , as well people to worke, as Gold and Victuals : and to be ſhort, whatſoeuer wee ſhould ſtand in need of : And that in his opinion, beſides the building of the ſaid Forts, it was needfull to take the Citie of Zeila, and to build a Fort in the ſame, becauſe it is a place which aboundeth with all kind of Victuals : and hauing taken this Citie, they might make ſure worke, that no Victuals ſhould paſſe to the Cities of Aden, Zidem, Mecca, and into all Arabia ; and vnto Toro and Suez : which Townes being depriued of theſe Victuals, ſhould be in a manner vndone, ſeeing they cannot haue Victuals but onely from theſe parts : that he would binde himſelfe to finde all kind of Victuals, Gold and People, to defray all this charge, and for our Fleete : And on condition, that ſome meanes might be found to open a way, whereby hee might ioyne himſelfe with Chriſtian Princes, he would ſpare nothing that he had in the world. And in this diſcourſe of taking theſe Townes, and making of theſe Forts, we ſpent a great time with exceeding great delight of the Prete.

His perſon deſcribed.

This thing is now too truly come to paſſe.

83. The next day, being the twentieth of Nouember, I was called for by the Prete, and among others, he moued theſe queſtions ; that I ſhould declare vnto him the liues of Saint Ierome, and Saint Dominicke, and Saint Francis, and of what Countrey they were, and wherefore in the Letters of the Grand Captaine mention was made, that the King of Portugall had builded Churches vnto theſe Saints, in the Townes which he had taken in the Kingdomes of Congo, Benin, and of the Indies. I anſwered, that Saint Ierome was borne in Sclauonia, and Saint Dominicke in Spaine, and gaue him large information of their orders, referring my ſelfe to the Booke which I had of their liues. Suddainly there came an anſwere , that I ſhould ſhew him the liues of theſe Saints, ſeeing that I ſaid that I had them. After this, they came with another queſtion, whether wee did all things that the Pope commanded vs ? I ſaid, yea ; for ſo wee were bound by the Article of our holy Faith, which confeſſed One holy and Catholike Church. Hereupon they anſwered me, that if the Pope would command them any thing which the Apoſtles had not written, they would not doe it : and likewiſe if their Abuna or Patriarke would commaund them any ſuch thing, they would burne ſuch a Commandement. After this, came another queſtion, Why there are not ſo many bodies of Saints in Ethiopia, as there be in Italy, Germany, and France ? I anſwered him , That in thoſe Prouinces many Emperours had raigned, whoſe Miniſters being Pagans, were very cruell, and that they which were conuerted to the Faith of Chriſt, were ſo conſtant in the ſame, that they chuſe rather to dye for it, then to worſhip Idols, and that therefore there were ſo many Martyrs and Virgins. Touching this point an anſwer was returned, that I ſaid the truth, which he greatly delighted to heare ſo plainly deliuered, and asked whether we knew, How long it was ſince Ethiopia receiued the Chriſtian Faith? I ſent him word, that I thought, that within a ſhort time after the death of Chriſt, this land was conuerted by the Eunuch of the Queene Candaces, which was baptized by * the Apoſtle Saint Philip. An anſwere was ſent me, that by this Eunuch there was no more conuerted but the Country of Tigrai, which is in Ethiopia, and that the reſt was conuerted by force of Armes ; as alſo he proceedeth in daily conuerting of diuers Kingdomes by the ſaid force of Armes, and that the firſt conuerſion of the Queene Candaces, was ten yearet after the death of Chriſt, and that from that time vnto this preſent, it had beene conuerted by Chriſtians, &c.

The Pope belike is Church and all.

 It was Philip the Deacon.

Moſt part of Ethiopia conuerted by force of Armes.

84. The next day, the Prete ſent for my Booke, which is called, Flos Sanctorum, ſaying ; That I ſhould ſhew them the liues of the ſaid Saints : I ſent him my Booke, which preſently they ſent me backe againe by two Friers, ſaying, That the Prete willed them to write the name of euery Saint, in the Abiſſin tongue, and to place the ſame vpon euery figure. The next day, the ſaid Friers were with their Booke to tranſlate theſe liues. I durſt not go to ſpeake with the Prete, vnleſſe I carried with me the Booke of the Kalender, becauſe they asked me the day of euery Saint, and would needs haue me tell it them immediatly. On Saint Katherines day, being Sunday, the Prete ſent certaine Canons and Prieſts, which (a Venetian Painter, called Nicholas Brancaleon, which had liued aboue fortie yeares in this Countrey , and vnderſtood the Abyſſin tongue, was their Interpreter) and that euery thing was excellently well handled, ſaying, That one alone ſaid Maſſe, and that they gaue not the Communion to all the ſtanders by.

Single Communion miſliked.

This very day being Sunday , when wee were gone to bed, the Prete ſent for vs, and being come vnto the firſt Curtaines, he cauſed vs all to put on our beſt apparell, and to come into the preſence of the Prete, who ſate vpon his Throne in the very ſame ſort that he ſate before. And here he talked with vs of many matters, and among other things, that the Frankes which were in his Court might depart this Realme, when it pleaſed them , and the Ambaſſadour alſo with his Company, and that one Franke ſhould ſtay behind, called Nicholas Muzza, by whom hee would ſend his Letters, which were to be made in Gold, and that therefore he could not write ſo ſoone.

They come againe into the Pretes preſence

Of the Progreſſe of Prete Ianni. Their Wreſtling, Baptiſme, Maſſe paſſage; of the dangerous Straits comming to Saint Georges Church. Many other Queſtions. The Pretes preparations in his Trauell.

85. The fiue and twentieth of the ſaid moneth of Nouember, the Prete remooued in this order. He mounted on horſe-backe with two Pages onely, and paſſed before our Tent, skirmiſhing and managing of his horſe. And ſuddenly a brute went through the Campe, that the Negus was departed. And euery man haſtned to follow after as faſt as they could. He cauſed fiftie Mules to bee deliuered vs, thirtie fiue to carrie our Meale and Wine, and fifteene to carrie our other Stuffe, with certaine ſlaues, and we were recommended to a certaine Lord, called Aiaz Raphael. Aiaz is the title of his Lordſhip, and Raphael his name, who gaue vs euery day an Oxe. Wee departed, and on the Wedneſday came vnto the Court, and lodged in a great open field vpon a Riuers ſide: Eſt-ſoones, there came a very honorable Frier to viſit vs, which is the chiefe of the Kings Secretaries, and a great Diuine, and alſo the Nebret of the Friers of Chaxumo, and ſaid, that hee came to viſit vs on the behalfe of his Lord.

86. The ſecond of December, Lazarus de Andrada, our Portugall Painter, being neere the Kings Tent, was asked whether he would wraſtle; and hee wraſtled, miſdoubting no danger at all: and at the firſt bowt his legge was broken, he brake another Portugals arme. This Wraſtler of the Prete, was called Gabmariam, which ſignifieth, The Seruant of Mary, and was a Moore, and is broad-ſhouldred, and a ſtrong fellow, and worketh cunning with his hand in Silke and Gold. This day came newes from his Grand Betudete, which was in Warre againſt a King of the Moores, that he had vanquiſhed him; and ſent much Gold and ſlaues, and the heads of certaine great men which he had ſlaine.

At this time one Maſter Peter Cordiero a Genoues, had a Sonne borne of his Wife, which was a Negro, who requeſted me to baptize him within eight dayes, becauſe they baptize not their male children before the end of fortie dayes. I baptized this childe the tenth of December, and thither repayred great ſtore of people, and thoſe of the moſt honourable and principall of the Court.

Baptiſing of a childe.

87. Departing from this Countrey, we tooke our iourney by that way, by which wee came vnto the Court. And ſo great was the throng of people which trauelled on all ſides, that for ten or twelue miles ſpace, the people were ſo neere one another, that it ſeemed to bee the Proceſſion on Corpus Chriſti day: and ſcarcely the tenth part are well apparelled. The reſt are all clad in skinnes and other baſe apparell, and carrie all their riches with them, which are onely certaine pots to make Wine in, and Diſhes to drinke in. And if they make no long iourney, theſe baſe people, carrie their poore Cottages all whole and couered as they are, and if they goe any long iourney: they carrie nought but the rafts onely, which are certaine ſmall Poles; and the rich men cauſe their Tents to be carryed with them, which are very good and of great price. I ſpeake not of the great Gentlemen and Lords; for with euery one of them is mooued as it were a Citie or a good Towne, as namely, their Tents carryed partly vpon ſlaues backes, and partly vpon Mules. We Portugals, and the Frankes haue oftentimes conſidered the number of theſe Mules, and take them to be aboue fiftie thouſand. The Horſes are but few, for albeit there are very faire ones, yet becauſe they know not how to ſhooe them, they quickly marre their feet: and if the Prete trauell any long iourney, all the Townes are full of furbated Horſes, which are faine to follow ſoftly after. The Mules of carriage are innumerable, and they ride as well on Male as Female Mules. There are great ſtore of Hacknies which carrie burthens, and yet their feet are not furbated as the Horſes be. There are many He-aſſes more ſeruiceable then Hacknies. They make many Oxen alſo to carrie burthens, and in the plaine and Champaigne Countries, the Camels carrie burthens.

Multitude of people.

Very poore.

Aboue 50000. Mule in the traine of Prete Ianni.

Few good horſes becauſe they cannot ſhooe them.

88. The Prete ſeldome trauelleth in the high way, neither doth any man know whether hee goeth; but the Altar-ſtones, that is, their Churches, which are thirteene doe keepe the high way, although the Prete goe out of the way, and all the people commeth after in the way, vntill they find a white Tent ſet vp, and ſtraite way euery man taketh vp his lodging in his place, and many times the Prete comes not to this Tent, but lyeth in Monaſteries and other Religious Aouſes. In this Tent which is erected, they vſe continually to ſing and play vpon Inſtruments, as though the Prete were there in perſon, but not ſo cunningly as when he is there preſent. The Altar-ſtones are carryed with great reuerence, and alwayes by Prieſts that ſay Maſſe, and there be foure of them which carrie the ſame on their ſhoulders vpon a ſquare Table, and foure Prieſts come behind to change courſes in carrying of the ſame. They are couered with rich Embroydered Clothes and cloth of Silke, and two Clerkes goe before with a Cenſor and a Croſſe, and another ther goeth ringing with a ſmall Bell, and euery man and woman that heareth the ſame, goeth out of the way : and if hee bee on horſe-backe hee ſtrait-way lighteth, and giueth place, that the Church may paſſe. Likewiſe there alwayes goe with the Court foure Lions, each of them led with two Chaines, one before and another behind, and euery bodie maketh roome for them. We wayted on the Court till the twentieth of December, and came vnto thoſe terrible Mountaines where the gates are, whereby we paſſed when we came firſt into the Countrey, and there they lodged vs.

The cauſe why Prete Janni ſheweth himſelfe to the people thrice a yeare.

After that the Tents of the Prete were erected, ſtrait-way they beganne to make a very high Scaffold neere one of his Tents, becauſe the Prete would ſhew himſelfe to his people on Chriſtmas day. And commonly he ſheweth himſelfe thrice a yeare, that is to ſay, on Chriſtmas day, on Eaſter day, and on Holy Rood day in September. And the cauſe why he thus ſheweth himſelfe thrice, is, becauſe his Grand-father, whoſe name was Alexander, was kept three yeares ſecret after his death by his Seruants, who gouerned the Countrey all the meane-while : for vntill that time, none of the people might ſee their King, neither was he ſeene of any, but a few of his Seruants. And at the requeſt of the people, the Father of this Dauid ſhewed himſelfe theſe three dayes, and this King alſo doth the like: They alſo ſay, that when he goeth to warre, he alwayes goeth open, that all men may ſee him, and alſo when he trauelleth.

89. On Chriſtmas Euening at after-noone, the Prete called for me, and asked mee what Feaſt kept the day next following? I ſent him word, wee kept the Feaſt of the Natiuitie of Chriſt. He asked me, what Solemnitie we vſed? I anſwered, that we kept our vſuall manner, and the ſolemnitie of three Maſſes. Hee ſaid, that they did all things like vnto vs, ſaue that they vſed but one Maſſe, and willed me to ſtay one of thoſe three Maſſes which I would my ſelfe. Six of vs went and we prolonged the Mattins with Leſſons, Hymnes, Pſalmes and Propheſies, and ſearched all ſuch things as wee could beſt ſing and thunder out : and the Prete neuer departed from the gate of his Tent, which was as I haue ſaid, neere vnto our Church : and two Pages neuer ceaſed to goe and come, and to inquire what it was the which we ſung, ſpecially when they perceiued vs to change the tune of the Pſalmes, Hymnes, and Reſponſories. When this was done, and one man confeſſed, it began to be broad day, and I ſent them word, that I would ſay Maſſe, and ſtrait way we began a Proceſſion, with a Croſſe carryed vp before vs, and an Image of our Lady, and two Torches about the Croſſe : and wee beganne the Proceſſion neere the Circle within our Tent. Suddenly the Prete ſent vnto vs to make our Proceſſion about his Tents, and ſent vs foure hundred great Candles of white Waxe, to carry them lighted before vs, and would haue vs beginne our Proceſſion with our Portugals, and the white people, and that his owne people ſhould follow after. When the Proceſſion was ended, which reached a great Circuit, wee began our Aſperges, and I went to giue Holy Water to Prete Ianni, which I might eaſily fling from our Church, becauſe he was neere vnto vs. There were with him, as I was informed, the Queene his Wife, Queene Helena his Mother, and the Cabeata, with other his familiar friends. In the Tent of our Church ſtood all the great Nobles and Lords of the Court, which could ſtand in the roome, and the reſt ſtood without : and from our Altar vnto the Prete his Tent all the way was open, becauſe he deſired to ſee the whole Seruice of the Maſſe.

90. The Proceſſion, Maſſe, and Communion being ended, the Ambaſſadour and all the reſt of his company were permitted to goe home vnto their Dinner, and I onely with mine Interpreter was ſtayed behind. Strait way that old Father, the Kings Schoole-maſter came vnto mee, and ſaid, that the Prete Ianni greatly commended our Seruice, but deſired to know what reaſon we had to ſuffer the Lay-people to enter into the Church, as well as the Clergie, and that hee was informed, that women alſo came into the Church. I anſwered him that the Church of God was not ſhut vp againſt any Chriſtian, and that if Chriſt ſtood alwayes with open armes to receiue all that come vnto him into his glory in Paradiſe, why ſhould not wee receiue them into the Church, which is the way to paſſe into Paradiſe? and as touching women, although in old time they entred not into Sancta Sanctorum, yet the merits of our Lady were ſuch and ſo great, that they were ſufficient to deſerue, that the feminine ſexe might enter into the Houſe of God.

Merits of our Lady for women.

Bookes of Scripture.

They ſent me word, that they had fourescore and one Bookes of the old and new Teſtament, and would know whether we had any more, or no? I ſent them word, that wee had aboue ten times fourescore and one Bookes, which were drawne out of the aforeſaid Workes, with many and more perfect Expoſitions. They told mee that they knew well, that wee had more Bookes then they, and therefore he deſired me to tell him the names of thoſe which they had not. And ſo they held me with Queſtions and Anſweres vntill night, with Meſſengers that ceaſed not to trot vp and downe. I ſtood on my feet leaning vpon a ſtaffe, and Queſtions came vnto mee not onely from the Prete Ianni, but alſo from his Wife and from his Mother Queene Helena: and I anſwered them as God aſſiſted me. At length, I became ſo wearie and hungry, that I could not ſtand any longer vpon my legs, and they gaue mee leaue to depart. I was no ſooner gone away, but a Page came running after me, and ſaid, that the Prete requeſted mee very inſtantly to giue him the Canopie that was ouer my head, praying me to pardon him, that he had ſtayed me ſo long without meat,and requeſted me ſo ſoone as I had dined,to returne vnto him,becauſe he deſired to know other things of me. After I was come to our Tents, and had ſcarce dined, there came a meſſage vnto mee to pray mee to returne , and ſo I was conſtrained to goe thither, and brought them with me which had ſung Maſſe, and there we ſung a Complen, as well as we could. And the Prete with the Queene continually ſhewed exceeding great attentiueneſſe.

The Seruice being ended, he commanded the Tent of the Church to be taken downe,becauſe he meant to depart that night to paſſe thoſe bad paſſages,which are on theſe mightie high Mountaines whereof we haue ſpoken before, and ſo hee did: for at mid-night wee heard a great noyſe of Horſes and Mules, and euery body ſaying, The Negus marcheth. And forthwith wee put our ſelues in order,and followed him. And when we came to the firſt paſſage, we were conſtrayned with Lances to make our way behind and before vs , ſo great was the furie and the throng, and the multitude of people which preſſed vs behind. Wee traueiled till wee ouer-tooke the Kings Tents, which were pitched in the midſt of thoſe great Trenches , which are betweene the Riuers before mentioned: heere wee reſted vntill mid-night, and till the Prete beganne againe to march, and we with him : and before morning,we were gotten out of thoſe ill paſſages. And we heard afterward, that the ſame night in thoſe paſſages there periſhed very many men , women, Aſſes, Mules, and laden Oxen : and in this ſecond paſſage, called Aquafaghi, as wee haue ſaid before, it was told mee that a great Lady being vpon a Mule, beeing led by two of her Seruants, all of them being tyed together,fell downe from that great heigth , and were torne in pieces before they came to the bottome : ſo terrible and fearefull are thoſe Rockes and downefals, that it ſeemes they goe downe to Hell, to him that beholdeth them. This was our iourney without keeping holy the Octaue of Chriſtmas, which in that Countrey is not obſerued. I haue ſaid before, that the Court ſtayed in other places fiue or ſixe dayes in remoouing , but at theſe paſſages they ſtayed three weekes, and the ſtuffe of the Prete was aboue a moneth in paſſing, although they paſſed euery day.

91. The eight and twentieth of December, 1520. we drew neere vnto a Church which wee ſaw before, as we came into the Countrey, but we were not thereat,which is called S. Georges, vnder which they ſet vp the Pauilion of the Prete, and we lodged in our appointed place. The next day very early, the Prete ſent to call vs, and ſignified vnto vs that wee ſhould ſee the Church, which is great and all painted round about , the walls and paintings are very conuenient, where are many goodly Hiſtories well ſet forth, and made in due proportions by a Venetian, called Nicholas Brancaleon, of whom we ſpake before,and here his name is ſo put downe in writing, although in this Countrey they call him Marconius. The walls which are without the body of the Church, and meet vnder the couered circuit, which is like a Cloyſter, were all couered from top to the bottome with whole pieces of Embroydered Cloth, of Veluets, and other rich Cloth of Silke. When we came into the gate of the open circuit, and were entring into the couered circuit, they cauſed the Clothes to be lifted vp, which were hanged ouer the principall gate, which ſeemed to bee couered ouer with plates, which at the firſt bluſh wee tooke to be of Gold, becauſe they told vs ſo, but when we came neerer, wee perceiued, that they were but plates of Siluer, but gilt ouer, and it was laid ſo cunning as well vpon the gates , as in the Windowes, that it could not be mended.

The Cabeata, which is ſo great a Lord, was the man that went with vs and ſhewed vs euery thing. And the Prete alſo was preſent, but enuironed with his Curtaines : yet when we paſſed by him he might ſee vs and we him. Whereupon when he ſaw vs, hee could not containe himſelfe, but needs he muſt ſend to know of vs, what we thought of that Church and of thoſe paintings. We anſwered him, that they ſeemed vnto vs to bee things that belonged to a great Lord and King, which anſwere pleaſed him not a little.The roofe or couering of this Church is framed vpon thirtie ſix Pillars of wood, which are very thicke, and as high as the Maſts of Gallies, and couered all ouer with Wainſcot, which are painted, like as all the wals round about.

After diuers faſhions, hoping that I ſhould haue beene diſpatched , there were fetched out of the Church foure great and rich Canopies, which ſo ſoone as I ſaw them, I greatly wondred at although before I had ſeene many great and rich ones in India, which doe ſhadow thoſe Kings, but none of that greatneſſe and richneſſe, whereat they reioyced that brought them, and ranne to tell it vnto the Prete, who ſuddenly ſent for me vnto him, and ſtanding in the gate of his Pauilion with the Frankes,which remayned in the Court, he willed them againe to be ſhewed vnto one in their preſence, commanding me to view them well, and to tell him what I thought of them. I anſwered him, that they were exceeding faire , and that I neuer had ſeene in India, where many of the Kings vſe them, neither fairer, nor richer. Then he commanded , that they ſhould be ſet vp on the ground againſt the Sunne, ſo that they made a ſhadow like vnto a Tent, and willed them to tell me, that when he trauelled , and would reſt himſelfe and his wife together, he reſted himſelfe vnder the ſhadow of one of thoſe Canopies,and tooke his repaſt,and ſlept vnder the ſame.Theſe Canopies might well be of the bigneſſe of a great Cart-wheele,ſo that ten men might well ſtand vnder the ſhadow of one of them,& were couered all ouer with Silk.After all theſe Queſtions and Anſweres,hee ſent to know what hee deſired moſt to drinke , whether Wine of Grapes or of Honey, or of Zauna, which is made of Barley: His trauelling was after this manner: he rode vncouered aloft, with a Crowne vpon his head, compaſſed with redde Curtaines, very long and high: onely behind him and on both ſides, and he was in the midſt. They which carryed the ſaid Curtains, were on the outſide of the ſame, & bare the ſame aloft vpon ſmal Speares. Within the ſaid Curtaines goe ſix Pages, which they call Lagameneos, which ſignifieth, Pages of the head, becauſe the Mule which the Prete rideth on, hath a very faire ornament aboue her bridle, which hath in the cheekes of the bridle, two Cordons of Silke with goodly Taſſels, and one of theſe Cordons, one Page holdeth on one ſide, and another on the other ſide, which lead the Mule, as it were by the head: then follow two other Pages likewiſe, one on the one ſide, and another on the other ſide, which lay their hands on the necke of the Mule, and two follow after in the ſame manner with their hands vpon the buttockes, almoſt vpon the Crouper. Without the Curtaines and before the Prete March twentie of the principall Pages in very good array, and before the ſaid Pages goe ſixe Horſes, very faire and richly furniſhed, each of them being led by foure men, very well apparelled, to wit; two by the head, & two behind, with their hands vpon the Crouper, in ſuch ſort as the Prete his Mule was led. And before theſe Horſes goe ſixe Mules, ſadled and very well furniſhed, and euery one of them likewiſe haue foure men to lead them as the Horſes were led. And before the ſaid Mules, goe twentie principall Gentlemen riding vpon other Mules, with their fine Serges * about their bodies. And then wee Portugals went before the ſaid Gentlemen, for this place was appointed vnto vs. Neither may any Footmen or Horſemen, either on horſe-backe or vpon Mules approach neere him by a great diſtance, for there bee Curriers which alwayes runne before vpon horſebacke, and if their Horſes be tyred, they light and take others, which cauſe the people to ſtand out of the way, ſo that there is no bodie to be ſeene in the way. The Betudetes march with their Guard a great diſtance out of the way, and one goeth on the one ſide, and another on the other, at the leaſt a Caleeuer-ſhot diſtance off: and if the way be Champaigne, ſometimes they goe a mile and an halfe off, according to the qualitie of the Countrey. And if the way bee rockie and ſtrait, and ſo continue any long ſpace, and that it bee neceſſary that euery man muſt paſſe that way, the ſaid Betudetes diuide themſelues a mile and an halfe aſunder, and one goeth before, to wit, hee which is on the right hand, and hee on the left hand commeth behind, with each of which Officers may be about ſixe thouſand perſons, and as I ſaid before; with theſe men alwaies goe foure Lions chained with great Chaines, both before and behind. They march alſo which carrie the Churches and the Altar-ſtones, whereunto they doe great honour and reuerence. Another thing the Prete carryeth with him whitherſoeuer he goe, for hee neuer ſtirreth without it, which are one hundred Iarres of Wine of Honey, and as many of Wine of Raiſins, euery one of which Iarres may containe ſixe or ſeuen draughts of Wine, and they are as blacke as Iet, and are very ſmooth and finely made with a couer of Earth, and then ſtopped vp, and no man dare bee ſo hardie as to come neere or to take any of them without the Prete his licence. They carrie likewiſe one hundred Paniers painted ouer and cloſed, full of Wheaten bread, and theſe came after the Prete, not farre diſtant from him, and they carry them in a ranke, and they came one after another, that is to ſay, firſt a Iarre, and then a Panier, and behind them came ſixe men which are as it were Stewards of the houſe. And when they are come to the Prete his Pauilion, they vnlade all theſe things, and carry them in, and afterward he ſendeth ſome part thereof to whom he pleaſeth.

Machan Celacem.

93. The firſt of Ianuary, 1521. we came vnto a great Church, which when wee came that way firſt, and paſſed neere the ſame, they would not ſuffer vs to ſee. The Church is called Machan Celacem, which ſignifieth, The Trinitie. Three miles before wee came at the Church, the Prete commanded eight Horſes well furniſhed to be giuen vnto vs, wherewith we ſhould ride before him skirmiſhing, managing and turning our Horſes far better then they could, whereat he took great delight. When we were come within a mile of the Church, there came forth an infinite multitude of people to receiue vs, and there were ſo many Croſſes, Prieſts and Friers of diuers Monaſteries and Churches, that they could not be numbred, and to our iudgement they were aboue thirtie thouſand. And we thought that the Friers came from farre Countries, becauſe in this Kingdome of Amera, there were no Monaſteries, becauſe all the great Churches are the burials of their Kings. There were aboue two hundred with Miters, which are made like vnto great and high hoods of Silke. And likewiſe ſixtie foure Canopies of thoſe great ones, which might well be told, becauſe they carried them aloft aboue the people: but they were not ſo faire and rich, as thoſe of the Church of Saint George. All theſe Canopies belonged vnto Churches, where Kings were buried, becauſe at their death they leaue the ſame vnto them. This great multitude of people aſſembled, belonged partly to the Churches and Monaſteries, and part of them were of the Countrey, which came to ſee the Prete, who rid all open, whom they neuer ſaw ride ſo before.

Two hundred Mitred.

The Prete hauing lighted at the Church, and hauing made his Prayers, returned to his Pauilion, and ſtraight-way ſent for me, and willed that the Ambaſſadour and his Company ſhould goe to their lodging. Heere he demaunded of me, What I thought of this great meeting and entertainment, which was giuen vnto him by this great multitude, and whether the King of Portugall had any ſuch great entertainment, and of ſo great number of people? And that this people were farre more then they ſeemed to be, becauſe the moſt part of them were naked, and therefore appeared not to the beholders ſo many as they are, and that our people in France are well apparelled, and in order, and ſeeme to be many more then they be; and that I ſhould goe reſt me with the Ambaſſadour, whom I met vpon the way. Againe, hee ſent me word, that this Church was newly built, and that there was neuer any Maſſe ſaid in it, and that it was the Cuſtome, that as many as entred thereinto, ſhould giue ſome offering, and that the Ambaſſadour ſhould giue his Weapons, and I ſhould giue my Cap which I wore, and likewiſe each man ſhould giue ſomewhat.

The Prete rode open.

Cuſtome of offering in Churches.

94. The day following, the Prete ſent vs word, that we ſhould come and ſee the foreſaid Church, whither he was gone before. This Church is very great and high, and the Wals are of white ſtone, wrought with Iron Chizels, with very goodly worke, vpon which they lay no Tranſames, becauſe they would not beare them, for the ſtones are not ioyned one with another, nor ſeamed together, but onely laid one vpon another, without any Ligaments or firmeneſſe: and they ſeeme very faire, to a man that knoweth not how they are framed within. The chiefe gate is made all of plates, as the gate of the Church of Saint George is, and beweene theſe platts are counterfeit ſtones, and Iewels ſet with very good Pearles, all very well ſet in. Aboue the wall of the principall gate, are two Pictures of our Lady: very reuerendly, and well made, with two Angels, all drawne with Penſill. They ſay, that a certaine Frier drew them very liuely, and I my ſelfe was acquainted with that Frier. In this Church are three Iles built vpon ſixe Columnes, and the ſaid Columnes are built of pieces of Free-ſtone, laid one vpon another, and very well wrought: and the circuit without, and couered like a Cloyſter, is built vpon ſixe Columnes of Wood, as great as the Maſts of Gallies, and very high, and vpon the ſaid Columnes, is Timber laid very flat, which maketh a very thicke Roofe; and doubtleſſe, it is a wonderfull thing to thinke, how theſe people which are without any great wit, were able to ſet vp theſe Pillers of Wood which are ſo high. About the Church are ſixteene Curtaines hanged, running which way ſo euer you will, and they are as deepe as the whole piece is, which are Embroydered Cloathes, very rich and ſtately, and euery Curtaine is of ſeuenteene pieces faſtned together.

95. The fourth of Ianuary, the Prete ſent vs word, that wee ſhould remooue our Tent, and our Church, and ſhould cauſe it to bee carried a mile and an halfe from thence, where they had made a Poole like a Pond or Lake, full of Water, wherein they went to baptize themſelues vpon twelfth day, becauſe this is their cuſtome to baptize themſelues euery yeere, on the ſame day that Chriſt was baptized. And ſo the next day being the Vigil, we went and ſaw a great circuit encloſed with an hedge in a very large field, and they ſent to know, whether we would be baptized or no? I ſent them word, that the manner of our Church was to baptize vs once only in our Infancy.

Prete Ianni vſeth to be baptized once a yeare: as alſo his ſubiects.

All that night an exceeding great number of Prieſts, ceaſed not to ſing, vntill the morning ouer the ſaid Lake, ſaying, that they bleſſed the ſaid Lake. About midnight they beganne the baptiſme, and they ſay (which I beleeue alſo to be true) that the firſt which was baptized, was the Prete, and next vnto him the Patriarke, Abuna Marke, and the Queene the Prete his Wife. And theſe three perſons had cloathes about their priuities, but all the reſt were ſtarke naked, as they came into the world: And about the riſing of the Sunne, when the baptiſme was in the greateſt heate, the Prete ſent for me to come and ſee him, I went thither, and ſtayed there till three of the clock, to ſee how they were baptized, and they placed me at an end of the ſaid Lake, ouer againſt the Prete, and they were baptized in this manner.

The Lake hath a great bottome, and it is plaine, and cut into the ground, very right downe and ſquare, and boorded round about, and in the bottome with Plankes, and ouer thoſe Plankes, it is couered with courſe Cotton-cloath, made like a Cerſ-cloath. The Water was conueyed thither by a little Gutter, ſuch as they vſe to Water Gardens withall, and ranne into the Lake through a Pipe, at the mouth whereof hung a great Sacke, to ſtraine the Water which ranne into the Lake. And at my comming thither, the Water ceaſed running, becauſe it was already full of Holy Water, whereinto they had caſt Oyle. This Lake had on the one ſide fiue or ſixe ſteppes, and ouer againſt them about ſixe yards diſtant, was made a little encloſure of wood, wherein ſtood the Prete, which had a Curtaine of blue Sindall before him, being halfe ſlit in twaine, and through this ſlit he might ſee thoſe that were baptized, for his face was turned toward the Lake: in which ſtood that old Father, the Schoole-maſter of the Prete, with whom I had conference on Chriſtmas-day at night. This old man was naked as hee came out of his Mothers wombe, and almoſt dead for cold, becauſe that night was a great Froſt, and hee ſtood in the water vp to the ſhoulders, for of that depth the Lake was where they entred, which were to be baptized, downe by the ſaid ſteps ſtarke naked with their backes toward the Prete, and when they went out, they ſhewed their fore-parts as well women as men. Theſe people came, neere to the ſaid Schoole-maſter, and he laid his hand vpon their heads, and thruſt them downe thrice vnder the water; ſaying, in his owne Language: I baptize thee in the name of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the Holy Ghoſt, croſſing of them in ſtead of bleſſing. And if they were little children, they went not downe all the ſaid ſteps, but the ſaid Schoole-maſter came vnto them, and dipped them downe after the manner aforeſaid. And as I haue ſaid, I ſtood on the other ſide ouer againſt the Prete, ſo that when he ſaw their backes, I ſaw the fore-parts of thoſe which were baptized.

This Poole or Lake was compaſſed and couered with Tents of diuers colours, ſo well placed and ordered with ſuch ſtore of boughes, of Orenge-trees, Limons, and Citrons, that it ſeemed to be an exceeding faire Garden. The great Tilt that hung ouer the ſaid Lake was very long, and all full of red and blue croſſes of Silke, which gaue a great grace thereunto.

Circumciſion is vſed in the Countrey of Prete Ianni.

Miracles pretended.

96. The next day after the baptiſme, I went to viſit the Abuna, whom till then I had neither ſpoken withall, nor ſeene, but onely at the Baptiſme, beeing almoſt dead for cold, where I could not ſpeake vnto him. He tooke exceeding pleaſure at my viſiting of him, and would not let mee kiſſe his hand, but rather would haue fallen downe vpon the ground to kiſſe my feet. And being ſet downe vpon a Couch, the beginning of his ſpeech was, that he gaue moſt heartie thankes to God for our meeting together, and that hee conceiued exceeding great pleaſure when thoſe things were told him which I had ſo often ſpoken vnto Prete Ianni, and eſpecially concerning that Baptiſme, in that I hhd vttered the truth ſo freely in his preſence, wherein hee would not beleeue the Abuna himſelfe, becauſe he alone was of that opinion, and that if he had me companion or two to helpe to backe him in aelling of the truth, that hee would draw the Prete from many faults and errours, wherein he and all his people were plunged. And while we were talking of this matter, there came in a white Prieſt, the Sonne of a Gibete, that is to ſay, of a white man borne in this Countrey, and he asked me why we were not circumciſed, ſeeing that Chriſt was circumcized: I anſwered him, that it was true, that Chriſt was circumciſed, and that he would haue it ſo, becauſe he would fulfill the Law which at that time was vſed, becauſe hee would not be accuſed before the time for breaking of the Law, but that ſhortly after, hee commanded that Circumciſion ſhould ceaſe. This Prieſt forth-with replyed, that he was the Sonne of a Franke, and that his Father would not ſuffer him to be circumcized, and that when he came to the age of twentie yeares after the death of his Father, on an Euening going to bed vncircumciſed, the next morning he found himſelfe circumciſed: and how might this come to paſſe, if God would not haue Circumciſion? I anſwered him, that this was a notable deceit: for though it were granted that God had not forbid Circumciſion, yet hee was not ſo worthy a perſon, that God would ſhew this Miracle vpon him, that is to ſay, of an imperfect man to make him perfect: and that if it were as he had ſaid, that going to bed whole, he was found the next morning circumcized, it might be the Deuill that had done the ſame to doe him diſhonour. The Abuna, and as many as were in the houſe laughed exceedingly at this ſpeech, and tooke great pleaſure thereat: and this Prieſt afterward became an eſpeciall friend to me and to all the Portugals, and came daily to heare my Maſſe.

Orders giuen to thouſands at once.

A Sermon.

After this the Abuna cauſed Wine and Fruits of the Countrey to bee brought in, and would needs make vs a little Banquet, and ſent vnto our Tents good ſtore of Bread and Wine and one Oxe. The eighth of Ianuary, the ſaid Abuna, determined to giue Orders, and I went thither to ſee the manner which hee vſed in giuing of the ſame; which was in this wiſe: A white Tent was erected in a great Champaigne field, where were aſſembled betweene fiue and ſixe thouſand perſons to receiue Orders. Hither came the Abuna, riding vpon a Mnle, and my ſelfe was in his company with an infinite number of others. And ſitting on his Mules backe in the midſt of that ſo great Aſſembly, hee made, as it were, a Sermon in the Arabian Tongue, and one of his Prieſts expounded it in the Abaſſin Language. I asked my Interpreter, what it was that the Abuna ſaid: he told me that he ſaid, that if any man there had two Wiues or more, although any of them were dead, he ſhould not become Prieſt, and if he did take Orders he did curſe and excommune him with the curſe of God.

This ſpeech being ended, hee ſate him downe in a Chaire before the ſaid Tent, and three Prieſts ſate downe before him vpon the ground, euery man with his Booke, and certaine others which directed this buſineſſe, cauſed all thoſe which were to take Orders, to ſet downe on the ground vpon their heeles, and all of them ſtood in three very long rankes or allies, and euery ranke had one of thoſe Prieſts which held the Bookes and examined them ſhortly, ſo that ſome reade not paſt two words: and after this man went another Prieſt, with a Baſon full of a white tincture, and with a plate made like vnto Seales dipped in the ſaid tincture, and with the ſame they made a marke vpon the bare of their right arme, which beeing done, they roſe from that place, and went and ſate downe in the midſt of the fields vpon certaine Hillockes of Earth, where they that were examined muſt ſtand, and there were very few which went not ouer thither. This Examination being ended, the Abuna went into his Tent and ſate in a Chaire, and this Tent had two gates, through which they cauſed all the Examinates to paſſe, one after another, and as they were preſented before the Abuna, comming in at the one gate ſtrait-wayes, he layed his hand vpon their heads, and ſaid certaine words which I vnderſtood not, and then paſſed out by the other gate: neither was there any one of them to whom this Ceremonie was not done.

Then he tooke a Booke in his hand, and read a great while on the ſame, holding a little croſſe of Iron in his hand, and made many ſignes of the Croſſe therewith vpon the whole Companie. This ended, a Prieſt went out of the gate with a Booke and read, as it might bee, the Epiſtle or the Goſpel, and ſtrait-way the Abuna ſaid a Maſſe, which continued no longer time, then a man might thrice ſay ouer the Pſalme of Miſerere mei Deus: and ſtrait-way he miniſtred the Communion to all thoſe Prieſts which were Maſſing Prieſts, and were in number two thouſand three hundred fiftie ſixe, for they make theſe Prieſts of the Maſſe by themſelues, and the Clerkes by themſelues another day. And the Abuna told mee, that the Clerkes were ordayned to the degree of Deacon, as Saint Stephen was. Yet I ſaw him make Clerkes and Prieſts altogether in one day, and that at oftentimes, becauſe hee made them and gaue them Orders, very often, and alwayes in great numbers, becauſe they come to him out of all the Kingdomes and Territories of the Prete, for there is none that can giue Orders but he. They are not regiſtred nor haue any Letters of Teſtimonie or Certificate of their Orders. And becauſe I haue ſpoken of the number of two thouſand three hundred fiftie ſixe, I could not haue knowne the ſame, vnleſſe I had beene told it by him which had the charge to count them, and I thinke he told me true.

Two thouſand three hundred fiftie ſix Prieſts.

None but the Abuna can giue Orders.

97. The next day being the ninth of Ianuarie, the Prete ſent for me; When I was come vnto him he ſaid, that he vnderſtood that I had beene to ſee his Prieſts conſecrated, and asked mee what I thought of them. I anſwered, that I had ſeene two things, which though they had bin told me and confirmed by Oath, yet I would neuer haue beleeued them, to wit, the multitude of the Clergie, the Croſſes and Miters which were at the receiuing of his Highneſſe, and the entertainment which he made them. The ſecond, was this ſo great and infinite number of Prieſts, which receiued Orders altogether, and that he thought that Ceremonie was very well performed; but that the diſhoneſtie of the Prieſts wherein they came to take Orders, diſpleaſed mee not a little. Strait-way I was anſwered, that I needed not to maruell at any of theſe things: for as touching their meeting of him, there were no Prieſts that came thither, but onely thoſe which belonged to the Churches of his Grand-father and Predeceſſor, which were builded in thoſe parts,, and that they bare thoſe Miters, Canopies, and Croſſes which were left vnto them: and that the Prieſts which receiued Orders were but a few, in compariſon of the number that they were wont to be, for alwayes they are wont to make fiue or ſixe thouſand, and that now they were ſo few, becauſe they knew not of the comming of the Abuna, and that I ſhould tell him what diſhoneſtie I had ſeene: which was contrarie to the Order of the Church. I anſwered, that it ſeemed to mee a very diſhoneſt and ſhamefull thing, that the Prieſts which were to bee admitted to the miniſtration of the Maſſe, and were to receiue the bodie of Chriſt, ſhould come almoſt all naked, ſhewing their Priuities: and that Adam and Eue ſo ſoone as they ſinned ſaw themſelues naked, and when they were to appeare before God did hide themſelues: and that theſe beeing to receiue the Sacrament, which is much more, are not aſhamed to ſhew all their diſhoneſtie, ~~and~~ that I had ſeene a Frier which was ſtarke blind, which neuer had eyes, and another which was lame of his right hand, and foure or fiue which were lame of their legs, to haue receiued Orders of Prieſt-hood, which ought to haue beene ſound, and to haue all their limmes ſound and perfect. Suddenly hee ſent me word againe, that he was highly pleaſed, that I had marked euery thing particularly to tell him my opinion, that afterward things might be amended, ſaying, that hee would take order for the Prieſts, that they ſhould not goe naked, and that touching thoſe which were lame, I ſhould conferre with Aiaz Raphael, which was preſent at this giuing of Orders. This Aiaz Raphael, is that honourable Prieſt and great Lord, to whom wee were recommended when wee came firſt vnto the Court.

No Prieſt ought to bee blind, lame, or maymed in bodie.

Aiaz Raphael.

The tenth of Ianuarie, the Abuna made Clerkes. Theſe are not examined, becauſe they make them of all Ages, euen children that are carryed in the armes and cannot ſpeake, vntill they bee fifteene yeares old, whiles yet they haue no Wiues, but if they haue Wiues they cannot bee Clerkes: and thoſe which take Orders to be Prieſts of the Maſſe, while they bee Clerkes, may take Wiues, and ſo become Prieſts: for if they become Prieſts before they take Wiues, afterward they may not marry. The men beare the children in their armes, and cannot ſpeake nor goe, becauſe the women may not come within the Church. Their crying ſeemeth to bee like the crying of ſo many young Kids, becauſe they are there without their Mothers, and are halfe

Clerkes or Deacons of children.
